(2) Textual relics. From the early old Hungarian period there are only four short texts, the so-called “guest-texts” copied into Latin Church service books. Actually they were spoken-parts of Christian church services. They suggest that the cultivation of the mother tongue in the age of the Árpád dynasty (997-1301) may have reached high standards. The oldest known Hungarian text relic is the Funeral Oration and Prayer (Halotti beszéd és könyörgés) from the end of the 12th century, which survived in the Pray Codex. Its first part, the oration, is not a translation of a Latin funeral oration but a Hungarian interpretation of it. The text is heightened by figurative etymology synonyms and alliterations. Its second part is the prayer for the dead, a translation of the Latin Church text. The Königsberg Fragment and its Ribbon is a prayer of praise of the Virgin Mary, dating from the beginning of the 13th century. Its text was repeated as a litany. It consists of three broken text fragments. The first part is the “Fragment” itself, a meditation on Mary as a virgin mother. The second part tells the story of Archangel Gabriel’s mission in a colorful dialog style; then, it quotes the words of the angelic greeting. The third part of the text fragment is an extract from a medieval Mary-legend, in which the author meditates on Mary being a mother. Here are also poetic texts (figurative etymology, alliteration), for example “királyok királyának szent arany oltára” (holy golden altar of the king of kings), “angyaloknak asszonyához” (to the lady of the angels). The Old Hungarian Lament of Mary is the first poem written in Hungarian. It originates from the middle of the 13th century and is one of the most beautiful and most lyrical pieces of early Hungarian poetry. The Virgin Mary is standing under the cross, lamenting the sufferings and unjust death of her holy son. The author heightens the poem by using various linguistic means, such as similes. The Gyulafehérvár Lines (now Alba Iulia, Romania) from the second half of the 13th century actually do not form a complete text; they are simply drafts of sermons. This linguistic relic consists of three parts. Presumably it was not written as a poem; however, the regular structure of sentences and rhythmically rhyming lines make it similar to a poem.

(3) Glosses. They preserve the memory of Hungarian spiritual and material culture and represent great value of cultural history. There are three glosses from this period. These are: the Oxford Glosses from around 1230 that contain 11 Hungarian words, the Vatican Glosses from around 1290 include 4 Hungarian words; and the Leuven Glosses, which appeared in the same Codex as the Old Hungarian Maria-Lament (Ómagyar Mária-siralom) and contains 9 Hungarian words. – B: 1091, T: 1091, 7103.→Tihany Abbey;

Linhart, György (George) (Pest, 16 June 1844 - Magyaróvár, 27 January 1925) – Botanist. He was founder of the Hungarian flora preservation research. After studying at the Agricultural College of Magyaróvár, he studied Natural Science at the Universities of Halle and Strasbourg. In the meantime, he was an agricultural engineer at the estate of Russian Royal Princess Helena Pavlovna; later on at Archduke Albrecht's manorial farm at Bélye. On his return he taught at the Agricultural Academy of Magyaróvár and, in 1884, he became Director of the newly organized Sowing-seed Testing Institute. His work is fundamental in the area of agricultural experimentation and the modernization of methods for testing sowing seeds. He developed a method for tan-pickle against seed-diseases that is named after him, related to turnip, carrot, sugar beet and potato diseases, guarding against blight and black-rust. He published many work-related articles. He wrote 13 books, including Mushrooms of Hungary, vols. i-v (Magyarország Gombái, I-V) (1882-1887); Vine-pest (A szőlőpenész) (Odium Tuckeri) (1881), and Vine-diseases (Szőlőbetegségek) (1895). Together with Imre Deininger he was first to identify phloxera in Hungary on the Pancsova vine branches. He was awarded the Knight's Cross of the Franz Joseph Order of Merit in 1898. – B: 0883, 1091, T: 7675.

Linz, Peace of – The Peace Treaty, signed on 12 December 1645, between György (George) Rákóczi I (1630-1648) Prince of Transylvania and Emperor Ferdinand III (1637-1657), ended Prince Rákóczi's 1644-1645 campaign. It regulated religious matters, giving freedom of religious observance to the Protestants, and it ordered the return of illegally seized churches. In compensation, the Prince received Tarczal and Regéc, the castles of Tokay and Ecsed and, for his lifetime, the control over seven counties in Upper Hungary (Upland, Felvidék, now Slovakia). On his part, Rákóczi returned the mining towns of the territory he had occupied, and refrained from interfering in the affairs of Habsburg- controlled Royal Hungary. Despite the stubborn opposition of the Catholic clergy and some members of the aristocracy, the National Parliament of 1647 ratified the terms of the treaty in Bill V. – B: 1078, 1153, T: 7665. → Rákóczi I, Prince György.

Lion Symbols – Symbols of power. In prehistoric times, lions lived from Africa to Southern Europe and to India. They were hunted not only because they preyed on flocks, but also because the lion hunt was the test of manhood and later a test for kingship. Hence the lion became a symbol. When the institution of royalty was connected to heavenly origin, in many places the king was regarded as the son of the Sun, and the lion too became a heavenly or Sun symbol with a flame-like mane. In Egypt, two lions, reposing back to back, symbolized the setting and rising sun enclosed within. In the coat of arms of the Hungarian Pauline Monastic Order, two lions are holding the tree of life. Özséb, the founder of the Order, placed it under the guardianship of the hermit St Paul, whose grave, according to the legend, was dug by two lions.

During the years around 1190, King Béla II (1131-1141) started a large building project in Esztergom. The royal chapel was discovered during the 1930 excavations. The chapel, originally the royal reception hall, had 7 frescoes symbolizing the royal dynasty; seven lions stepping forward were illustrated on the right and left side of the throne, but only one was preserved. The lion's four stripes represented the lord of the four heavenly directions. On its rump there is an eight-segmented rosette, the symbol of the autumn sun god, while behind the lion there is a tendril and a double cross, the symbol of the ruler. The frame of the fresco is decorated with palmettos.

These seven stepping lions with four stripes are similar to those on the coat of arms seal of the Golden Bull, issued by King András II (Andrew, 1205-1235) in 1222. These lions symbolized the king's realm of seven provinces.

On mediaeval Hungarian relics, other lion symbols can be seen. There is a lion symbol on the oldest Hungarian crown regalia, on the crystal globe of the royal scepter. There is also a lion symbol on the collar of the royal gown, four lions' bodies but only one head. Supposedly, these represent the four branches of the royal clan under the leadership of the sovereign.

When kings of the House of Árpád had to make a decision between life and death, the judgment was written inter leones in the presence of the Head of State. This manner of judgment is surprisingly in line with the Sumerian Urnammu tablet of law, the first such written document in the world, where 14 lions (nobility) with the 15th, the King, pronounce judgment over life and death. This type of court procedure was unknown elsewhere in Europe. – B: 1230, 1621, 1020, T: 7682.→Özséb.

Lipcsei Codex (not to be confused with the Codex Sinaiticus – Leipzig Codex) – A manuscript book of 12 leaves, contains copied songs in 1615 by Tamás (Thomas) Nagy at an unknown location. There are 31 lesser religious and historical songs in the first part, and some historical songs and biblical stories in the second. This historical song collection, dating from the time of the Fifteen Years's War, also called the "The Long War" (1591-1606), includes the more noted epoch of István (Stephen) Bocskai and Gábor (Gabriel) Báthory. The Codex is stored in the City Library of Leipzig: No. 98. Mf: MTAK E 1. – B: 1150, 1134, T: 3240.→Bocskai, Prince István; Báthory, Prince Gábor; Codex Literature.

Lipizzan Horse (Lipizzaner) – This breed was developed at the Lipizza (now Lipca, Slovenia) Imperial Court Stud Farm near Trieste, founded in 1580. Until the end of World War I, the farm belonged to the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. The Lipizzaners are the result of fourhundred years of selective breeding from Spanish, Italian and Oriental Arabic blood, which made them one of Europe's oldest horse breeds. The color of these horses is mostly gray, but there are also black and bay ones. The head might be refined and noble, but it could also be a fine ram-head. This is characteristic of them and also the long neck, which, together with a lively gait, gives the class a fine presence and truly Baroque beauty. Eight stallion lines and approximately forty mare families are recognized in this class. After World War I, registered stallion droves were established at Tiber (Austria), Tapolcsány (now Tepličany, Slovakia), Djakov (Croatia), Monterotondo (Italy), Fogaras (Făgăraș, in southern Transylvania, now in Romania), and also at Bábolna and Szilvásvár, both in Hungary. The class is widespread today. The Austrian type is well suited for performing the demands of the Vienna Haute École equestrian show. The Hungarian Lipicai achieved great successes in the international four-in-hand carriage driving. – B: 1622, 1020, T: 7675.

Lipót I, Emperor and King (Leopold) (Vienna, 9 June 1640 - Vienna, 5 May 1705) –

Hungarian (Habsburg) King and Holy Roman Emperor. He was to become a priest and he remained under the influence of his Jesuit educators. He was crowned King of Hungary on 27 July 1657, and Holy Roman Emperor in 1658. His reign in Hungary met with continuous and serious resistance both politically and religiously. His interference in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) led to the Turkish wars and the Peace of Vasvár (1664), so unfavorable to Hungary. The increasing dissatisfaction in the country led to the Wesselényi conspiracy (1664-1671). This was discovered, and its members were punished with their lives. Hungary's Constitution was annulled and absolute rule was instituted. The fanatical persecution of Protestants also took place at that time. Their ministers, pastors and teachers were summoned before the Court and sent to the galleys. Persecution of wealthy patriots occurred; imposition of illegal and impossibly high taxes and their ruthless collection was everyday occurrences; in addition, there was the inhumane pillaging by the forces of the Austrian Generals (Kobb, Spankau, Strasoldo, etc.). The result was the heroic armed uprising of Prince Imre (Emeric) Thököly, in alliance with French King Louis XIV, in 1678. Thököly's conquests and the Turkish peril led to Lipót's easing of his eight-year long absolutism (restoring the position of Palatine, guaranteeing the Constitution, promising freedom of religion). But even this did not still the dissatisfaction. In 1682, Thököly began his second uprising to defend Hungary's freedom. The new Turkish supreme commander, Kara Mustafa, in his 1683 campaign against Vienna, posed an extreme threat to the Habsburg Government. Leopold I fled to Linz and then to Passau, and the large Turkish army started to lay siege to Vienna; but the Polish-German-French auxiliary forces, under Jan Sobieski (John III, King of Poland at the time), led by the great commander Prince Eugene of Savoy, arrived just in time. They raised the siege and crushed the Sultan's army on 12 September 1683. The relief of Vienna was followed by other victories: Buda castle was liberated in 1686, and Hungary of the Carpathian Basin (except the Banate of Temes) became freed from Turkish occupation. Eugene of Savoy was finally victorious over the Turks at Zenta in 1697, and the new situation was sealed by the Treaty of Karlowitz (Karlóca) on 26 January 1699. This opened the possibility for Leopold I and his successors to convert Hungary and Transylvania into a Habsburg colony. – B: 1031, 1068, T: 7456. → Wesselényi Conspiracy; Galley Slavery; Thököly, Prince Imre; Freedom Fight of Thököly, Prince Imre; Sobieski III, János; Savoyen, von Eugen; Lothringen, Prinz Karl Leopold von; Buda, reconquest of, in 1686; see also under: Reconquest of Buda in 1686; Turks, expulsion of, from Hungary; Karlóca, Peace of; Temesvár.

Lippai, János (John) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, 30 July 1606 – Trencsén-baths, near Trencsén, now Trenčín, Slovakia, June 1666) – Botanist, Jesuit teacher, economic and horticultural writer. He studied in Vienna, and in 1624, he joined the Jesuit Order. In the Universities of Graz and Vienna he taught Oriental languages; later, he lived in the court of his brother and tended the archiepiscopal garden. After the archbishop's death he withdrew to the Monastery of the Order. It was about this archiepiscopal garden that he wrote the first Hungarian-language scientific horticultural work, entitled Posoni Kert, (Garden of Pozsony), which was published in three volumes: Floral Garden (Virágos kert), Vegetable Garden (Veteményes kert) (1664), and Fruit Garden (Gyümölcsös kert) (1667). The three volumes, bound together in one, were again published in Győr in 1753, with a new facsimile edition in 1966. In his works, Lippai observed and recorded some fundamental theses of horticulture, which are still valid. He is the first Hungarian pomologist to describe 100 different varieties of fruits, based on his own observations. With strong criticism he discussed the grafting methods of horticultural writers. Dismissing superstitious beliefs, he stood on the side of the developing sciences. His work is the first attempt in Hungary to reconcile agricultural and horticultural theory and practice. His two main works have been the only Hungarian-language textbooks for two centuries, proving valuable also from the philological angle, since they attempt to achieve correctness in the use of the language. One of his agricultural books was Calendarium Oeconomicum Perpetuum... (Pozsony, 1661, Nagyszombat, 1662). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Lipp, Vilmos O. Praem. (William) (Pest, 11 December 1835 - Keszthely, 3 January 1888) – Archeologist. Piarist, later Premonstrian monk. He was ordained in 1861. He studied at the University of Pest, where he obtained a Teacher's Degree in Latin, Greek and German and, in 1878, a Ph.D. In association with Flóris (Florian) Rómer, he excavated and studied the antiquities of Savaria (the modern town of Szombathely in western Hungary). He founded the journal, Gazette of Vas County (Vas megyei Közlöny), and established the Archaeological Collection of Vas County. In 1876 he went to Italy on an extended study trip; later taught in Keszthely (at the western end of Lake Balaton), then became Principal of the School. In Keszthely and its surroundings he uncovered large cemeteries of the Migration and Avar Periods. The term Keszthely Culture of Early Medieval times was also used in the literature abroad. His main works are Studies (Tanulmányok) (1880); The Cemetery of Keszthely-Dobogó (A Keszthely-dobogói sírmező) (1884), and Cemeteries of Keszthely (Keszthelyi sírmezők) (1884). He translated literary works as well, and wrote a comedy, The Truth Teller (Igazmondó). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Rómer, Flóris.

Lipták, Béla G. (Budapest, 7 June 1936 - ) – Instrument engineer, environmentalist, educator. He studied at the Budapest Polytechnic. As a university student, he participated in the events of the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956. He was one of the writers of the 16-Point Demands of the Revolution. During the defense of Móricz Square, Budapest, he was captured by the Soviets, but escaped and, after the final 3 weeks of Resistance in the Revolution and Freedom Fight against the occupying Russian forces, he left Hungary for Austria. He emigrated to the USA, where he became the founding President of the American Hungarian Student Association, and continued his postgraduate studies. He received an M.E. Degree from the Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, NJ (1959), a Masters Degree from CCNY (1962), and completed graduate courses in computer science at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, NY (1965). He taught at Yale University (1975-1997), and presented customized courses at IBM, UNIDO, Dow Chemical, HP, CFPA, Monsanto, Reilly, Israel Chemicals, and other corporations. As Chief Instrument Engineer at Crawford & Russell Inc. (John Brown Ltd.), an engineering design firm, he served the processing industries from 1959 to 1975. Currently he is President of Lipták Associates P.C., an engineering consulting firm of industrial process control, computer automation, new hard and software product development, energy conservation, pollution prevention, and safety related projects. He published nearly 200 technical articles and 26 technical books, including The Instrument Engineers' Handbook, vols. i-ii, in its 4th edition; Analytical Instrumentation; Flow

Measurements; Environmental Issues in Central and Eastern Europe; Precedent for the 21st Century: The Danube Lawsuit, and A Testament of Revolution. As an environmentalist, he opposes the diverting of the Danube by Slovakia. He is well-known for his work in compiling comprehensive technical information. He is a licensed professional engineer listed in the Who Is Who of American Scientists and Engineers. He is a book reviewer for American Scientist, and was elected ISA Fellow (1973) by the Instrument Society of America. He received the Pond Award, best paper award by ASHRAE, the ISA's 2005 Life Achievement and Control's 2001 Hall of Fame awards. He is also President of the American-Hungarian Lobby. – B: 1623, T: 7103.

Lipták, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 30 June 1912 - Balatonfüred, 30 May 1985) – Writer, journalist, cultural historian. He attended High School in Budapest and was educated at the University of Economic Sciences, Budapest. Lipták held administrative posts in the Commercial and Agricultural sector. In the 1950's he published his writings as a journalist for Pest Diary (Pesti Napló), Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet) and Voice of the People (Népszava). He became Editor for the Veszprém Review (Veszprémi Szemle) in 1957. He was engaged in keeping alive the regional literary traditions and cultural history of Lake Balaton. His house in Balatonfüred, where he regularly invited domestic and foreign writers, poets and ethnologists, became a notable meeting place. Lipták authored numerous travelogues and popular articles. These included Mór Jókai in Balatonfüred (Jókai Mór Balatonfüreden) (1960); Golden Bridge [Legends, Sayings, Stories Concerning Lake Balaton], (Aranyhid...) (1961); What the Waters Tell [Legends, Sayings, Stories] (Amiről a vizek beszélnek...) (1972); Open Gate (Nyitott kapu), Reminiscences (1982), and The Entourage of the Ship Mill (A hajómalom kísérete), short story (1985). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688. → Jókai, Mór.

Lissák, Kálmán (Coloman) (Szentes, 13 January 1908 - Győr, 25 June 1982) – Physician, physiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1933. Between 1931 and 1933 he was research student at the Biological Institute there. From 1933 to 1939, he was a demonstrator at the University of Debrecen and, in 1937, an honorary lecturer (privatdozent). He furthered his studies on scholarships in Graz (1935), Berlin (1936-1937), and in the USA (1937-1939). In 1941 he became an associate professor, and from 1946 to 1951, he was appointed professor at the University of Debrecen, and Director of its Biological Institute; in 1946-1947 and 1950-1951 he was Dean of the Faculty of Science. From 1947 to 1949, he was Vice-Chancellor; from 1951 to 1978, Professor of Biology and Head of Department of Biology at the Medical School at the University of Pécs where, in 1956-1957, he was again Vice-Chancellor. His fields of research were biology, neurobiology, higher working of the nervous system, and the biology of the neuro-endocrine regulation, of which he was first in Hungary. In 1939 he demonstrated the existence of adrenalin, and discovered an inhibiting neurological factor. His works include almost 1000 studies including in German and English. Among his books are: Biological Exercises (Élettani gyakorlatok) (1935); Pathological Exercises (Kórtani gyakorlatok) (1936), Hormones and Brain Function, edited with co-authors (1973), and also textbooks. His books were translated into a number of languages. He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and international societies, such as the International Brain Research Organization, and the International Union of Physiological Sciences. He received the Kossuth Prize in 1954. There is a Kálmán Lissák Prize. – B: 0883, 1105, 1730, T: 7456.

Listowel, Countess Judith (born: Judit de Márffy-Mantuano) (Kaposvár, 12 July 1903 - 15 July 2003) – Journalist. She completed her secondary education in Budapest; then went to England, studied at the London School of Economics, and became a journalist. Later, she worked as a reporter for the National News (Nemzeti Újság) and Pester Lloyd. In 1933 she married William Hare, the Earl of Listowel, and together they traveled around the world. She wrote about her travel experiences in This I Have Seen (1943), a book that achieved great success. After war was declared, Lady Listowel urged Count Ciano, the Italian Foreign Minister (Mussolini's son-in-law) and the Hungarian Prime Minister Count Pál (Paul) Teleki not to side with Hitler. During World War II, at first she worked for the information ministry, and later she was a civil lecturer for the army. She regularly gave lectures to the Land Forces, as well as to the Navy. In 1944, with Polish Colonel Ian Kowalewski, she started the foreign affairs review, East Europe and Soviet Russia that was running until the end of 1954. She wrote for a number of other papers, such as Tablet, Listener and Statist, and also for the English Radio. She dealt with international problems, mainly East-European and African. Her works include Crusader in the Secret War (1952); Manual of Modern Manners (1959); The Modern Hostess (1961) that attracted widespread attention; The Making of Tanganyika (1965); Dusk on the Danube (1969), and A Habsburg Tragedy, Crown Prince Rudolf (1978). – B: 1672, 1031, T: 7456. → Teleki, Count Pál.

Liszka, József (Joseph) (Köbölkút now Gbelce, Slovakia, 6 April 1956 - ) – Ethnographer. He completed his high school studies at Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia) in 1975. In 1980 he obtained a Degree in Ethnography and Archeology from the University of Budapest; then, in 1987, he received a Ph.D. in Ethnography. Since 1980 he has been working as a museologist at the District Museum of Érsekújvár. In 1986 he became member of the Hungarian Ethnographical Society. Since 1989 he has been a member, and since 1990 President of the Czechoslovak Hungarian Ethnographical Society. His articles include At the Cradle of our Self-knowledge. Our Research Between the Two World Wars in the Light of Hungarian Published Works (Önismeretünk bölcsőjénél. Kutatásunk a két világháború között a kiadott munkák fényében), published in the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle) (1983:916), and The Slovakian Hungarian Youth and Ethnography (A szlovákiai magyar fiatalok és néprajz), published in the Ethnographical News (Néprajzi Hírek) (1986:71). Among his books are: Branchy-Twiggy Tree (Ágasbogas fa) (1986), Hungarian Ethnographic Research in Slovakia 1918-1938 (Magyar néprajzi kutatások Szlovákiában 1918-1939), textbook (1990), Ethnography of Hungarians in Slovakia (A szlovákiai magyarok néprajza), monography (2002), Introduction to Ethnography (Bevezetés a néprajzba), textbook (2006), and Being on Road (Úton lenni), notebook sketches (2007). Since 1988 he was an Editorial Board member of The New All-Inclusive Collection (Új Mindenés Gyűjtemény). Since 1990 he has been Editor for the Bulletin, Newsmonger (Hírharang) of the Czechoslovak Hungarian Ethnographical Society. In 1988, he was awarded the János Jankó Prize by the Hungarian Ethnographical Society. – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Lisznyai Szabó, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 8 December 1913 - Budapest, 22 May 1981) – Composer, organist, choirmaster, teacher. He started his musical studies at the Ernő (Ernest) Fodor's School of Music in Budapest and, from 1931, studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. His teachers were Albert Siklós and Artúr Harmat in composition and liturgy; Ernő (Ernest) Unger in conducting; Jenő (Eugene) Ádám in choral singing, and Aladár Zalánfy in organ. In 1937, under the direction of Ernő (Ernest) Dohnányi, he concluded his musical studies and obtained his Degree. In 1938 and 1939, he was a voice teacher at the Benedictine High School, Budapest; from 1940 to 1942, a piano teacher at the Academy of Music; from 1942 to 1944, composition teacher at the National School of Music (Nemzeti Zenede); and from 1947 to 1949, Professor at the Academy of Music in Budapest. Between 1950 and 1971, he was organist at the Dohány Street Synagogue in Budapest. In 1958 and 1959 he was a teacher at the Music School of Vác. From 1964 on, he was a member of the National Church Music Board. In spite of being partially paralyzed, he continued his composing until his death. His works include 15 Masses; a Te Deum; Hymns; Cantata; 2 String Quartets; 2 Sonatas for Piano and Violin; several Organ Sonatas, and some songs for the poems of Endre Ady, Attila József and Sándor Weöres. Some of his organ and choir works were recorded. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456. →Siklós, Albert; Ádám, Jenő; Zalánfy, Aladár; Dohnányi Ernő; Ady, Endre; József, Attila; Weöres, Sándor.

Liszt, Ferenc (Franz) (Doborján, Hungary, now Raiding, Austria, 22 October 1811 - Bayreuth, Germany, 31 July 1886) – Piano virtuoso, composer. His father, Adam Liszt, a farm bailiff on the Esterházy estate, was his first music teacher. He performed in public at the age of 9 in Sopron and Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). His father took him to Vienna, where he studied with Carl Czerny and Antonio Salieri. His Viennese concerts were a great success. In 1823 he traveled to France with his father to perfect his musical education at the Paris Music Conservatory. However, Director L. Cherubini denied his entry, citing Liszt's foreign citizenship. Paris became his second home, where he made the acquaintance of important personalities, such as F. Chopin, H. Berlioz, N. Paganini, A. de Lamartine, H. Heine, George Sand and E. Delacroix, whose company had a decisive influence on his intellectual development. He taught at the Geneva Conservatory (1825), and organized concerts to help the Danube River flood victims of Pest in 1838. As a well-known piano virtuoso throughout Europe, Liszt made his debut as a conductor in Pest, and established there a fund for a National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede) in 1840. His subsequent celebration in the city reached an unprecedented level. He also gave concerts in London, Moscow, in several Polish cities, in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), as well as in Turkey. Liszt was conductor (Kapellmeister) for the Princely Court of Weimar from 1848 to 1861. During this period he concentrated on composing. At the consecration of the new Cathedral of Esztergom, Hungary (1855), his Festive Mass, the Missa Solemnis (Graner Mass - Messe de Gran), composed for the occasion, was performed and, in Pest, his symphonic poem, Hungaria, premiered in 1856. His Oratorio, The Legend of St Elizabeth (Die Legende von der Heiligen Elisabeth), was performed under his direction in 1865, at the quarter-century Jubilee Celebration of the founding of the National Music School in Pest. His Hungarian Coronation Mass (Ungarische Krönungsmesse) was performed in Pest in 1867, at the coronation of Emperor Franz Joseph as Apostolic King of Hungary. He continued to visit his native country yearly. His 50-year artistic jubilee in 1873 was celebrated with the Christ Oratorio (Christus), and by establishing a scholarship fund. Liszt was elected President of the newly established Music School of Budapest in 1875, and from then on he divided his time between Weimar and Budapest. In his book on Hungarian Gypsy music (Die Zigeuner und die Musik in Ungarn, 1816), he wrote “Among all Hungarian artists, I can refer, with the noblest pride, to a deserving homeland. My guiding star and watchword is that Hungary would be able to talk about me with pride. I adore my homeland and our art; it is my single desire to serve it to the best of my ability”. However, he made the error to attribute the origins of Hungarian folk music to Gypsy music – albeit the common belief at the time.

After suffering a number of personal tragedies, such as the death of his son, Daniel, and later of his elder daughter Blandine, Liszt turned to the priesthood, entering the Third Order of St. Francis of Assisi in 1865. Pope Pius IX conferred on him the title of Abbé in 1866. He remained active as a teacher and performer to the end of his life. In the summer of 1886, while attending the Wagner Festival in Bayreuth, where his daughter Cosima married Richard Wagner, he contracted pneumonia and died on the 31st of July.

Liszt was a leading personality in the artistic life of the 19th century, one of the brilliant piano virtuosi of all times. He elevated the symphonic poem to the greatest artistic height, a new musical form first used by Hector Berlioz. In addition to two great symphonies and 13 symphonic poems, he wrote two piano concertos, the great Sonata in B-minor, and other piano pieces, operatic and other transcriptions for piano, as well as 19 Hungarian Rhapsodies, numerous songs and religious works. Liszt’s music was even influential for 20th century music. In his literary works Liszt dealt mostly with timely musical questions. His collected writings appeared in six volumes, his correspondence in fifteen. The Academy of Music in Budapest, a Square in Budapest, a Street in Hamilton, Ont., Canada, and now the Airport of Budapest bear his name. – B: 0883, 1288, T: 7617.

Literature of Hungary – Only fragments of the earliest Hungarian poetry survived; besides the Linguistic Records of Old, it was mainly preserved by oral tradition. One such poem is the minstrel song from Dozmát. Other epics, spells, and literary works probably became casualties of Christianity. One of the most ancient epic compositions is the Legend of the Miraculous Stag. The Turul Legend of Árpád, the Dream of Emese, and the Dream of the Beautiful Enéh, originates Attila's tribe from the Turul-bird (a mythical falcon-like bird). The Legend of the White Horse from the Settlement era in the Carpathian Basin, and Anonymus’ story in his 12th century Gesta Hungarorum (The Deeds of the Hungarians) about acquiring the region between the Rivers Danube and Tisza for 12 white horses from Zalán, the Leader of the Bulgars, is also among them. The Legend of Botond and Lehel hails from the era of the military campaigns.

The surviving written Hungarian literature started after the settlement in the Carpathian Basin (896 AD), followed by the conversion to Christianity between 1000 and 1530. The Hungarian literature of the Middle Ages is written in Latin and not in Hungarian, due to the prohibition and persecution of the original Hungarian runic script. The most important parts of the Hungarian Latin literature of the Middle Ages are the chronicles, the so-called Gestas and the legends. An erudite Hungarian prelate wrote the very first Hungarian Gesta in the middle of the 11th century (around 1050, now lost) and provided the basis for the second and third versions, created around 1100 (also lost). Anonymus, the chronicler, independently wrote his version of Árpád's settlement of the country in the Carpathian Basin. Simon Kézai's History of the Huns tried to confirm the Hun-Magyar brotherly origin in a poetic way. In 1358, Márk Kálti's history of the Hungarians was based on the Ancient Chronicles. Legends provide an insight into the contemporary life of the Church through the stories of Hungarian saints and their miraculous actions. Some of them are truly artistic, such as the early 11th century Lesser Legend of King István I (St Stephen, 997-1038), and the Great Legend of St. Gellért, 11-12th century. The hymns of the saints and the songs of lamentation represent artistic poetry about the devastation caused by the Tartar invasion in Hungary (1241-1242). There are some compositions in Hungarian, in spite of the Latin literature of the Middle Ages. The 12th century Funeral Sermon and Prayer is a brief and touching sermon in Hungarian. The Old Hungarian Maria-Lament, (Ómagyar Mária-siralom), written around 1300, is a poetic description of a mother crying over the death of her son: its rich Hungarian vocabulary is unique. The Legend of St. Margit (Margaret), daughter of King Béla IV (canonized, 19 November 1943 by Pope Pius XII), is another kind of literary work in Hungarian from the same era, describing a Hungarian environment; the authentic description of the way of life in a convent makes it important.

The Renaissance (between about 1450 and 1640) brought a renewal to the Hungarian secular literature, although its main representatives, the humanist writers, wrote their compositions in Latin. However, it was not the Latin of the Middle Ages, but that of the language of the great Roman classical authors. János (John) Küküllei was the first to show the characteristics of a humanist writer in his Chronicon de Ludovico i.e. the Chronicle of King Louis the Great, written around 1360. In the court of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490), there were many erudite Italian writers besides Antonio Bonfini, who came to visit the famous Corvina library. The greatest Hungarian and internationally one of the most important poets of this era was Janus Pannonius, whose original Hungarian name was János (John) Csezmicsei. With his animated stories and successful sermon collection, Pelbárt Temesvári (ca. 1435-1504) is the most important writer of the monastic Latin literature in prose. Some fragments of the so-called flower songs also survived. With their informality, simplicity, closeness to nature and their melodies, they are closely related to folk poetry.

The most important Hungarian writer in the Erasmus style was János (John) Sylvester (c. 1504 - ?). He was a conscious author, the first one to recognize the system and the values of the Hungarian language while comparing it with the Latin. He wrote a Latin-Hungarian grammar in Latin. He authored the first Hungarian distich (couplet) verse in antique form. The prominent figure of his time was the lyricist Bálint (Valentine) Balassi (1554-1594), the first poet to write entirely in Hungarian. The colorful travelogue of Márton (Martin) Csombor Szepesi (1595-c. 1623) about contemporary European countries is another important piece of prose. Albert Molnár Szenczi (1574-1639), noted for his excellent Latin-Hungarian dictionary and grammar and his psalms, whose translations are still in use, is among the best poets. János (John) Csere Apáczai (1625-1659) was the very first person in the world to put together an Encyclopaedia in a national language.

The Age of Enlightenment (1772-1825) was also an era of renewal for Hungarian literature. There was a trend to bring Hungarian literature into the European mainstream, at the same time also serving national interests. The concept of enlightenment fuelled and partly formed the poems of Dániel Berzsenyi and Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy who, as organizer and leader of Hungarian literature, greatly helped these changes from his home in Széphalom. Károly (Charles) Kisfaludy gradually took over the leadership and established a more stable literary center in the bourgeois Pest. In the meantime, a long debate over the works of language reformers took place. Then Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty and József (Joseph) Bajza eventually inherited Károly Kisfaludy's legacy. József Katona's dramatic historical play, Bánk bán, made headway much before its time. His play was not considered revolutionary, although it strongly voiced – with a balance – all the national and social grievances of what was understood, but presented only in the 1830s. The Hungarian era of critics began to thrive with the appearance of Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey. Instead of friendly critiques, he implemented a style of objective and esthetic opinions and, with this, greatly contributed to the advancement of cultural esthetics. In 1825, Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi established The Hungarian Academy of Sciences in Pest, signaling the first period of the Reform Age that ended with the publication of Széchenyi's greatest works, Credit (Hitel) (1830), the World (Világ), and the Phase (Stádium). The second stage of the Reform Age ended in 1841 with the beginning of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth's publication, the Herald of Pest (Pesti Hirlap). The third phase lasted until 15 March 1848, and was “hallmarked” by the poems of Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi.

There were heavy consequences of the harsh suppression of the 1848-1849 War of Independence. In the following terror-filled years the nation was stripped of its statehood and all kinds of restrictions limited the literary establishment. Vienna's political ambition was to totally eliminate Hungarian independence. Thus history changed the importance of Hungarian literature. Suddenly, its main task was to keep alive the national identity, the resistance, nurturing and the dissemination of national ideals.

The new Hungarian literature began unfolding at the turn of the 20th century. Endre (Andrew) Ady's new style of poetry and the year 1905 are considered as a literary landmark. Coupled with nationalistic feelings, there was a marked interest in whatever was authentic and folkloric Hungarian. The literature turned to the real Hungarian past and to the real world of the Hungarian peasantry instead of the folkloric superficialities of the second half of the previous century. The greatest representative of the new Hungarian literature was Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz, who uniquely presented the Hungarian peasantry, the small town, the aristocracy and the bourgeoisie. Some of the Hungarian writers welcomed the national Democratic Revolution of 1918, but became disillusioned and retreated. Dezső (Desider) Szabó later became the voice of the radical bourgeois middle class. His novel, Az elsodort falu (The Swept Away Village), written in an expressionist romantic style, as well as his other publicist works equally made their marks. The romantic and anti-capitalistic verses of József (Joseph) Erdélyi were inspired by the simple folk songs and folk ballads. Although the so-called “folk” trend did not represent a unique group of writers, there were some recognizable common threads between them. Beside the naturalistic style of János (John) Kodolányi and Péter Veres, an even more colorful, more lyric style – at times bordering on folk mysticism -- took precedence. Pál (Paul) Gulyás, István (Stephen) Sinka, Pál Szabó and Áron Tamási all influenced the mind-set of the times.

During the period of Soviet occupation (1945-1991), Béla Balázs, Gyula (Julius) Hágy and Béla Illés returned from the Soviet Union and, together with Tibor Déry and Lajos (Louis) Nagy, the socialist writers living in Hungary, re-published most of their earlier works. There were no real patriotic thoughts published in Hungary at that time. Many writers left for the West; the rest of them made only sporadic attempts to voice some true nationalistic feelings instead of praises of the occupying power. Such is the case of Gyula (Julius) Illyés. Only when the occupying power weakened was it possible to form the Petőfi Circle (Petőfi Kör). Its literary discussions were the actual forerunners of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight.

In the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, writers played an important and vital role. Its proof is the one and only edition of the Literary Newspaper (Irodalmi Ujság), or the essay of Áron Tamási, Anxiety and Creed (Gond és hitvallás), adopted by the Writers’ Association after the Soviet invasion of 4 November. Reprisal followed the crushed Revolution. Writers, such as Tibor Déry and István (Stephen) Eörsi were arrested and sentenced to prison terms. The majority of writers were coerced into denouncing the Revolution and their publications were restricted. Around 1961, a compromise was reached and a consolidation took place: the writers abandoned open criticism of the political regime and the regime gave more opportunity for publication of their works. This situation prevailed well into the 1980s. In the interim years significant works were published, e.g. those of Gyula (Julius) Illyés, László (Ladislav) Németh, Tibor Déry, István (Stephen) Vas, Sándor (Alexander) Weöres, János (John) Pilinszky, Ágnes Nemes Nagy, Sándor (Alexander) Csoóri, László Nagy, Mihály (Michael) Váci, Ferenc (Francis) Karinthy, Ferenc (Francis) Sánta, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Galgóczy, Miklós (Nicholas) Mészöly, György Géza (George Geza) Ottlik, András (Andrew) Sütő, György (George) Konrád, Dezső (Desider) Tandori and Péter Nádas. The 1980s brought forth the so-called “Samizdat” underground literature, such as the Talking (Beszélő). It was foremost a politically inspired movement, the voice of the growing political opposition. It was written by “otherwise thinking” politically oppositional writers and politicians such as Gábor (Gabriel) Demszky, Jenő (Eugene) Nagy, Otilia Solt, György (George) Krassó, Ágnes Hágy, György (George) Dalos, Sándor (Alexander) Lezsák and István (Stephen) Csurka. This literature was printed and distributed illegally.

The great political changes in 1989, also transformed the structure of literary life. Besides the rejuvenated Writers’ Association, other writers’ associations came into existence, such as the Attila József Circle (József Attila Kör), the Association of Belletristic Writers (Szépirodalmi Társasága). Due to the new freedom of the press, book publications grew dramatically. This freedom offered a chance for launching independent periodicals, whereby creating rich opportunity for publications. Periodicals such as the Contemporary (Kortárs), Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom), Tisza Region (Tiszatáj) or Present Age (Jelenkor) all play a great role in the literary life. The novelty of the 1990s was the publication of translated Hungarian books in Western countries. Translated works of S. Márai, M. Szabó, P. Nádas, Gy. Konrád, P. Eszterházy and I. Kertész grew in popularity. Imre (Emeric) Kertész won the Nobel Prize in Literature in 2002. Authoresses are also present in growing numer, among them: Magda Szabó, Orsolya Karafiáth, Ágnes Judit Kiss, Zsófia Balla, Noémi Kiss, Agáta Gordon, Kriszta Bódis, Bán Zsófia, Ildikó Lovas, and Zsuzsa Takács. – B: 0879, 1020, 1031, 1091, 1257, T: 7103.→ Hungarian Runic Script; Linguistic Records of Old; Language Records, Early Hungarian; Language Relics; Most of the writers in the article have their own entry.

Lithuania, Hungarians in (Litvánia) – The relationship between Lithuania and Hungary goes back to medieval times, despite the fact that the two countries never had a common border. The Lithuanian Jagaila (Jagello) House gave three Kings to the Hungarian throne: Ulászló I (Wladislas) (1440-1444), Ulászló II (Wladislas) (1490-1516), and Lajos II (Louis, 1516-1526). There are quite a few outstanding Hungarians in Lithuanian history. Hedvig (ca. 1371-1399) was the daughter of Hungarian King Lajos I, (Louis the Great, 1342-1382). She became Polish Queen as Hedwiga. She married a Lithuanian Prince, whereby a Polish-Lithuanian union was created. She helped spread Christianity in Lithuania. She was beatified on 8 August 1986 in Krakow, and canonized 8 June 1997, in Krakow. After the Polish Jagello House died out, Prince István (Stephen) Báthory (1533-1586), Reigning Prince of Transylvania (now Romania), became Reigning Prince of Lithuania and King of Poland in 1576. He established the University of Vilnius, where many Hungarian students studied in the times of Báthory. He is regarded as one of the great rulers of Poland as well as of Lithuania. Gáspár (Gasper) Bekes of Transylvania (1520-1579) was Báthory's General in Lithuania, with a distinguished service. Hungarian merchants visited the country regularly, later all foreign traders were called "Magyars". Hungarian prisoners of wars were in Lithuania during the two World Wars. When Sub-Carpathia (Kárpátalja) was annexed to the Soviet Union, a good number of Hungarians from that region went to Lithuania, then also part of the Soviet Union, for higher studies. Many of them settled there. Lithuania was part of the Soviet Union from 1940, and became independent again in 1990. After independence, everyone who had lived there for five years has been granted citizenship. According to the 2001 census, there were 120 Hungarians living in the country, most of them in the capital Vilnius. The István Báthory Cultural Society of the Lithuanian Hungarians started with 30-35 members in 1990. – B: 1382, T: 7103.→Ulászló I, (Wladislas) King; Ulászló II, (Wladislas) King; Lajos (Louis) II, King; Lajos I, King, (Louis the Great); Hedvig, Saint; Báthory, Prince István.

Little Christmas (Kiskarácsony) – The "Eighth Day of Christmas" is the day of Jesus' circumcision and the old name for New Year's Day. The first of January has been New Year's Day since the Calendar Reform of Julius Caesar, and was celebrated with debauchery by the people of the Roman Empire in honor of Janus. People wished all the best to each other and to these good wishes they responded with gifts. However, in Hungary, New Year's Day during the Middle Ages was still counted from Christmas day. The counting of the beginning of the year with January 1 according to the Calendar Reform of Pope Gregory XIII, came into being in 1582. Documents from the 13th century mention the good wishes and gift giving as a custom originating in Italy. In the villages, even at the beginning of the 20th century, it was still customary that, on New Year's Day, shepherds and farm hands cracked the whip and sounded the bell until they received gifts. In many areas, children would walk all around the village, wishing people a Happy New Year. There were superstitions, such as the magic of plenty, predictions for love and weather beliefs attached to New Year's Day. – B: 1134, 1160, T: 7684.

Little Entente (Kis Antant) – A political and military alliance of Czechoslovakia, the Serbo-Croatian-Slovenian Kingdom (later Yugoslavia), and Romania, directed explicitly against Hungary, which culminated in the country's truncation by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate on 4 June 1920. Its members were also in alliance with the victorious Entente, or Allied Powers of World War I. It was formed on 14 August 1920, in Prague, on the initiative of Edvard Beneš, the Czechoslovak Foreign Minister. Its sole purpose was to defend the borders created by the dictated Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty, that ceded two-thirds of the territory and one-third of the Hungarian population of the Kingdom of Hungary, 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians – without plebiscite – to the neighboring states, and to prevent Hungary's attempts to revise this Treaty. They were ready to enforce the wartime reparations or any other terms of the Treaty, if necessary with the use of arms. They aimed to maintain their control over the territories obtained from Hungary with the assistance of the Allied Powers. They tried to isolate Hungary internationally and always acted in unison against her. In their endeavors they enjoyed the strong support of the French Government.

In 1921, during the Habsburg restoration attempts, they acted together against Hungary, partially mobilizing their armies and threatening war. In their 18-24 May 1929 meeting, they planned on closer co-operation against Hungary, and on 6 June 1936, they worked out a military plan for a possible war against Hungary. On 20-29 August 1938, due to the change in the international situation, they held a meeting with Hungary's representatives at Bled in Yugoslavia, where they recognized Hungary's right to equality in armaments. At the same time, they made a promise to improve the lot of Hungarian minorities living under their rule. In September 1938, the English-French appeasement policy sacrificed Czechoslovakia to Germany in the Munich Agreement and, a few weeks later, Romania effectively ended the Little Entente as an organization by negating all of her obligations in the alliance. – B: 1078, 1230, 1030, 1230, 1285, T: 7665.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Entente.

Littmann, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 21 November 1913 - Budapest, 21 August 1984) – Physician, heart surgeon. Between 1931 and 1937 he completed his medical studies at the University of Pécs, where he was awarded a prize for a histochemical essay competition. During 1937-1938 he started his medical career in a military hospital. He served his medical internship (1938-1941) under Professor Vilmos (William) Milkó in the surgical section of the Miklós Horthy (later Bajcsy-Zsilinszky) Hospital, near the Inner City of Budapest. In 1941-1942 he was an assistant physician in the Brody Hospital. In 1942-1943, as a forced laborer, he was posted to the General Hospital of Balassagyarmat as an acting resident physician. From 1945 he was a resident surgeon in the János (John) Hospital, Budapest, and from 1948, an assistant lecturer. From 1949 to 1951 he was a demonstrator under Professor Petrovski in the 3rd Surgical Clinic; then he was appointed Director and honorary lecturer of the newly established Post-graduate Surgical Clinic. On his return, after a brief study trip to London, he used new surgical techniques successfully in a number of different procedures in his clinic. He was the first surgeon after World War II who obtained his Medical Degree in surgery (1955), and received the Kossuth Prize (1954). During the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, he left Hungary. During the years 1956 to 1958, he worked in Sheffield, UK, later at the Toronto General Hospital in Canada. Following his return to Hungary in 1958, he became Head Surgeon of the László (Ladislav) Hospital, Budapest, and from 1960, he worked at the Tétény Road Hospital, Budapest. From 1963 to 1981 he was a professor of the Medical Post-Graduate Institute. Besides his teaching commitments, he was engaged in the study of abdominal surgery and congenital heart defects. He published more than a hundred articles and papers. They include The Heart and the Congenital Growth-abnormalities of the Main Bloodvessels (A szív és a nagyerek veleszületett fejlődési rendellenességei), co-authored with René Fonó (1951, 1955); Textbook of Surgery (Sebészeti műtéttan) (1953, 1968), and Bauchchirurgie. Indikation und Technik (Abdominal surgery. Indications and technique – A has sebészete. Javaslat és technika) (1977). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.

Litván, György (George) (Budapest, 19 February 1929 - Budapest, 8 November 2006) – Historian. In 1950 he earned a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest. During 1955 and 1956 he was a member of the Petőfi Circle; in 1956 he was the first to demand the replacement of the Communist Party secretary Mátyás (Matthew) Rákosi; for this he was sentenced to 6 years' imprisonment in 1957. Freed in 1962, he became a librarian at the Árpád High School in Budapest. From 1971 he was a correspondent for the Historical Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and between 1991 and 1999, Director of the same Institute. From 1990 he became Honorary President of the Sociological Society, and in 1991 he obtained a Ph.D. in Historical Studies from the University of Budapest. In 1995 he became a professor in the Sociological Institute of the University of Budapest. He retired in 1999. He mainly dealt with the history of the 19th and 20th century Hungarian democratic, social and national movements, the bourgeois democratic revolution of 1918, and the history of the Hungarian emigration in the interwar years. His works include Ervin Szabó (1974); He Liked the Truth, Mihály Károlyi's Life, co-authored with János Jemnitz, (Szerette az igazságot, Károlyi Mihály élete) (1977); The 1956 Revolution, Reform, Uprising, Freedom-fight, The Reprisal. Historical Reading-book, edited, co-authored with János (John) Bak (Az 1956-os forradalom, reform, felkelés, szabadságharc, megtorlás. Történelmi olvasókönyv) (1991); The Tradition and Literature of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution (Az 1956-os magyar forradalom hagyománya és irodalma) (1992); Ervin Szabó, the Moralizer of Socialism (Szabó Ervin, a szocializmus moralistája) (1993), and Oszkár Jászai's Homecoming (Jászai Oszkár hazatérése) (1996). He received the Academy's Prize (1992) and the Ferenc Deák Prize of Pro Renovanda Cultura Hungariae Foundation (1994). – B: 0878, 1257, T: 7456.

Livestock keeping – In the history of humanity the first three domesticated animals were the sheep, the goat and the dog. They appeared in the Carpathian Basin at the same time as cattle and pigs in the 6th millennium BC. The Körös Culture kept livestock and were the first to practice animal husbandry in the region. At the time of the Hungarian settlement in the country in 896 A.D., animal husbandry had already a major role in the Magyar economy. They kept and bred large animals, mostly cattle and horses; but they also kept some sheep. Contrary to other nomadic peoples, they also had pigs and poultry, although these were not suitable to a wandering lifestyle. Livestock-keeping distinctly reflects the lifestyle of their keepers. There are different ways of livestock keeping such as (1) Wild or all year round in the open air; (2) Half-wild pasturing, and (3) Cultivated keeping. Animal herding became a profession and an inherited family tradition. Herdsmen were called by different names depending on the type of animals they were guarding. There were mostly cattle on the Hungarian Great Plain (Nagyalföld) and their keepers were called gulyás (herdsmen). In the herdsman hierarchy they were followed by the csikós (horse herdsman, i.e., cowboy), the juhász (shepherd), and the kanász (swineherd). Hungarian herdsmen have an extremely rich linguistic heritage, as indicated by 300 different words describing the color and hair of horses; and there are about 200 words describing different cattle characteristics. The herdsman attire is a distinctly colorful aspect of Hungarian folk culture, as is their artistry. Their songs, dances and musical instruments also show some unique characteristics. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 3240.→Körös Culture.

Lloyd George, Lord David (Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester, 17 January, 1863 - Tŷ Newydd, 26 March 1945) – British Liberal politician of Welsh origin. He spoke English as a second language. He studied Law and became a solicitor, but chose a political career. He was a pioneer of social reform, Member of Parliament for Caernarvon Boroughs from 1890. During the South African War, he was prominent as a pro-Boer. As Chancellor of the Exchequer (1908-1915), he introduced old-age pensions in 1908, and health and unemployment insurance in 1911. His 1909 budget (with graduated direct taxes and taxing land values) provoked the Lords to reject it, resulting in the Act of 1911, limiting their powers. He held ministerial posts during World War I until 1916. There was an open breach between him and Lord Asquith, and he became Prime Minister of a coalition government (1916-1922). He set up a war cabinet and secured a unified Allied Command. Thus he enabled the Allies to withstand the last German offensive and achieve victory. As one of the Big Three, with US President Wilson and French Prime Minister Clemenceau, he played a major role in the Versailles Peace Treaty. He also endeavored to moderate the excessive demands of the Little Entente of the Allied (Entente) Powers. In the 1918 elections he achieved a huge majority over Labor and Asquith's followers, but high unemployment, intervention in the Russian Civil War, and use of the black-and-tans in Ireland, eroded his support. Creation of the Irish Free State in 1921, and his pro-Greek policy against the Turks led to the withdrawal of the Conservatives and the collapse of the Coalition in 1922. In 1927, he started to fight against the unjust Trianon Peace Treaties. In 1940, Churchill invited him to join his War Cabinet, but he was unable to accept because of ill health. In the last year of his life, he was raised to the peerage as 1st Earl of Oxford and Asquith. As to the Peace Treaty of Trianon, dictated to Hungary in 1920, Lloyd George declared in 1928, that: "Every argument advanced by certain of our Allies to convince us, was untrue and faked". – B: 1031, 1068, 1471, 1923, T: 7456.→Wilson, Woodrow; Clemenceau, George; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Lobkowitz Codex – A manuscript in Hungarian of varied contents, consisting of 176 leaves. It was copied in 1514 by Franciscan friars most probably for the Mother Superior of the Óbuda Clarissa Convent. It contains the legends of St. Francis of Assisi, St. Eufrozina and St. Elek, as well as prayers and meditations, among them some identical texts contained in the Bod Codex. The Codex was discovered at the end of the 19th century by the librarian and literary researcher János (John) Csontos in the library of the princely Lobkowitz family in the town of Raudnitz (now Roudni in the Czech Republic). How and when it came into their possession is uncertain - but they already owned it in 1878. After WW II, it was kept in the National Library in Prague. However, later it was returned to the Lobkowitz family. – B: 1031, 7617, T: 7617.→Codex Literature.

Local Nobility – A special form of nobility. In County Veszprém the hunters of Szentgál were invested with this regional nobility right. In Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), the so-called oppida nobelium, the inhabitants of Dés, Nagyenyed, Torda (now Dej, Aiud, Turda, Romania), received this rank collectively as members of those towns; but could exercise their nobility rights only among themselves and it was restricted to their own townships. – B: 1078, T: 3233.

Local Sentries – Following the example of military organizations, the civilian population also organized a sentry system called strázsák (sentries). Their main duty was to sound the alarm in case of fire or flood in villages as well in some cities, such as in the village of Alsóőr. The chief of the sentries was called bakter. The bakter's duty was to walk the streets from 9 p.m. until 3 a.m. in summertime, and until 5 a.m. in winter. It was also his duty to call the time out, loudly shouting it every two hours. This was the so-called kurjantás. This shout in Hungarian was forbidden when Alsóőr was annexed to Austria in 1920, since the Austrians villagers claimed it was disturbing the peace of the night. The bakter's and his eight helpers' nightly rounds also discouraged thieves. The two main districts of the villages: the Alszeg (lesser end) and the Felszeg (upper end) had to provide 4 sentries each. This organization was in service until the end of World War II. – B: 1134, T: 3233.

Locomotiv GT (often abbreviated LGT) – A Hungarian Rock Band formed in 1971 in Budapest. The founders were already well-known musicians: Gábor (Gabriel) Presser, songwriter, keyboardist and singer; József (Joseph) Laux, drummer; Károly (Charles) Frenreisz bass guitarist; Tamás (Thomas) Barta solo guitarist and Anna Adamis, lyrics writer. Their first concert was held on the Park Stage in Buda, in July 1971. In the same year, they opened a Club together with the Tolcsvay Trió and, later in 1971, they were invited to the World Popular Song Festival in Tokyo, to participate with one of Frenreisz's songs, Touch Me, Love Me, Rock Me. In Hungary, its style is still counted as experimental, and they didn't have as much success as they did abroad. In western countries, they were more popular. In 1972, they were invited to the Great Western Express Festival in Lincoln, England, where they performed alongside well known bands and artists. The group was asked to write a musical, based on Tibor Déry's An Imaginary Report on a Pop Festival. The musical was a great success; it was performed in five countries. After the band started touring North America and Europe in 1974, they became better known internationally. The Band made several singles and LP recordings in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, West Germany, Spain, Argentina, the UK and the USA, including Rock Yourself (Ringasd el magad) (1972); Lokomotiv GT V (1976); Loksi (1980), 424 Locomotive Opera (424 Mozdonyopera) (1997), and The Boys Went to the Pub (A fiúk a kocsmába mentek) (2002). The Band is one of the most influential bands in the history of Hungarian rock music. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Locomotive of Phase Period Changing – An electric locomotive that represents an advance made by Kálmán (Coloman) Kandó in 1923, based on several prior Hungarian inventions; Kandó's version is an electric locomotive of 50 periods for electric traction on main lines. – B: 1226, T: 7456.→Kandó, Kálmán.

Lőcse Almanacs – These very well known calendars were printed in the Brewer's printing house of Lőcse (now Levoča, in Upland, Felvidék, Slovakia), at the beginning of the 17th century. The oldest is dated 1626. The mathematician, Dávid Fröhlich of Késmárk (now Kežmarok, Slovakia), produced the first ones. In them, he included some weather forecasting, combined the weeks with Gospel passages, noted the market days, their time and places, and added some Hungarian historical stories and predictions, many of which became proverbs. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 3240.

Lőcse, Book of Dances (Lőcsei tablature) (Lőcse now Levoča, Slovakia) – It is a tabulated manuscript written in Upper Hungary in the second half of the 17th century. It contains several Hungarian dances in well-developed instrumental style and in rich sound forms. – B: 1197, T: 3240.

Lőcse Chronicles – Its original title was Zipserische Oder Lautschauerische Chronica. (Casper) Hain (1632-1687), judge, and on several occasions parliamentary ambassador of the city of Lőcse (now Levoča, Upland, Felvidék, now Slovakia), was its author. In his chronicles he wrote down the history of the city of Lőcse and other cities of the Szepesség and Felvidék (Upper Hungary, now Slovakia), from the very beginning to 1684. He used the notes and diaries of several people of Lőcse in his work. – B: 1078, T: 3240.→Cipszers.

Lőcse, Wood-carving School of - In former Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia), mainly at Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia). The growing demand for woodcarvings in the Middle Ages created schools, such as the Nuremberg School in Germany, and the renowned Gothic school of Northern Hungary. There are important artifacts from the 14th century, such as the St Nicholas figure, a Crucifix, and the Apostles, all parts of a main altar. Master Pál (Paul) Lőcsei, a creator of winged altars, was the school's most famous artist. The main altar in the St James Cathedral of Lőcse dates from the beginning of the 16th century. It is the highest wood-carved altar in Europe (18.6 m high and 6 m wide). The statues are from Master Pál's workshop. In the center of the altar is a statue of the Blessed Mary with Child, and of St James with St John, the Evangelist. On the winged altar there are high reliefs, and on the dividing wall there is the group of the Last Supper. There is a Madonna sculpture in the church of the Franciscan Minor Order, while the Calvary is in the parish church. In the Virgin Mary Church of Besztercebánya (now Banská Bistrica, Slovakia) is the St Barbara (Szent Borbála) winged altar from the workshop of Master Pál. The 16th century Main Altar of the St George (St György) church in Szepesszombat (now Spišská Sobota, Slovakia) was also created in his workshop. Around the end of the 15th century, the school applied more color. The Vir dolorum altar, and the Mátyás-crested (King Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490), Altar of Holy Mary demonstrates the art of Kassa (now Kosičce, Slovakia). The school's most productive era was the first quarter of the 16th century. Besides Master Pál Lócsei, the leading sculptor, there were other artists who created such masterpieces as the St Anne altar, the statue of St George, and the Nativity sculpture. – B: 1144, 1031, 1285, 1625, T: 7103.

Lócsei, Jenő (Eugene) (Putnok, 11 May 1956 - ) – Dancer, choreographer. He completed his studies at the State Ballet Institute (Állami Ballet Intézet) in 1976. He went with a scholarship to Leningrad (now St. Petersburg) for a year to further his studies. He has been a member of the Opera House, Budapest since 1977. Between 1982 and 1987, he was a solo dancer there, and concurrently a soloist at the Vienna State Opera (Staatsoper). From 1988 he was the leading soloist for the Norwegian National Ballet; from 1989 to 1991 he was the leading soloist of the West-Berlin Deutsche Oper. He is a dancer of lyric make-up of unusually fine lines and clean technique he moulds the classical, neoclassical and modern roles on an equally high, inspired level. He created his first choreography for Miklós (Nicholas) Königer's TV film, the Dance of Death (Haláltánc), he also danced the leading role. His other roles include Crassus in L. Seregi's Spartacus; Romeo in L. Seregi's Romeo and Juliet; Jesus in A. Fodor's The Test (A próba), and the Prince in Nureyev-Grigorovich-Róna's Nutcracker (Diótörő). His choreographic works include Porten's Can-can (Kánkán) and I. Kálmán's Countess Marica (Marica grófnő). Apart from operetta insets, he created a one-act choreography entitled: Flamma. He received the Franz Liszt Prize (1983), the Artist of Merit title (1986), and he is a member of the Society of Immortals (2009). – B: 1445, 1439, T: 7456.

Lóczy, Lajos Sr. (Louis) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, November 1849 - Balatonarács, 13 May 1920) – Geoscientist. He completed his High School studies in Arad (now in Romania), then, obtained an Engineering Degree from the Zurich Polytechnic in 1874. On his return to Hungary, he was appointed assistant curator of the Mineralogy and Paleontology Section of the National Museum of Hungary, Budapest. From 1877 to 1880 he took part in Count Béla Széchenyi's East-Asian expedition, and toured most of China. His observations and discoveries have been recognized worldwide. He showed that the rock and sand material of the Central-Asian deserts were not derived from the sea floor but were the result of millions of years of accumulation. His observations on the geological structure of the mountain ranges of southeast India are pioneering. After his return, he remained at his former workplace for another two years, then, from 1883, as the geologist of the Geographic Institute, he carried out the geological survey of the mountains in the Bácság area of southern Hungary. From 1886 to 1908, Lóczy was professor at the University of Budapest, and from 1902 to 1908, Director of the Geological Institute, at the same time retaining his professorial title and status. Between 1900 and 1914 he was President of the Hungarian Geographical Society. On his initiative and under his leadership he formed, in 1891, the Balaton Commission, a Society for the manifold scientific study of Lake Balaton and its immediate environs. He initiated the systematic geological and geo-morphological exploration of the Transylvanian Basin (Erdély, now in Romania), and he gained significant merit in the exploitation of the Transylvanian rock salt and natural gas wealth. The drilling around Nagysármás (now Sărmaşu, Romania) in the middle of the Transylvanian Basin, was based on his survey and studies. In the geosciences, beside tectonics, he obtained outstanding results in Stratigraphy and Paleontology, and was an expert in Geomorphology as well. His collections in Ethnography, Archeology and History were also famous. However, his world fame was based on his East-Asian travels. He participated in the formation of the Hungarian Carpathian Association, subsequently renamed as the Hungarian Tourist Association, and was its Vice President. He published some 200 papers in various specialized publications. His works include Description of the Natural Conditions of the Chinese Empire (A kínai birodalom természeti viszonyainak leírása) (1886); Results of the Geological Observations in the East-Asian Travels of Count Béla Széchenyi (A geológiai megfigyelések eredményei gróf Széchenyi Béla keletázsiai utazásában) (1890), in German: Wissenschaftliche Ergebnisse der Reise in Ostasien, mit B. Széchenyi, History of the Heavenly Empire (A mennyei birodalom története) (1901); Geology of the Lake Balaton region (A Balaton környékének geológiája) (1913), and Geographical and Geological Description of the Lands of the Hungarian Holy Crown (A magyar szent korona országainak földrajzi és földtani leírása). He raised the Hungarian geosciences to an international level. He is generally regarded as the greatest Hungarian geologist. A bilingual High School in Balatonfüred, a geography competition, a walking path, and a medal of the Hungarian Geographical Society bear his name. – B: 0883, 1068, 1105, 1122, T: 7456.→Laczkó, Dezső; Széchenyi, Count Béla; Papp, Károly; Lóczy Lajos Jr; Vojnics, Oszkár; Lóczy Peak.

Lóczy, Lajos Jr (Louis) (Budapest, 5 June 1891 - Rio de Janeiro, 9 June 1980) – Geologist. Son of Lajos (Louis) Lóczy Sr. He studied in Zürich, where he obtained his Doctorate in 1914. He was a demonstrator at the Geology Department of the University of Budapest in 1916, and Honorary Lecturer in Tectonics in 1919. He became a professor at the University of Economics in 1925, and from 1932 to 1948 he was Director of the Geological Institute. From 1920 to 1961 he also worked in 17 different countries as an expert advisor. He permanently settled in Brazil in 1961. He was a visiting professor in Teheran and Rio de Janeiro in the 1960s. He was a specialist advisor at the Geological Institute of Rio de Janeiro (1965-1968), and later became Professor of Geotectonics at the Federal University until his retirement at the end of 1973, although he continued working for some time as an expert advisor. His research work in Hungary started with exploring the Paleontology and Geology of the Villány Mountain, and then from the 1930s, hydrocarbon research was the center of his interest that resulted in some successful oil-field development in a number of areas. During the last two decades of his life, he studied fissil materials. Adjunct to his body of earlier work, his study of large-scale structures stands out. It led to the assessment of the origin of Gondwanaland and the Atlantic Ocean and the assumption of the enrichment of certain elements along large-scale faults led to the discoveries of enormous one-bodies. He published more than 90 papers and studies. – B: 0883, 1741, T: 7456.→Lóczy, Lajos Sr.

Lóczy Peak (Nepal, Lhotse, Lhoce) – Glaciated mountain peak in the Himalayas, the fourth highest point on Earth. Sven Hedin (1865-1952), the Swedish explorer and prolific writer, stated in a lecture given at the Hungarian Geographical Society, Budapest, that Lóczy's earlier findings were acceptable in every respect, and announced that he named the 27,923 ft high massive mountain peak in the vicinity of Mt. Everest, Lóczy Peak, in his honor. According to Indian sources Lhotse means Southern Peak in the Tibetan language, thus intimating that the peak is south of Qomolongma (Mt. Everest). During his life Hedin visited Budapest three times. – B: 1288, 1153, T: 7456.→Lóczy, Lajos Sr.

Lodomér (Lodomér) (early 13th century - January 1298) – Archbishop, Canon of Veszprém. He is a descendant of the Monoszló family. From 1264 he was Chancellor of István (Stephen) V, Junior King. Between 1268 and 1279 he was Bishop of Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania). Unexpectedly, Pope Nicholas III invested him Archbishop of Esztergom. He was a renowned statesman. He had a long controversy with King László IV, (Ladislav the Kun, 1272-1290), whom he excommunicated and later absolved. He presided over a synod in Esztergom in 1288. After the death of King László IV, he quickly brought András incognito from Vienna to Buda, had him elected King, and crowned him at Székesfehérvár on 23 July 1290. He became the main supporter of King András III (Andrew 1290-1301) and defended him against Rome. – B: 0945, T: 7103.→István V, King; László IV, King; András III, King.

Lodomeria, Poland – Located along the River Bug in today's Volhinia. Lodomeria, an independent state around 888, A.D., surrendered to the Magyars arriving from Kiev. Around 1025 it came under Russian influence and only regained its independence in the 12th century, when it was unified with Halics. Hungarian King András II (Andrew, 1205-1235), who later claimed the title "King of Lodomeria" for himself, placed Daniel, the son of its ruler on the throne under Hungarian authority in 1206. Between 1214 and 1219, through the Hungarian Prince Kálmán (Coloman), and between 1370 and 1382, through Hungarian King Lajos I, (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) Lodomeria came under Hungarian influence again. In 1390 it was taken over by Poland and remained under Polish control until the first partition of Poland in 1772. In the same year Empress Maria Theresa (1740-1780), based on the historical rights of the Hungarian Crown, reclaimed it, but put it under Austrian authority. – B: 0942, 1153, T: 7665.→András II, King; Lajos I, King; Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen.

Loew, Károly Frigyes (Charles, Frederick), (Löw) (Sopron, 20 March 1699 - Sopron, 4 November 1741) – Physician, botanist. His medical studies started under János (John) Windisch in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), where he also studied botany. From 1717 to 1721 he studied at the School of Medicine of the University of Jena, where he obtained his Degree in Medicine. For a year he practiced medicine in Sopron and then, between 1722 and 1738, he was Army Physician, and later Court Physician in Vienna. Following his return to Sopron, besides practicing medicine, he was engaged in flora research. From 1739 he wanted a team of colleagues each to cover the flora of one county and to compile a national botanical collection, the Flora Pannonica; but only one work was realized. It was the one that Loew wrote, together with Deccard, called the Flora Pannonica seu Soproniensis, only in manuscript form that lists 1098 plants. For his work, he was elected a member of the Berlin Academy of Sciences. His works include De morbo petechiali, qui anno 1683... (1730), and Epistola ad celeberrimos omnium regum botanicos (1739). – B: 1730, 0883, 0907, T: 7456.

Lófi – (Horse's head) – Head of a Transylvanian clan, of four branches (ágszáz), Lord of the clan's counties. Later it became a rank of the Szekler nobility, meaning Szekler nobleman; second rank of the Szekler nobility in the Middle and New Ages who had to go to fight wars on his own horse. They amassed important fortunes during the 15-16th centuries. In time the rank of lófő and ágszász merged into one. In the period of feudalism, their social structure disintegrated, they became serfs, and lost all their wealth in the 18th century. At the center of their crest is the Sun with a four-branched rosette. There are four bundles of rays at the outline of the emblem denoting the four lords of ágszász. There are also half-circle mounds on the crest's stems with a decoration of slanted lines underneath. Sometimes there are serfs (master of the branches) or flagged halberd (bannerette) over the center sun. This seems to reinforce the ranks of branches. – B: 0942, 1231, T: 3240.

→Szeklers.

Log Wall – A wall made of horizontally positioned logs or beams joined by notches and pins. Perfectly fitted, gap-free walls were erected from good quality materials. This method of construction has been practised in the Carpathian Basin since prehistoric times. Hungarians used log walls already before settling down in present Hungary and continued to use them throughout the Middle Ages for the construction of fortresses, churches and manor houses. In wooded regions building of log houses is still common today. – B: 1134, T: 7663.

Lókkös, Antal (Anthony) (Gór, 20 October 1928 - ) – Poet, writer, librarian. He studied Theology and Philosophy at Pannonhalma. From 1954 he studied Hungarian Linguistics and Literature in an evening course at the University of Budapest. Before that, from 1952 to 1954, he worked as a railway-track repairman in Balatonkenese, and in the shunting yard of District IX (Ferencváros) of Budapest. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he emigrated to the West, and settled in Switzerland. He earned a Degree, majoring in Latin, French and Hungarian from the University of Geneva. Later, he worked as a clerk for the International Public Education Office; then acted as a science correspondent for the University Library in Geneva, where he also gave lectures at the College of Librarianship. He wrote studies in French, dealing with the history of the Geneva Library, published in Swiss scientific journals. His short stories, parodies, critiques and reviews were written in Hungarian and published in the papers New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle); Literary Journal (Irodalmi Újság), and National Guard (Nemzetőr). His works include Lost Creeks (Elveszett patakok) poem (1960); Ballads, Songs (Balladák-Énekek) poems (1967), and Les incunables de la Bibliothèque de Genève (1982). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Lomb, Kató (Kate, born: Szilárd) (Pécs, 8 February 1909 - Budapest, 9 June 2003) – Interpreter, translator, linguistic genius. She was raised in Pécs, went to the University there and studied Physics and Chemistry, and earned a Ph.D. But her interest soon led her to languages. During the Soviet siege of Budapest, from 24 December 1944 to 13 February 1945, she learned Russian. She soon acquired such an excellent command of Russian that, for a while, she served as the translator for the Russian Commander for Budapest. Her language learning increased, and finally she earned money with sixteen languages: Bulgarian, Chinese, Danish, English, French, German, Hebrew, Italian, Japanese, Latin, Polish, Romanian, Russian, Slovak, Spanish and Ukrainian. She learned these languages mostly as an autodidact. Through her books, she shared her learning method, including This is How I Learn Languages... (Így tanulok nyelveket...) (1970, 1972, 1990, 1995); An Interpreter Around the World (Egy tolmács a világ körül) (1979); Languages remind me... (Nyelvekről jut eszembe...) (1983), and Harmony of Babel... (Bábeli harmónia...) (1988). Her books also appeared in many translations. She was one of the first simultaneous interpreters of the world. : B: 1031, T: 7103.

Long-playing record – A long-playing (LP) record has much more densely spaced micro-grooves compared to the older standard records. The preheated raw material, placed between the press-moulds (in contrast with standard records), receives various different fillers with a vinyl base. It takes less space and its playtime is considerably longer than that of standard records. They have been manufactured since 1947 in three sizes: with diameters 7, 10 and 12 inches (170, 250 and 300 mm respectively) and with two speeds: 45 and 33 rotations/minute. Its playtime is about 5.5, 15, 22-26 and maximum 30 minutes respectively. The invention of Péter Károly (Peter Carl) Goldmark perfected this type of record. It was introduced in 1948. – B: 1138, T: 7456.→
Goldmark, Péter Károly.

Lontay, Margit (Margaret) (Lencse) (Hódmezővásárhely, 27 July 1918 - Budapest, 11 January 1993) – Actress. She finished her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1938. From 1938 to 1939 she did acting with strolling companies in the countryside. From 1939 to 1949 she played in Szeged; from 1949 to 1953 at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pécs; between 1953 and 1960 she worked again at the National Theater, Szeged. From 1960 to 1976 she was a member of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen. From 1976 until her retirement in 1982, she worked at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. In her career, she played tragic heroines and appeared in character roles. Her roles, among others, were Gertrudis in Katona's Bánk bán; Goneril in Shakespeare's King Lear (Lear király); Margaret in Shakespeare's Richard III; Nurse in Romeo and Juliet; Rebeka in: Magda Szabó's An Old-fashioned Story (Régimódi történet), and Orbánné in Örkény's Cat's Play (Macskajáték). She had some 13-feature films to her credit, among them: Trial-road (Próbaút) (1961); Woman at the Colony (Asszony a telepen) (1963); The Plague (A járvány) (1976); Csontváry (1980), and the Three Sisters (A három nővér) (1991). Among her TV films are Black Rose (Fekete rózsza) (1980); For Ever and Ever (Örökkön örökké) (1984), and We Never Die (Sose halunk meg) (1993). She received the Mari Jászai Prize (1957) and the Artist of Merit title (1976). – B: 1445, 1719, 1031, T: 7456.

Lontay-Rajner, László (Ladislav) (Rimaszombat, now Rimavská Sobota, Slovakia, 6 May 1911 - Budapest, 25 May 1987) – Opera singer (baritone). He studied music in Rimaszombat under Kálmán (Coloman) Lackner, and in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), under Oszkar (Oscar) Nedbal. From 1936 to 1939 he was a singer in the Opera Company of the National Theater of Pozsony. He sang baritone and bass-baritone parts in Mozart's Magic Flute, in Verdi's Luisa Miller, and in Millöcker's Beggar Student. From 1939 to 1971 he was a member of the Budapest Opera House's choir; and beside choir work, he had smaller roles as well. He was an excellent oratorio recitalist. He also wrote lyrics for songs and sung Hungarian songs with great success. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456.

Lónyay, Count Menyhért (Melchior) (Nagylónya, now Lónya, near Záhony, 6 January 1822 - Budapest, 3 November 1884) – Politician, political writer, financial specialist. He was a descendant of an ancient noble family from County Bereg (now in Carpatho-Ukraine). He studied Art, Law and Economics and, in 1839, he obtained a Ph.D. in Art. He took up a political career after a long study trip abroad. As the owner of a large estate, he became County Bereg's deputy at the Diet of 1843. He stood near the centralist group of József (Joseph) Eötvös. In the Reform struggle for the transformation of the country, he sided with the Liberal opposition's right wing, leaning to an agreement with the Conservatives. In the Parliament of 1848 he was the right-wing representative of County Bereg. In September 1848 he was adviser to the Minister of Finance, then Financial Under-Secretary of State in the Szemere Cabinet. His exile after the collapse of the War of Independence of 1848-1849 from Austrian rule did not last long. In 1850 he returned and joined in the economic life. He was one of the founders and President of the Land Bank. He was co-editor for the journal, Budapest Review (Budapesti Szemle) with Antal (Anthony) Csengery. Prior to the Compromise (1867), he was a correspondent for the Political Weekly (Political Hetilap), of Baron József (Joseph) Eötvös, and became the financial adviser of Ferenc (Francis) Deák and Count Gyula (Julius) Andrassy. From 20 February 1867 to 21 May 1870 he was Minister of Finance in the Andrassy Cabinet. In 1870 and 1871 he was Minister of Finance jointly with Austria. From 14 November 1871 to 4 December 1872 he was Prime Minister and also Minister of Defense, and received his title of Count. The opposition sharply criticized his financial policy and even his personal integrity, whereupon he resigned. From 1861, he was Vice-President of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; from 1871 until his death its President (corresponding member from 1858, honorary member from 1861). His works include History of the Regulation of the River Tisza (A Tiszaszabályozás története) (1860); On the State Property, vols. i-ii (Az államvagyonról, I-II) (1869), and On Our Public Affairs, vols. i-ii (Közügyeinkről, I-II) (1873-1875). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456. → Deák, Ferenc; Andrassy, Count Gyula; Eötvös, Baron József; Szemere, Bertalan.

Loop (sling) – In popular beliefs “binding” and “loosing” belong to the realm of magic powers. According to this belief, a person can “bind” a man's or an animal's bodily or mental functions, i.e. can make them sick or, by “loosing”, can heal them. In the ancient Persian Pantheon, Varuna, the controller of weather was “the Lord of Binding” and he was pictured with a rope sling. In Greek mythology Aeolus, the King of the Winds was his counterpart. Binding and loosing are symbolic actions. As the expressions go “his hands are tied” and “his tongue was loosened”. These originated however, by actual binding by the snare of the hunter, the tying of the prisoner, the noose of a rope on the gallows. The loop has – in general – a sinister association: captivity, symbol of unmerited death. Binding is at the same time a symbol of uniting and unity: bond, obligation, matrimony, etc. The power of an endless loop is that it is insoluble, cannot be disentangled. If it is cut, it loses its power. An example for this is the Gordian knot. By cutting it, Alexander the Great magically acquired world power. Christianity adopted the symbol of the rope sling. In Christian iconography the cord belt of monks recalls Christ bound with a rope. It became a symbolic instrument of self-torture. On the rope belt of Franciscans the three slings express the three obligations of chastity, poverty and obedience. – B: 0942, T: 7677.

Lorán, Lenke (Győr, 1 May 1927 - ) – Actress. She studied at Margaret Makay’s Studio. From 1943 to 1945 she was a member of the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest. From 1945 to 1966 she was a member of the Artist Theater (Művész Színház), the Merry Theater (Vidám Színház), the Hungarian People’s Army Theater (A Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza), and the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház). From 1966 she acted on the stage of the Merry Theater. Explosive temperament and high-spirited comic playing in a powerful style characterize her stage appearances. Beside her comic roles, she also created something lasting in more serious character roles. She appeared in several feature films and TV plays. Her roles include Zsizi in B. Gábor’s Drunken Night (Részeg éjszaka); Peacockné (Polly Peachum) in Brecht–Weill’s The Threepenny Opera (Die Dreigroschenoper, based on John Gay’s 1727 Beggar’s Opera (Koldusopera)); Ritka Panna in Jókai’s The Poor Rich (A szegény gazdagok); Miss Finigale in K. Aszlányi - F Karinty’s The Seven Slaps (A hét pofon); Roticsné in F. Molnár’s The Glass Slipper (Üvegcipő); Koltayné in A. Gábor’s The Dollar Dad (Dollárpapa), and Mrs. Pogson in Maugham – G. Nádas – I. Szenes’ Love and Beauty (Imádok férjhezmenni). There are 33 feature and TV films to her credit, among them: Mirage in all Quantity (Délibáb minden mennyiségben) (1962); Jaguár (1967); “Next Please” (“Kérem a következőt”) (1974); Seven Tons of Dollar (Hét tonna dollár) (1974); Believe Me (Higyjetek nekem) (1984), and Prankish (Huncut) (2003). She received the Mari Jászai Prize (1968), the Knight Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2003), the Officer Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2007), and Life Member of the Society of Immortals (2010) – B: 1445, 1439, 1719, 1031, T: 7456.

Lorandite (TlAs<sub>2</sub>) – rare mineral of Tallium (Tl), red, tabular. József Sándor (Joseph Alexander) Krenner, who named it after Baron Loránd (Roland) Eötvös, the renowned physicist discovered it. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7674. → Eötvös, Baron Loránd.

Lóránt, Gyula (Julius) (Lipovics) (Kőszeg, 6 February 1923 - Salonika, Greece, 31 May 1981) – Soccer player, trainer. He played with the Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) Athletic Club (NAC) (1943-1945), the Flacara Rosie Arad (now in Romania) (1946), the Hungarian Vasas (1947-1949), the Budapest Honvéd (center-half) (1950-1956). He was a member of the Hungarian Olympic Champion Team in Helsinki (1952); a member of the World Cup, 2nd placed Hungarian team in the Switzerland (1954). In the so-called London “Match of the Century” (1953), he was part of the Hungarian team that defeated the English selected team, 6:3. He was four-time Hungarian champion between 1943 and 1955, and also Romanian champion (1946-1947). From 1948 to 1955, he was in the Hungarian National Team 42 times. From 1963 to 1981, he was a trainer in West Germany, trainer of Cologne FC, the Bayern Munich and the Schalke 04. He was Freeman of Kőszeg. He was buried in Endingen, West Germany, but for the request of his family his ashes were brought back to Hungary and reburied in Kőszeg in 2011. He was promoted major posthumously. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Golden Team; Bozsik, József, Buzánszky, Jenő; Czibor, Zoltán, Grosics, Gyula; Kocsis, Sándor; Puskás, Ferenc.

Lóránt, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 20 September 1942 - ) – Electrical engineer, economist. He completed his Electrical Engineering course at the Budapest Polytechnic (1961-1966), and later an Economics course at the University of Economics (1968-1970). He worked as a development engineer for the Electromechanical Company from 1966 to 1970, and at the National Market Research Institute (1970-1972). During the years 1970-1990 he was correspondent for the National Planning Board (1985-1990), head of the Long-term Development Section. From 1990 he was Section Head of the Economic Policy Research Institute of the Ministry of Finance. From 1991 he was a correspondent and Section Head of the Economic Analytical and Informative Institute (ECOSTAT); member of the Future-Research Committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; member of the Hungarian Economic Society, Secretary of the Economic Developmental Section, also member of the National Democratic Association. Since 2003 he has been Economic Specialist for the European Parliament. He was engaged in the supervision of the economic and social influence of the World Bank loans and of the alternative possibilities of the European Cooperation and Economic Policy. He is one of the editors of the bimonthly magazine called EUWatch, launched by the Independence and Democracy Organization; his articles and studies are published in various papers and journals. – B: 0874, 1930, T: 7456.

Lorant, Stefan (István Lóránt) (Budapest, 22 February 1901 - USA, 14 November 1997) – Photographer, filmmaker, journalist. His father directed the largest Photographic Studio in Budapest, named Erdélyi. He attended the Evangelical (Lutheran) High School, Budapest, and studied at the University of Economics. In 1914 he started publishing his photos in Budapest newspapers and magazines. Following the end of World War I, he first went to Czechoslovakia, then to Vienna, and worked as a still photographer for a Hungarian filmmaker. At the age of 19, he was already known as a leading cameraman in Europe due to his first film, The Life of Mozart. Over the next few years he developed his skills as a scriptwriter and made a total of 14 films. While working in Berlin in 1921 a young woman approached him and asked for a screen test. He turned her down rudely saying that she had no gift for the movies. She turned out to be Marlene Dietrich. In 1928 he was Chief Editor of a Munich weekly, responsible for making the Münchener Illustrierte Presse, the first modern photojournalistic paper in Europe. With the Nazi invasion of Bavaria in 1933, his political commentaries enraged Hitler, who ordered him taken into protective custody and he was imprisoned for nearly a year without being charged. The Hungarian Government came to his rescue and he was released and began editing a paper in Budapest. Based on his prison experience he wrote I Was Hitler's Prisoner, took the manuscript to London in 1934, and published it the following year. He began photojournalism in England and soon became Editor for the Odham's Weekly Illustrated, the first popular illustrated paper in England, and a model for American picture magazines such as Life and Look. Later he started a successful pocket magazine Lilliput, and the influential illustrated news magazine Picture Post. He met Winston Churchill, and wrote articles about him in the Picture Post. Churchill also contributed articles and, in 1939, he suggested that he devote a special issue on the United States. Lorant went to America and, on his return to London, he published a 160-page Issue on America. From 1940 he lived in New York, wrote articles in the New York Times, Life, Look, and Saturday Evening Post. From 1959 to 1961 he studied at Harvard University. He authored several books between 1928 and 1941; among them the most successful one was I Was Hitler's Prisoner. His other works include The World (1946); F. D. Roosevelt,

A Pictorial Biography (1950); The Life of Abraham Lincoln (1954); Sieg Heil! An Illustrated History from Bismarck to Hitler (1974), and My Life in England (1984). His other publications were The Glorious Burden, about the American presidency, The New World, with illustrated biographies of American Presidents, and Pittsburgh: The Story of an American City. – B: 1081, 1672, T: 7456.→Churchill, Sir Winston; Roosevelt, Franklin Delano; Hitler, Adolf.

Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna (Susanna) (Ónod, ? 1600 - Sárospatak, 18 April 1660) – Wife of György (George) Rákóczi I, Reigning Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in 1616. Sárospatak was her dowry and remained in the hands of the Rákóczis. The young couple moved from Szerencs to Sárospatak, where she remained to the end of her life. They had five children; but only two, György and Zsigmond (Sigismund) reached adulthood. She was an excellent manager and gardener, the enthusiastic patroness of the Calvinist Reformed Church and schools, and expertly managed the family holdings to provide even greater support to her charitable activities. The family moved to Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) following György Rákóczi's election as Reigning Prince of Transylvania in 1630. She aided her husband in the recruiting of the troops with their organization. After the death of her husband in 1648, she returned to Sárospatak and dedicated her life to the development of the Reformed College there. She invited foreign professors such as János Ámos (John Amos) Comenius, who helped to develop the College as one of the centers of the Hungarian Reformed Church. This was the golden age of the town, the castle and the Reformed College of Sárospatak. – B: 0883, 1245, T: 7658.→Rákóczi I, Prince György; Medgyesi, Pál; Reformed College at Sárospatak; Sárospatak; Comenius, Ámos János.

Lord-Lieutenant (főispán) – He represented the reigning Monarch in a county. Before the 15th century, he was called ispán. His main duty was to enforce the king's orders with the help of the royal bandérium (a cavalry contingent under the royal banner). The főispán was appointed by the Monarch or the Head of State. The power of the főispán gradually diminished when, led by the nobility, the independent authority of the counties grew strong and the executive power was taken over by the alispán (vice-ispán), who was elected by the inhabitants of the county. In the 16th century the office of the főispán became a permanent title for life, given to certain courtiers and ecclesiastic dignitaries or members of the aristocracy, but it was just an empty title. Except for the years between 1867 and 1918, the főispán was the local trustee of the Government in power. He could exercise a wide range of supervisory authority over the administration and over the self-governing assembly of the county. In 1950, following the Soviet system, the office was abolished in Hungary. – B: 1122, 1231, T: 3233.

Lórente Family Clan – The first known member of the family was Lórente, deceased in 1251. His son, János (John) was “comes” in 1259. Between 1236 and 1456, there is mention of the clan's 25 estates in Transdanubia. The Bezerédy and Lőrinczy families are descendants of the clan. – B: 0942, T: 7676.

Lőrincz, Ferenc (Francis) (Bálványosvára, now Unguras, Romania, 15 October 1898 - Budapest, 15 May 1986) – Physician, microbiologist and parasitologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical School of the University of Szeged, and was a correspondent for the Institute of Anatomy there (1923-1928). In 1926 he obtained his qualification for Forensic Medicine. In 1934 he became a medical laboratory specialist. Between 1928 and 1936 he was Assistant Lecturer, organized the laboratory for Pathological Histology and Parasitology. He established human Parasitology in Hungary. He made extensive study trips on a Rockefeller scholarship to a number of European countries (London 1930-1931, Italy and Albania 1936). From 1934 he was Professor of Public Hygiene in the Medical School of the University of Budapest, and Honorary Lecturer in Parasitology. From 1943 to 1946 he was one of the Directors of the National Chemical Institute. Then he voluntarily retired only to become the Scientific Adviser for the Institute, later its Scientific Director. From 1948 he became Head of the Microbiological and Meat-industrial Section. He obtained his Doctorate in Medicine in 1956. From 1950 to 1959 he was in charge of a section of the packing, meat and refrigeration industries. From 1959 he was Director of the Meat Industrial Research Institute. He was the editor of several scientific journals, such as the Népegészségügy (1933-1936); Meat Industry (Húsipar), and Parasitologia Hungarica (1968-1986). In 1964 he was a founding member of the Hungarian Parasitology Society; from 1967 to 1972 he was its President and, from 1972, its Honorary President. He published 171 scientific papers and several books. His works include The Frequency of Echinococcus in Hungary (Az echinococcus gyakorisága Magyarországon) (1931); Malaria (A malaria) (1939), and the Handbook of the Meat Industry (Húsipari kézikönyv) (1973). He received an honorary doctorate from the University of Szeged, the János Balassa Prize (1935), and the Elek Zsigmond commemorative medal (1965). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.

Lőrincz, Lajos (Louis) (Debrecen, 25 August 1935 - ) – Lawyer, student of public administration. In 1953 he completed his studies at the Commercial High School of Sáropatak. He began his higher studies at the Foreign Affairs College while, between 1955 and 1959, he studied for a Degree in the Department of Jurisprudence of the University of Szeged. In 1963 he did postgraduate work in the Institute of Comparative Studies, established by the Common Market at the École Universitaire des Études Européennes in Torino. From 1988 to 1990 he was Director of the College of Public Administration; from 2000 to 2004, Dean of the Department of Jurisprudence and Political Science in the Reformed University. Lőrincz was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1990, ordinary 1999); in 1983 he received an honorary doctorate at the University of Aix-Marseille. His works include Hungarian Public Administration, Dilemmas and Perspectives (1988), and Law of Public Administration (with others, 2007). Recipient of the Albert Szent-Györgyi Prize (2000) and the Ferenc Deák Prize (2002). He was a well-known expert in public administration. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.

Lőrincze, Lajos (Louis) (Szentgál, 24 November 1915 - Budapest, 11 October 1993) – Linguist. He studied at the Reformed College, Pápa. As a member of the Eötvös College, he acquired a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest. He taught at Pápa between 1943 and 1945, earned a Ph.D., and became a contributor to the Linguistic Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was Editor for the Hungarian Language Magazine (Magyar Nyelvtár), and Editor for a radio broadcast series: Our Sweet Mother Tongue (Édes anyanyelvünk) from 1952. He also edited a similar series in television from 1963. His work was spreading and popularizing the Hungarian linguistic culture. By organizing the Mother Tongue Conferences (Anyanyelvi konferenciák), together with the World Federation of Hungarians, he helped to preserve the national identity of Hungarians abroad. Some of his works are The Life of Our Geographical Names (Földrajzi neveink élete) (1947); Bibliography of Hungarian Dialects (Magyar nyelvjárási bibliográfia) Co-Editor (1951); Language and Life (Nyelv és élet) (1953); Our Sweet Mother Tongue (Édes anyanyelvünk) (1961); On Language Guard (Nyelvőrségen) (1968); Human-centered Language Culture (Ember központú nyelvművelés) (1980), and Our Heart Swells (Megnő az ember szíve) (1990). He received the State Prize (1970), the Apáczai Prize (1981), the Dezső Pais Prize (1990) and the Kosztolányi Prize (1992). – B: 0932, 0878, 1257, T: 7103. → Deme, László.

Lorre, Peter (László, Ladislav, Loewenstein) (Rózsahegy, Hungary, now Ruzomberok, Slovakia, 26 June 1904 - East Germany, 23 March 1964. After cremation, he was buried in Hollywood) – Actor. His grandfather was a rabbi, his father a middle-class landowner. He settled with his parents in Vienna after the Communist Revolution in 1919, which left Hungary in turmoil and his family bankrupt. First, he was a student of Sigmund Freud for a while. His family wanted him to become a banker; instead he ran away from home and spent most of the 1920s learning his trade as an actor in various small theater companies. In 1928, he adopted the stage name Peter Lorre. In the late 1920s and early 1930s he started to make an impact in the Art Theater of Berlin, where he worked with German playwright Bertolt Brecht, and impressed Fritz Lang. In 1931 his first movie was a phenomenal success. He played the role of a psychopathic child murderer in Fritz Lang's thriller, "M", considered a classic of German cinema. His performance made him one of the greatest in the history of cinema. He also became typecast as a quiet, sinister villain. In spite of his diminutive size he became synonymous with dread. He fled Germany when Hitler came to power in 1933, and went to Paris, then to London, where Alfred Hitchcock exploited his image by casting him in his first English-speaking role as a charming villain, the head of a kidnapping ring that menaced young Nova Pilbeam in Hitchcock's The Man Who Knew Too Much (1934). Subsequently, he moved to California, USA. Two years later, Hitchcock cast him in a similar role in his Secret Agent. He acted as yet another murderer, Raskolnikov in Sternberg's version (1935) of Dostoyevsky's Crime and Punishment (1866). His unforgettable role was as the cringing, effeminate Joel Cairo opposite Sydney Greenstreet and Humphrey Bogart in The Maltese Falcon. Between 1937 and 1939 he played the Japanese detective, Mr. Moto, in a popular series. In 1940 he co-starred with fellow horror actors, Béla Lugosi and Boris Karloff, in the Kay Kyser movie, You'll Find Out. In 1941 he became a US citizen. He played the role of Ugarte in the classic film Casablanca (1942). He returned to Europe in 1949. In the 1950s he expanded his repertoire with a musical, Silk Stockings (1957), and also several comedies. His comic talent was displayed in a 1960s series of comedy-horror movies. He acted with precise timing and amusing delivery in The Raven (1963). Actor Vincent Price said of him: “He was superstar of horror film classics”. Charlie Chaplin called him “the greatest actor alive”. Lorre has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. – B: 1081, 1031, T: 7456.→Curtiz, Michael; Szóke, Szakáll; Lugosi, Béla.

Losárdy, Zsuzsanna (Susanna) (Sátorajjáújhely, 1681 - Turkey,?) – Poetess, presumably a fanciful person. In 1836 Count József (Joseph) Kemény published her alleged biography. According to this, during the Rákóczi War of Independence (1703-1711), she followed her flag-bearer brother into battle and attended the wounded. She encouraged the Kuruc fighters with her songs. Her ode To the Estates of Transylvania (Erdélyi Rendekhez) was written for the official crowning of Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, as Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), and distributed in several thousand copies. In the battle of Zsibó, the Imperials apprehended her on 11 November 1705. She was imprisoned, tried for high treason for her poems, and eventually sentenced to death. Just before her execution 1706. She escaped from the prison of Marosvásárhely (now Targu-Mures, Romania), and fled to Turkey. Before her escape, she wrote a letter to her mentor, Buday. This letter still exists today. The Camp Song of Rákóczi, (Rákóczi tábori éneke) handwritten by Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy, was, most probably, authored by her. – B: 1150, 0883, 1257, T: 3240.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Kuruc; Kazinczy, Ferenc.

Losonczy, Áron (Szolnok, 1977 - ) – Architect, inventor. He obtained his Degree in Architecture from the Budapest Polytechnic in 2001, and also did some postgraduate studies at the Department of Architecture at the Kungliga Tekniska Hogskola of Stockholm, Sweden, where, still in 2001, he created the prototype of the Light-Transmitting Concrete called LiTraCon from the first three letters of the material. It was first exhibited in the form of a man-sized wall in the Swedish Architectural Museum in September 2003. A special characteristic of this glass-fiber concrete is that it preserves the strength and structure of the material; hence, due to the presence of the fibers in it, this concrete is able to transmit sunlight even in several meters in thickness. The use of this glass-fiber concrete named Litracon from the abbreviation of its English appellation, spread as far as Stockholm, Brussels, Japan and the USA. It is also used in Hungary, e.g. on the memorial called Gate of Europe at Komárom; on the reception desk of the new building of the Corvinus University in Budapest, as well as on the gate of the visiting center Cella Septichora of Pécs. The invention of this unconventional material was rewarded with a number of prizes, such as the Red Dot and Material Award, the Ernst & Young Innovator Prize, and the Best of the Best Prize of the North-Rhine Westphalian Design Center. Time magazine rated the light-permeable concrete as one of the most significant inventions of 2004, recognizing that the Hungarian engineer created a building material that may fundamentally change architectural practices. – B: 1031, 1915, T: 7456.

Losonczy, Pál (Paul) (Bolhó, 18 September 1919 - Kaposvár, 28 March 2005) – Politician, statesman. As an agricultural laborer in 1939, he joined the illegal Communist Party and, at the time of the land distribution in 1945, he acquired some land of his own. Between 1948 and 1960 he was President of the Red Star (Vörös Csillag) Cooperative of Barcs. From 1954 to 1956 he was a member of the Hungarian Democratic Party and, between 1957 and 1989, a member of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party. From January 1960 to April 1967 he was Hungary's Minister of Agriculture. Between 1953 and 1989 he was a Member of Parliament; from 14 April 1967 to 25 June 1987 he was President of the Presidium, i.e. the Head of the Hungarian State. His main works are: On the Cooperative's Management (A termelőszövetkezeti gazdálkodásról) (1955), and Strengthening People and National Solidarity and Peaceful Coexistence (Erősödő népi-nemzeti egység, békés egymás mellett élés) (1984, 1985). He received the Kossuth Prize in 1956. – B: 0879, T: 7456.

Losonczy, Géza (Érsekcsanád, 5 May 1917 - Budapest, 21 December 1957) – Journalist, politician. During the time of his university studies in Debrecen, he became interested in the labor movements. He was a member of the Hungarian Communist Party (KMP), from 1939, and began to write in the journal, Voice of the People (Népszava) in 1940. He was arrested in 1941 and, after his release he worked illegally for the KMP press, organizing intellectual activities. Losonczy became a domestic columnist at the daily, Free People (Szabad Nép), and a stand-in for József (Joseph) Révai as State Secretary in the Ministry for the People's Education. The Stalinist terror organizations placed him in jail in conjunction with the László (Ladislav) Rajk trial. He was released in 1954; but the prison conditions and interrogatory methods damaged him psychologically. His connections to Imre (Emeric) Nagy remained constant even after becoming one of the chiefs of staff for the daily, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). When Imre Nagy was relieved of all his posts, he played a key role in the opposition Communist movement. He was organizer of the Petőfi Circle (Petőfi Kör). Losonczy took part in the mass demonstrations on 23 October 1956 in Budapest. He became a member of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party's Executive Committee on 31 October 1956. Imre Nagy appointed him a state Minister on October 30. When the Soviets began their assault against the Revolution on November 4, Losonczy sought refuge at the Yugoslav Embassy. From there, he was forcefully carried off with his family to Romania. In April 1957, he was taken back to Budapest. Losonczy would have been the second highest-ranking figure facing persecution in the Imre Nagy trials. However, before his case was taken to court he died in prison under dubious circumstances. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688. → Révai, József; Rajk, László; Nagy, Imre.

Losonczy, György (George) (Lébény, 21 July 1905 - Budapest, 4 May 1972) – Opera singer (bass baritone). In 1928 he studied voice on a scholarship at the Opera House, Budapest. From 1929 until his retirement in 1968, he was its ordinary member. During his forty years there, he appeared in more than a hundred operatic roles. With his unusual talent he took on difficult roles, e.g. as Wotan in Wagner's Ring of the Nibelung Cycle, Hans Sachs in Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, and Prince Ivan Khovanski in Mussorgsky's historic opera, Khovanshchina. His unique talent was even more evident in roles of intrigue such as Mephistopheles in Gounod's Faust; Telramund in Wagner's Lohengrin; Escamillo in Bizet's Carmen; Iago in Verdi's Othello; Gessler in Rossini's William Tell, and Grand Inquisitor in Verdi's Don Carlos. He gave a significant interpretation in the title role in Mozart's Don Giovanni, also Petúr and Tiborc in F. Erkel's Bánk bán, and Captain in Benjamin Britten's Peter Grimes. His concert appearance on 25 October 1943 was memorable, when he sang the bass solo in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on the occasion of Wilhelm Furtwängler's last guest conducting appearance in Budapest. In his last role as the Investigating Judge in Mihály (Michael) Hubay's opera, Together and Alone (Együtt és egyedül), he was outstanding. His singing voice is preserved on radio recordings, among them Don Giovanni and Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, conducted by Otto Klemperer. In addition, his acting could also be seen on TV films. The soprano, Magda Rigó, was his wife. They appeared together in a number of operas, e.g. Tosca, Lohengrin and Cavalleria Rusticana. He was a recipient the Merited Artist title (1954), the Kossuth Prize (1956) and the Outstanding Artist title (1968). – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, T: 7456.→Klemperer, Otto; Erkel, Ferenc; Rigó, Magda.

Losonczy, István (Stephen) (? - Temesvár, now Timișoara Romania, 27 July 1552) – Military officer, aristocrat, owner of a large estate. From 1542 he bravely fought against the Ottoman Turks. First, he was on the side of János (John) Szapolyai of the Royal Party; later he changed over to Ferdinand of the Habsburg Party. In 1542 he took part in the unsuccessful siege of Buda. In 1547 he became Lord Lieutenant of County Nógrád. In 1551 he participated in the Transylvanian campaign. In the same year, he became Lord Lieutenant of Temes County, and Captain of the Fort of Temesvár. In 1552 the Turks attacked Temesvár with a large force. Losonczy valiantly defended the Fort, but after a 40-day siege, his mercenaries persuaded him to surrender it to Ahmed Pasha, who gave his word not to harm Losonczy when he and his troops marched out. However, the Pasha broke his word: when the defenders of the Fort marched out, Losonczy and his men were attacked and he was mortally wounded. After taking him prisoner, the Pasha had him beheaded. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→János I, King.

Lóte, Attila (Szeged, 13 June 1934 - ) – Actor. He completed the Academy of Dramatic Art in 1957. Between 1957 and 1959 he was a member of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen and, from 1959, a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. In the earlier part of his career he mainly interpreted the heroes of Greek tragedies and lyric heroic roles. Later, he scored success mainly with the interpretation of brooding, ironical characters. His roles include Trofimov in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyés kert); Rudi in E. Szép's Bridegroom (Vőlegény); title role in H. Kleist's Amphitryon; Haimon in Sophocles' Antigone; Akhilleus in Euripides' Iphigenia in Aulis; Jason in Euripides' Medea; Harold in Shaffer's Black Comedy; Molcsalin in Gribojedov's Trouble from the Mind (Az ész bajjal jár); Marquis De La Mole in Stendhal's Red and Black (Le Rouge et Le Noir – Vörös és Fekete); Archbishop Lonovich in L. Németh's Széchenyi, and Genz in Rostand's The Eaglet (A sasfiók). His feature films include Fotó Háber (1963); Innocent Killers (Ártatlan gyilkosok) (1973); Family Circle (Családi kör) (1981); Daughter of Darkness (1990); 6:3 (1999), and The Taste of Sunshine (A napfény íze) (1999). His numerous TV films include Ways (Utak) (1965); Fourteen Martyrs (Tizennégy vértanú) (1970); Galilei (1977); Kémeri (1-5) (1985); Small Town (Kisváros) (1996), and In the Firing Line (Tűzvonalban) (2008-2009). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1973). – B: 1445, 1439, 1031, T: 7456.

Lóte, József (Joseph) (Maroscsúcs, now Ciuciu, Romania, 19 March 1856 - Budapest, 13 July 1938) – Physician. He earned his Degree from the Medical School of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1880. From 1883 to 1890 he worked as a demonstrator both at the Institute of General Pathology and Pharmacology, and at the Pasteur Institute of the University of Budapest. In 1887 he became an honorary lecturer in Patho-biology and, three years later, Professor of General Pathology at the University of Kolozsvár (1890), then at the University of Szeged from 1918, where he took part in the resettlement and organization of the escaped staff of the Hungarian University of Kolozsvár (Transylvania was taken from Hungary and ceded to Romania by the Peace Dictate of Trianon-Versailles in 1920). In 1901-1902 he was Vice-Chancellor of the University of Kolozsvár and, on several occasions, Dean of the Medical School there. He carried out research in connection with hydrophobia and vaccination against anthrax. He also worked out the basic idea for the so-called Hőgyes' Vaccination Method against hydrophobia. In the Robert Koch Institute of Berlin he pursued research in connection with the experimental therapy of tuberculosis. He wrote extensive specialized literature. His works include Practical Pathology (Gyakorlati kórtan) (1885); On the Susceptibility to Contagious Diseases (A ragályos betegségek iránti fogékonyságról) (1910), and A Few Words on the Hungarian Medical Language (Néhány szó a magyar orvosi nyelvről) (1915). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.→Hőgyes, Endre.

Lotharingiai, Károly→Lothringen, Prinz Karl Leopold von.

Lothringen, Prinz Karl Leopold von (Lotaringiai, V. Károly Lipót herceg; originally Charles Leopold duc de Lorraine) (Vienna, 3 April 1653 - Wels, 18 April 1690) – Army officer. Under his leadership, the ousting of the Turks from Hungary was begun. Prince Karl distinguished himself in the Battle of Szentgotthárd against the Turks on 1 August 1664, where the united European forces, under the Italian Field Marshal Montecuccoli, were victorious over the Turks. However, the Peace of Vasvár on 10 August 1664 proved humiliating to Hungary, because the Turks were allowed to keep Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia), and Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), Leopold I promised to pull out his forces from Transylvania (leaving it to Turkish domination) and to pull down the fortifications of Székelyhid (now Săcueni, Romania, in County Bihar). In 1671 he fought against the Hungarian kuruc forces of Count Imre Thököly. In 1675 he was appointed Commander in Chief of the Austrian Forces and, in the same capacity he led the relief forces against the Turks, who were besieging Vienna in 1683. On 12 September he joined the forces of Field Marshal Eugen Savoyenor and the Polish King John Sobieski, and defeated the Turkish army in the Battle of Kahlenberg, thus Vienna was relieved. The victorious forces continued to pursue the Turks, seized Párkány (now Sturovo, Slovakia) on 9 October, captured Esztergom on 21 October, and tried unsuccessfully to take Buda, still in 1684. In the summer of 1686, after extensive preparations, the combined forces (74,000), organized by Pope Innocent XI, after a siege of 10 weeks and a final assault on 2 September, took the castle fortification of Buda. The first to reach the parapet of the rampart were the Hajdú warriors of Prince Karl. The commander of the Turkish defense force, old Pasha Abdurrahman fell in the battle. Buda and a large part of Hungary were freed from Turkish occupation, and the fighting came to an end in 1699 with the Peace of Karlóca (Karlowitz, now Sremski Karlovci in Serbia) on 26 January 1699. – B: 1031, 1883, T: 7456.→Savoyenor, von Eugen; Sobieski III, John; Thököly, Prince Imre; Esztergom; Buda, Reconquest of,

Lotz, János (John) (Milwaukee WI, 23 March 1913 - Chevy Chase MD, 25 August 1973) – Linguist. He was born in the USA as an émigré laborer's child from Somogyvámos, north of Kaposvár; but when he was ten, he and his parents returned to Hungary in 1923. He completed the Art Course, majoring in Hungarian, German and English in the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest and obtained a Ph.D. in Arts from the University of Pécs. Then he moved to Stockholm and became a Hungarian Instructor and Head of the Hungarian Institute of the University of Stockholm. From 1939 he was an honorary lecturer and, from 1942, a full professor there. The same year, he became a visiting professor at Columbia University of New York, where he was Professor of General and Comparative Linguistics from 1946 to 1949, and full Professor of General Linguistics from 1949 to 1967. Between 1953 and 1965 he was Director of the Institute of Ural-Altaic Linguistics and, from 1959 to 1967, Head of the Center for Ural-Altaic Linguistics and Area Research. In Stockholm, he was Department Head until 1957; thereafter he worked as visiting professor between 1959 and 1965. From 1967 he was Director of the Center for Applied Linguistics in Washington for four years, and its European Director from 1971 to 1973. During this period, he carried on his research mainly in Hungary, lectured as a visiting professor at the University of Budapest, and published more and more articles in Hungarian scientific journals. He was chiefly interested in the phonology and morphology of the Hungarian language, and also its metrics. His works include Hungarian Reader, Folklore and Literature (1962); English-Hungarian Comparative Phonology, vols. i, ii (1972), and Script, Grammar and the Hungarian Writing System (1972). In 1973, he became an honorary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Lotz, Károly (Charles) (Homburg von der Höhe, Germany, 16 December 1833 - Budapest, 13 October 1904) – Painter. After the death of his German father, he returned to Hungary with his Hungarian mother. First, he studied sculpture, and later studied painting. In 1852 he went to Vienna, where he painted frescoes in palaces and homes of dignitaries and people in high positions. At the beginning of the 1860's, he returned to Hungary and his fascination with the scenery of the Alföld (Great Hungarian Plain) made him turn from the magical world of mythology to the romantic world of the Puszta (prairie). Later, he took on large assignments and, in 1864, had great success with the fresco at the magnificent Vigadó building in Budapest. After that, churches, aristocrats and members of high society commissioned him to do numerous works. In 1883 he became a professor at the School of Decorative Art and, from 1896, he was head of a second master school of painting. In 1884 he painted the ceiling of the auditorium of the Budapest Opera House. From 1889 to 1890, together with the great masters Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely and Lajos (Louis) Deák Ébner, he painted the interior frescoes of the Abbey Church of Tihany. In 1892 and 1893, working with Bertalan Székely, the paintings of the Mátyás (Matthias) Church of Buda were completed and, in 1896 and 1897, the stairway of the Parliament House in Budapest. Lotz was one of the most well-known Hungarian masters of the second half of the 19th century. His frescoes show the great influence of the Venetian Baroque style of fresco painting; they are graceful and elegant. Timeless are his fine sketches, captivating portraits, and the painting of mythological themes. His oil paintings include Horses in the Thunderstorm (Ménes a zivatarban) (1962); Twilight (Alkonyat) (1870); Bathing Woman (Fürdő nő) (1901), and Amor and Psyche (Ámor és Psyche) (1902). His numerous portraits and nude paintings are at the National Gallery in Budapest. – B: 0942, 0883, 1445, T: 7653.→Székely, Bertalan; Deák Ébner, Lajos; Iványi-Grünwald, Béla; László, Fülöp.

Louis CK (Székely?) (New York, 12 September 1967 - ) – Comedian, writer, television and film producer and director. He uses his peculiar surname because his “Hungarian name has too many letters”. From 1989 he appeared on most of the popular comedy shows of the time, e.g. Evening at the Improv, MTV Half Hour Comedy Hour, Comic Strip Live, and Comedy on the Road. His film, Caesar’s Salad (1990) earned him a Silver Plaque Award from the Chicago Film Festival. He wrote some TV comedies, for which he received an Emmy Award (1999). In 2000 he wrote his first studio movie, Pootie Tang, starring a character he created on the Chris Rock show. In 2001 he made his first appearance on NBC’s The Tonight Show. He scored a great success at the Montreal Comedy Festival, at the Aspen Comedy Festival, and a sitcom pilot named “Saint Louie”. A sitcom pilot for HBO was premiered on 19 August 2005. It was picked up by HBO for a serial and he is in production, writing, producing and starring in 12 episodes of the show that first aired in 2006. – B: 1081, T: 7456.

Lovas, István (1) (Stephen) (Leboniczki) (Gyöngyöshalász, 1 October 1931 - ) – Physicist. From 1950 he studied physics at the University of Budapest and, in 1955, he obtained a Degree in Education. He became an Associate of the Nuclear Research Institute and, in 1956 he joined the Central Physical Research Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, where he was its Director from 1991 to 1993. As a guest researcher and member, he worked at the University of Budapest (1963-1964), in the Niels Bohr Institute (1964), in the Dubna United Atom Research Institute (1967-1968), and in the Nuclear Research Center of Jülich (1973-1974). In 1986 he joined the Theoretical Physics Department of the University of Debrecen, and became a professor and Department Head, a post, which he held until 1992, retiring in 2001. He obtained his Ph.D. in 1971, was a member of several committees, and a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1979, ordinary 1987). He was also a member of a number of academies and councils, and received an Donorate from the University of Nagyvárad (Oradea, now in Romania) (1999). He was a member of the conservative Batthyány Circle of professors. Lovas is a well-known researcher of theoretical and experimental nuclear physics, which was his special field from 1990 till 1993. He introduced into Hungary the research in mega-energy atom-nuclear and particle-physics. His books include The Collective Generations of Atom-nuclei (Az atommagok kollektív gerjesztései) (1991), and Astrophysics (Astrodizika) (2003), in addition to numerous scientific papers. He was a recipient of the Academy Prize (1978), and the Szent-Györgyi Prize (2002). – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Lovas, István (2) (Stephen) (Budapest, 17 May 1945 - ) – Political writer, journalist, translator of literary works. In 1969 he attended the Central Theological College for three months. In the 1960s he was imprisoned by the Communist Government because, with a few of his friends, he founded a Christian-Socialist Party. He was excluded from all schools in Hungary, so the only possibility for his further education was abroad. His Degrees were obtained at McGill University of Montreal and at the University of Los Angeles, while his Ph.D. was obtained at the Institute of Political Science of Paris. From 1984 to 1990 he was Editor of Radio Free Europe in Munich, as well as its reporter in New York. When the change of the political system took place, he returned to Hungary and his writings appeared in the leading daily Pester News (Pesti Hirlap). From August 1997 he worked as correspondent of the daily, New Hungary (Új Magyarország). Around the turn of the millennium, he regularly read his notes on the program entitled Sunday News of the Hungarian Radio. At present he is the reporter for the daily Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet) in Brussels, and the permanent political writer of the Hungarian Democrat (Magyar Demokrata). In 2001 he received the Bocskai Prize, and the Embassy of Palestine in Budapest presented him with the Impartiality Prize in April 2002. His works include Straight Right: Genocides in the 20th Century (Jobbgyenes: népirtások a 20. században); D-209 and its Age (D-209 és kora), and With Double Standard (Kettős mércével). – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Radio Free Europe.

Lovassy, László (Ladislav) (Nagyszalonta, now Salonta, Romania, 8 May 1815 - Nagyszalonta, 6 January 1892) – Lawyer, one of the young parliamentary leaders of the Hungarian reform era. He read Law at Debrecen, Késmárk (now Kežmarok, Slovakia) and Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). In 1834, at the opening of the Diet, with some others, he launched the Conversation Club at Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and as its president, he greeted Baron Miklós (Nicholas) Wesselényi, the eminent representative of the reform ideas during a meeting of demonstration of sympathy, arranged for him. This did not please the Habsburg Court; as the result of a report of an infiltrated police spy, he was arrested together with several of his associates on 2 May 1836. He was sentenced to ten year imprisonment in a fortress and taken to Spielberg. In prison, he lost his reason; on 12 May 1840, through the good offices of the Diet, he received a pardon, but after he was freed, he did not regain his mental balance. He was an important figure in the Diets of the reform age. A high school at Veszprém and a street in Budapest bear his name. B: 0883, 1031, 1068, T: 7456.→Reform Age.

Lovász, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, March 9 1948 - ) – Mathematician. He studied at the University of Budapest (1966-1971). He was a Science Fellow at the same university (1971-1975), and a lecturer at the Department of Geometry (1975-1982). He was a full professor and Chair of the Department (1978-1982). In 1987 he became a senior professor at Princeton University, USA. He was professor at Yale University during the 1990s. He is now a member of the Microsoft Research Center, USA. His fields of research are combinatorial mathematics and the theory of algorithm. He is a member of the Board of Social, Mathematical and Operational Research of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; he serves on the Editorial Board of the Acta Mathematica, the Mathematics Journal (Matematikai Lapok), and is Editor-in-Chief of the journal Combinatorica. In 1979 he was a corresponding member; in 1985 an ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His main works include Combinatorial Problems and Exercises (1979); Matching Theory (with M.D. Plummer, 1986); An Algorithmic Theory of Numbers, Graphs and Convexity (1987), and Geometric Algorithms and Combinatorial Optimization (with M. Grötschell and A. Schvijver, 1988). He was a recipient of the Hungarian State Prize (1985), and the Wolf-Prize (1999). – B: 1306, 1031, T: 7617.

Lovicsek, Béla (Nagypeszék, now Vel'ký Pesek, Slovakia), 2 September 1922 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 27 June 2006) – Writer, educator. He obtained his Degree in Education from the Teachers' College of Pozsony in 1952. Between 1950 and 1969, he was teaching in Nyírágó (Nyrovce), Zsemlér (Žemliare), Ipolyszakállos (Ipel'ský Sokolec), Zalaba and Csata (Čata) in Slovakia (formerly Upper Hungary). From 1969 to 1977 he was Editor for the periodical Week (Hét). Then, from 1978 until his retirement in 1982, he worked as Secretary of Central Committee for the Czechoslovak-Hungarian Workers' Cultural Federation (CSEMADOK). His radio-plays include The Road was Long (Hosszú volt az út); Agony (Vívódás), and On the Crossroad (Válaszúton). His poems, novels, stage works, literary and community life articles appeared in various papers and magazines, such as the New Youth (Új Ifjúság); from 1952, the Torch (Fáklya); from 1956 the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle); the Woman (Nő.) and others. His works include Enemies (Haragosok), narrative (1957); Woman with Starry Eyes (Csillagszemű asszony), novel (1961); Fire-Flower (Tűzvirág), novel (1963); Terminal (Végállomás), novel (1967); Long Night (Hosszú éjszaka), novel (1975); Neither With, Nor Without You (Se veled, se nélküled), novel (1986); In a Whirlwind (Forgószélben), novel (1987), and Window Facing the Sky (Égre nyíló ablak), novel (1991). He also wrote dramas, including After Twenty Years (Húsz év után); Silver Wedding Anniversary (Ezüstlakodalom), and Beneath Us the Town, Above Us the Sky (Alattunk a város, felettiünk az ég). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Lovik, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 9 March 1874 - Budapest, 19 April 1915) – Writer, journalist. He studied Law at the Universities of Budapest and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). From 1893 he pursued a career in journalism. He was an internationally recognized expert on horse breeding, and published widely on the subject in the Hunter (Vadász) and the Racing Journal (Versenylap), the papers he edited. In his novels and short stories he portrayed the typical characters of the age, such as the humiliated office worker, the hunting gentry, miserly landlords, flirting society ladies, and bored army officers. His works include The Family Home (Szülei ház), (1899); The Mute Sin (A néma bűn) (1902); The Murderer (A gyilkos) (1903); Fleecy Clouds (Báránnyelők) (1909), and In the Corner (A szögletben) (1913). He had a disillusioned outlook on life. His modes of escape were dreams, visions, stories and travel, as in The Ghosts (Kísértetek) (1905); At the Crossroads (A keresztúton) (1912), and A Tardy Knight (Egy elkésett lovag) (1915). He turned away from the idealistic realism of his time; instead he embraced the descriptive compositional form. His style falls between realism and neo-romanticism. – B: 1122, 1257, T: 7617.

Löw, Lipót (Leopold) (Cernahora, 22 May 1811 - Szeged, 13 October 1875) – Rabbi, theologian, writer. He was Rabbi in Nagykanizsa, where he established an elementary school, a trade school, and an Association; Rabbi in Pápa (1846-1850), then in Szeged. He was Editor for the paper Hungarian Synagogue (A magyar zsinagóga) of Pápa. He was Military Chaplain in the War of Independence of 1848-1849, and after that he underwent a prison term. He edited the Ben Chananja, a Jewish scientific journal in German (1859-1868). He advised Jews that, besides commerce, they should be involved in industry and agriculture. He traced the history of Hungarian Jewry. He was the first rabbi to deliver sermons in Hungarian. Some of his works are: The Hungarian Synagogue

(A Hungarian zsinagóga) (1847); Four Golden Rules of Prophet Jeremiah on the True Patriotism (Jeremiás prófétának négy arany szabálya a valódi hazafiságról) (1847); Alle Hilfe kommt von Gott (All help comes from God) (1848); Past, Present and Future of the Jewish Oath (A zsidó eskü múltja, jelene és jövője) (1868), and Gesammelte Schriften vols. i-v (1889-1900). – B: 0932, 1257, T: 7103.

Luby, Margit (Margaret) (Benedekfalvi) (Nagyar, Count Szatmár, 13 November 1885 - Budapest, 18 July 1976) – Ethnologist, teacher. She received her Degree in Education from the University of Budapest in 1919, and she taught between 1923 and 1928 at the Elizabeth Women's Civic Pedagogical Training School. She worked for a School of Commerce as a member of the Administrative Board for Educational Matters, and was the Director of this Board from 1928 to 1943. She began her Ethnology Research in Szatmár, her county of birth. She was concerned with various folk crafts related to pastoral life, holiday customs, folk-beliefs, with peasant historical memory and knowledge, and the traditions shaping peasant life. She published her research and articles in ethnological and linguistics journals. A significant portion of her work is preserved in manuscript form. Her main writings were: The Nature of Peasant Life in Szatmár County (A parasztélet rendje Szatmár megyében) (1935); Midwives' Superstitions (Bábelelte babona) (1936); On Disappearing Pastures (Fogyó legelőkön) (1942), and It Was a Type of World (Olyan világ volt) selected studies (1976). – B: 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7688.

Luca Day, Luca Stool, folk customs of – Luca-day (Luca nap) is held on St. Lucy's Day, also called Witches' Day. Its feast is on 13th December.. Lucy (Santa Lucia) was a Sicilian virgin martyr, commemorated daily in the canon of the Mass. According to legend, she early vowed herself to God and she rejected a pagan suitor. She was the heavenly patron of young girls ready for marriage. Before the adoption of the Gregorian calendar (1582), Luca Day was the shortest day of the year. Women were forbidden to work on that day. They were not allowed to light a fire, sew or do laundry; otherwise they risked offending St. Lucy and would be punished.

Luca Stool (lucaszék) is slowly carved, a little each day between 13th and 24th December and completed on Christmas Eve. This is a superstition and the phrase “made slowly as the Luca Stool” has evolved from this tradition. It has also become a folk-song. The Luca Stool is supposed to be constructed and carved from nine different kinds of wood and assembled in the form of a witch's angle (boszorkányszög). Whoever sits on it on Christmas Eve, during Midnight Mass, can recognize all the witches of the village. After exposing the witches, he has to run home to escape the wrath of the witches, and on his way he strews poppy seeds behind him, which the witches have to pick up, and so they never catch him. When he arrives home, he has to burn the stool.

Nowadays the custom is nearly extinct. St. Lucy's Day folk customs were accompanied by singing, on the occasion of the festival of fertility charms. Various customs are connected with Luca Day: (1) germinating Luca wheat grains near the oven, which sprout by Christmas; later this custom evolved into placing a bunch of wheat tied with a blue ribbon onto the altar at Christmas (2) greeting-custom by little boys, who on their knees recite their greetings to the housewife, wishing rich harvest and multiplication of farm animals; the boys are rewarded by the housewife with buns, sausages or dried prunes. (3) In a folk play, the custom of mummary used to be practiced: the central theme of the mummary play (a form of ancient drama) is the death and resurrection of the hero. (4) In many places the young girls, dressed in white, visit the village houses and, reciting rhymes, wish that the hens become good layers and lay many eggs. In other places, the young men visit the houses of the young girls and, after reciting rhymes they are given eggs as gifts. (5) This day is also connected with predicting the future husband. The girls write boys' names on 12 slips of paper and, without looking at them, every day from Luca Day to Christmas, they throw one name into the fire and the last one is the name of the future husband. (6) Many years ago old people predicted the following year's climate by cutting six onions in half, taking out the center, pouring salt into it and, depending on how much liquid some of the onions produced, they could predict the following year's rainfall. – B: 0945, 1068, 1789, 7456, T: 7456.

Ludányi, András (Andrew Ludanyi) (Szikszó, 12 February 1940 - ) – Political economist, sociologist, historian, cultural event organizer. He left Hungary for Austria with his parents in 1944, and emigrated to the USA. He completed his studies at the State University of Louisiana. He became a professor at Ada in the Northern Ohio University and gives lectures in Political Economy. His major fields of research are Political Studies, East-Central-European nationality problems, and Hungarian ethnography. He is one of the leaders of the Hungarian Friendship Association (Magyar Baráti Közösség), and was its warden from 1987 to 1990. He plays a significant role in Hungarian politics in the USA, and the protection of the rights of Hungarians and other minorities. He is involved in the publishing of the journal Here-and-There (Itt-Ott). His works include Transylvania: The Roots of Ethnic Conflict, co-edited with J.F. Cadow and Lajos (Louis) Éltető (1983). He is a recipient of a number of Hungarian State Distinctions. – B: 1672, 1031, T: 7456.

Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy (Ludoviceum) (1872 - 1945) - The Diet of 1808 at Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) voted for the establishment of a Hungarian institution for military officer training. Queen Maria Ludovika (the third wife of King-Emperor Francis I) offered her wedding present of 50,000 Forints from the nation to the realization of such an institution and for which the various estates offered another 800,000 Forints. The concerned obstructions of the Habsburg Court of Vienna rendered the realization of the Academy only a plan and it remained so for some time. However, the establishment of this military institution became an important objective of the Reform Period. The necessary additional finances were raised by a nation-wide collection. The most generous contributor was Count János (John) Buttler of Párdány.

In 1830 the corner stone was laid for the Ludoviceum building, designed by the renowned builder Mihály (Michael) Pollák (Pollack), which became one of his masterpieces, like the National Museum building. By 1836 the main building of classical style and the covered riding-hall were completed. During the time of the disastrous Danube flood of Pest in 1838, the paintings and the library of the Hungarian National Museum were transferred there for safety.

During the Revolution against the Habsburg oppression, on 7 January 1849, for a short period of time, the Military Training Institute in the already completed Ludoviceum building opened for teaching according to the plans and curriculum laid down by the then Minister of Defense, general Lázár (Lazarus) Mészáros. Then Prince Windischgrätz came to the Hungarian capital with his vengeful Austrian occupying forces and, on his orders, the already appointed teaching staff as well as the admitted 50 young men, the students-to-be were dismissed. The Austrians treated the building as spoils of war and later used it as a prison. During the bitter days of Habsburg oppression of 1853, Hungarian patriots were executed on the gallows set up in the inner courtyard of the building.

The politics of opposition directed by the “nation’s sage”, Ferenc (Francis) Deák gradually reached its target and after the Compromise of 1867, the Royal Hungarian Defense-force called “Honvédség” was born. All of a sudden, there was great demand for officers able to speak Hungarian. Under the pretext of being entitled to take part in matters of defense-issues, the Austrian Court Chancellery continued to oppose the establishment of an officers’ academy functioning entirely in Hungarian. They justified their position that, according to them, the Hungarian language was unsuitable for military expressions and commands.

Finally, in 1872, after 64 years of political struggle and waiting, the training courses for Hungarian military officers as well as the teaching of young students began. The actual academic training of infantry and cavalry officers started in 1887. The greatest day for the Ludovika Academy was the ceremony of the dedication of colors on 8 May 1901, when the King, the Hungarian Cabinet and the Parliamentarians were present. From 1912 on, artillery officers also had their academic training there.

After World War I, on 1 November 1918, a revolutionary mob burst into the building of the Academy and looted the storerooms. During the 133-day period of Soviet-style Communist Republic, the Ludovika Academy was dissolved on 12 April 1919. A course for training Red Commanders replaced it. The day of the Counter-Revolution of the Ludovika took place on 24 June 1919. After its fall, the military academics were imprisoned and the deserted Academy was looted once more. However, the Academy resumed its work in September 1919.

In October 1931, Division II of the Ludovika Academy was established for the training of engineer officers. The new Institute began its work in the Hűvösvölgy, the hilly, wooded outskirts of Budapest. In 1939 Division II was expanded into the János (John) Bolyai Engineering Academy, and in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), the Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy Aviation Academy was set up. On 1 November 1944, the Academy was evacuated from Budapest and moved to Körmend, in the western part of the country. On 14 January 1945, the attacking Soviet forces took the surroundings of the Academy. The members of the Academy were dispersed and settled in Germany, and on 25 April 1945, the US forces in Schönthal, Bavaria, captured their members. Thereby the fate of the 115-year old building and an institution of 73 years came to an end. In the Academy and in its two sister-academies the officers-to-be were trained. They were men who loved their country, fulfilled their duties, and were well prepared professionally. In the Academy between 1872 and 1944, during a period of 72 years, 9,435 academically trained men became military officers. Altogether they numbered 10,853 men, counting those finishing in the two sister academies. 1145 of them were killed in action during the two World Wars, more than 100 died as martyrs, and several hundred of them were imprisoned during the times of the hard-line Communist era after 1945. In 2012 the building became a campus of the University of National Public Service (Nemzeti Közszoigálalti Egyetem).

The academic training took three years for infantry, cavalry and artillery officers. Only mentally and physically fit 17-20 years old males were admitted following the matriculation exam. After successful completion of the academic military courses, students were made second lieutenants at the graduation ceremony. – B: 1070, T: 7456. → Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy, Insurrection of the Officers of; Jányi, Gusztáv; Nagybaczoni Nagy, Vilmos.

Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy, Insurrection of the Officers of (Budapest, 24 May 1919) – A courageously nationalistic but unsuccessful attempt after World War I to overthrow the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (21 March – 1 August 1919), organized by the officers of the Ludovika Academy (Ludoviceum), a prestigious Hungarian officer-training institution led by Captain Jenő (Eugene) Lemberkovics. The personnel of the Academy comprised 20 officers, 144 trainee officers and 137 cadets. Fourteen of the officers (out of the 20) participated in the insurrection. According to the original plan, the soldiers of the Vilmos (William) barracks, the ironworkers' brigades, the monitors of the Danube flotilla, and even the police were to participate in the insurrection. Early in the afternoon, three ships of the Danube flotilla, led by the monitor Maros, hoisted the national flag (instead of the red flag) and opened fire on the Soviet House at the Hungaria Hotel. The only supporting fire came from the artillery batteries set up in the courtyard of the Ludovika. The batteries of the Vilmos barracks that were to signal the beginning of the general uprising did not fire due to the treachery of People's Commissar Haubrich. The ironworker brigades did not begin their expected demonstration and the police units also failed to occupy the Central Police Station. Despite the lack of support, the officers and the students of the Ludovika Academy occupied the József (Joseph) Telephone Center and the environs of the Academy. The Red troops suffered significant losses of dead and wounded in the fighting. However, the lack of ammunition and support forced the insurrectionists to surrender the next day. The ships of the Danube flotilla, under attack by the Red troops and their airplanes, moved south where the mine layer ships Munka, Lajta and Komárom joined them. Unexpectedly, the Munka changed sides and, pulling down the national colors, opened fire on the Komárom and mortally wounded two second lieutenants. In the ensuing battle, the Munka was sunk and the Maros, the Lajta and the Komárom sought refuge with the English, stationed at the bridgehead of Baja, about 150 km south on the Danube River. Following his capture, Captain Lemberkovics was taken to the Engels barracks, where the commander of the Red Guard, after cruel tortures, personally executed him. Returning from a meeting with the People's Commissar Haubrich, Captain István (Stephen) Karátson was captured and shot in front of the Academy by a Red patrol. Jenő (Eugene) Pogány, one of the trainee officers, was shot while on patrol. Captain Ferenc (Francis) Mildner was led into a trap on the street, thrown into an automobile, bayoneted and thrown into the River Danube. Ödön (Edmund) Erődy, a school principal, was also executed for his participation in the fighting. In revenge, and to frighten others into submission, the Supreme Council of the People's Commissars decided to execute all the captured insurrectionists, including 137 under-age participants, thereby violating the international code of law and creating a bloodbath. The planned 26 June public execution of three captured officers by hanging, on the prominent Oktogon Square of Budapest, was only stopped by the strong protests of Lieutenant Colonel Guido Romanelli, Head of the Italian Military Mission in Hungary at the time. Béla Kun, Commissar for Foreign Relations, at first objected to the “unwarranted interference” but, in response to Romanelli’s repeated and strongly worded protestations and being concerned by the increasingly hostile public opinion in the Capital, finally desisted from the public reprisal. Later on, after the demise of the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic’s 133 days of rule of terror, a monument was erected on the grounds of the Academy, in memory of the insurrection, and in Budapest a street was named in honor of Lieutenant Colonel Romanelli. After 1945, the Communist Government of Hungary, under Soviet Russian military occupation, removed the monument and denounced the Ludovika insurrection as a “counter-revolution directed against the people”. – B: 1070, T: 7456.→Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic; Kun, Béla; Szamuely, Tibor; Lenin Boys in Hungary.

Lugosi, Béla (Béla Ferenc Blaskó) (Lugos, Hungary, now Lugoj, Romania, 20 October 1882 - Hollywood, 16 August 1956) – Hungarian-American actor. He ran away from home at age 11. He worked in a mine, but wanted to become an actor. He started his career in country theaters. He had his debut on the stage of Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia). For a while, he worked in Szeged, and was invited to Budapest. He trained in private schools and acquired stage experience in the Theater of Temesvár (now Timisoara, Romania) (1909-1910). In 1911 and 1912 he was with the Király Theater (Király Színház), Budapest, and attended the Acting School of Szidi Rákosi. He appeared in Shakespeare’s Hamlet and Romeo and Juliet, and played the role of Lucifer in Madách’s The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). In 1919 he became secretary of the National Trade Union for Actors and was influential in reorganizing the Theater of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic that resulted in his forced emigration. He moved to Vienna, Berlin, and finally to the United States in 1921. From 1922 to 1928 he was a member of a strolling Hungarian Troupe that was the first to present in the USA Madách’s The Tragedy of Man, in Hungarian, at the Lexington Theater, New York, on 9 April 1922. It was presented in Chicago and Cleveland as well. He soon became attracted to the film industry. He is best known for his role as Count Dracula (1931). This was followed by series such as Frankenstein and others. – B: 0870, 1445, T: 7617, 7103.→Lorre, Peter.

Lugossy Codex – A handwritten songbook from the 17th century. József (Joseph) Lugossy donated it to the Reformed Church District’s Library, formerly known as the Library of the Reformed College of Debrecen, and it is still kept there. This large formatted and still well read manuscript, with almost 400 pages, is one of the richest sources of 16th century Hungarian epic poetry. Pál (Paul) Somogyi gathered and copied the songs at the beginning of the 16th century in Turkish-occupied southern Transdanubia. It gives an interesting picture about Hungarian literature that was known and in common use during the Turkish occupation. Many occasional songs give an indication of the lives and customs of this territory’s towns and villages hence it is an important source of cultural history. – B: 1150, 1136, T: 3240.→Anonym of Sarlóköz; Codex Literature; Csoma Codex; Nyilas Anonymus.

Lugossy, József (Joseph) (Felsőbánya, 3 December 1812 - Debrecen, 7 March 1884) – Linguist. He began his schooling in Felsőbánya, continued in Debrecen and then, in 1841 and 1842, he studied at the University in Berlin. He was Minister of the Reformed Church of Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania, for a few months, and then taught in Máramarossziget (now Sighetu-Marmației, Romania), and from 1845 on, he was professor and Librarian at the Reformed College of Debrecen. Besides German and Romanian, he also learned Arabic, Persian, Sanskrit, Hebrew and Tibetan. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him a corresponding member in 1841 and, in 1858, an ordinary member. He participated in the War of Independence of 1848-1849; after this, he lived in exile for a few months, working as a tutor; then in Pest as a bibliographer. Between 1851 and 1861 he taught again at the College of Debrecen; later, as an associate professor, he taught Sanskrit. He published numerous linguistic and bibliographic essays. His most renowned work is the copy of Sándor (Alexander) Csoma de Kőrös's Tibetan Grammar. He was the only Hungarian linguist who could comment with merit on the works of Csoma. He wrote the first Hungarian language Arabic Grammar and also wrote on the ancient Magyars' knowledge of astronomy; his main work, The Stars of the Ancient Hungarians (Ósmagyar csillagisme), containing more than 200 folk-names of stars, remained unfinished. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7669.→Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor.

Lukács, Baron Miklós (Nicholas) (Gyula, 4 February 1905 - Budapest, 1 November 1986) - Conductor. After completing his high school studies, he seemed to be suffering from an incurable illness that resulted in his squandering a large part of his baronial inheritance. However, the diagnosis proved to be wrong and he began studying seriously at Leipzig, under the pianists Julius Prüver and Arthur Schnabel, and also under composer Paul Hindemith. He started to practise conducting in several German towns and he declined an invitation from Hungary that would have been favorable to him. However, in the middle of World War II, he decided to return to Hungary. On 21 October 1943, he brilliantly conducted Mozart's opera, the Entführung aus dem Serail (Il Seraglio – Szöktetés a szerájból), in the Opera House of Budapest. At the end of the season, the then Director of the Opera, László (Ladislav) Márkus, was relieved of his position. The young conductor accepted the position as of 25 July 1944, but had to retire from the Directorship on 26 September. During his three months in office, he walked around with an arm in plaster, so that he could not conduct. Since he saved a number of lives as well as valuable objects from the Opera House during the war, the post-war political screening committee regarded his actions favorably. He became Secretary (1946-1950), then Conductor under the Opera Director Aladár Tóth, who had returned to Hungary from his stay in Sweden. In 1949 Lukács became Professor and Department Head of Opera Studies, and from 1963, that of Voice Studies at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest; the latter post he held until 1975. From 1951 he was Chief Conductor of the Budapest MÁV (Hungarian State Railways) Symphony Orchestra. After the retirement of Kálmán (Coloman) Nádasdy in 1966, he again became Director of the Opera House. During the four years of his tenure (1969-1972), he brought onto the stage all the four operas of Wagner's Ring of the Nibelungs cycle. He also introduced numerous 20th century operas, such as Emil Petrovics' Crime and Punishment (Bűn és bűnhődés) (1969), Alban Berg's Lulu (1973), and Zsolt Durkó's Mózes. Apart from Wagner operas, he conducted Verdi operas with great success. Linked to his name are memorable Richard Strauss premières, such as Ariadne auf Naxos and Elektra. He was well known also for conducting Berg's opera, Lulu, as well as Béla Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállu herceg vára), and such Verdi operas as Don Carlos and Otello. He retired from the Opera House in 1978, as well as from the MÁV Symphony Orchestra, where he especially excelled in conducting the works of Beethoven, Brahms and Bartók. He continued conducting for a few more years as a guest-conductor in Hungary and Germany. He received the Kossuth Prize (1973), the titles of Merited Artist (1956) and Outstanding Artist (1978). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Bartók, Béla; Márkus, László; Tóth, Aladár; Nádasdy, Kálmán; Petrovics, Emil; Durkó, Zsolt.

Lukács, Ervin (Budapest, 9 August 1928 - ) – Conductor. He started studying piano at the Fodor Music School in Budapest, under the guidance of György (George) Kálmán and Arnold Székely. He studied composition under the direction of Rezső (Ralph) Sugár in the State Conservatory of Music, Budapest during 1950 - 1951. Between 1951 and 1956 he did further training in conductorship under László (Ladislav) Somogyi at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. He started his career with the Honvéd Military Ensemble as assistant conductor in 1954. During 1956-1957 he was the leading conductor of the Symphony Orchestra of the National Theater of Miskolc. From 1957 he conducted at the Opera House of Budapest, and was its Chief Music Director between 1987 and 1990. From 1989 he was elected Life Member and Titular Chief Music Director. From 1956 to 1959, and from 1982 he was a professor in the Department of Conducting of the Ferenc Liszt Academy of Music. In 1962 he won first prize at the 3rd International Conductorship Concert. From 1981 he was Artistic Director of the Hungarian Post's Symphony Orchestra (later on: Hungarian Symphony Orchestra). He also conducted works for recordings. He is regular guest conductor at major European musical centers, as well as in the USA and Japan. In 1965 he received the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1965), the Artist of Merit Prize (1973), the Outstanding Artist title (1984), the Bartók-Pásztory Prize (1994), and the Kossuth Prize (1996). – B: 1445, 1426, T: 7456. → Sugár, Rezső; Somogyi, László.

Lukács, György (George) (György Bernát Löwinger up to 1899) (Budapest, 13 April 1885 - Budapest, 5 June 1971) – Philosopher, esthete, politician. He came from a wealthy, assimilated Jewish family. His father was a bank manager. Lukács completed his secondary schooling at the Deák Square Evangelical (Lutheran) High School, Budapest. He enrolled at the Faculty of Law in Budapest (1902), but took his Doctorate in Law in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1906). In his student years, he took part in establishing the Thalia Society (Thália Társaság) (1904), to present modern playwrights such as Ibsen and Hauptmann. In 1906 and 1907 he lived in Berlin and attended the lectures of Dilthey and Simmel. In 1909 he obtained his Ph.D. with his work: The Form of Drama (A dráma formája). The extended version of his doctoral thesis is a work on theater: The History of Development of Modern Drama, vols i, ii (A modern dráma fejlődésének története, I, II), his first significant writing. In Hungary, his writings were published in the journals, West (Nyugat) and Twentieth Century (Huszedik Század) (1910, 1911). He wrote a number of critiques and essays, such as The Spirit and Forms (A lélek és a formák), (1910); Die Seele und die Formen (The Soul and the Forms) (1911), and the important Ady studies (1908, 1909). With Lajos (Louis) Fülep he launched a short-lived paper, the Spirit (Szellem) in 1911.

At the invitation of Ernst Bloch, he moved to Heidelberg in 1911, and was interested in Esthetics, Philosophy of Art and Ethics, and wrote such works as The Philosophy of Art of Heidelberg and Esthetics (A heidelbergi művészettörténelem és esztétika), and The Theory of the Novel (A regény elmélete) (1914-1915, published in 1975). From ethical and philosophical points of view (Fichte), Lukács refused to legitimize the First World War from the very beginning; he exposed his position at the meetings of the Sunday Circle (Vasárnapi Kör) in Budapest. The members of the circle were Béla Balázs, Lajos Fülep, Arnold Hauser, Károly (Charles) Tolnay, and Károly Mannheim. He became acquainted with Marx's works, under whose influence Bolshevism became a 'moral question' for him and, in December 1918, he joined the Hungarian Communist Party. He was one of the leaders of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (Magyar Tanácsköztársaság) (1919) and, after its collapse, he went into exile in Austria. His book History and Class-consciousness (Történelem és osztálytudat) (1923), became important for the leftist movements in Europe.

The Party refused his proposal that Hungary needed a "democratic dictatorship", instead of a proletarian dictatorship, as Lukács expounded in his Blum-theses. In 1930 he had to emigrate to the Soviet Union, where he became a researcher for the Institute of Philosophy of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, took part in editing Engels and Marx's literary remains, and the Manuscript on Philosophy of Economy was published. He wrote a book on Hegel, The Young Hegel (A fiatal Hegel) (1939), for which he earned the title of Academic Doctor of Philosophy. His work on the realist-authors of world literature (Balzac, Stendhal and Dostoyevski) was written against the concept of socialist realism.

In 1945 he returned to Hungary and, up to 1949, he advocated the views of the Communist Party in Hungarian public life. After the Rajk show trial and the "Déry polemic", he too was attacked in the latter, since his views on democracy were inconsistent with Rákosi's political plans. Retired from politics, he gave lectures at the University of Budapest up to 1956. He became a Minister in Imre (Emeric) Nagy's Government, and voted against seceding from the Warsaw Treaty and Comecon. After 4 November 1956, he was taken into custody in Romania, from where he returned in 1957. He still regarded himself as a member of the Party; but only in 1967 was he rehabilitated by the Kádár-leadership. In the 1960s Lukács wrote his two important works, Characteristics of Esthetics (Esztétikum sajátossága) (1965), and The Ontology of Social Existence (A társadalmi lét ontológiájáról) (posthumous, 1976). He also wrote The Development of Hungarian Social Drama (A magyar társadalmi dráma fejlődése) (1934), and Goethe and his Age (Goethe és kora) (1946). He wrote his theoretical works in German; his lifework was published in Hungary after his death. His works were translated into some 70 languages. He became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1949) and received the Kossuth Prize (1948, 1955). – B: 0883, 1257, 1445, T: 7689. → Balázs, Béla; Fülep, Lajos; Rajk, László, Déry, Tibor; Rákosi, Mátyás; Nagy, Imre; Kádár, János.

Lukács, Hugó (Budapest, 1874 - Paris, 23 April 1939) – Physician. He completed his studies at the Medical School of the University of Budapest in 1896. Early in the 1900s, he was a demonstrator in the Neuro and Mental Clinic of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). As the President of the Bólyai Society of Kolozsvár, he became one of the leaders of the radical intellectuals. The great poet Endre (Andrew) Ady belonged to his circle of friends, whom he treated clinically during June-August 1909. Ady lodged with the Lukács family for some time. They corresponded until the poet's death. In August 1909 he gave up his clinical position and became a senior physician at the District Workmen's Insurance Company of Kolozsvár. In World War I, he served on the Russian front. In 1919 he was a correspondent for the Welfare Commissariat. After the fall of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, on 1 August 1919, he fled with his wife, painter Ilma Bernát to Vienna, and from there to Paris, where he lived for the next 20 years until his suicide. His works include The Significance of the Ophthalmoscopic Diagnosis with Mental Patients, with co-author I. Markbreiter (A szemtükri lelet jelentősége elmebetegéknél) (1906), and The Unwell Endre Ady (A beteg Ady Endre) in Eszter, 1919, issue 2). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456. → Ady, Endre.

Lukacs, John A. (János) (Budapest, 31 January 1924 - ) – Historian. He pursued his higher studies at the University of Budapest, where he read History, and also at the University of Cambridge. He emigrated to the USA after World War II, in 1946. He taught History at American Universities. Between 1947 and 1994 he was Professor of History at Chestnut Hill College in Philadelphia, and its Department Chair from 1947 to 1974. He also was a visiting professor at many universities, including Columbia, Princeton, John Hopkins University, and at the University of Budapest. He authored more than 25 books, including The Historical Hitler (A történelmi Hitler) (1997, in Hungarian 1998), where he studied Hitler's life, based on more than one hundred biographies. His other books include The Great Powers and Eastern Europe (1954); A History of the Cold War (1961); Outgrowing Democracy: A Historical Interpretation of the U.S. in the 20th Century (1984); A Historical Portrait of a City and its Culture (A város és kultúrája) (1966, in Hungarian 1990); Historical Consciousness or the Remembered Past (1968); Budapest 1900, A Historical Portrait of a City and its Culture (1988, in Hungarian 1991); The Duel (Hitler vs. Churchill 10 May-31 August 1940) (1991, 2000); The End of the Twentieth Century and End of the Modern Age (A XX. század és az újkor vége) (1993, in Hungarian 1994); At the End of the Age (2002); Democracy and Populism: Fear & Hatred (2005), and Last Rites (2009). He is a renowned historian who has the literary talents of a novelist. He received the Ingersoll Prize (1991) and the Corvin Chain of Hungary (2001). – B: 0875, 1672, 1031, T: 7103.

Lukács, Margit (Margaret) (Budapest, 21 December 1918 - Budapest, 3 February 2002) – Actress. She studied at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. While still a student, she often played at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. Following the completion of her studies, she was contracted to the National Theater in 1936. Her imposing presence, elegant appearance, deep velvety alto voice, exemplary and perfect speech technique, and expression of passion in a dignified way, made her an ideal actress for the interpretation of classical dramatic heroines. She was an exceptionally conscious and cultured artist and the best of radio recitalists. Before the end of World War II (1945), she also played the lead female role in numerous feature films. Her more important roles include Donna Cynthia in A. Moreto's Donna Diana; Night (Éj) in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde (Csongor és Tünde); Beatrice in C. Goldoni's Servant of Two Masters (Két úr szolgája); Anita in Ibsen's Peer Gynt; Princess Eboli (Eboli hercegnő) in Schiller's Don Carlos; Éva in Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); the Baroness (Bárónő) in Beaumarchais' Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Elmira in Molière's Tartuffe; Yelena Andreyevna in Tcheckov's Uncle Vanya (Ványa bácsi); Cleopatra in Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra (Antóniusz és Kleopátra), and Isabel Sorodin in N. Coward's Nude with Violin (Akt hegedűvel). In her credit there are 12 feature films including Poor Riches (Szegény gazdagok) (1938); Pista Dankó ((1940); Miska the Grandee (Mágnás Miska) (1949), and Kentaur (1983). Among her TV films are: The Odd Person (A különc) (1980); Gloria (1982), and Peace Negotiation... (Békétárgyalás...) (1989). She received the Mari Jászai Prize (1957), the Merited and the Outstanding Actress titles (1958, 1974), the Kossuth Prize (1963), she was a lifetime member of the National Theater, Budapest (1989), the Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of Republic of Hungary (1992), Life Member of the Society of Immortals (1997), and Actress of the Nation (2000), and the Madách Prize (Posthumous, 2004). – B: 0870, 1445, 1031, T: 7684.

Lukas, Paul (Pál Lukács) (Budapest 26 May 1894 - Tangier, Morocco, 15 August 1971) – Actor. His higher studies were at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest; in 1916 he went to Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) to act on stage. In 1918 he entered into an engagement with the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest, where he made his debut in Ferenc Molnár's Liliom (made into the musical play Carousel). He soon became popular and appeared in a number of Max Reinhardt's productions in Austria. In 1927 he emigrated to the USA and established himself as one of Hollywood's favorite European-type leading men. In his later years, he played an outright, though still sneaky, villain, and a number of unsympathetic roles in wartime films. During his final years, Lukas played a number of gentler roles as well. There are more than 110 feature and TV films to his credit, including Sphinx (1918); Masa's Way (Masamód) (1920); Manhattan Cocktail (1928); Young Eagles (1930); Captured! (1933); The Three Musketeers (1935); The Lady Vanishes (1938); Watch on the Rhine (1943), and The Challenge (1970). For his role in Watch on the Rhine he won an Oscar, a Golden Gate, and the NYFCC Award in 1944. Lukas has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. – B: 0872, 1081, 1031, T: 7103.→

Lukinich, Imre (Emeric) (Varjas, 4 April 1880 - Budapest, 16 May 1950) – Historian. He completed his university studies in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He taught at Székelyudvarhely (now Odoheiu Secuiesc, Romania), Dés (now Dej, Romania), and from 1912 on, in Budapest. From 1918 he was a university professor at Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1923 he became Director of the National Archives, Budapest. By 1924 he was Director of the National Széchényi Library and, from 1929, he taught Eastern European History at the University of Budapest. He edited the academic journal, Archivum Europae Centro-Orientalis, until 1944, and had a leading role in the Hungarian Historical Society and at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His positivist thoughts influenced historical research and the sources he used made it even more interesting. The main topics that interested him were the history of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romani), the Rákóczi period, and Polish-Hungarian relations. His main writings include György Rákóczi and the Polish Kingdom (Rákóczi György és a lengyel királyság) (1907); The History of the Peace of Szatmár and its Documentary Sources (A szatmári béke története és okirattára) (1925); The History of the Bethlen Counts and their Families, (A Bethlen grófok és családjainak története) (1927), and The Story and Documentation of Ferenc Rákóczi II's Treason Trial (II Rákóczi Ferenc felségárulási perének története és irattára) (1935). He was also a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1919, ordinary 1931, Director between 1935 and 1949). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Lukin, László (Ladislav) (Baja, 30 January 1926 - Budapest, 18 August 2004) – Music teacher, chorus-master, performing artist and propagator of music literature. His parents were capable musicians, his father also worked as a parish choirmaster. He completed his secondary education at the Béla III Cistercian High School of Baja in 1944. His music teachers were Ilona Recska (piano) and Ferenc Bálint (theory). From 1944 to 1948 he completed his studies in the church choir-master section of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as the student of Lajos (Louis) Bárdos, continuing there in the section of high-school singing and music teacher training during 1948 and 1949, under Jenő (Eugene) Ádám, with instruction in organ playing from Sebestyén (Sebastian) Pécsi. During the years 1950 to 1982 he was music teacher at the Mihály Fazekas General School and High School, in addition to working as choirmaster for a number of groups: as the deputy choirmaster of the Budapest Choir (1950-1954); choirmaster of the Hungarian State Railway (MÁV) Male Choir at Dunakeszi (1954 to 1964), and from 1954 until his death, Lukin directed the youth concerts of the National Philharmonic. Between 1958 and 1968 he edited the “Cricket-music” column of the journal Muzsika. From 1960 to 1965 he ran the TV-program Chiming Clocks. Until his passing, he was also writing for Hungarian Radio, as an outside consultant. He was the author of educational music books, also textbooks on music and singing for high schools. In 2003 he launched a series for young students, entitled “Musical Fables – Fabled Music” (Zenés mesék - Mesés zenék). Lukin was a member of the Franz Liszt Society, and foundation member of the Hungarian and International Kodály Society, Secretary of the Lajos Bárdos Society, and also leader of musical clubs; he was an honorary freeman of the town of Baja (1989). The General Musical High School of Baja bears his name. He was a recipient of the Small Cross of the Order of the Republic of Hungary (1996) and the Gyula Wlassics Prize (2003). The Basic Art-Educational Institution at Érd bears his name (2005). – B: 2049, T: 7456. → Ádám, Jenő; Bárdos, Lajos; Pécsi, Sebestyén.

Lükő, Gábor (Gabriel) (Komárom, 4 November 1909 - Budapest, 21 April 2001) – Ethnographer, social psychologist. He studied at the University of Budapest. The distinguished ethnographer, István (Stephen) Györffy supervised his Ph.D. thesis: The Csángós of Moldova I. The Connections of the Csángós with the Hungarians of Transylvania (A moldvai Csángók I. A Csángók kapcsolatai az erdélyi magyarsággal) (1936). He gathered a valuable collection among the Csángós of Moldova. He worked in a number of museums: in 1936 and 1937 at the Ethnographic Museum, Budapest; from 1937 to 1949 he was Curator of the Déri Museum of Debrecen; between 1950 and 1958, at Gyula; from 1958 to 1963, at Baja, and between 1963 and 1970, at Kiskunfélegyháza, where he became Director. From 1942 to 1945 he was a demonstrator in the Socio-Psychological Institute of his mentor, Sándor (Alexander) Karácsony at the University of Debrecen. In 1945 he became an honorary lecturer there. He researched the origin of Hungarian folk art: The Shepherd's Art of the Hortobágy (A hortobágyi pásztorművészet) (1940); The Origin and History of Hungarian Folk-embroidery (A magyar néphimzés eredete és története); later, he summed up the ancestral and eastern elements of Hungarian folklore in The Forms of the Hungarian Soul (A magyar lélek formái) (1942, facsimile edition 1987). He carried out research on the old layer of Hungarian folksongs, on Finno-Ugric mythology, and on Romanian belief legends considered to be of Hungarian origin. The result of his research is the work: The Feast of the Day, Romanian Folk Ballads (A nap lakodalma, Román népballadák), published by the Hungarian-Romanian Library, established by him, translated by István (Stephen) Komjáthy (1947). Unfortunately, his life-work remained in the background for a long time. His disciples made it known in “samizdat” (underground) form in the 1990s, and it appeared under the title Roots (Gyökerek), first in Finland and Estonia. However, for his silenced life achievement he received the Hungarian Heritage Prize (1999), the Kossuth Prize (2001) and the Prize of the Gábor Bethlen Foundation (1992. – B: 0878, 1079, 1257, T: 7456.→Györffy, István; Karácsony, Sándor.

Luppis, János (John) (Fiume, now Rijeka Croatia, 27 January 1813 - Torriga, Italy, 11 January 1875) – Naval Captain, engineer, co-inventor of the torpedo. He followed in his father’s footsteps and joined the Austro-Hungarian Navy. He conceptualized and built the first torpedo. Basically it was a boat, filled with explosives and a triggering device at its stern, activated by a pressurized air-driven propeller, directed from the shore by strings. The Naval Ministry did not recognize its importance at the time. He then teamed up with Robert Whitehead, an English shipbuilder, and the first operational torpedo was built in Fiume (now Rijeka, Croatia) in 1866. Lajos (Louis) Obry and János Gesztessy perfected it with their devices. Its mass-production started in 1868; the products were purchased by England, Germany, Italy, France, Japan and Russia. The Luppis-Whitehead torpedo was first seen in action in the Civil War in Peru on 19 May 1877, and it played a major role in the naval war between Japan and Russia in 1904. – B: 1105, 1160, 1410, T: 7103.

Lusztig, Gábor (Gabriel) (Gyula, 9 September 1925 - Kecskemét, 3 April 1991) – Physician, pathologist. Earlier in his career (1943-1944) he studied Law at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1944 he was called up for forced labor service. During 1944 and 1945 he was imprisoned at Sopronkőhida. In 1951 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Szeged. In 1954 he earned specialist qualification in Pathological Anatomy and Pathological Histology. In 1951 he worked on a scholarship in the Department of Pathological Anatomy and Pathological Histology at the University of Szeged. From 1952 he was a research student there, from 1953 a demonstrator, then an assistant lecturer from 1954 to 1956. He obtained his Master’s Degree in Medicine in 1963, and his Medical Doctorate in 1979. From 1956 until his death, he was the Senior Physician in the Pathology Section of the County Hospital of Kecskemét. From 1968 he was a titular assistant professor in the Medical School of the University of Szeged, and a titular professor from 1973. In 1970-1971 he was a guest research scientist at the University of Montreal. He mainly investigated the disorders of the circulatory system, above all, the pathogenesis of arteriosclerosis. From 1962 he edited the Yearbook of the Hospital of County Bács-Kiskun (Bács-Kiskun Megyei Kórház Évkönyve). He was President of the Society of Hungarian Pathologists (1980-1990) and a member of the European Society of Pathology. His works include Blood Coagulation Factors and Atherosclerosis (Acta Morphologica) (1965), and The Alteration of the Water-binding Capacity of the Human Aorta-wall in Atherosclerosis (Az emberi aorta-fal vízkötő-kapacitásának változása atherosclerosisban). He received the József (Joseph) Baló Prize. – B: 1730, 1745, T: 7456.

Lute Players – Medieval Hungarian minstrels accompanied their songs on the lute (lant). The player held the lute in his right hand more or less on his lap, while he would pluck the strings with his left hand. In Hungary, the mention of these lute players first appeared in documents in 1326 and 1364. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 7684.

Lyka, Károly (Charles) (Lika) (Pest, 4 January 1869 - Budapest, 30 April 1965) – Art historian. He studied in Munich and Rome to become a painter; but later abandoned his plan. Instead, he chose the career of an art critic. From 1896 he became closely associated with the journal, New Times (Új Idők). From 1914 he was professor at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, and was its Director from 1920. He retired in 1936. He was an art critic for the newspaper, Pest Diary (Pesti Napló), the Budapest Diary (Budapesti Napló), and fought for the recognition of the painters of Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania), and the post-impressionist painters. Together with István (Stephen) Réti in 1902, he established and edited the periodical, Art (Művészet) until 1918. In this periodical he continued fighting for the recognition of new Hungarian artists, especially Szinyei Merse, Rippl-Rónai, and the artists of the Nagybánya School. He became a member of the Upper House of Parliament in 1927. He retired in 1936. His works include Viktor Madarász, his Life and Works (Madarász Viktor élete és művei) (1923?) History of the Arts (A művészetek története) (1930); National Romanticism (Nemzeti romantika) (1942); Michelangelo (1957); Leonardo da Vinci (1958); Raffaello (1959); Rembrandt (1956), and Munkácsy 1844-1900 (1964). His books on great painters were enormously popular; he became the leading art historian of Hungary. He received the Kossuth Prize twice (1952, 1964). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7103.→Szinyei Merse, Pál; Rippl-Rónai, József; Madarász, Viktor; Munkácsi, Mihály; Réti, István.

Macartney, Carlile Aylmer (1895-1978) – British historian, specialist in Hungarian issues. He was a research fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. From 1936 to 1946 he was in charge of the Hungarian section of the Foreign Office Research Department. From 1951 to 1957 he held the Chair of International Relations at Edinburgh University. He authored the following books about Hungary: The Magyars In the Ninth Century (Cambridge, 1930); National States and National Minorities (Oxford, 1934); Hungary (Modern World Series, Bern, 1934); Hungary and Her Successors (Oxford, 1937); Studies in the Earliest Hungarian Historical Sources, I - VIII (Budapest, 1938-1952, Blackwell); Problems of the Danube Basin (Cambridge, 1942); The Medieval Hungarian Historians (Cambridge, 1953); October Fifteenth, A History Of Hungary, 1929 - 1945 (Edinburgh, 1957, 2nd. Ed. 1962, with A. W. Palmer); Independent Eastern Europe (Macmillan, 1962); Hungary a Short History (Edinburgh, 1962), The Habsburg Empire, 1790 –1918, (Macmillan 1969). He was a British academic specializing in the history of Central Europe and in particular the history of Hungary. – B: 1031, 7617, T: 7617.→ Trianon Peace Treaty; Nagybecskerek.

Mace (buzogány) – A blunt striking hand-weapon: a club with short staff and a globular head studded with sharp spikes. It probably has an Asiatic origin and was imported to Europe by the Mongols. According to Byzantine Emperor Leo the Wise (886-912), early Hungarians did not use this weapon; in fact it was unknown to them. It was used mostly in the 14th and 15th centuries. It became a useful weapon against the armored cavalry and it appeared in different head types. The one with a solid head differed from the one with ribbing; the others, with thorny or starry heads, served different purposes. The starry-headed mace was popularly called the battle-star. Its use as a weapon became popular in Hungary only in the 14th century. Later, the decorated form of the mace became the symbol of power. – B: 0942, 1138, T: 3233.→Mace, ornamented; Mace, studded.

Mace, ornamented – In the social order of Hungarians the mace was used as symbol of power for the heads of the tribes. Later, the family patriarch of historic families used it during ceremonies and parades. The feathered, segmented, richly decorated mace-heads were favored most usually on a long stalk. For example: (1) Andrassy family: Head in 12 segments studded with rubies and turquoises. The colored velvet covering of the stem ended in a hilt of silver plate with baroque ornamentation. Length is 48cm.; the head measures 6cm. (2) Bocskai family: large globe shaped head covered with perforated, gilded silver plate, showing renaissance flower motifs, the family coat-of-arms and the year 1605. The stem is covered with red velvet and its length is 63 cm. The diameter of the head is 10 cm. (3) Festetich family: the head is studded with precious stones, emeralds and turquoises. The red velvet covered stem ends in a gilded, silver-plated hilt. – B: 1322, T: 7670.→Mace; Mace, studded.

Mace, studded – A hand weapon with short staff and a globular head studded with sharp spikes. It was mostly used in the 14th and 15th centuries. It probably has an Asiatic origin and was brought to Europe by the Mongols. - B: 1322, T: 3233.→Mace; Mace, ornamented.

Mackinaw Coat (bekecs) – A fur-lined, short overcoat without a collar made of sheepskin with the fur inside. The outside is decorated with embroidered floral motifs. It either has a distinct waistline, or falls freely from the shoulders to the thighs. Its color is usually brown; the more expensive ones are white. It is a traditional piece of clothing. German tailors made them first, following a Polish pattern, toward the end of 18th century and they have been popular since then. It is a variant of the ködmön. – B: 0942, 1031, T: 3240.→Szúr Mantle.

Macs ká ssy, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 4 February 1912 - Budapest, 29 October 1971) – Film director, film animator. He wanted to become a graphic artist. At the beginning of his career he drew advertisements and worked with János Halász (John Halas). He concurrently produced animated promotion films from 1930. In 1950, along with his associates, he founded the Hungarian animated motion picture industry. He also wrote scripts for his films. First, Walt Disney's style influenced his works. Later, he created his own characteristic style, using folk motives. His works include The Cockerel's Diamond Coin (A kiskakas gyémánt félkrajcára) (1951); Pencil and Eraser (Ceruza és radír) (1960); Duel (Párbaj) (1961); Gus the Lifesaver (Gusztáv az életmentő) (1964), and Statue (Szobor) (1971). Many of his animated films achieved international success. He and his production staff also received assignments from UNESCO. He received the Béla Balázs Price (1961), and the title of Merited Artist (1965). – B: 1160, 1031, T: 7685.→Halas, John.

Macsó Banate – Part of the Bánát region of Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin, south of its border. This area extended from the eastern part of Serbia to the River Drina, the border of Bosnia. Its capital was Szabács (now Šabac, Serbia). It was probably King Imre (Emeric, 1196-1204), who established the Macsó Banat; but its earliest document originates from the time of King Béla IV (1235-1270), who installed Prince Vratislav of Galicia as leader of the Banat. The Serbian King Uros Milutin III occupied it in 1286; King Károly I (Charles) (Charles Robert, 1307-1342) reoccupied it in 1312. In 1339, Stepan Dusan, King of Serbia, conquered it but he was expelled and, after the devastation, it was resettled with new inhabitants. The Macsó Banat played an important role in the wars against the Turks. Finally, it fell under Turkish rule around 1496. In the 19th century, it became part of Serbia under the name of Matchva. – B: 0942, 0945, 1031, 1138, T: 7103.→Lackfi, András.

Mácza, János (John) (Alsóhrabóc, now Nižni Hrabovec, Slovakia, 4 August 1893 - Moscow, 14 November 1974) – Writer, art historian, esthete. He studied Pharmacology. From 1913 he wrote play reviews, first in the magazine Ungvár Bulletin (Ungvári Közlöny), later in Budapest papers: the Hungarian Figaro (Magyar Figaro), Whole Wide World (Ország-Világ), and Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap). In 1915 he settled in Budapest and joined the antimilitaristic youth, gathering around Lajos (Louis) Kassák; he was a permanent correspondent for The Deed (A Tett), and later of Today (Ma). In 1917 he organized the Theater Studio of Ma, and drew a plan for an experimental theater.

Under the influence of German expressionism, he wrote poems and translated some works of the Aktion and Sturm's writers. During the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic of 1919, he was appointed Assistant Stage Manager of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. Thereafter, he moved to Vienna, where he became a member of the Communist Party and was commissioned to write literary and cultural columns for the paper the Worker of Kassa (Kassai Munkás). He translated from Czech, German and Soviet Russian avant-garde literature; he also wrote poems and canvassed stories in the proletarian spirit. In 1923 he settled in Moscow; until 1926, he worked in the Literary Section of the Commissariat of Education; he studied 20th century Russian Literature and published articles and books. From 1928 to 1934 he was Lecturer of Art Theory and Art History at the University of Moscow. Between 1934 and 1954, he lectured at the College of Architecture and, in 1936 he obtained a Ph.D., and published in the field of General Theory of Architecture and Gothic Art. From 1954 to 1970 he gave lectures in Esthetics and Industrial Form-design Theory at the Lomonosov University. In 1962 he published a textbook on the History of Esthetics. His works include The Classical and Modern Hungarian Drama (A klasszikus és az új magyar dráma) (1915), and Esthetics and Revolution (Esztétika és forradalom) (1970). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Maczkó, Mária (Tura, 15 August 1961- ) – Folk-singer. She graduated from the voice department of the Conservatory of Debrecen in 1982. Thereafter, she became the artistic leader of the Tura House of Culture, and a soloist of the State Folk Ensemble for the next ten years. She was a member of various literary circles and folk-song ensembles with the Gajdos Ensemble of Eger; she released a cassette and worked with the Tolcsvay Trio. In the settlements along the Galga River, on the southern slopes of the Cserhát Mountain, she carried out folk-song collecting; she also directed the heritage-preserving work of child and adult groups. Among others, she was the leader of the Women's Choir of Kartal and, for a decade, she was the Artistic Director of the Tura Minstrels. Her solo records appeared under the titles With Song I Praise You and I Bless Your Sacred Name (Énekkel dicsérek és Áldom szent nevedet). With film-manager, Ferenc (Francis) Olasz, she shot three Maria-films, and, on request of the French National Radio, she also gave concerts in Paris. Her work was recognized with numerous prizes and distinctions, such as the Young Master of Folk Art, the eMeRTon Prize, the Folksinger Prize, the Hungarian Heritage Prize, and she was made an honorary freewoman of Tura. – B: 2050, T: 7456.

Madách Family (Sztregovai and Kiskelecsényi Madách) – One of the oldest families of County Nógrád. Radun, one of its ancient members, lived at the time of King András II (Andrew, 1205-1235). He escorted the fleeing King Béla IV (1235-1270) to the Adriatic shore following the disastrous Battle of Muhi in 1241. He stayed with him there and then escorted him back. His sons also remained humble subjects and faithful to the King. – B: 0942, T: 7676. → Muhi, Battle of.

Madách, Imre (Emeric) (Alsósztrégova, now Dolná Strehová, Slovakia, 21 January 1823 - Alsósztrégova, 4 October 1864) – Poet, writer. He studied Law and Philosophy at the University of Pest in 1837. His first romantic poems were published in 1840, under the title, Latin Flowers (Latin virágok), about his first hopeless love. Following his studies, he moved back to the family estate. He was admitted to the Bar in 1842. He became appointed County Deputy Clerk in 1843; a Judge of the Court of Appeal in 1844, and posted as Provincial High Commissioner between 1846 and 1849. In 1861, he was again appointed Judge to the County Court, and became a parliamentary representative.

In 1863 he became member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Due to his weak heart he was unable to participate in the Freedom Fight; however, he harbored a rebel soldier friend, for which the Austrians imprisoned him. While in prison, his wife became unfaithful. The intensity of the pain cleansed Madách; he got over the incident and finally, after several attempts, wrote his drama, The Tragedy of Man (Az Ember Tragédiája). From the time of its first publication, the play appeared in Hungarian in different forms, was translated into several languages, and was reprinted more than one hundred times. Although it was never staged in his lifetime, the Hungarian National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) presented it over 1100 times until 1967. Imre Madách was the greatest Hungarian playwright of the 19th century, along with József (Joseph) Katona. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 3240. → Katona, József.

Madaras, József (Joseph) (Rigmány, now Rigmani, Romania, 16 August 1937 - Máriahalom, 24 April 2007) – Actor. In 1958 he completed his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art. The 1958-1959 season was spent with the Kisfaludy Theater of Győr; then, in 1959-1960, he played in the National Theater of Szeged. In 1960-1961 he was a member of the State Déryné Theater (Állami Déryné Színház) and, from 1961 to 1966, of the Thalia Theater (Thália Színház). Between 1966 and 1969 he worked in the Synchron Pannonia Studio (Pannónia Szinkron Stúdió). From 1969 to 1971 he was a member of the Literary Stage (Irodalmi Színpad). Between 1971 and 1974 he played in the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, and, from 1974 to 1976, again on the Literary Stage. From 1978 he was a member of the Hungarian Film Producing Co. (Magyar Filmgyártó Vállalat). He was a skillful impersonator of peasant or worker figures discontented with their fate, desiring to break free from it. His main roles included Laci in J. Darvas' Sooty Sky (Kormos ég); Jani Habetler in E. Fejes' Rust-cemetery (Rozsdatemető), and Juan in Pedro Calderon's The Judge of Zalamea (A zalameai bíró). There are 36 feature films to his credit, including The Bells Went to Rome (A harangok Rómába mentek) (1958); Idol (Bálvány) (1963); Shiny Breezes (Fényes Szelek) (1968); Black Cat (Fekete macska) (1972); 80 Hussars (80 Huszár) (1978), and Defense is Next (Védelemé a szó) (1988). From 1982 he also acted as stage manager. He was awarded a number of prizes, among them the Béla Balázs Prize (1974), the Grand Prix of Locarno Festival (1978), the title of Merited Artist (1978), the Kossuth Prize (1996), and the Prize of Life Achievement (2000). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Madarász, Emil (Nagyszentmiklós, now Sânnicolaul-Mare, Romania, 12 November 1884 - Budapest, 18 February 1962) – Poet, writer, journalist. Having completed Teachers' College, he taught in a private school in Budapest. His first poems appeared in the paper People's Voice (Népszava), early in the 20th century. In 1918 he became a member of the Soldiers' Council of Gödöllő, and, in 1919, he joined the Communist Party. During the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic of 1919, he fought in the Red Army. Later, he had to move to Vienna; then between 1923 and 1946, lived in the Soviet Union, writing for Hungarian papers there. During World War II, he was in charge of the Literary Foundation at Alma Ata. On his return to Hungary, he was a correspondent for the papers, New Word (Új Szó), and People's Voice (Népszava). He translated a number of Soviet novels. He was at his best when he featured the daily life of people. His works include Poems (Versek) (1905-1947); Csihajda Legend from 1919 (Csihajda Legenda 1919-ből), poems (1957), and Yesterday and the Day Before Yesterday (Tegnap és tegnapelőtt), poems (1955). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Madarász, Gyula (Julius) (Pest, 3 May 1858 - Budapest, 29 December 1931) – Ornithologist, painter and illustrator. After earning his Ph.D. at the University of Budapest in 1880, he obtained a position in the Bird Gallery at the Zoological Department of the Hungarian National Museum. To further his study of birds, he toured Hungary and later traveled in Western Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America. From 1884 until 1887 he published and edited the periodical, Zeitschrift für die gesammte Ornithologie. His fieldwork included scientifically documenting bird migration patterns in the Lake Fertő region. The Hungarian Government commissioned him to lead a zoological expedition to India and Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) in 1896 and 1897, where he focused primarily on ornithological collection and research. This was followed by expeditions to Egypt, Nubia (now southern Egypt and northern Sudan) and Sudan in 1911 and 1912. His research was widely published in national as well as in foreign journals. Madarász' bird and landscape paintings were exhibited in the Art Gallery and at the Hungarian National Salon. His major works include Systematic Register of Hungarian Birds and Corresponding Literature (Rendszeres névsora a magyarországi madaraknak és az ezekre vonatkozó irodalom) (1881); Samuel Fenichel's Ornithological Collection in New Guinea's Finisterre Range (Fenichel Sámuel ornitológiai gyűjtése az új guineai Finisterre hegységben) (1894); The Results of My Ornithological Collection in Ceylon (Ceyloni gyűjtésem madártani eredményei) (1897), and Birds of Hungary (Magyarország madarai) (1899-1903). – B: 1160, 1124, T: 7657. → Herman, Ottó; Fenichel, Sámuel; Pungur, Gyula.

Madarász, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 1 May 1962 - ) – Literary historian. He did his secondary and tertiary studies in Milan (1975-1982), and completed them at the University of Budapest with a Degree in Education in 1988. From 1990 he worked as a demonstrator on a scholarship in the Department of Old Hungarian Literature of the University of Debrecen. He was an assistant lecturer there in 1992 and, in 1993 he established the Chair of Italian Studies and became Head of the Research Center of the Italian Enlightenment and Romanticism. In 1991 he obtained his candidature for professorship and, in 1998, became a full professor. He is Editor for the series: Italianistica Debreceniensis, The Discovered Classics (A Felfedezett Klasszikusok), and The Eötvös Classics (Eötvös Klasszikusok). His main field of study is the literature of the Italian Enlightenment and Romanticism. His works include Kölcsey, Eötvös, Madách (1989); Manzoni (1990); The History of Italian Literature (Az olasz irodalom története) (1993), and Halfway Along the Road of Human Life (Az emberélet útjának felén) (1999), as well as more than 1000 publications in 52 periodicals. He edited more than 100

Madarász, Viktor (Victor) (Csetnek, now Štítnik, Slovakia, 14 December 1830 - Budapest, 10 January 1917) – Painter. First he was a soldier, then a Lieutenant in the War of Independence (1848-1849). After the war was lost, he went underground; then studied Law, but soon changed to painting. He attended the Faculty of Historical Painting and Illustration at the Academy of Fine Arts, Vienna, where he painted his first historical picture Kuruc and Labanc (Kuruc és Labanc), and took it to an exhibition in Budapest (1859). He began his studies in Paris in 1856, where he created his major works, illustrating historical events, such as László Hunyadi on the Bier (Hunyadi László siratása) (1859), and Ilona Zrinyi Before the Investigating Judge [in the Fortress of Munkács] (Zrinyi Ilona a vizsgálóbíró előtt) (1859). The experiences gathered as a young soldier and the memories of war followed him through his entire life. His artistic concepts always had the theme of national independence, or tragic Hungarian historical subjects. In 1870 he returned to Budapest; but the bureaucracy at that time, and the official red tape obstructed him in his work. His canvas Gábor Bethlen Among his Scholars (Bethlen Gábor tudósai között) (1870) was rejected. After another rejection by the Hungarian Government, he felt his art and works were not needed in his country; consequently he withdrew from the artistic life and never painted again. Following this decision, he took care of the business left by his father. His romantic style made him famous. He is one of the greatest artists of Hungary, the founder of historical painting. There is no other artist whose oil canvasses have been reproduced as much as his. His works reflected the Hungarian people's love for their country. After the defeat of the War of Independence of 1848-1849, his paintings remained excellent examples of patriotism. Over the decades, the works of Viktor Madarász never lost importance, due to his reflection of the tragic destiny and history of the Hungarian nation. – B: 0883, 0934, 1031, T: 7279, 7653. → Munkács; Munkács Castle.

Mádéfalva's Peril (Mádéfalvi veszedelem; Seculicidium) (Mádéfalva, now Siculeni in Romania) – In 1762, Empress and Queen Mária Terézia (Maria Theresa, 1740-1780) appointed General Buccow as Commander-in-Chief of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), and charged him with the task of setting up a frontier defense system. Consequently, young men were recruited for border-guard duty. The Szekler (Székely Hungarian) youth refused to comply with this demand, which was a grave infringement of the Szeklers' free status, and also because the military frontier duty was a serious burden. Nonetheless, the conscription of able-bodied men continued unabated in the Szekler regions of Ski, Kászon (now Casin), Gyergyó and Háromszék (now Trei Scaune). Against the general resistance, General Buccow moved his army into Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania). By the summer of 1763, hundreds of young Szekler men had fled across the Carpathian mountain range to Moldova. In the meantime, three Szekler leaders were prosecuted and deported. In 1767, General Siskowicz started forcibly conscripting young men, upon which the male population of Mádéfalva fled into the forests of the mountainous region. In retaliation, the military drove out the remaining families from their houses into the winter cold. Resistance started to be organized in Mádéfalva, its members moved to the village. On 6 February, the families that had previously fled, returned to their village from the forest. General Siskowicz surrounded the village with 1000 infantrymen and 300 other soldiers in the same night; and at 4 a.m. on 7 January, following an artillery barrage, the soldiers stormed the village and massacred 400 of the 2,500 Szeklers. Later, many more died of their wounds. The next day, an imperial edict was issued, ordering General Siskowicz to identify and punish the members of the resistance by beheading them and confiscating their property. In order to avoid prosecution, many Szeklers fled to Bukovina, where they hid in Csángó-Magyar villages. In 1777, Bukovina fell under Austrian authority and, with the mediation of Count Andárs (Andrew) Hadik, the Szeklers were pardoned, were called into the unpopulated area of Bukovina, where they founded villages such as Istensegíts (Țibeni), Fogadjisten (Iacobești), Hadikfalva (Dornești), Józseffalva (Tolova), Andrásfalva (Măneuți). Every year, on 7 January, Mádéfalva holds a Commemoration Day of the Seculicidium. There is a memorial of Seculicidium at Mádéfalva. – B: 1230, 1031, 1665, T: 7103.→Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen; Csángós; Hadik, Count András.

Maderspach, Károly (Charles) (Madersbacher) (Oravicabánya, now Oravița, Romania, 3 August 1791 – Ruszcabánya, now Rusca Montană, Romania, 23 August 1899) – Metallurgical engineer. He obtained his Degree from the Mining and Forestry Academy of Selmechánya (Schemnitz now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). Soon after, he joined the company of the Hofmann Brothers and, following the company's reorganization he became joint owner of Hofmann Brothers and Charles Maderspach Mining and Ironworks Company. In the 1840s he played an initiating role in the research of the Oligocene coal basin of the Zsil River valley. The successes of the company were due to his invention that became internationally applied: an iron bridge with a stay hanging on an arch. The first such bridge was built over the Temes River at Lugos in 1833. He also took part in the planning competition for a permanent Pest-Buda bridge. In 1849, with the iron works of Ruszcabánya, he played an important and enthusiastic part in supplying the army of General Bem with munitions and armaments (fighting the Austrian forces in the Hungarian War of Independence against Habsburg rule, 1848-1849). His wife, Franciska Buchwald contributed to the cause by entertaining Generals Bem and Kmetty in their house. For these reasons the Austrians arrested him, and the commander of the invading Austrian troops, on the instruction of the brutal General Haynau, had his wife publicly flogged. As a result of this humiliation, Maderspach committed suicide. At Ruszcabánya, there is a commemorative column for Mme. Maderspach and Charles Maderspach (erected in 1909). Mádi Szabó, Gábor (Gabriel) (Nyíregyháza, 30 August 1922 - Budapest, 6 March 2003) – Actor. He started his acting career at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest in 1942. He was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, from 1946, and the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen, from 1950; the Youth Theater (Ifjúsági Színház) from 1952; and the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) from 1957. After being a member of a number of theaters, he finally retired in 1989 from the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház). He personified some 170 major characters, including Petur in J. Katona's Bánk bán; Mihály Józsa in Illyés' Torch-flame (Fáklyaláng); Flambeau in Rostand's Eaglet (Sasfűök); Laertes in Shakespeare's Hamlet, and Lear in King Lear and Rabaut in J. Székely's Protestants. He made many feature films, among them the Lieutenant of Rákóczi (Rákóczi Hadnagya) (1953); Saint Peter's Umbrella (Szent Péter esernyője) (1958), the Poor Rich (Szegény gazdagok) (1959), and Somewhere in Hungary (Valahol Magyarországon) (1987). He also appeared in television productions. He was a suggestive character actor. He received the Jászai Prize (1957), the titles of Merited Artist and Outstanding Artist (1976, 1985), and the Kossuth Prize (1998). – B: 1439, 1445, T: 7103.

Mádl, Ferenc (Francis) (Band, 29 January 1931 - Budapest, 29 May 2011) – Politician, lawyer. He read Law first at the University of Pécs, then at the University of Budapest and obtained his Degree in Law in 1955. Between 1956 and 1971, he was an officer in charge of the juridical office of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1961 to 1963 he was enrolled in post-graduate studies at the University of International and Comparative Law, Strasbourg, France. From 1971 he lectured at the Faculty of Law at the University of Budapest. In 1973, he became a Professor, and an Associate of the Institute of Political Science and Jurisprudence of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; in 1985 he was Chair of International Civil Law. He was a visiting professor at universities in the United States and Germany. He was appointed to the position of arbitrator to the International Center for the Settlement of Investment Disputes, Washington, DC, USA, in 1989. In 1991 he was elected member of the Institut de Droit International. In the Hungarian Government, formed after the first free elections in 1990, as an independent, he became Minister without Portfolio from May 1990 to February 1993, then Minister of Culture and Education from February 1993 to July 1994. On 4 August 2000 he was elected President of the Republic of Hungary for a five-year term. His main field of research was international, civil, comparative and commercial law. He was a pioneer in establishing the requirements for the adaptation of Eastern European legal systems to the structures of the European Union. His works include Comparative International Civil Law (in Hungarian, 1978); The Law of International Transactions (1982); The Legal Structure of the Enterprise (1985), and State and Economy – Revolution by Means of Law in Central and East European Countries (1997). He became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1987, regular 1993). He was elected Knight of the French Legion of Honor (1999). He received the Széchenyi Prize (1999), and an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Heidelberg, Germany (2001). – B: 0879, 0992, T: 7456.

Madonna, the Great (Nagyboldogasszony) – Blessed Mother (Boldogasszony), the Hungarian version of the Virgin Mary. Boldogasszony was an ancient Hungarian name for a female deity. In the 10th century Bishop St. Gellért (Gerhard) advised the western missionaries moving to Hungary to convert the nation, to apply the name Boldogasszony to Virgin Mary. Over the centuries the two names became synonymous amongst the people. The common people actually knew two versions of this name: (1) Nagyboldogasszony (The Great Madonna, the Great Blessed Mother) or Saint Anne and (2) Kisboldogasszony (Little Madonna, Blessed Mother) or Virgin Mary in the eyes of the people. The name of Boldogasszony has been applied to a variety of names. (1) Geographic place names such as Boldogasszonyfalva in County Bács-Bodrog, and Boldogasszony (Frauenkirchen) east of Lake Fertő, County Moson. (2) The name of the month January, which is regarded as the month of Boldogasszony. (3) Candle-dedicating (Gyertyaszentelő) Boldogasszony. (4) Fruit-grafting (Gyümölcsoltó) Boldogasszony. (5) Girls (Leányai) of Boldogasszony. (6) Many parishes bear this name. (7) The name of a wooden post, “Blessed Mother” (Boldogasszony) in the family rooms of country homes, decorated with carvings and kept close to the hearth; a wide-spread custom mainly in northern Hungary, in the Upland (Felvidék), now in Slovakia. (8) One of the most popular hymns of Catholic Hungarians is dedicated to Boldogasszony. It begins with the line Boldog Asszony anyánk, Régi nagy patrónánk...(Our Blessed Mother, Our ancient great Patroness...). It is frequently sung especially in times of national peril. The festival of Boldogasszony is on 15 August, the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary (Assumptio Beatae Mariae Virginis). – B: 0945, 1068, 1134, T: 7663, 7456, 7103.→Mother, Divine; Gellért, Saint; Pagan Religious World; Marriage Oath; Mary’s Kingdom.

Madsar, Russia – (1) Name of three cities on the high plateau of the Kuma River, surrounded by huge burial mounds attributed to the Cumanians. The small ruins of Kicskina Magar and Ulu Magar are located about 25 km from each other. Probably Anusirvan, the Sassanida Persian king, erected these around 530 A.D. In connection with these cities, Theophylactos Simokatta, 7th-century Byzantine historiographer, mentions that, during the victorious Persian wars of Byzantine Emperor Herakleios (622-628), “Theodoros and Andreas restored the old, ruined cities of the Matzars”. The large territory occupied by the cities indicates that their development took place over several centuries. The third settlement named Magar was located at the site of the present village called Poksino, but it was destroyed earlier. In Kicskina Magar, the Franciscans had a monastery in 1319. The Russians called it Ulu Magar Sventa Kreszta (Holy Cross); they found well-developed commerce and an advanced Muslim culture there. In 1395 the Mongol-Tartars of Timur Lenk destroyed the towns. Polish diplomat, Andrzej Taranowski, in his travel notes of 1569, mentions the ruins that remained until the 18th century, when, on Potemkin's orders, the polished stones of the ruins were used in the building of the fortress of Jekaterinograd. In his notes of 1712, De la Montraye observes that the Masar cities were original Hungarian settlements. He based his opinion on information he received from the Tartar inhabitants. In 1829, Károly János (Charles John) Besse, and in 1895, members of the Zichy expedition, found only small ruins of these cities. Count Géza Kuun transcribed the name of the ruined cities as Magar, and that of the river as Bubala. In 1972, István (Stephen) Vásáry, an academician on a research assignment to St Petersburg, discovered a short description of the cities, dated to 1677. The Madsar name is still known among the people and it can be found in the official registry of names. (2) A province south of the Caucasian Mountains that, according to Derbendnameh, existed in the 8th century and was named after its inhabitants. The mention of the name Madsar, is actually the first reliable reference to the name of the Hungarian people. During the Middle Ages, the province was an important commercial center. In the cities, the Turkish women wore no veil, enjoyed complete personal freedom, dressed luxuriously, and possessed high social standing. Similarly to the Sumerians, they placed their dead into burial chambers lined with stones or bricks. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7665.→Zichy, Count István; Kuun, Count Géza; Magor.

Mády, Zoltán (Hilscher) (Budapest, 9 September 1898 - Budapest, 13 May 1977) – Historian, literary historian and sociologist. After completing his high school studies in Budapest, he served in the army on various fronts in World War I, between 1916 and 1918. During the rule of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919, he fought as a Red soldier against the intruding Romanians. In the meantime, he studied Art, majoring in Hungarian and Latin at the University of Budapest, where he obtained his Degree in Education in 1921, and later a Ph.D. in Art. His main field of research was Celtic studies. From 1920 to 1924 he taught in Budapest. In 1924-1925 he headed the Section on Education in the Institute of Social Politics in the Faculty of Economics of the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1925 until 1945 he taught at the School of Economics on Márvány Street, Budapest and, concurrently, from 1936 to 1944, he was Assistant Lecturer on Sociography in the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest. From 1936 he headed the Sociologist Group at the National Institute of Regions and Ethnography). In 1942 he organized a number of ethnographic research camps at Kemse, Sárpilis, Rábcakapi, Magyarnemegye (now Nimigea, Romania; the participants, among others, were András (Andrew) Gábrriel, Sándor (Alexander) Kicsi, Béla Köpeczi, Tibor Zimányi. In 1945-1946 he lectured on Sociology at the Teachers' College of the University of Budapest. Between 1946 and 1949 he worked as a supervisor over displaced children in County Békés. From 1949 until his retirement in 1961, he was a teacher at the Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi High School, Budapest. In addition to his work as a teacher, he regarded the educational-spiritual molding of the entire Hungarian youth as his task. For this reason, he also worked in the Scout Movement and became a correspondent for the men's journal: The Youth of Hungary (Fiatal Magyarország). For decades, he undertook the direction of the Students' House of Hársfa Street in Budapest, run by the Pro-Christo Students' Association. He urged the creation of a Finnish-type People's College, and played an important role in the creation of the renowned Lutheran People's College at Nagytarcsa in 1938. In the interest of spreading the Lutheran faith, he launched the movement called "Prayer and Service". From 1958 he was a lecturer and, from 1972 until his death, Titular Assistant Professor of the Department of Indo-European Linguistics of the Art Faculty of the University of Budapest. He was in charge of the special courses in Celtic Linguistics and Literature and Old Irish Linguistics. He held a Supervisory Office in the Lutheran Districts in Hungary. His works include National Youth Regional and Ethnographic Research (Országos ifjúsági táj-és népkutatás) (1943). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456

Madzsar, Alice (Mrs. József Madzsar) (née Alice Jászi) (Nagykároly, now Carei, Romania, 25 May 1885 - Budapest, 24 August 1935) – Eurhythmic artist, choreographer, dancing teacher. She was sister of Oscar Jászi the politician and sociologist. Since the early 1920s under the influence of avant-garde aspirations she put body movements to the use in artistic expression. She conducted a class during the years 1912-1937. Their first performance was in 1925. During 1926-1927 they performed reciting and dance choruses. In 1929 an eurhythmic drama on the New Prometheus (Új Prométheusz) was produced by Alice Madzsar and Magda Róna. It was also in 1929 that her pupils acted in her work, the Two Angels (Két Angyal), which was made into a film. In 1930 she composed and produced the play Handcuffs (Bilincsek), which is her most important choreographic work. The choral drama of 1930, Daughter of Ayrus (Ayrus leánya) by Alice Madzsar and Magda Róna features the eternal rebirth of beauty; this was followed in 1931 by the Babylonian Fair (Babiloni vásár), a one-act pantomime. Their shadow play or silhouette works, such as the Six-armed Goddess (Hatkarú istennő), or The Fisherman and the Silver of the Moon (A halász és a hold ezüstje) suggest a “total theater”. Their work with the most daring message is the Modern Suite (Korszerű szvit) (1933); but only its first part appeared on stage with the title Destruction (Rombolás) at Szolnok. The police banned this work, as well as her school. Beside Magda Róna, the artistic leader was Ágnes Kövesházi. After World War I the Madzsarists (Madzsaristák) became the founders of gymnastic training in Hungary. She was dealing with her method in her book The New Ways of Women's Body Culture (A női testkultúra új útjai) (1926, 1977), published also in French La culture physique de la femme moderne (Paris, 1936). Alice Madzsar is regarded as the pioneer of female body culture in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1031; T: 7456.→Róna, Magda.

Madzsar, Imre (Emeric) (Nagykároly, now Carei, Romania, 1 February 1878 - Budapest, 3 August 1946) – Historian. He completed his higher studies at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, obtained a Diploma of Education for high schools and, in 1900, a Ph.D. in Liberal Arts. From 1900 to 1924 he was a high school teacher in District I of Budapest, later its principal; also, during 1913-1938, he lectured at the Eötvös College and was appointed honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest. Between 1924 and 1935 he was Secretary of the National Educational Council, also Titular Regional School Superintendent (1926-1935). He was mainly interested in the sources of Medieval Hungarian History, questions of Philosophy of History, History of Education, and Education itself (problems of reading and writing). His works include Individuals and Masses in History (Egyének és tömegek a történelemben) (1909); History, Teaching of History and Sociology (Történet, történettanítás és szociológia) (1910); Reform of the Teaching of History (A történettanítás reformja) (1913); The Periods of World History (A világtörténet korszakai) (1932), and History and Memory (Történelem és emlékezet) (1940). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding from 1925, regular from 1938). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Madzshars – A name used by Ibn Ruszta and Gardizi for the Magyars of Levedia, before 650 AD. As the Arabic script does not denote vowels, in the original records the text “m.dzshg.r” appears. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7684.→Levedia.

Maeotis – Former name of the Sea of Azov. In their early history, the ancestors of Hungarians lived on the eastern fringe of Europe along the Kama River. Since they were pastoralists, in summer they moved as far north as the source region of the Kama River, where they met with Finno-Ugric peoples. In the winter, they usually moved southward where the River Volga flows into the Caspian Sea. According to the Chronicle of Simon Kézai, the Hun and Magor tribes moved to and settled in the Meotis (Maeotis) area (739-745). The new country was around the northern shores of the Sea of Azov, extending as far as the Dnepr River; they later called it Levedia after their leader. They lived in association with the Khazar Empire. Anonymus, the chronicler (12th century), in his chronicles, calls Levedia Dentumoger. Ügek was the leader of the leading Megyer Tribe.

Mag, Mrs. Vince (née Elza Varga) (Medveshidegkút, now Studena, Slovakia, 10 January 1932 - ) – Worker, leader of a group for the preservation of traditions. She completed her eight years of primary school at Medveshidegkút in 1946. Thereafter, she was an agricultural worker (1946-1952), and dressmaker (1952-1970). From 1970 until her retirement in 1989, she worked at agricultural cooperatives of Medveshidegkút and Egyházassbást (now Nova Bašta, Slovakia). When the group for preservation of traditions was formed in her birthplace in 1972, she became its leader. She set out to collect all the traditions of the district, its folk customs and songs. The endeavor proved a national success. She regularly participated in the national competitions within Slovakia for the preservation of traditions and folk music referred to as: The Spring Wind Brings Flood... (Tavaszi szél vizet áraszt...). Her group placed first in 1980, 1987 and 1989, while other times they achieved outstanding mentions in district and regional competitions. Their program was about the local wedding customs, Easter traditions, carnival and harvesting times. They appeared on several occasions at Zseliz (now Zeliezovce, Slovakia) and Gombaszög (near Szalóc/Salovec). She did preparatory work in 1986 and 1990 for A. Takács' and Gy. Pálffy's documentary film about her village. She established a museum in her village in 1982, and became its trustee, constantly adding to its exhibits. Between 1980 and 1990 she was President of the Local Adult Education Center. In 1989 she participated at the 100-year anniversary conference of the Hungarian Ethnographical Society in Budapest. The Czechoslovak Radio's Hungarian broadcast prepared three reports on her activities and the traditions of her village. Her publications are Data on the Origin of Medveshidegkút (Medveshidegkút keletkezésének adatai), (1988)é Common Sayings in Hidegkút (Szólásmondások Hidegkúton) (1988)é Peasant Customs, Beliefs, Superstitions in my Village (Népszokások, hiedelmek, babonák a falumban) (1989)é Inscriptions on our Tombstones (Siremlékeink feliratai) (1989), Folk Tales (Népmesék) (1990), Proverbs (Közmondások) (1990), and Recipes of Old Dishes (Régi ételek receptjei) (1991). She received 2nd Prize in a folk song competition and the Outstanding Folk Artist Prize of the Czechoslovakian Hungarian Workers' Cultural Federation (1986). – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Magar→Madsar.

Magarab People – An ethnically mixed tribe of Hungarian-Berber origin living in the area of the middle section of the River Nile. They are descendents of those Hungarians, who were captured by Sultan Selim II's troops in 1516. Originally, they were mostly from the County of Temes, transported to Sudan where, following the war, they started building homes.

Although the Turkish occupation of Hungary ended in 1686, another wave of voluntary emigrants arrived in 1755 from Hungary; but those were already Moslems, converted during the Turkish occupation. They lived in two larger groups: in the northern part of the Sudan and the southern part of Egypt. Those in the Sudan were assigned to settle at Wadi Halfa, as well as in Halfa Daghim, an island in the River Nile (it was called Magyar- artim) until the Aswan Dam was built. Eventually, they were dispersed into the surrounding settlements. Their language is a mixture of Arabic, Turkish, Nubian and Hungarian, while, in the Sudan, they speak the Nubian Fadidzha dialect. Those living in Egypt reside mainly in Aswan and Kom Ombo, as well as the surrounding villages and some are in Cairo.

The Magarabs' skin is much lighter than those of the locals and even today they have the facial features of their ancestors. Based on their stories and on estimates, today there are close to 14,000 Magarabs living in the areas of Wadi Ralfa, Cairo, Aswan, Kom Ombo and surrounding regions and also scattered in several other locations.

They never kept any written records but their ancestry lines are carved on doorposts. They know about their origin from oral tradition and are interested in their old homeland. Swedish experts opened up burial grounds on the island prior to flooding due to the Aswan Dam. They removed some bones that prove the Magarabs originated from the Carpathian Basin. Their discoverer and first researcher was László Ede (Ladislav Edward) Almásy. – B: 1134, 1106, 1120, T: 7684.→Africa, Hungarians in; Almásy, László Ede.

Magas, István (Steven) (Nagykanizsa, 28 September 1924 - Calgary, Canada, 9 October, 2000) – Petroleum geologist. In 1942 he graduated from the Piarist High School in his home town, after which he was called up for military service. He graduated from the Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy as an artillery second lieutenant in the fall of 1944. With his military corps, he was stationed in Germany, where he survived the destructive carpet-bombing of Dresden on 13 February 1945, and where he was taken prisoner of war by the American forces. He returned to Hungary on 9 November 1945. Upon his return, he enrolled at the University of Budapest and graduated in 1950 with a degree as a petroleum geologist. He gained his early professional experience while working in Biharnagybajom, the oil center of the Great Plain (Nagyalföld), where he became Head Geologist in 1952. He became Chief Geologist for the Great Plains Region in 1954, with headquarters located in Szolnok and Abony. His advancement was achieved without ever having been a member of the Communist Party. On 23 October 1956, the day the Hungarian Revolution broke out, he was in Budapest, where he became a participant in the historical events and joined the revolutionary activities. He was elected President to the Workers' Council in the oil industry for the Great Plains Region and, on 20 November, he was elected Co-president of the Workers' Council of the National Oil Industry. Being on the list of those to be arrested, he fled with his family to the West, following the brutal crushing of the Revolution by Soviet troops. After a short stay in Austria, he moved to London, where he soon became employed by the Geophysical Service Inc. of Texas and worked in Libya, Iraq and Iran. At the end of 1957, he moved to Regina, Canada, and later to Calgary, always working within the oil industry as a leading geologist and a consultant. While he was in London the Hungarian Freedom Fighters World Federation was founded by Lajos (Louis) Dálnoki Veress. István (Stephen). Magas was one of its founding members and later its President (1984-2000). He was a leading figure in many Hungarian organizations. Some prominent ones are: The North American Coordinating Committee, (under his presidency the Human Rights Declaration was passed and the families of the executed revolutionaries gained access to their graves), Hungarian Veterans' Association, Széchenyi Society, East & Middle European Congress, Saint László (Ladislav) Order, etc. The town of Abony, in 2003, placed a memorial plaque for “István Magas - The Revolutionary”. An annual footrace, called “Futabony”, is held to remember him and the Hungarian Freedom Fight of 1956. – B: 7103, 1913, T: 7456.→Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy.

Magasházi, Ödön (Edmund) (? , 1884 - Budapest, 4 February 1950) – Corporate Director. During and following World War II, he served as Technical Director for the Weiss Manfred Works, Budapest. The workers of Csepel (the southern industrial part of Budapest), under his leadership, started the rebuilding of the W.M. plants. The Military Police arrested and charged him under the pretext of espionage and supplying of information early in 1949; he was sentenced to death and was executed in the courtyard of the military prison on Margaret Boulevard in Budapest. He was one of the most qualified Hungarian technology specialists. His son, Ádám (Adam) Magasházi organized a Resistance Group with his friends in Csepel, protesting the alleged disloyalty of his father. They were captured and charged; but since most of them were under age (under 19) at the time of sentencing in August 1951, they were only sentenced to life imprisonment. However, on their 20th birthday they were sentenced to death and were executed in the transit prison in June 1952. – B: 1020, T: 7456.

Magass, Miklós (Nicholas) (Igló, now Spišská Nová Ves, Slovakia, 16 March 1913 - Budapest, 14 July 1987) – Roman Catholic Priest. After his Theological studies he was ordained in the Esztergom Archdiocese on 20 July 1937. He was Chaplain in Sárissáp and in Budapest, and also taught religion there (1937-1938). In the meantime, he obtained a Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Budapest (1938). Between 1938 and 1943 he was Military Chaplain assigned to the 2nd Hungarian Army on the Eastern Front. He witnessed the Hungarian military tragedy at the River Don in February of 1943. During his leave in Budapest in the spring of 1944, he participated in the Resistance Movement rescuing persecuted Jews. After the War he was Chaplain in Tatabánya (1946-1955); at St Anna Church in the inner city of Budapest (1955-1957); at St Peter and Paul Church of Óbuda (1957-1987). Dr. Magass played a significant role in the return of the Hungarian Holy Crown in 1978 from the United States, where it was kept in Fort Knox since 1945. With the mediation of the Vatican, diplomatic negotiations started on this issue between the USA and the Hungarian government. Dr. Magass, at that time Professor of Church Law at the Seminary of Esztergom, was charged by the Hungarian side to establish a diplomatic link as a traveling emissary. His American counterpart was also a Catholic priest and they met several times in the Vatican, also receiving papal audiences. Both of them received a golden cross with corpus from the Pope. The Holy Crown of Hungary was returned to Hungary on 7 January 1978. The US secretary of State, Cyrus Vance formally handed it over in the Main Hall of the Parliament in Budapest. – B: 0945, 1896, T: 7103, 7456.→Don Bend, Battle of the; Haraszti, Sándor; Holy Crown, Hungarian; Holy Crown of Hungary, return of.

Magda, Pál (Paul) (Rozsnyó, now Roznava, Slovakia, 29 June 1770 - Nyíregyháza, 23 July 1841) – Statistician, sociologist. He studied at the Lutheran High Schools of Rozsnyó, Késmárk (now Kežmarok, Slovakia), and Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). From 1792 to 1794 he studied at the University of Jena, where Friedrich Schiller impressed him. From 1797 he taught in Csetnek, later at the high schools of Sajógömör (now Gemer, Slovakia), Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia), and Besztercebánya (now Banská-Bystrica, Slovakia). He became Vice-Chancellor at Teschen in Silesia. From 1814 he taught at the Lutheran College of Sopron. From 1822 he was Principal in the Archbishopial High School of Kalocsa; from 1825 he taught at Sárospatak, and from 1834 at Szarvas. He was persecuted by the authorities due to his progressive views. He was free from the prejudices of the nobility's complacency; he openly pointed out their mistakes. He criticized the neglected state of public schools and of general education and he emphasized the educational responsibility of the state. His main work is The Most Recent Statistical and Geographical Description of Hungary and the Military Frontier Region (Magyarországnak és a határőrző katonaság vidékeinek legujabb statistikai és geographiai leírása) (Pest, 1819). This is the first statistical work in Hungarian. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Learned Society. – B: 1257, 1134, 1160, T: 7456.

Magellan Expedition – The Portuguese Fernão de Magalhães (1480-1521) entered into the service of the Spanish King Charles V, and was entrusted with the task of looking for the Spice Islands, sailing westward. The fleet consisted of five ships: the Conception, San Antonio, Santiago, Trinidad and Victoria. The artillery commander of the Conception was the Hungarian János (John) Varga, the first Hungarian to land in South America. The ships departed from Seville on 13 August 1519 and, after sailing along the east coast of South America, dropped anchors at a section of the coast probably at the present-day Rio de Janeiro. Then sailing on in 1520, they cut across the passage between Tierra del Fuego and Patagonia, later on named Magellan Strait, into the Pacific Ocean. During the course of the voyage the crew of three of the ships unsuccessfully mutinied. Reaching the Philippines, Magellan was killed in a battle. Of the original fleet of five ships only the Victoria returned on 6 September 1522, with 18 members of the original crew of 237. Later, 13 crewmembers were reported from the Cape Verde Islands, where the Portuguese held them prisoners. The route of the expedition proved that the Earth is not flat but round and that the American Continent as well as the Pacific Ocean are independent bodies; it also made these navigators realize that around-the-world traveling needed constant time adjustment. János Varga was probably the confidant of Count Erdődy who, under the pen-name Maximilianus Transsylvanicus, described the story of the expedition in a letter addressed to the Archbishop of Salzburg on the basis of Varga's report, two weeks after his return. This was an account of the first round-the-world trip ever carried out by man. – B: 1020, 1153, T: 7456.

Magi (Mágusok, Sorcerers) – (1) They were priests, symbolized by the snake of the monotheistic, fire-venerating Mazdaism and later of Zoroastrianism. Besides performing offerings and other religious activities, they functioned as healers, astrologers and dream readers. They believed in their magical powers. The “Magi religion” (mágus vallás) is often mentioned in ancient Oriental sources in connection with the Magyars and their neighbors. They practiced Mazdaism, while some also pursued Zoroastrianism. The magi priests survived the era of King István (St. Stephen) I (997-1038) and, in 1046, János (John), son of Vata, recruited a large number of sorcerers and magi priests against King Péter (2) Later, magicians and sorcerers were called Magi. – B: 1078, 1138, 1020, T: 3240.

Maglód Clan – According to Anonymus, the Chronicler (12/13 century), the Maglód Clan originated from Gyula (Julius) Erdőelvi Tétény. There are no official documents about this clan but a number of place-names evoke it. – B: 0942, T: 7676.→Anonymus.

Magna Hungaria – De Facto Ungrie Magne or Ungaria Magna, the Latin name of the earlier supposed original “Hungarian homeland” as Friar Julianus mentions it. In the Middle Ages “magna” also meant “great” or “old”. Between 300 and 400 AD the large movement of peoples on the Steppes – induced by the Huns – pushed several ethnic groups and fractions of various ethnic groups to the regions of the Mid-Volga, the Bjelaya and Kama rivers. Magna Hungaria was located somewhere between the bend of the River Volga and the Ural Mountains. With the death of Krobetas, the Turkic Empire dissolved around 650. At first the Onogurs remained in the area between the Sea of Azov and the Kuban Region; then, around 670, they returned to Pannonia and joined the Várkonyis. However one of the tribes stayed behind and joined the Bulgars, then moved to the region of the Kama Balkhi in 934. They are referred to as Badzsir (Baskhir) and they numbered about 2000. The inhabitants of Magna Hungaria were involved in agriculture. They grew barley, oats and millet, and raised horses and sheep. Since Bolgar and Cumanian refugees from the East brought information that, between the River Volga and the Ural Mountains, there lived a large Hungarian group, King Béla IV (1235-1270) sent out four Dominican friars: Ottó, Szirák, Márton and Benedek in search of them. Of the four, only one, Otto, returned with news that he had found them but, before he could give a detailed account of his discovery, he died of an illness he contracted on his journey. In 1235 the King dispatched another group of four Dominicans to find them again. Friar Julianus found them and, on his return, reported that he lived among the Hungarians along the Volga for weeks and stated that they spoke authentic Hungarian. He also maintained that they were well-trained militarily and managed to repel several Mongol attacks. By identifying the Volga-Kama region as the location of the original Hungarian homeland, he called it Magna Hungaria. King Béla IV sent Julianus back to invite them to settle in the Carpathian Basin. However, Julianus arrived too late; the Mongol armies of Batu Khan had swept over them in 1234, burned their cities and forcibly enlisted the surviving warriors. It was believed that some of them managed to escape to the region of the Caucasus. According to some sources, since the Mongols could not defeat them, they made a treaty of alliance with the Hungarian group. Several historians claim, among them Ede (Edward) Pauler, that today’s Baskhirs are descendants of those inhabitants of Magna Hungaria, who joined the Mongols and were subsequently assimilated by them. – B: 1078, 1230, 1153, 1666, 0631, T: 7665.→Migration of Early Hungarians; Illustrated Chronicle; Julianus, Friar; Béla IV, King.

Magnus – A title as indicated in the Illuminated (Képes) Chronicle, Pozsonyi Chronicle, the Ranzanus Chronicle, the Thuróczi Chronicle, and a couple of other documents; even on a medallion, there is a reference to Ruling Prince, later King Géza-István (Géza Stephen) (971-997) by this title. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7658.→Illuminated Chronicle, Vienna.

Magor – (1) Hungarian (Magyar). The legendary father of the Hungarian Nation who, with his brother Hunor, was the son of a famous hunter, the giant Nimrod; also known as Ménrót and Enéh. The association of the Magyars with Magor, as their forefather is close and direct, while the relationship with Hunor is through the Hun legends. Other sources maintain that Magor is but the distortion of the name Magog. Anonymus, the Chronicler, calls Magog the forefather of the Hungarians. (2) Muageris (Magor) and his brother Gorda, who lived in the 6th century, were the descendants of Kutigur. The offspring of Muageris was Kuvrat (605-665), who rescued the Onogur-Bolgar Empire from Avar control. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 3240. → Anonymus; Madsar; Madzsars.

Magura – It is the name of several mountain ranges and mountains in the Carpathian Mountain Range: (1) Árva Magura, (2) Liptó Magura, and (3) Szepes Magura are all in Upper Hungary, now Slovakia. The etymology of the word is little known and controversial. (1) The word magura may possibly be the original Hungarian word for lion. It is conceivable that it was for reasons of magic that the Hungarians (Magyars) named some rather high mountains in the Northern Carpathians magura; (2) curiously enough, Magura in the Sumerian language also meant lion, regarding the lion as a guard-dog. It could also mean simply magas = high. – B: 1020, T: 7456.

“Magyar”, the Name as Designation – The name Magyar appears in the northern Caucasus and the Old East in such versions as Madzheri, Magyeri, Materi, Madsar, etc; it frequently appeared in names of peoples, mountains, rivers and settlements; on 16th century maps it is the name of the Black Sea as Mare Hungaricus. In the Old East the use of this word in written documents goes back to the times before Christ. Under the pressure of the Khazars, the people of Árpád left Lebedia and settled down in Etelköz (650-888). Here the Sabirs broke away and as a result, the Megyer tribe became the leader of the alliance. From this time on the “Magyar” name became established. – B: 1274, 1668, 1020, T: 7684. → Lebedia; Etelköz; Magor; Madsar.

Magyar, Adorján (Adrian) (Budapest, 4 October 1887 - Zelenika, Yugoslavia, 28 September 1978) – Painter, historian (ancient history). He learned his artistic skills in his uncle's, Viktor Madarász's studio in Budapest, and then completed his sculpting studies in Rome and Florence, Italy. For years, he carried out folklore research in remote parts of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and collected rich materials. In the meantime, he learned various local Szekler and Palóc dialects. With respect to the origins of the Magyars, he alleged that they did not arrive with Prince Árpád from Asia, but that they were the original inhabitants and founders of a particular culture in the Carpathian Basin. Modern sciences (e.g. archeology, anthropology, zoology, botany, linguistics etc.) give some support to his hypothesis. The public notary of Castelnuovo (now Herceg-Novi, Montenegro) authenticated his related manuscript of 1911-1912, on 3 June 1914, under No. 2752. He wrote more than 200 articles and studies. Some of his works are: Questions (Kérdések) (1930), The Golden Mirror of Conscience (A Lelkiismeret Aranytükre) (1937) (Switzerland 1975); Ancient Hungarian Runic Writing (Ősmagyar rovásírás) (USA, 1961, 1962); Hungarian Origin of the Nibelungen Lied (Nibelung ének magyar eredete) (1963); My Theory (Elméletem) (Sweden 1969); Gold Ball (Goldkugel), folktales (Germany, 1970); About the Miraculous Stag (A csodaszarvasról) (1921, 1972); The Miraculous Stag (A csodaszarvas) (1991,1997); My Theory on Our Ancient Culture (Elméletem ősműveltségünkről) (Switzerland, 1978); The Hungarian Architectural Style (A magyar építőízlés) (1990); The Lyrical Beauty of Our Ancient Culture (Ősműveltségünk költői szépsége) (1993), and The Hungarian Language (A magyar nyelv) (1996). His major work is The Ancient Culture (Az Ősműveltség) (1995, 1999). Besides his enormous classical knowledge, he spoke nine languages, including Latin. His works were published and distributed mainly in the western world but after 1990, in Hungary as well. There is now an Adorján Magyar Society in Hungary. – B: 0912, T: 7103.→Madarász, Viktor; László, Gyula; Hungarian Runic Script.

Magyar, Antal (Anthony) Blessed, O.F.M. (Hungary ? - Foligno 13 May 1398) – Monk. He went to Rome on a pilgrimage, where he entered the Franciscan Order as a tertiary. He traveled to Assisi, but became ill in Foligno, where he was cared for at the Trinity Hospital and was healed. According to his vows, he remained with the hospital as an attendant, where he cared for the destitute and the elderly. He also gathered abandoned children and educated them. His relics are at the main altar of the hospital church. – B: 0945, 1085, T: 7103.

Magyar, Balázs (Blaise) (? – died in 1490) – Military commander. He was the father of Benigna Magyar. He started his military career under János (John) Hunyadi. During the reign of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490) he participated in the campaign against the Hussites and later against the Czechs in northern Hungary. In 1462, he was captain of Felvidék (Upland) (the northern, mountainous part of the former Hungarian Kingdom, now Slovakia) and from 1470, he was leader of the defense of the southern frontiers. For two periods (1470-1472 and 1473-1474), he was a Croatian-Slavonian Ban (banus) and, from 1473 to 1475, a Transylvanian Voivode and, as such, he gave assistance to the Moldovan voivode against the Ottoman Turks. In 1479, he occupied the island of Veglia in the Adriatic Sea but he could not hold onto it, against the Venetian fleet. In 1480, King Mátyás I, (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490) sent him with a smaller army to retake Otranto occupied by the Turks; he succeeded in this mission. He became Croatian-Slavonian ban again in 1482 and 1483. He apparently withdrew from public life in his retirement. For his former services, King Mátyás gave him large landed estates, particularly in Transdanubia and in the Trencsén (now Trenčín, Slovakia) area. His daughter Benigna and her first husband, Pál (Paul) Kinizsi, an army commander of the King, inherited his estates. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Hunyadi, János; Mátyás I, King; Magyar, Benigna.

Magyar, Bálint (Valentine) (? - Szigliget, April 1573) – Captain of border fortresses. He was a descendant of an impoverished noble family from County Zala, whose family friend was the Palatine Tamás (Thomas) Nádasdy. From 1545 he was Captain of the forts of Szigliget and Fonyód, with some short interruptions, until his death. The Turks always wanted to conquer the fortress of Fonyód, but never succeeded in Bálint Magyar's lifetime. In 1551 he was Second Lieutenant for the Nádasdy's Banderium in the Transylvanian campaign, and took part in the siege of Lippa. In 1552 he was briefly Captain of the town of Pápa, later that of Kanizsa. His ceaseless forays and arbitrary measures against the Turks got him in legal trouble with the Pasha of Buda and the nobility of the Lake Balaton regions; but Nádasdy always defended and saved him. He is regarded as one of the most important military commanders against the Turks in the mid-16th century. A school in Fonyód bears his name. – B: 0883, 1773, T: 7456.→ Magyar, Benigna.

Magyar, Benigna (? - died in 1526) – Daughter of Balázs (Blaise) Magyar. She married three times. Her first husband was Pál (Paul) Kinizsi. They were married between 1484 and 1492. Her second husband was Mark Kamicsáni Mislenovics (died 1509); and her third husband was Gergely (Gregory) Vázsonyi Kereki (died 1519). She had her third husband assassinated and lost her properties, although King Louis II (1516-1526) pardoned her. She inherited large properties from her father (died 1490) and from her first husband (died on 20 November 1494). Two prayer books in Hungarian (called the Festetics and Czech Codices) were prepared for the Pauline monastery of Nagyvázsony on her orders, and they are valuable literary and linguistic relics. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Magyar, Balázs; Kinizsi, Pál; Festetics Codex; Czech Codex.

Magyar Clan – (1) The Uzbek Magyar clan was a fragment of the Bashkir Hungarians conquered by the Tartars. The Uzbek clan joined Sejban's 200 soldiers, when they occupied Bokhara in 1500. (2) Even in the 20th century there was a Madjar Clan scattered in the central part of Kazakhstan. (3) According to Klaproth, the clan is one of the tribes of the Caucasian Kubecs (Kubacsi) peoples, the Madzsar or Manzsar. (4) According to King Béla IV's documents dated 1240, the tribe was one among the clans of the Árpád Dynasty in the County of Pozsony. They settled in the Danube Island of Csallóköz (now Žitný ostrov, Slovakia). – B: 1078, T: 7676.

Magyar, Imre (Emeric) (Losonc, now Lučenec, Slovakia, 14 October 1910 - Budapest, 25 May 1984) – Physician, writer. He pursued his higher studies in Budapest, where he obtained a Medical Degree in 1934. He started his medical practice at the Teaching Hospital of the University of Budapest and, during World War II, he worked in a private hospital; later he was enlisted to do forced labor on the Russian front. From 1945 he was a demonstrator in Hospital No. I, Budapest; in 1948 he became an honorary lecturer and, in 1952, a candidate. From 1960 to 1965 he was a professor in the No. 1 Faculty of the Institute of Continuing Medical studies (Orvosi Továbbképző Intézet – OTKI), which he also headed between 1962 and 1965. From 1965 to 1980 he was professor and Head of the Semmelweis Medical University, Budapest. He was a well-known expert in every branch of internal medicine and pathology. He wrote several hundred papers on this subject; particularly well known is his work is The Fundamentals of Internal Medicine, vols. i-iii (A belgyógyászat alapvonalai I-III), (1977, with 20 editions), co-authored with Gyula (Julius) Petrányi. He was President of a number of medical societies, including several abroad. His works include Ruth, novel (1971); Judit, novel (1973); Erkrankungen der Leber und der Gallenwege (I-II) (1961); Internal Medicine in Short (Rövid belgyógyászat) (1975); The Physician and the Patient (Az orvos és a beteg) (1983), and The Diseases of the Liver, the Gall-bladder and the Pancreas (A máj, az epeutak és a hasnyálmirigy betegségei) (1985). He received the Ignác Semmelweis Memorial Medal. A hospital in Ajka bears his name. – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7456.

Magyar, László (Ladislav) (Szombathely, 13 November 1818 - Ponto de Cujo, Benguela, 9 November 1864) – World traveler, explorer, a pioneer of African research. He went to school in Dunaföldvár, Kalocsa, Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia) completing his studies at the Naval Academy of Fiume (now Rijeka, Croatia). As an imperial midshipman, he sailed to South America; then, forsaking his service, he entered the Spanish Army, and later, the Argentinean Army as a naval officer. In the war with Uruguay, he became a prisoner and was sentenced to death. However, on the intervention of a French ship captain, he was freed. It was at this time that the plan of a South American expedition was developing in his mind. For that, he asked and expected assistance only from the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He already spoke not only Spanish and Portuguese but also the two most widespread Indian languages. However, the Academy did not lend him its support. As a naval officer, he sailed along the western coast of Africa. He explored the Zaire River, and kept a diary on his two-month long travel. Soon afterwards he moved to the Kingdom of Bihé that had a more pleasant climate. The King offered him his daughter, Princess Ozora. They were married in 1849, and her armed bodyguards and numerous slaves secured his undisturbed study trips. During these geographic and ethnographic field trips, he reached areas yet unseen by Europeans. He found the source of the River Congo and provided descriptions and maps on the areas he traveled in. He sent the first volume of his reports to the Hungarian Academy of Sciences that elected him correspondent in 1858. His work showed him as an exceptionally dedicated and high-level scientist of his time. His native African father-in-law was killed during an armed coup d'état in 1857. Magyar had to flee from Bihé; he entered the service of the Portuguese and founded a Portuguese settlement around the Bay of Lucira, where he lived as a merchant. At this place and during these years, he finished the 2nd and 3rd volumes of his reports. He died shortly afterwards at the age of 46. His irreplaceable documents from Lucira were destroyed in a fire at the custodian's house, where his legacy was kept. The surviving Volume I. is priceless for African research. He was one of the most outstanding Africa explorers. His descendants are still in Angola; schools and suburbs of towns are named after him and his one-time dwelling is surrounded with reverence. – B: 0942, 1134, 0883, 1288, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count Sámuel (2); Kittenberger, Kálmán; Almásy, László Ede.

Magyar, Pál (Paul) (Cegléd, 27 March 1895 - Sopron, 18 April 1969) – Forestry engineer. He began his higher studies at the Mining and Forestry Academy at Selmechánya (or Schemnitz, now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia), but they were interrupted by military service in World War I, and the four years he spent as a prisoner of war. He continued his studies in Selmechánya between 1918 and 1920. This time, they were interrupted by the Peace Dictate of Trianon (1920), whereby Selmechánya was ceded to the newly created successor state of Czechoslovakia. Hence, all the teaching staff, students and equipment were hurriedly relocated to Sopron (that remained in Hungary as a result of a plebiscite), thus forming part of the University of Western Hungary, established after the war and the Peace Treaty. Finally, he obtained his Forestry Engineering Degree from Sopron in 1920. He started to work as an assistant forestry engineer in 1922. Originally from a large peasant family of the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld), he requested to be posted there, where he started to study the possibilities of re-forestation of areas (especially in the Danube-Tisza Interfluve) of sandy and alkaline soil. From 1924 to 1927, he was entrusted with the establishment of a Research Institute of Alkaline Soil at Püspökladány (near the Hortobágy National Park, southwest of Debrecen), and became its Director. Now it is called Pál Magyar Research Institute (Magyar Pál Kutató Intézet), where his bust was unveiled in 1976. From 1930 he was Director of the Forestry Research Institute of Sopron, where he worked out the system of determining soil quality on basis of plant-association, still used at present; this also became the topic of his doctoral thesis. (1930). From 1938 he was chief forestry engineer, then Forestry Commissioner. After undergoing serious brain surgery in Berlin in 1943, he was appointed to the Chair of Forest Cultivation and Afforestation of plains at the University of Sopron in 1947. He lost this position for political reasons in 1951, during the dark era of Communist rule in Hungary. Thereafter, he worked at the Budapest Center of the Forestry Science Institute and later, until his death, at the Institute's Sopron experimental research station. He made several study trips abroad. In recognition of his scientific work, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences awarded him the title of Doctor of Biological Sciences in 1952. He was an outstanding scholar in the field of Forestry Plant Geography, especially plant ecology and enology of sandy and alkali soil areas. He founded the forestry habitat and forest-typological studies and developed their practice. His major work is Afforestation of the Plains (Alföldfásítás) (vols. i-ii, 1960-1961), to this day the basic handbook for specialists in afforestation of sandy and soda soils. In his retirement he was asked to write book reviews and appraisals or critiques of doctoral dissertations. He died after a short illness, at age 73. He received the Albert Bedő memorial medal (1967), and he was named posthumously Honorary Freeman of Sopron. As a final phase of the Forestry Faculty saga, during the 1956 Revolution in Hungary, the entire Faculty of Forestry of Sopron University, with 20 teaching staff and 200 students emigrated to Canada to join the University of British Columbia, Vancouver, where they formed the so-called Sopron Division, thus completing the nearly 200-year-long saga that started in Selmecbánya (established by Maria Theresa in 1763) via the 1920 Trianon Peace Treaty in Sopron, and finally ended in British Columbia in 1956. – B: 0883, 7456, T: 7456.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Sopron Division.

Magyar, Pál, Blessed O.P. (Paul) (Paulus Hungarus) (13th century) – A Hungarian monastic. He was Professor of Canon Law at the University of Bologna in the 1210s. In 1218 he became a member of the Dominican Order. Around 1220 he wrote the book Summa de paenitentia. Forty known copies of this manuscript can be found in different European libraries. In 1221 he was the Prior of the Dominicans of Bologna. Later, he returned to Hungary with four of his fellow monks and established the Dominican Order in Hungary. He set out for missionary work among the Cumans and Tartars. In 1241 he suffered martyrdom by the invading Tartars at Jászvásár, Moldova (now Iasi, Romania). – B: 1085, 1091, T: 7103.

Magyar, Zoltán (Budapest, 13 December 1953 - ) – Gymnast, veterinarian. He did his higher studies at the Academy of Physical Education, Budapest (1976-1979), then at the Veterinary School of the University of Budapest (1980-1985). From 1968 to 1980, he was competing for the Ferencváros Gymnastic Club (Ferencvárosi Torna Club), Budapest. He was champion twenty times. His sport career includes: two Summer Olympic Games, three World, three European and two World Cup titles. He won the Olympic Gold Medal in 1976, and 1980; World Championships: Gold Medal in 1974, 1978 and 1979; European championships: Gold Medal in 1973, 1975, and 1977, and World Cup: Gold Medal in 1975, and 1978. He was Hungarian Sportsman of the Year in 1974, 1978, and 1980. He retired following the 1980 Summer Olympic Games. Between 1986 and 1989 he was Vice-President of the Hungarian Olympic Committee (Magyar Olimpiai Bizottság – MOB), and he has been Honorary President of the Hungarian National Gymnastic Clubs' Alliance (Magyar Országos Tornászegyletek Szövetsége) since 2001. He received the Hungarian Heritage Prize (1997). – B: 0878, 1030, 1050, T: 7103.

Magyari, István (Stephen) (? - Sárvár, 1605) – Pastor of the Lutheran Church, polemist and writer. He participated in the siege of Esztergom in 1594. He studied at Wittenberg. From 1599 he was Count Ferenc (Francis) Nádasdy's Court Chaplain at Sárvár; from 1600 Dean of Sárvár. In his work The Causes of all the Decay of Countries (Az országokban való soc romlásoknac okairól) (1602), he attempted to explain Hungary's downfall from a Protestant theological viewpoint: the Turkish occupation was God's punishment for mankind turning away from God, the main blame for this was laid on the Catholics, and he used excerpts from the writings of Aventinus and Erasmus. He also voiced complaints against the people exploiting belligerent parties, the run-down conditions and the yearning for peace. The Archbishop of Esztergom, Cardinal Péter (Peter) Pázmány, answered his work at the request of the Bishop of Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia), Ferenc (Francis) Forgách. It resulted in the rise of the literature of Hungarian religious polemics. Cardinal Pázmány first became widely known in public circles by his answer to Magyari. Magyari also translated the famous consolatory booklet of the Wittenberg theologian Joachim Beust. His other works are Hand Booklet on Mastering Death Well and Happily (Kézbeli könyvecske az jól és boldogul való meghalásnak mesterségéről) (1600), and Funeral Oratation at Nádasdy's Burial (Nádasdy temetésén elmondott beszéd), 1604. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456. → Pázmány, Péter.

Magyaródy, Szabolcs (Szolnok, 1924 -) – Engineer, historian, publisher. His family moved to Budapest where he completed his high school studies. He worked in the family business. After the Communist transformation of society started in 1949 with nationalization, arrests and internment, he moved to Canada in 1951, and worked as an electrician, then as a mechanic. He took courses in Accounting at McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario. He worked as draftsman, later as sales engineer, then project engineer. He retired in 1987. However, he is an active commanding officer of the Veteran Hungarian Boy Scouts Abroad, and leader of the Mátyás (Matthias) Hunyady Veteran Boy Scouts' Workshop in Hamilton. They publish Hungarian history books and CDs in English, and run an extensive Hungarian Library in English at: www.corvinuslibrary.com website. – B: 1035, T: 7103. → Press of the Hungarian émigrés.

Magyars' Alliance (Magyarok Szövetsége – MSZ) – It had its beginnings at the Asian kindred folks' – Madjars - Magyars – Program and Meeting held at Bösztörpuszta near the town of Kunszentmiklós in August 2008, during the VII. Hungarian World Congress (VII. Magyar Világ Kongresszus). More than 70,000 took part in the event. It resulted in the formation of the Börzsöny National Council (Börzsönyi Nemzeti Tanács), in which 232 organizations participated. On 28 November 2008, at the Kunszentmiklós Conference, they adopted their present name: Magyars' Alliance. The unfurling of the Flag ceremony took place on 21 March 2009, on Heroes' Square in Budapest, during which they initiated the founding of the Magyars' Alliance as a national civil movement. The Alliance's aims were the creation of a genuine political change and the revitalization and survival of the Hungarian nation. For this purpose they drafted an all-encompassing program based on the historic Hungarian Constitution of 1222 (Golden Bull – Aranybulla) and on the principles of the Holy Crown Doctrine. The members of the Alliance consist of the general public and members of social organizations who were exasperated with the ineptitude of the political "elite" steering the nation's future in the wrong direction. The Magyars' Alliance wishes to remain a civil movement rather than become a political party. The Alliance was already a stronger civil force in number at its conception than the entire membership of the parliamentary representatives. The Alliance elected as its leader Major Ferenc Vukics, Assistant Professor at the Miklós Zrinyi Military College, where he excelled in the instruction of the ancient Hungarian martial art style, the "Baranta". In 2007 Vukics took part in an expedition to the kindred Uyghur people, who live in the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region in the Peoples' Republic of China. In one year the Alliance established 1200 local organizations in Hungary, some even outside the country. The 21-23 August 2009, "Kurultaj" or "Meeting" held at Böjtörpuszta was attended by 250,000 people not only from Hungary, but also from Hungarian-populated regions of the Carpathian Basin. At this meeting a Proclamation was issued in the name of the Alliance calling upon the Head of State, the Parliament and the Government to restore constitutional order by 23 October 2009, otherwise the Alliance will proclaim civil disobedience. – B: 2010, T: 7617.→Holy Crown Doctrine; Golden Bull; Uyghurs.

Magyary-Kossa, Gyula (Julius) (Debrecen, 8 January 1865 - Budapest, 21 June 1944) – Physician, pharmacologist, medical historian. He completed his medical studies at the Medical School of the University of Budapest in 1888. The following year, he became a Demonstrator, and later Assistant Lecturer in the Department of Pharmacology. In 1894 he became an honorary lecturer in Toxicology and, from 1896, full Professor of Botany and Pharmacology at the Veterinary School of the University of Budapest. He carried out research on the effect of morphine and poisonous plants, the diagnostics of poisonings, and the effectiveness of pharmaceuticals. He also carried out fundamental medical historical research, his source-supplying volumes, the Hungarian Medical Memorials, vols. i-iv and v, (Magyar orvosi emlékek I-IV) (1929-1940), and Vol. V (1996), served as the basis for later research work; his other works are: The Effect and Medical Use of the Domestic Medicinal Plants (A hazai gyógynövények hatása és orvosi használata) (1926); Ungarische medizinische Erinnerungen (1935), and On Old Hungarian Midwives (Régi magyar bábákról) (1938). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1920). – B: 1730, 1078, T: 7456.

Magyi Codex – A manuscript collection of miscellaneous subjects written between 1476 and 1490. Its original owner was János (John) Magyi, a cleric at the Church District of Eger and, in 1476, a writer to the Secretary of Óbuda's Chapter. The quarto size Codex is comprises 28 booklets and 536 pages. It also contains religious script fragments, quotations from classical authors, some improper verses by nameless poets, different Hungarian and Latin notes, as well as János Magyi's Regula Juris in verse form written in 1484, an important language relic. For a period of time, this Codex was erroneously attributed to Tamás (Thomas) Nyirkállói. – B: 1150, T: 3240.→Codex Literature.

Mahler, Gustav (Kalischt, now Kalište, Bohemia, 7 July 1860 - Vienna, 18 May 1911) – Composer, conductor. Now celebrated for his symphonies and songs, he was one of the most important conductors of his day. He studied in Vienna with Fuchs and Krenn, and first held positions in Kassel (1883-1885), Prague (1885-1886), and Leipzig (1886-1888). In Leipzig (1888), he successfully performed Weber's unfinished Die drei Pintos. From 1888 to 1891, he was Conductor and Director of the Budapest Opera House, producing excellent performances, including the Ring of the Nibelung Cycle by Richard Wagner, then conducted the Hamburg Opera (1891-1897). During his years as Director of the Vienna Court Opera (Hofoper, 1897-1907), he introduced a new approach to the presentations of Mozart and Wagner operas, adding to his repertoire even modern radicals like Schönberg. His harsh rehearsal methods and dealings with musicians, his personal life, his ten-year marriage to Alma Schindler (which nearly led to divorce), his Jewish background (though formally he converted to Roman Catholicism), all made him a figure of controversy in Vienna's anti-Semitic world. When his five-year old daughter died, he had a psychoanalytical discussion about his married life with Sigmund Freud. To escape from the Viennese environment he went to New York as a guest conductor. Soon he was celebrated everywhere as the greatest conductor of the early 20th century; he set conducting standards that have become legendary. His Metropolitan debut in Tristan und Isolde on 1 January 1908 was praised as "strikingly vital", though some found his interpretations self-indulgent. He also directed Don Giovanni, Fidelio, Figaro, Walküre, Siegfried, Bartered Bride and Queen of Spades. He wrote ten symphonies; the last one is incomplete. Among them are the Symphony No. 1 (The Titan) (1888), No. 2 (Resurrection) (1894), No. 5 (The Giant) (1902), No. 8 (Symphony of a Thousand) (1910). Following Bruckner in the Viennese symphonic tradition, Mahler added folk elements and expanded the form in length, emotional contrast and orchestra size. He also wrote songs and song cycles. The song cycles, mostly with orchestral accompaniment, include The Song of the Earth (Das Lied von der Erde) (1907-1908), an orchestral song cycle, Songs of a Wayfarer (Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen) (1883-1885), Songs on the Death of Children (Kindertotenlieder) (1901-1904) and Des Knaben Wunderhorn (The Youth's Magic Horn) (1888). His health failed (blood infection), and he returned to Europe in February 1911, seeking medical help, but none was possible and he died the same year. – B: 1068, 1693, 1694, T: 7456.

Majláth, Julia (Budapest, 20 January 1921 - Budapest, 11 October 1976) – Composer. In 1940, due to her infantile paralysis (Polio) she had to discontinue her piano studies. She studied musical composition under the direction of Rezső (Rudolph) Sugár and Rezső Kókai in the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. In 1948, and again in 1968, she won the hit competition of the Hungarian Radio. She was a successful composer of light music. In addition to her radio operetta, All Hands Aboard (Mindenki a fedélzetre), some of her dance songs achieved popularity, such as the Gingerbread (Mézeskalács); The Carts are Taking Hay (Szénát hordanak a szekerek), and I Won't Wait until Tomorrow (Nem várok holnapig). She composed the music for László Tabi's comedy The Country is Playing Sports (Sportol az ország). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456. → Tabi, László; Mikes, Éva.

Major, Máté (Matthew) (Baja, 3 August 1904 - Budapest, 14 April 1986) – Architect, art historian. He obtained his Degree in Architecture at the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1927 to 1936 he worked in private positions, and independently designed a number of well-known apartment blocks in Budapest. Between 1936 and 1944 he was Engineer, then Chief Engineer of the National Institution of Community Insurance (Országos Társadalombiztosítási Intézet – OTI). From 1946 to 1949 he held leading positions at different ministries. Between 1949 and 1971 he chaired the Committee of Building History at the Budapest Polytechnic, dealing with the more recent basic principles and objectives of architecture, as well as the architectural trends of the 20th century. Between 1946 and 1951 he was Editor for several architectural journals. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1949, ordinary 1960). His works include History of Architecture vols. i,ii,iii (Építészettörténet, I-III) (1954-1960), and The New World of Architecture (Építészet új világa) (1969). He received the Kossuth Prize (1949), the Ybl Prize (1960), and the Herder Prize (1977). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Major, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Verbász, now Vrbas, Serbia, 13 June 1931 - ) – Writer. He studied in Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia), where he obtained a Degree from the Teachers' Training College of Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia). From 1950 he was a correspondent for the weekly paper, The Voice of Youth (Ifjúság Szava) and, from 1957 to 1962, he was Editor-in-Chief for the paper, Bridge (Híd). From 1962 he edited the paper Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó), and later became Editor for the Publishing Firm, Forum Publishers (Forum Könyvkiadó). Until 1988 he also filled leading political posts. In 1989, he was expelled from the Yugoslav Communist Council. His literary career began with neo-realistic short stories. His leading heroes are gray everyday figures who are turned into real individuals through the psychological illumination of the author. His prose often dwells on problems of existence and philosophy, while, in his essays, he deals with social and political questions. His works include Waves (Hullámok), novel (1969); Evening Hours (Esti órák), essays (1968), and Dialogue with Reality (Párbeszéd a valósággal), studies, articles, interviews (1988). He received the Híd Prize (1959). –B: 1257, 1091, T: 7456.

Major, Ottó (Budapest, 4 April 1924 - Budapest, 22 February 1999) – Writer. He obtained an Arts Degree from the University of Budapest in 1948. He worked chiefly as a journalist. He was one of the founders of the journal, New Moon (Újhold), and correspondent for the magazines, Creation (Alkotás), Contemporary (Kortárs) and Hungarians (Magyarok). In 1946-1947 he was a correspondent for the Illustrated Week (Képes Hét), and People of Kossuth (Kossuth Népe). In 1948-1949 he worked for the editorial office of the paper, Freedom (Szabadság). From 1950 to 1952 he was a freelance writer. Between 1953 and 1964 he was Night Editor for the magazine, Mirror (Tükör) and, from 1964 until his retirement in 1976, Night Editor for the New Mirror (Új Tükör). He continued working and became Cultural Editor and Correspondent for the Pester News (Pesti Hírlap), from 1976 until 1990. He authored a serialized novel: the Hungarian Atlantis (Magyar Atlantisz), consisting of three parts: On the Screen of Times (Idők rostáján) (1955), The Soil Turns Autumnal (Megőszül a föld) (1956), and The Seventh Seal (A hetedik pecsét) (1958), presenting all the changes experienced by the fate of several generations, starting with the historical scene of millennial Hungary (1896), ending with the years of the Second World War (1939-1945), featuring heroes from a great number of different social classes. He also wrote a historical trilogy reaching into antiquity, the Three Apocrypha (Három apokrif) (1970), studying the human desires as they are spread amid the possibilities of historical necessity. He regularly wrote short stories, critiques and studies, some compiled in one volume, such as Playing with the Mirror (Játék a tüükörrel) (1962). He received the Attila József Prize twice (1952, 1956) and the Small Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1994). – B: 1257, 1091, 0878, T: 7456.

Major, Tamás (Thomas) (Újpest, 26 January 1910 - Budapest, 13 April 1986) – Actor, theater manager, director. He completed his studies in 1930 at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and worked first on a scholarship and then as a full member at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In the 1930s he appeared in Trade Union performances. His contact with laborers and Communists shaped him as a revolutionary. He took part in the Resistance Movement during World War II, and he became Director of the National Theater, Budapest, in 1945, and leading that Theater for 18 years. From 1962 he was its main producer. As an actor he started in episode roles and played his first major role in Molière's Tartuffe in 1943. He liked grotesque roles. In comedies he often used rough methods. As a theater producer, he played a significant role in producing Soviet and new Hungarian dramatic works. J. Racine's Andromache and The Litigants (A pereskedők) were his first stage managements. Later, he produced J. Katona's Bánk bán, Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (Szentivánéji álom), and I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). After the World War II, his productions were based on Stanislavsky's work. In later years, he became a follower of Bertold Brecht's art. He enjoyed great success also as a poetry recitalist. From 1947 he was professor at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. He received the Kossuth Prize twice (1948, 1955), and the Merited Artist title (1950). – B: 0871, 1445, T: 7684.

Majtényi, Erik (Mann) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 19 September 1922 - Bucharest, 22 January 1982) – Poet, writer. In his early youth, he earned his living by manual labor. Toward the end of World War II, he found himself in a concentration camp due to his anti-fascist activity. After 1945 he was a journalist; in 1952 he became Editor for the journal Forwards (Előre). He was a member of the editorial board of the paper, True Word (Igaz Szó), in Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Romania), and a correspondent for the paper Banat Writings (Bánsági Írás). His first poems appeared in a poetry anthology Fifty Poems (Ötven vers) in 1950, followed by a series of other poems, concluding with White Bird (Fehér madár) (1967). These political works later on embraced a stringent self-criticism in his volume of poems, One Poem Alone (Egy vers egyedül). He dealt with the ideas and activities of his generation with law-abiding severity, often ironically colored. He translated the works of Romanian writers, among them Eugen Jebeleanu, Emil Isac, Virgil Teodorescu and Maria Banus into Hungarian. His works include an assorted collection of poems in Send-off (Útravaló), 1962) and a collection of articles, Playing Back (Visszajátzás) (1981). He received the State Prize (1954). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Majtényi, Mihály (Michael) (Markovics) (Nagybecskerek, now Zrenjanin, Serbia, 21 July 1901 - Újvidék, now Novi Sad, Serbia, 7 July 1974) – Writer, journalist, translator. After graduating from high school, he worked as a clerk, then as a journalist from 1927 until his retirement in 1973. He worked first in Zenta (now Senta, Serbia), then in Zombor (now Sombor, Serbia), as Editor for the paper, Latest News (Új Hírek) between 1929 and 1937. After World War II he became a correspondent for the paper, Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) of Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia), then, from 1949 to 1955, he was Editor for the literary journal, Bridge (Híd), and finally Literary Editor for Radio Újvidék, where he produced a number of radio plays. His first short stories appeared in the 1920s. He was a significant representative of Hungarian prose writing in the Banat area (now called Voivodina, Serbia). In the interwar years, he painted a realistic picture of the Voivodina scenery and society. He wrote a number of stage plays, such as the prize-winning Outcast (Száműzött). His novel, The Canal of the Emperor (A Császár csatornája) (1943), features the modern history of the formerly Bácska region of the southern part of Historic Hungary (now Backa in Serbia). In the post-war years, he published mainly short stories and also translated some works of Serbian novelists into Hungarian. His works also include the novel, It Could Also Happen this Way (Így is történhet) (1968). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Makad Cemetery, Wooden Grave Pots of – The 1200 inhabitants of the town of Makad by the River Danube, immediately south of Budapest, are mainly Protestants and, in their cemetery, most of the gravesites are marked by wooden grave-markers. Unfortunately the generations of carving masters are dying out. A few of these grave-markers are exquisite creations of folk art. They are relatively uniform, each ends in a star and its above-ground height is about 160-180 cm. The cross sections are of rectangular shape; the written text with the carved pattern decoration is on their wider side. The inscription is currently done in capital letters that seem to be hardier. The decorations do not distinguish between male and female but color does refer to the genders, as most of them are painted. Several colors (yellow, blue, white, brown, green or black) refer to the deceased's age as well. In 1990, the villagers placed a grave-marker in the cemetery in memory of the thirteen generals executed in Arad on 6 October 1849, at the end of the War of Independence (1848-1849). – B: 1020, T: 7648. → Grave Posts, Wooden; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Arad, Martyrs of.

Makai, Emil (Makó, 17 November 1870 - Budapest, 6 August 1901) – Poet, playwright, literary translator. As a son of a rabbi, he also planned to become one; thus, from 1884, he studied at the Rabbinical Seminary of Pest and, from 1889, at the College of Rabbinical Studies; he also studied at the Department of Art of the University of Budapest. At first, he wrote religious poems and translated from the works of medieval Hebrew poets. Later, changing career, he became a journalist: was correspondent for the Pester Journal (Pesti Napló) (1892-1894), the Metropolitan Papers (Fővárosi Lapok) (1894-1997), and was Deputy Editor for the paper, The Week (A Hét) (1897-1900). He was a member of the Petőfi Society from 1898. His poems express the experiences of city folks in the form of rich, refined, song-like form (e.g. Andrássy-út). His poetic personality is characterized by hopeless self-seeking and ironical impersonation of self. His poetic language often cites the forms and expressions of the social intercourse of city life, e.g. in words like bók, vallomás, üzenet, csevegés, levél, pletyka (compliment, confession, message, chat, letter, gossip). He also liked to use fashionable words of foreign origin. From 1892 he worked for the theaters for nearly a decade, in which more than a hundred plays were staged, which had been translated or adapted by him. His plays are relatively significant works from the end of the 19th century: Robinsons (Robinzonok) (1898), a comedy setting against each other the modern and the old way of life; and Scholarly Professor Hatvani (Tudós professzor Hatvani) (1900). As a typical figure of the 18th century enlightenment, Professor Hatvani showed the courage of a man fighting against superstition and the fallibility of the abstract, speculative reasoning. Makai's works were compiled in two volumes, with introduction written and published by Géza Molnár (1904). – B: 1257, 1031, 1091, T: 7456. → Hatvani, István.

Makai, Imre (Emeric) (Hajdúböszörmény, 1 June 1920 - Budapest, 12 November 1995) – Translator of literary works. In 1938 he completed his high school studies in his native town. In 1943 he obtained a Bachelor of Arts Degree, majoring in Greek and Latin and, in 1944, a Ph.D. in Arts at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest. He also worked as a trainee between 1942 and 1944, in the Secretariat of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; and in 1945, in the Directorate of the National Museum, Budapest. From 1946 to 1948 he was a correspondent for the paper, New Word (Új Szó), and from 1947 to 1952, he was a correspondent for the Institute of Russian at the University of Budapest. Between 1952 and 1954, as an assistant professor, he headed the Department of Literary Translation of the Lenin Institute, Budapest. He was Editor for the Europe Publishers from 1972, and the Kossuth Publishers from 1974. He retired in 1983. From 1945 he translated classical and Soviet literature, among them about half of all the works of Dostoyevski, such as The Idiot (A félkegyelmű) (1960). His other translations include Gorky's Mother (Az anya) (1963); Tolstoy's War and Peace (Háború és béke) (1954); Solzhenitsyn's Limbo (A pokol tornáca) (1990); Chekhov's The Seagull (A sirály) (1952), and Gogol's short story, The Mysterious Portrait (Az arckép) (1949). He received a number of prizes, among them the Attila József Prize (1955, 1964), the Gorkij Prize (1979), and the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1995). – B: 1257, 1439, 0878, T: 7456.

Makai Nyíró, János (John) (17th century) – Printer. He was Manager for the Gáspár Heltai Printing House in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He worked there for a few years, even after Heltai's death, until 1623. A Calendar published in 1620 still bears his name. Twelve printed publications are known to be his work. – B: 1078, T: 3240. → Heltai, Gáspár.

Makay, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Pécs, 12 March 1910 - Budapest, 2 December 1984) – Literary historian, critic. He studied Hungarian and French at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest (Eötvös College) and, in 1933, he obtained his Degree in Education. For a year, he studied on a scholarship in the École Normale Supérieure in Paris. Following his return to Hungary, he taught in the High Schools of Eger and Pécs. From 1941 he taught at the Trefort Street High School, Budapest, until his retirement in 1975. As a professor he also gave lectures on Methodology of Specialization at the University of Budapest. In his youth, he wrote essays and critiques. He authored numerous textbooks on the Hungarian Language and Literature, as well as French Methodology (some co-authored). He wrote books on Gyula (Julius) Illyés (1940), Attila József (1941), Mihály (Michael) Babits (1941), and Árpád Tóth (1967). He also wrote about the Teaching of Literature (Irodalomtanítás) (1964). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → The persons listed have their own entry.

Makay, Margit (Margaret) (Miskolc, 4 August 1891 - Budapest, 6 November 1989) – Actress. After finishing the Academy of Performing Arts, Budapest, she received a contract from the city of Miskolc. In 1910 she became a member of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest and, for 25 years, she was one of its leading actresses. In 1935 she acted at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, and she was a professor at the Academy of Dramatic Art. After 1945 she was involved in the management of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. Her more significant roles were in Chekhov's The Three Sisters (Három nővér) and Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyéskert); F. Molnár's The Devil (Az ördög); Molière's Tartuffe; Sophocles' Oedipus the King (Oedipus Rex); Shakespeare's Hamlet; O'Neill's Morning Becomes Electra (The American Electra), and Ibsen's When We Dead Awaken (Ha mi holtak feltámadunk). Her film roles include Bitter Love (Keserű szerelem) (1912); Bercsényi Hussars (Bercsényi huszárok) (1940); A Woman Sets off (Egy asszony elindul) (1949); Erkel (1952); Relatives (Rokonok) (1954); The Sons of the Stone-hearted Man (A kőszívű ember fiai) (1965); Cat's Play (Macskajáték) (1974); A Virtuous Night (Egy erkölcsös éjszaka) (1977), and Bye-bye Chaperon Rouge (1989). She was an outstanding artist of great versatility. At first she played comic roles, later women of complex characters and tragic heroines. Her interpretations were unusually realistic; she could make artistic adjustments to tragic characters. Her presence created a tense atmosphere on the stage and her beautiful Hungarian diction was exemplary. She received the titles of Outstanding Artist (1962), Merited Artist (1969), she was also made Life Member of the National Theater of Budapest. – B: 0871, 0883, 1719, T: 7684.

Makay, Miklós (1) (Nicholas) (Orsova, now Orșova, Romania, 8 October 1921 - Budapest, 17 February 1977) – Minister of the Reformed Church, writer. He completed his studies at the Reformed Theological Academy in Budapest. He furthered his studies on a scholarship in Strasbourg and in Montpellier. Following his return to Hungary, he worked as an assistant minister. In 1931 he studied sociological problems at the International Institute of Practical Christianity of Geneva. Between 1935 and 1939 he headed the Committee of Hungarian Ecumenical Youth, and organized the Ecumenical Youth Conference of the Danube Basin in Budapest. In 1944 he obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Debrecen. In the early 1940s he organized a letter of protest against the anti Jewish laws. In 1951 and 1952 he worked at the Press Section of the Reformed Church's Convent. Until his retirement in 1966, he was a parish minister and was involved in the ecumenical movement. He published numerous studies as the first representative of this movement in Hungary. His publications include The Global Movement of Practical Christianity (A gyakorlati keresztyénség világmozgalma) with a foreword by the eminent Bishop László (Ladislav) Ravasz, (1932); Ecumenical Shorter Catechism (Ökumenikus kiskáté) (1941), and Christ's Church and Social Questions (Krisztus egyháza és a szociális kérdések) (1947). – B: 0883, 0911, T: 7456.→Ravasz, László.

Makay, Miklós (2) (Nicholas) (Makkay) (Lugos, now Lugoj, Romania, 30 August 1900 - Los Angeles, CA, USA, 6 February 1978) – Chemical engineer, politician. He worked at the Nitrokemia Plant in Balatonfüzfő. In 1938 he was commissioned to organize an explosive manufacturing plant in Brazil. While in Hungary, he participated in the works of the March Front (Márciusi Front), and opposed the first anti-Jewish Act (1938). He was an important figure in the Anti-Fascist Resistance Movement, and the National Uprising Liberation Committee (Nemzeti Felkelés Felszabadító Bizottsága) that usually met in his office. He sheltered Endre (Andrew) Bajcsy-Zsilinszky, the hunted leader of the Hungarian Resistance; for that Makay was arrested on 22 November 1944 and sentenced to death; but later, the sentence was commuted to ten years in the Sopronkőhida Prison. He escaped on 28 March 1945, became a member of the Smallholders' Party and a Member of Parliament of the Provisional National Assembly, from June 1945. In 1946, he left Hungary for Brazil and became Manager of Nitrokemia's sister firm in Brazil. Later, he established his own firm and retired in 1947 to California, USA. – B: 1699, T: 7103.→Bajcsy-Zsilinszky, Endre.

Makk Family – A renowned family of artists from Hungarian stock, who lived and worked in Africa, Europe and in the Americas.

Makk, Éva (Eva Holusa) (Hawas, Ethiopia, 1 December 1933 - ) – Painter. She was born into a noble Hungarian family. Her father was a coffee plantation owner in Ethiopia and advisor to Emperor Haile Selassie. She learned several native languages and attended private school in several African countries. Due to political unrest in Africa, the family moved to France and she studied at the Academy of Fine Arts in Paris. Having completed her studies, she moved to postwar Rome for further studies at the Academy of Fine Arts, where she met her future husband, Americo (Imre) Makk. When her father resolved to leave war-ravaged Europe for South America, Americo joined the family; they were married in Brazil. The couple started their work of murals for cathedrals and government buildings. In the cathedral of Manaus, Brazil, they painted the Coronation of the Virgin, the world's largest single theme painting. Éva Makk was a professor at the Art Academy in Sao Paulo. Eventually, they moved to the USA, and painted murals in churches in Dayton, Ohio, and Cornwall, N.Y. For these works, they were recipients of the American Ecclesiastical Award. In December 1967, they left New York for Hawaii and set up a studio in Honolulu. Her works have been presented in over 60 major exhibitions; she has won many prizes, and nine Art Academies and Art Societies have elected her as a member. Most of her major works are in Brazil.

Makk, Imre (Emeric, Americo) (Pannonhalma, 24 August 1927 - ) – Painter. He was born into an intellectual family. His father was a respected executive at the ancient Pannonhalma Abbey. Imre was educated at the St. Benedict High School. His higher studies were at the Academy of Fine Arts in Budapest and, after that, he continued his studies on a scholarship in Rome, where he met his future wife Éva Holusa. They moved together to Brazil, got married, and she became a professor at the Art Academy in Sao Paulo. They received government contracts to paint frescos in churches and cathedrals. In 1967, they moved from New York to Hawaii, where they are still living and working. Their portrait of Cardinal József (Joseph) Mindszenty is in the Vatican Museum, and four portraits of U.S. Presidents, among them Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter, are in the White House in Washington. Other portraits they have painted hang in foreign palaces, at the Grand Ol' Opry, in corporate boardrooms and private homes all over America and abroad. They exhibited under the sponsorship of the United Nations and at the Carnegie International. Exhibitions of their work were held in Europe, South America and most of the United States. Imre Makk participated in more than 70 major exhibitions. Twenty-two of his major works have gained universal recognition. His art works are in various museums and art collections all over the world. He is a member of ten Art Academy and Art Societies. Gold medals were awarded for excellence to both Imre and Éva from Italy, Monaco and various organizations in the United States, to be added to those already earned in South America.

Makk, Americo Bartholomew (A.B.) (Sao Paulo, 1951 - ) – Painter. Son of Imre Makk and Éva Holusa. He was born in Sao Paulo at the beginning of his parents' careers. First, he learned painting from his parents. They spent a year researching the Indians of the Amazon jungle when he was only seven years old. In New York, A. B. was enrolled in formal studies. Soon he joined his parents' team and they became a triumvirate of artists.

The internationally renowned artists Americo and Eva Makk were awarded a permanent home for their collection of historical paintings in the Museum of Hungarian Military History, a national museum in Budapest. The large, detailed paintings depict crucial events that occurred throughout 1,000 years of history in Hungary of the Carpathian Basin. – B: 2012, T: 7103.→Mindszenty, József.

Makk-Gál Conspiracy – After the defeat of the Hungarian War of Independence (1848-1849), Hungarian, Romanian, and Polish émigrés were convinced that Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) was ripe for another armed uprising. Colonel József (Joseph) Makk and a few of his fellow officers were the first to volunteer to organize a revolt. In 1851 they met with Lajos (Louis) Kossuth in Turkey and received his assent. One of the conspirators' secret centers was in Bucharest. Their emissaries were sent to Transylvania, where their attempts to organize a resistance were successful in the Szeklerland (Székelyföld). The Szeklerland organization, designed to serve as a bridgehead, was the work of János (John) Török, a teacher of the Marosvásárhely Reformed College (Marosvásárhely now Targu Mures in Romania). The movement also included women. The initial objective was to train some 4,000–5,000 insurgents in the mountainous regions, to conduct guerrilla warfare against the Imperial authorities, and disarm the garrison troops; then, in the next phase, civil servants would take over the local administration and organize a popular army. However, they had already been betrayed in the autumn of 1851, and the Austrian police was on their tracks. The organization's military leader was Sándor (Alexander) Gál, who expected a continent-wide outbreak of Revolution in 1852. The Szeklers would rise up, followed, it was hoped, by the Romanians; they were to seize Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania), and Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania), thereby taking effective control of Transylvania. However, the conspirators were soon arrested and executed in late 1851 and early 1852. On New Year's Eve 1852, the police raided Makk's hideout in Bucharest; he managed to escape, but his documents fell into Austrian hands. The imperial authorities launched a systematic uprooting of the conspiracy. In January 1852, more than sixty people, including some women, were arrested and imprisoned. After a two-year investigation, Török, Gálfi and Horváth were sentenced to death and executed in Marosvásárhely. Although a fifty-man guerrilla unit had been formed to free the condemned, the Austrians captured its leader József (Joseph) Váradi and twelve others, who received the death sentence; however, eight of them had their sentence commuted to detention in a fortress. Sixty other members of the movement were punished with five to ten years' hard labor in Austrian prisons. – B: 1091, 1031, T: 1091, 7103.→Kossuth, Lajos; Makk, József; Török, János; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Makk, József (Joseph) (Buda, 1814 - Wilmington, USA, 27 August 1868) - Hungarian (Honvéd) Colonel. He served in the Imperial Austrian Army for 18 years. In 1848, as an artillery sergeant, he was teaching at the School for Non-Commissioned Officers in Pest, while his No. 5 Artillery Regiment was stationed there. He became known for his published articles on the badly needed Hungarian National Guard and the need for Hungarian Staff for the Artillery Section of the joint Imperial Army. He volunteered for the independent Hungarian Army, took part in the organization of the artillery and, as a lieutenant, he became one of the trainers of the Artillery Section of the Army, at the same time serving as Commander of the First Hungarian battery. In this capacity, he served in the Battle of Pákozd, where the gunners decided the outcome of the battle, whereupon Lieutenant General Móga made him a captain on site. In the lost Battle of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia), he played an important role, together with Richard Guyon, in protecting the withdrawal. He went to the encircled Fort of Komárom and took over the organization of the artillery for the defense. After the surrender of Komárom, he did not receive safe conduct. Together with artillery colonel Zsigmond (Sigismund) Thaly he went to Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) to join the irregular troops of General Sándor (Alexander) Gaál, who were still fighting in the War of Independence. They were captured and handcuffed, dragged from town to town in the Szekler area of Transylvania but managed to escape. Then, in April 1850, they were captured again only to escape once more. On 21 June 1851, Makk visited Lajos (Louis) Kossuth in Kütahya, Turkey, who authorized him and Fülöp (Philip) Figyelmessy to organize an uprising and, on this basis, an anti-Habsburg movement started in the Szeklerland of Transylvania. He left Hungary during the mass arrests of January 1852. At first, he fought in the Hungarian Legion in Italy; and finally, after emigrating to the USA, he took part in the American Civil War as an artillery captain. He established the first Engineering Military College in the USA. – B: 1078, 1230, 0883, 1143, T: 7456.→Makk-Gál Conspiracy; Figyelmessy, Fülöp; Guyon, Richard; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Makk, Károly (Charles) (Berettyóújfalu, 23 December 1925 - ) – Producer. He did his higher studies at the University of Budapest, reading Art and History, Esthetics and Hungarian Literature (1943), then continued his studies at the University of Debrecen (1945). Between 1946 and 1952, he studied Stage Management at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. In 1944 and 1945 he worked for the Hunnia Film Industries as an assistant and, in 1946, he was a cameraman at the Sarló Newsreel. In 1947 he was Assistant Director of the internationally acclaimed feature film, Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában). He worked as a tractor-driver in Váchartyán and Szentendre at the beginning of the 1950s. Between 1952 and 1954 he was co-producer, and from 1954 producer at the Mafilm Studio. From 1951 he lectured at the Academy of Dramatic Art, and was a university professor from 1975 to 1999. From 1991 he was a member of the City Council of Budapest. Between 1991 and 1995 he was spokesman of the Democratic Charta. In 1994 and in 1998 he was Parliamentary Representative of the Alliance of Free Democrats (Szabad Demokraták Szövetsége – SZDSZ). Since 1992 he has been a member of the Széchenyi Art Academy. He has produced more than 40 feature films, including Liliomfi (1954); No. 9 Ward (9-es kórterem) (1955); House Under the Rocks (Ház a sziklák alatt) (1958); The Lost Paradise (Elveszett paradicsom) (1962); Dear Friends (Drága barátok) (German TV, 1969); Love (Szerelem) (French TV, 1974); Cat's Play (Macskajáték) (Oscar nominee, 1974); The Silly Girl (A bolond lány) (Hungarian-American, 1981); Hungarian Requiem (Magyar rekviem) (1990); The Player (A játékos) (1997), and Carousel (2003). He is one of the popular and successful Hungarian filmmakers of the latter part of the 20th century. He received a number of prizes and medals, including The Best Film Prize of the San Francisco Festival (1958), the Merited Artist title (1970), the Kossuth Prize (1973), the Outstanding Artist title (1982), the Main Prize of Figueira da Fox (1982), the Life Achievement Prize (1994), the Best Film Prize of the Film Festival of Pescara (1998), and the Middle Cross with the Star of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2005). He is an Honorary Citizen of Budapest (2004). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.→Krencsey, Mariann.

Makkai, Ádám (Budapest, 16 December 1936 - ) – Poet, literary translator and linguist. His father was János (John) Makkai, journalist and politician, and his mother was Rózsa (Rose) Ignác of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), the renowned writer and actress. His uncle was Sándor (Alexander) Makkai, writer and Bishop of the Reformed Church in Transylvania. The Communist regime regarded his family as politically incorrect, and they had a hard time. Following the crushed Revolution of 1956, Ádám, as a university student, left Hungary and joined his father in exile. After completing his French and Russian studies at Harvard University, he spent two years teaching in Hawaii. Following that, he obtained a Ph.D. from Yale University with his dissertation the Idiom Structure in English (Az angol nyelv kifejezőmódjának szerkezete), which became a basic book of the English language, and made him well known. He taught at some of the elite Universities of the US, and also taught for years in Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaysia. Besides speaking English and Hungarian, Makkai is fluent in German, French, Russian, Sanskrit, Latin and Indochinese languages and other languages, such as Kalenji in Kenya. Adam Makkai is co-author of the Webster Encyclopedia. His dictionary of American Idioms (Amerikai idiómák) reached several editions. He is the founder and five times President of LACUS, the Linguistic Association of USA and Canada. He became one of the outstanding ambassadors of the Hungarian culture in the West. His great work is the two-volume anthology of Hungarian poetry, entitled In Quest of the Miracle Stag (A Csodaszarvas nyomában), which presents Hungarian poetry from its beginning to our times. His Hungarian volumes include Thirst and Vinegar (Szomj és ecet), poems 1952-1966, (1966);  $K^2=13$  (K Squared Equals Thirteen, K a négyzetten egyenlő tizenhárommal), poems 1967-1971, (1971); Jupiter szeme (The Eye of Jupiter) poem, 1952-1990, (1990); Úristen, engedj meghalni! Petőfi Sándor pokoljárása és megüdvözülése (Lord, let me die! Sándor Petőfi's Ascent into Hell and Subsequent Salvation), a parody type novel with poems (2002); Az Erő (The Force), autobiography (2003); Jézus és a démonok imája (Jesus and the Prayer of the Demons), collected poems (2005) and Scorched Stones (Kormos kövek), Fifty-Six Poems about '56. (56 English translations of 56 Hungarian poems by Michael A. Kannas, bilingual edition) (1998). Makkai's poetry extends from tender elegy to extravagant poetic plays. He is a master of the language together with his own philosophical and anthropological theories. He is the recipient of a number of distinctions, including the Pro Cultura Hungarica Award (1996), Gold Cross of Merit of the Árpád Academy, Cleveland (1996), the Grand Gold Medal of the Mikes Kelemen Society of the Netherlands (1997), the Presidential Gold Medal from the President of Hungary (1999), the Harold Witter Bynner Award for poetry translation, (2000-2001 and 2002-2003), the George Washington Award of the American Hungarian Foundation (2003), and the Kossuth Prize, Budapest, Hungary (2011). – B: 0878, 2121, T: 7103.→Ignác, Rózsa; Makkai, Sándor.

Makkai, László (Ladislav) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca Romania, 10 July 1914 - Budapest, 1 December 1989) – Historian, theologian. His father was Sándor (Alexander) Makkai. He did his higher studies at the Reformed College and the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and the University of Budapest. He settled in Budapest and obtained his Ph.D. in Art from the University of Budapest in 1936. Between 1936 and 1940 he worked at the National Széchényi Library; in 1940 and 1941 he was a clerk in the Prime Ministerial Office, and from 1941 to 1945, a teacher in the Transylvanian Scientific Institute at Kolozsvár. In 1946 he became an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest and, from 1949, he was a correspondent for the Historical Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences and, from 1976 Scientific Advisor. He obtained a Ph.D. in historical scholarship. From 1971 he was Professor of Church History at the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen. From 1974 he was President of the Hungarian Reformed National Collection of Artifacts. From 1964 to 1984 he was Editor for the journal, World History (Világtörténet). From 1977 he was the Acting President of the Reformed Confessio periodical. From 1982 to 1988 he was the President of the Hungarian Historical Society. Earlier in his career, he mainly studied the Medieval and Modern History of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), and the Hungarian-Romanian history connections. From 1949 on, the 16th-17th Century History of Ideas and Society became the center of his historical research, as well as Protestant Church History and Cultural History. He was successful in evaluating the 17th century English-Hungarian historical connections, and exploring Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen's era. His many publications include The History of Romanians, with Special Regard to the Transylvanian Romanians (A románok története, különös tekintettel az erdélyi románokra), co-author, Editor László (Ladislav) Géldi (1941, in German 1942); History of Transylvania (Erdély története) (1944); Hungarian-Romanian Common Past (Magyar-román közös múlt) (1948, 1989); Die Geschichte Ungarns, co-authored (1971); A History of Hungary, co-authored (1973), and History of Transylvania, vols. i,ii,iii (Erdély története, I.II.III), with others (1986). He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1985, regular 1987). He received the Golden Merit of Labor (1979), and the Banner Order of Merit of the Peoples' Republic of Hungary (1984). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Makkai, Sándor.

Makkai, Sándor (Alexander) (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 13 May 1890 - Budapest, 19 July 1951) – Bishop of the Reformed Church, theologian, writer. He completed his Theological Studies in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he received a Ph.D. in Philosophy and became an honorary lecturer. He was influenced by the philosophy of Károly (Charles) Böhm. After serving as Pastor in Vajdahunyad (now Hunedoara, Romania) for two years, he was invited in 1918 to teach Practical Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak, becoming in the same year Professor of Methodological Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Kolozsvár. In 1926 he was elected Bishop by the Transylvanian Reformed District (Erdélyi Református Egyházkerület), and served in this capacity until 1936. As a member of the Romanian Senate he fought for the political rights of Hungarians in Romania. Weary of the fights for minority rights, he left Transylvania and accepted a teaching position at the University of Debrecen in 1936. In his article: Not Possible (Nem lehet), he bitterly concluded about the life of minorities: "...it is humanly unfair and impossible to live without hope for change...". He resigned for health and political reasons. During his 10 years as bishop, he built several hundred new churches, schools, orphanages, shelters, hospitals and children's homes. He accepted the Professorship of Practical Theology in Debrecen and moved to Hungary. In 1938 he was elected President of the Hungarian Protestant Literary Society. He was a prolific author publishing numerous works on theology, philosophy, pedagogy and literature. The themes of his novels were taken from Hungarian history of old, and they were quite popular. His aim was national as well as Church renewal; he urged the build-up of Hungarian spirituality. His first far-reaching study: Destiny of the Hungarian Tree (A Magyar Fa Sorsa) was a sensation in 1927. His literary works include The Star of the Hungarians (Magyarok csillaga); Shaman King (Táltoskirály); Yellow Menace (Sárga veszedelem), and Witch-cart (Ördögsekér). As bishop and theologian he was one of the rousers, organizers and inspirers of the Reformed Church. His related major works are: Introduction to the Pedagogy of Personality (Bevezetés a személyiség pedagógiájába) (1912); Psychology of Religion (A vallás lélektana) (1914); The Mystery of Death (A halál misztériuma) (1918); Fight Between the Intellect and Faith (Az értelem és hit harca) (1919); Conscious Calvinism (Öntudatos kálvinizmus) (1925); Harvest (Aratás) (1926); Alone: the Spiritual Countenance of Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (Egyedül: Bethlen Gábor lelki arca) (1929); Hungarian Education, Hungarian Culture (Magyar nevelés, Magyar kultúra) (1937); The Missionary Work of the Church (Az egyház missziói munkája) (1938); Plan for the Education of the Nation (A nemzetnevelés terve) (1939), and Poimenika. The Discipline of Personal Pastoral Care (Poimenika. A személyes lelkigondozás tana) (1947). He was the Editor for the excellent but short lived The Reformed Congregation (Református Gyülekezet), a periodical on practical theology (1949-1950). Some of his works were translated into French, German and Turkish. – B: 0911, 0883, 1257, T: 7617.→Makkai, László; Makkai, Árpád; Böhm, Károly; Ravasz László.

Maklár, Zoltán (Budapest, 16 April 1896 - Budapest, 12 July 1978) – Actor. In 1914, he enrolled at the Acting School of Szidi Rákosi. In World War I, he was conscripted into the army and sent to the Russian front, where he fell into Russian captivity. Following his return four years later, he completed his studies in 1919. He worked in the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház) (1920-1922), the Renaissance Theater (Renaissance Színház) (1922-1926), the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház) (1925-1926), the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) (1926-1935), and the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) (1935-1969), Budapest. He was guest actor in a number of theaters. He retired in 1968. His major roles include Ficsur in F. Molnár's Liliom; Menyhért Mosolygó in G. Csiki's Proletárok (Proletariats); Kalmár in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Orgon in Molière's Tartuffe; Tiborc in J. Katona's Bánk bán, and Ivan Petrovich in Chekov's Uncle Vanya (Ványa bácsi). There are 150 feature films to his credit including Hyppolit the Butler (Hyppolit a lakáj) (1931); Saint Peter's Umbrella (Szent Péter Esernyője) (1935); Foothold (Talpalatnyi föld) (1948); The Sea Rose Up (Feltámadott a tenger) (1953); Land of Angels (Angyalok földje) (1962), and American Cigarette (Amerikai cigaretta) (1977). He was excellent in comic roles, as well as in dramas, representing tragicomical figures in his unique way. He was a Member of Parliament from 1962. He received the titles of Merited Artist (1951), Outstanding Artist (1955), and the Kossuth Prize (1854). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7103.

Makovecz, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 20 November 1935 - Budapest, 27 September 2011) – Architect. He received his Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1959. From 1959 to 1977 he worked for the Design Studios; from 1977 to 1981 at the Pilis Forestry, and as leading architect of the Makona Architectural Studio. Since the 1950s he was active in various parts of Europe. He became one of the most prominent representatives of organic architecture. Frank L. Wright and Rudolf Steiner, as well as traditional Hungarian art, strongly influenced his style. His works include the Cápa (Shark) Restaurant in Venice (1963); the Gyulavár Restaurant (1969); the Visegrád Sports Hall (1985); the Lutheran Church, Siófok (1986); the Holy Spirit Church, Paks (1987); the Theater Lendva (1991); the Onion House Theater, Makó (1995); the Roman Catholic Church, Csíkszereda (now Mircurea Ciuc, Romania) (2001), and the famous Hungarian Pavilion for the World Fair in Seville, Spain that made him famous internationally (1990). Since 1981 he was a professor at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest; since 1987 he was also a professor at the International Architectural Academy, and since 1992, President of the Academy of Hungarian Art. He was also active in patriotic politics. He was the master of organic architecture, and he achieved international fame. He had an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Dundee. He received a number of awards and prizes, among them the Miklós Ybl Prize (1969), the Kossuth Prize (1990), the Grand Golden Prize of the Architectural Academy of France (1997), Honorary Fellowship of the Royal Institute of British Architects (1998), the Corvin Chain (2001), and the Prima Primiissima Prize (2003). – B: 1031, 1669, T: 7103.

Makrai, Benedek (Benedict) (1383-1421) – Medieval scholar. He studied at the University of Prague between 1383 and 1387, where he obtained a Master of Philosophy Degree. In 1390 he lectured on astronomy at the University of Vienna; and in 1398, in Paris. In 1401 he studied Law in Padua, and earned a magisterial grade in Canon Law. He was appointed to a teaching position in Roman and Canon Law at Óbuda. In 1403 he participated in a conspiracy against King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437). Makrai was captured and jailed in 1406. On the request of the students of Paris University, he was freed in 1408. Thereafter, he not only became a trusted advisor of King Zsigmond, but also accompanied him to Italy in 1413, and later to Spain, France and also to England. In 1415 he took part in the Council of Constance. In 1421 he was Governor in the Diocese of Eger. – B: 1078, 0883, 1257, T: 7675.→Zsigmond, King.

Makray, László (Ladislas) (Vizszenygyörgyi and Felpestesi) (Széplak, 15 March 1815 - Felpestes, 30 March 1876) – Honvéd army officer, politician. He was a descendant of a landowning family. Already in his childhood, he studied at the Military School of Kézdivásárhely (now Targu Secuiesc, Romania) and, from 1833 to 1844 he served in the Transylvanian infantry regiment of the Imperial-Royal Army, where he reached the rank of second lieutenant. In 1844 he left the army, got married, and ran his estate at Felpestes. In April 1848 he took part in organizing the National Guard of Dés (now Dej, Romania) in Transylvania and, as a captain, he was Commander of the Cavalry National Guard of County Inner-Szolnok and Doboka. In August 1848 (during the Hungarian Revolution and War of Independence against Austrian oppression), his cavalry troop, the “Kossuth-Knights”, joined the later 15th Hunyadi Cavalry Regiment. With his military formation, he participated in the battles of Szamosújvár (now Gherla, Romania) (13 November) and Szamosfalva (now Someşeni-Cluj, Romania) (16 November). Makray fought all along in General Bem’s Transylvanian campaign. On 3 February 1849 he was promoted to the rank of major. On 8 April he received the decoration of the Hungarian Military Order Class III. General Bem made him a lieutenant colonel, and he took over the command of a regiment. At the end of the War of Independence, with the remnants of the north-Transylvanian army corps, he joined the division of Lajos (Louis) Kazinczy on 20 August and, on his command he went to the camp of Lieutenant General Grotenheim to discuss the details of the surrender. After the surrender at Zsibó (now Jibou, Romania), he was kept prisoner at Arad (now in Romania), where the imperial courtmartial sentenced him to death; later this was commuted to a 16-year imprisonment in a fortress. He received a pardon and was freed in June 1850, after which he ran his landed property in retirement from active life. However, from the early 1860s, he took an active part in the public life of County Hunyad. After the 1867 Compromise with Austria, he became a member of the Honvéd Association of County Hunyad. In 1866 he was elected a Member of Parliament, representing the town of Déva (now Deva, Romania), an office he held until 1875. In 1870, he edited and published the memoirs of major Lajos (Louis) Bauer, his fellow officer. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Bem, József; Kossuth, Lajos; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Maksay, Albert (Sopron, 7 June 1897 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 22 June 1971) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, writer, poet and literary translator. After attending the University of Kolozsvár as a medical student, he enrolled in the Reformed Theology program (1920–1922). Besides being a student of Divinity, he was also a language scholar in Greek and Hebrew. Maksay went on a study tour in the USA (1923-1925), beginning at the University of Chicago's Faculty of Arts, where he pursued Arab and Egyptian studies. He obtained a B.A. in Theology Louisville (1924), an M.A. from the Westend Theological Seminary, Holland, Michigan (1925), a qualification of an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at Kolozsvár (1926), and a Ph.D. from the University of Debrecen in 1948. He was Professor of New Testament Studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Kolozsvár (1926-1959). He was involved in the creation of the United Protestant Theological Institute's Degree program at the University of Kolozsvár (1949). Many of his poems, short stories, literary translations and essays on literature and fine arts were published in periodicals, such as the Transylvanian Review (Erdélyi Szemle) Kolozsvár, (1928-1944); Shepherd's Fire (Pásztortűz) (1921-1944); Reformed Review (Református Szemle), and Transylvanian Helicon (Erdélyi Helikon) (1928-1944). He became member of the Romanian Writers' Association in 1946. His major works include The Songs of Silence (A csend dalai), poems (1927); Sándor Kőrösi Csoma's Scientific Activities in Tibet from the Standpoint of Linguistic and Religious Studies (Kőrösi Csoma Sándor tibettudományi munkássága nyelvészeti és vallástudományi szempontból) (1935), and Foreign Shores (Idegen partok) (1935). – B: 0883, T: 7657. → Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor.

Male Dances – Some folk dances are the privilege of males in Hungarian lands. While there are solo dances for men all over Hungary, women never dance alone. This interesting phenomenon is also evident in mixed pair dances. Male dancers often let their partner go and they dance alone, as if “making the point”, as it is called. Male dancers use varied steps, sudden turns and leaps in a virtuoso manner, showing off in an almost competitive way. While the male dances display richer movements, the female dances are simpler; they use small steps in an almost stationary way in the background and do not even continue the steps they would use in dancing with a partner.

There are vague traces of the male round dance in the Hungarian folk dance tradition. Most of them are somewhat connected to the Sun and Fire cults. There are written descriptions of blazing wheels, fire waving, and jumping over the flames in some areas, where men do these alone; and other areas, where men and women do them together. These are rare today and the element of a circle was only preserved by some women's dances, although there is a lot of walking around; and some group dances even form a circle, when the male dancers hold on to each other; however, this is just a brief segment of the dance.

The herdsmen's dance has the same elements but only following their solos. The origin of the herdsmen's round dance is easy to follow. It comes from the pair dance but it is not individual or self-serving. In the herdsmen's dance, men at first dance alone for a while, then they dance together in pairs. Improvisation has a major role in these dances.

The recruiting dances with their more polished and westernized circular movements are not only fitting into the long chain of Hungarian peasant dances, but they are the end product of a long process from the first simple opening walk of the peasants' and herdsmen's dances.

The Hungarian male folk dances are composed of dances with the stick, barn dance, Hajdú-dance, soldier dance, Hungarian solo dance, herdsmen's dance and the best-man dance. Besides the Csángós – archaic Hungarian-speaking inhabitants of Moldova (in Romania) – Hungarians only use spurs. This and other characteristics, such as posture, clearly indicate the boot-wearing, horse riding origin of Hungarian dances. – B: 1020, T: 3240.→Dance; Dance House Movement; Hajdú.

Maleczky, Oszkár (Oscar) (Budapest, 6 February 1894 - Budapest, 22 February 1972) – Opera singer (baritone). He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, (1925-1927). He started in composition; later he changed over to voice. The Municipal Theater (Városi Színház), Budapest, engaged him first. Between 1927 and 1966, he was the soloist in the buffo style in the Opera House of Budapest. From 1931 to 1962 he also taught stage acting at the Academy of Music. His singing roles embraced almost the entire baritone repertoire, particularly excelling in humorous and cynically dramatic, intriguing roles. His repertoire includes Pizarro in Beethoven's Fidelio; Scarpia in Puccini's Tosca; Uncle Marci in Kodály's Háry János; Bartolo in Rossini's The Barber of Seville (A szevillai borbély), and Beckmesser in Wagner's The Mastersingers of Nuremberg (A nürnbergi mesterdalnokok). He received the Kossuth Prize (1957), and the distinction of Outstanding Artist title (1966). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Maléter, Pál (Paul) (Eperjes, now Prešov, Slovakia, 4 September 1917 - Budapest, 16 June 1958) – Army officer. He studied Medicine in Prague; in 1939 he joined the army. Between 1940 and 1942, he was trained at the Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy, Budapest. In 1944, as a second lieutenant, he was taken prisoner on the Russian front. After 1945 he resumed his military service, rapidly advanced in rank as far as the General Staff. In 1956 he took an active part in the Revolution; Prime Minister Imre (Emeric) Nagy appointed him Minister of Defense on 2 November, as the only Minister outside the Communist Party. The following day, Maléter conducted the negotiations of the withdrawal of the Soviet forces from Hungary, and the cancellation of the Warsaw Pact. On 3 November, he went to negotiate with Soviet military representatives at the Soviet High Command in, Tököl, Hungary; he was arrested at once and detained, later accused of high treason. In the Imre Nagy trial, he was sentenced to death on a charge of attempting to overthrow the Hungarian People's Republic. He was executed on the same day as Imre Nagy, in the Budapest prison on 18 June 1958. In 16 June 1989, on the anniversary of their deaths, Imre Nagy, Pál Maléter and three others who died in prison, together with an empty sixth coffin, symbolizing all those who had died, were formally reburied in Budapest with full honors. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Freedom Fight of 1956; Nagy, Imre.

Maliga, Pál (Paul) (Tótkomlós, 10 May 1913 - Budapest, 16 February 1987) – Gardening engineer, fruit improver. He completed his gardening studies at the Gardening College in 1936. Thereafter, he studied the Grape and Viticulture Course and graduated from the Department of Agriculture of Budapest Polytechnic. In 1946 he obtained his Ph. D. from the University of Agricultural Sciences, and became a teacher in the Horticultural Gardener-Training School of Baja. From 1939 he gave lectures on gardening at the University of Agricultural Sciences and, from 1956 until his retirement he continued his well-known research and fruit improving work, which extended over all parts of the Carpathian Basin. He studied the possibilities of developing the Morello or sour cherry (meggy) cultivation on a large scale and, as a solution, he produced new improved types. The types known all over Hungary are: Meteor, Favorit, Korai Pipacs meggy, Érdi jubileumi, and the Érdi bőtermő, which became known world-wide. At present, more than one-third of the Morello-growing orchards in Hungary belong to the type Érdi bőtermő. His works include Fruit-growing 2 (Gyümölcsstermesztés 2), with Iván Okályi (1956); Cultivation of Cherry and Morello Sour Cherries (Cseresznye- és meggytermesztés), with Mátyás Mohácsy (1956), and Handbook on the Pruning of Fruit Trees (A gyümölcsfák metszésének kézikönyve) with Mátyás Mohácsy and Pál Gyúró (1968). His work was recognized by the Ferenc Entz Commemorative Medal, and an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Horticulture. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Málnási, Ödön (Edmund) (Brassó, now Braşov, Romania, 28 June 1898 - Vienna, 17 February 1970) – Historian, populist writer, politician. During the time of the Hungarian Soviet Republic in 1919, he served as a lieutenant in the Red Army; later, he joined the Horthy-led National Army. After the completion of his studies in 1924, he obtained a Ph.D. in Art and, finally, he obtained a Degree in Law. Starting in 1926, he did archival research in a number of countries and went on study tours to Bulgaria and Turkey. He became a history teacher at the Catholic Teachers' Training College of the Archbishopric of Eger. In the fall of 1937, he joined the Hungarist Movement of Ferenc (Francis) Szálasi, and became one of its leading ideologists. He wrote a historical work, The True History of the Hungarian Nation (A magyar nemzet őszinte története) (1937, Munich, 1959, 2nd ed., 1987 3rd ed.). In it he condemned the contemporary political-social system on national-socialist grounds. His views led to a prison term in Szeged. In 1942 he carried on anti-Szálasi propaganda in Germany; on his return, it resulted in the suspension of his party membership, whereupon Málnási resigned from the Party. From the fall of 1942, he managed the publishing office of the Hungarian People (Magyarság) and, after the occupation of Hungary by the German forces on 19 March 1944 he became a member of the Volksbund. After the Hungarist coup d'état on 15 October 1944, he again joined Szálasi's party. In the spring of 1945, he fled to the West. The American authorities arrested and deported him back to Hungary. The people's court sentenced him to 10 years of forced labor. He was freed during the 1956 Revolution and went to Austria, later to the USA, but was deported back to Austria, where he became one of the leaders of a political faction called Hungarian Union (Magyar Unió). His works include Geo-Military Condition of Truncated Hungary (Csonka-Magyarország katonai-földrajzi helyzete) (1925), and Life and Age of Cardinal Count Imre (Emeric) Csáky (Gróf Imre Csáky bibornok élete és kora) (1933). – B: 1257, 0883, 1672, T: 7456.→Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic; Horthy, Miklós; Szálasi, Ferenc.

Malonyai, Dezső (Desider) (Pest, 3 May 1866 - Budapest, 22 April 1916) – Folklorist, art-writer, critic. He obtained a Ph.D. in Education in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). From 1892 he taught in Kolozsvár and, from 1897, in Budapest. In the meantime he visited some foreign countries, and spent an extended period in France. In Paris he worked as a secretary for the renowned painter Mihály (Michael) Munkácsy and wrote the life story of this great Hungarian artist, published in 1898. He also published novels at that time. He was enterprising and a good organizer; he not only established a workshop but also worked successfully with its members for a considerable length of time. His name was immortalized with the publication of his greatest work in five volumes, The Art of the Hungarian People (A Magyar Nép Művészete), issued between 1907 and 1922. His other works include Dramas of Vörösmarty (Vörösmarty drámái), study (1891); The Coward (A gyáva), novel (1893); The Last One (Az utolsó), novel (1896), and Daughter of Nobody (Senki lánya), drama (1904). He also published studies on some of the contemporary Hungarian painters e.g. Károly (Charles) Ferenczi, Béla Grünwald, etc. Due to his brilliant writing style, his deep Hungarian feelings became effectively expressed through the vast material he collected. His works were ahead of his time, for official research turned to folk artistry only in the 1930s. His opus is still the most important source material for specialists in the field of Hungarian folk ornaments. – B: 1150, 1134, 1257, T: 3240.→Munkácsy, Mihály, Ferenczy, Károly; Grünwald, Béla.

Mály, Gerő (Greg) (Székudvar, now Socodor, Romania, 1 August 1884 - New York, USA, early days of 1952) – Actor. He was from Armenian lineage. Against his father's wishes, he studied acting in the theater company of György (George) Kárpáthy in 1903. In Budapest, he worked in the Comedy Circle (Vígszínkör), the English Park (Angolpark), the Apollo Cabaret (Apolló Kabaré), the City Theater (Városi Színház) (1921), the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház) (1923, 1929, 1931-1932), the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) (1924, 1928-1935), the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) (1927, 1930, 1932), and the Pest Theater (Pesti Színház) (1936-1937). In 1946 he emigrated to the US, where he supported himself by manual labor. In the end, this outstanding Hungarian character actor died suddenly as a broken man. His main roles include Epihodov in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyés kert); Vinaigre in Sardou's Madame Sans-Gêne (A szókimondó asszonyosság); Csuli in Zs. Móricz's Gentry's Fun (Úri muri), and Bartender in F. Molnár's Delilah. There is a number of feature films to his credit, such as The Blue Idol (A kék bálvány) (1931); The New Landowner (Az új földesúr) (1935); Be Good Unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig) (1936); Europe Does Not Answer (Európa nem válaszol) (1941); One Skirt, One Pair of Pants (Egy szoknya, egy nadrág) (1943), and his last one, Judge Sarah (Sári Biró) (1943). He was a popular comedian in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, T: 7103.

Mályusz, Elemér (Elmer) (Makó, 22 August 1898 - Budapest, 25 August 1989) – Historian. Between 1916 and 1920 he studied at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Ph.D. in History in 1920. He conducted archival research in Vienna and, from 1922 to 1930 he worked for the Hungarian State Archives. In 1925 he became an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest. From 1930 to 1934 he was Professor of History at the University of Szeged and, between 1931 and 1935, he edited with Sándor (Alexander) Domanovszky the leading Hungarian historical journal, Centuries (Századok). From 1934 to 1945 he was Professor of pre-1526 Hungarian History at the University of Budapest. In 1945 he was forcibly sent into retirement for political reasons. He was archivist of the Hungarian Lutheran Church (1947-1954), and from 1954 until his retirement in 1968, he was a correspondent for the Institute of History of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He became a member of the Academy (corresponding 1930, regular 1941-1949, renewed in 1989). His research touched on almost all sections of Hungarian history. He achieved outstanding results in the medieval and 18th century Hungarian History in studying the problem of the feudal system and its Estates. He also dealt with aspects of Hungarian cultural and church history. His vast literary output includes The History of Ethnicity (A népiség története) (1931); “Mediaeval Hungarian Ethnic Policy” (A középkori magyar nemzetiségi politika), published in the journal Centuries (Századok) (1939); Geschichte des ungarischen Volkstums von der Landnahme bis zum Ausgang des Mittelalters (1940); The Reign of King Sigismund in Hungary (Zsigmond király uralma Magyarországon) (1984, also in German, 1989), and The Transylvanian-Hungarian Society in the Middle Ages (Az erdélyi magyar társadalom a középkorban) (1988). He was honored with the Award of the Academy (1973). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Mandics, György (George) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 4 January 1943 - ) – Teacher, journalist, mathematician, writer. He studied at the University of Temesvár and obtained an Education Degree in Mathematics and Physics. He also studied journalism in Bucharest in 1977. Between 1967 and 1972 he taught at Újvár (now Uivar, Romania) and Zsombolya (now Jimbolia, Romania). Between 1972 and 1984 he was an editor at the Torch Publishers (Fáklya Kiadó) at Temesvár and, since 1984, he has been a journalist at the Hungarian language journal, New Word (Új Szó) of Temesvár. Later, his interest turned to science fiction. His books include Wonderful Roots (Gyönyörű gyökerek) (1968); The Discovered Mother Earth (A megtalált anyaföld), poems (1976); Third-play (Harmadjáték) (TV, 1977); Iron Worlds (Vasvilágok), science fiction (1986); The Book of Mysterious Writings (A rejtélyes írások könyve) (1987); The Golgotha of Temesvár (Temevári Golgota), novel (1991); Temeswar – ein Symbol der Freiheit, (Munich, 1992); UFO-history (Ufótörténelem) (under the pen name George M. Dick) (1993); Enciclopedia ființelor extraterestre, studies i, ii (1996, 1998), and The Manipulated Revolution (A manipulált forradalom) (2009). He also made literary translations. He is a member of learned societies at home and abroad. He is a recipient of numerous distinctions, including The Prize of Romanian Writers’ Association (1978), the Gold Meteorite Prize (1987), as well as Prizes of the Hungarian Writers’ Association (1977, 1986, 1987, 1988). – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Mandl, Lajos (Lázár) (Louis, Lazarus) (Pest, December 1812 - Paris, 5 July 1881) – Physician. He studied Arts, Theology, and later Medicine at the Universities of Pest and Vienna, and earned a Doctorate in Medicine from the University of Pest in 1836. He settled in Paris and soon became widely known, and was the favorite doctor of the socially well-to-do of the city. He prepared anatomical demonstration specimens at the Medical Faculty of the University of Paris in 1845. He dealt mainly with microscopic anatomy. He lectured on that subject, especially on its biological and pathological significance at the Medical School. From 1862 he also lectured on the illnesses of the human speech organ. He edited the French journal, Archives d’Anatomie generale et de physiologie in 1846. His works include Anatomie microscopique, I-II (1835-1858), Mémoires concernant la pathologie et la thérapeutique des organes de la respiration (1855), and Traité pratiques de maladies de larynx et de pharynx (1872). He received the French Cross of the Legion of Honor, as well as the First Prize of the French Academy. – B: 1730, 0907, T: 7456.

Mándy Ignác Károly (Ignatius Charles) (? - 4 June 1871) – Hungarian (Honvéd) Military officer, American Brigade-General, serving under the pseudonym General Munde. He came to Hungary in 1848 as a lieutenant with the Lenkey Hussar Regiment, using the name Ignác Mándy. After the Battle of Bábolna, General Artur Görgey appointed him Brigade Commander. At the end of the War of Independence (1848-1849), he was already a Colonel. Following the capitulation at Világos, he went to Viddin, then to the Internment Camp of Sumen in Turkey (now in Bulgaria). There he converted to the Islamic religion and married a Turkish woman in Istanbul. In 1850 he served in the European Turkish army as a Captain, then after the Crimean War he went to the New World. He reappeared in California among the gold-diggers as Ignác Károly (Ignatius Charles) Mándy. In the Civil War, he began his military service on 24 August 1861, in the Kansas Regiment as Captain and Regimental Adjutant. A year later he was made Major for his distinguished service in the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek. For the heroism he displayed in the decisive Battle of Petersburg on 2 April 1865, the Congress in Washington promoted him to the rank of Brigadier-General. – B: 1143, 1020, T: 7456.

Mándy, Iván (Budapest, 23 December 1918 - Budapest, 6 October 1995) – Writer. He studied at the Lónyai Street Reformed High School and the Madách High School in Budapest, from 1928; but he gave up his studies. After 1945 he joined the young authors of the magazine, New Moon (Újhold). Between 1950 and 1954 he was a correspondent for the Adult Education College while, from 1954 to 1961, he was a freelance writer. After a long period of inactivity (while he was sentenced to silence by the political regime), he became a member of the Editorial Committee of the magazine, Paraphernalia (Holmi) in 1989. From 1990 he was President of the Board of Trustees of the György (George) Rónay Prize and, from 1991, a member of the Body of Magistrates of Budapest. From 1992 he was President of the Széchényi Literary and Arts Academy. The Magvető Publishers (Magvető Kiadó) published his works annually from 1984 on. The environment of the infamous Teleki and Mátyás Squares of Budapest, the little world of the men-in-the-street, the failed ones, and society's outcasts influenced the atmosphere of his writings. In his short stories, a curious human mixture prevails: gypsies, hooligans, loners, the defenseless, and all those who are longing for human contact and love. The old cinemas, espresso bars, swimming pools and football fields form his "Mándy Universe" In the 1960s, a new orientation gave him the Vera short stories; in its center stands a young girl, the typical representative of the beat generation, e.g. What Happened to Vera? (Mi van Verával?) (1970). Dream often formed the basis of his short stories, e.g. A Man's Dream (Egy ember álma) (1971). From the end of the 1970s he treated solitude, isolation and anguish of the modern large cities, the grotesque, yet continued struggle of the lonely heroes with reality, reminding us of the moral duty of faithfulness and compassion. He authored several volumes of radio plays, and a musical: Deep Water (Mélyvíz). His children's books are classics, such as Csutak in Front of the Microphone (Csutak a mikrofon előtt), youth novel (1961); The Tram (A villamos) (1981); Legends of Budapest (Budapesti legendák) (1994), and The Fly Hunter (A légyvadász), short story (1996). He received the Baumgarten Prize (1948), the Attila József Prize (1969), the Kossuth Prize (1988), the Getz Corporation Prize (1991), and the Life Achievement Prize of the Soros Foundation (1992). – B: 1257, 1030, 1091, T: 7456.

Manga, János (John) (Pereszlény, 24 June 1906 - Budapest, 2 September 1977) – Ethnographer and museologist. He completed his high school studies in Ipolyság (now Šahy, Slovakia), then he obtained a Degree in Education at the Teachers' College of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) At first, he worked as a teacher in the schools of Szécsénke and Pozsonyligetfalu. In 1940 he became Principal of the School at Ógyalla. While he obtained a Ph.D. in Philosophy from the University of Budapest in 1942, he worked as a research fellow at the Ethnographic Museum of Budapest from 1941 to 1949. After 1945 he left Slovakia and settled in truncated Hungary. He was director of the Palóc Museum of Balassagyarmat from 1949 to 1959; thereafter, from 1960 to 1963, he was Deputy Director of the Ethnographic Museum of Budapest and, until his death, he was a research fellow of the Ethnographic Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, for a few years also acting as Section Head. His main fields of research were folk customs, folk music, musical instruments, and folk art. Even earlier, while he was in Slovakia, he carried out some fundamental research in these fields. His talks in the Hungarian broadcasts of Radio Pozsony proved significant. His works include Ethnography of the Returned Felvidék (A visszatért Felvidék néprajza) (1939); Festival Customs at Menyhe in County Nyitra (Ünnepi szokások a nyitramegyei Menyhén) (1942), and Palóc Land (Palócföld) (1979). – B: 1890; T: 7456. → Vienna Award I.

Mangalica pig (or Mongolica) – A breed of pig in Hungary; its name is of Serbo-Croat origin. It is a relatively small-bodied pig with thin bones; its body is covered with curly, mostly blond bristles, its earlobes hanging down. It is bred for its fat content, e.g. for lard (zsírsertés; in German Fettschwein); compared with other pig breeds, its fat is richer in oleic-acid; the evenly distributed, marbled fat-content in its meat has favorable consumer value in flavour, juiciness and tenderness; on the whole, an excellent characteristic for steak. The world fame of the Pick and Hertz Salamis, and the Csabai and Gyulai Sausages is founded on the Mangalica. As a breed, it has been crossed repeatedly over the centuries in the fallows of the Great Plain and Transdanubia, to produce a characteristic Hungarian breed, fully acclimatized. It is fastgrowing, fairly prolific, and hardy by nature, well known also for its resistance to disease. Early in the 20th century, it was considered to be the best pig in Europe; since then it has been surpassed by other, higher meat-producing breeds, so that, by 1990, the Mangalica breed was on the verge of extinction: its individual numbers reduced to between 100 and 500. To save this pig breed, state protection has been introduced in Hungary since 1976. Now the Mangalica is bred in farms abroad as well. In the past, a famous place for this breed was the estate of Prince Joseph at Kisjenő (Chişineu-Criş, in County Arad, now in Romania), where the boars were bred for breeding. In 1999, in Germany, this breed was selected to be the pig of the year. It has been considered a national treasure. – B: 1068, 1816, 1966, T: 7456.

Manhattan Project – In the summer of 1939, two Hungarian-American physicists, Leo (Szilárd), Ph.D., and Ede (Edward) Teller, Ph.D., decided to ask Albert Einstein to use his international reputation to call Roosevelt’s attention to the fact that, by the use of the uranium from the Czech mines, German scientists would be in a position to develop an atomic bomb. Teller translated Einstein’s letter, written in German, into English and personally delivered it to the White House. A few weeks later, Roosevelt called a secret meeting at the White House, where the decision was made to begin atomic research, under the code name: Manhattan Project. The leader of the research group was the Italian, Enrico Fermi; but the rest of the five-member research group were Hungarians: János (John) von Neumann, Ph.D., Leo Szilárd, Ph.D., Ede Teller, Ph.D. and Pál Jenő (Paul Eugene) Wiegner, Ph.D. Allegedly, Einstein made the remark: “Those people are from Mars...when they talk among themselves in Hungarian”. The project was successful and the first atomic reactor was created, making feasible the manufacture of an atomic bomb. When the group found out that the American military leadership was preparing to use the atomic bomb against Japan, several of them sent a letter to President Truman, protesting its use; but their letter failed to have any result – B: 1290, 1020, T: 7665.→Einstein’s Letter; Szilárd, Leó; Teller Ede; Wiegner, Jenő; Neumann, von János.

Manlius, Johannes (János, John) (Johann Mannel) (? 1540 - Németkeresztúr, now Sopronkeresztúr, 1605) – Traveling printer. Due to his Protestant affiliation he had to flee Austria, and settled in Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). With the help of Boldizsár (Balthasar) Batthyány, he established a printing workshop in the Fort of Németújvár (now Güssing, Burgenland, Austria) in 1582, but he moved frequently. His first work was the book on István (Stephen) Beythe, a preacher in Németújvár, entitled: A Short Version of Christian Knowledge (Köröszteni Tudománnak rövid summája). In 1583 he published the Latin-Hungarian Dictionary of Plants in the Pannon (Transdanubian, Dunántúl) Region, compiled by the celebrated European botanist, Clusius. With the help of Count György (George) Zrinyi, he established his printing shop and worked in Mogyorókerék (now Eberau, Burgenland, Austria), between 1587 and 1592. He published the first Hungarian newspaper, the Neue Zeitung aus Ungarn. During his five years in Mogyorókerék, he published 13 books, of which 7 were in Hungarian, 4 in German, and 2 in Latin. Between 1598 and 1605, he was working, with the help of the Nádasdys in Németkeresztúr, where he published 11 books. He was the printer for the Protestant Clergy. – B: 0883, 1020, 1257, T: 3240.

Mannheim, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 27 March 1893 - London, UK, 9 January 1947) – Sociologist, one of the founders of the Sociology of Knowledge Movement. He pursued his Philosophy and Sociology studies in Budapest, Freiburg, Paris and Heidelberg. Between 1930 and 1933, he was Professor of Sociology in Freiburg. Later he taught at the London School of Economics and Political Science, and at the Institute of Education, University of London. Although Mannheim wrote widely on sociological and political topics, he returned again and again to the problems of knowledge and of ideology. He proposed a sociological perspective that viewed all mental structures (with the exception of the natural sciences) as context-dependent. For him, the Seinsverbundenheit (existential alliance) of human knowledge is rooted in the social existence of competing human groups. When investigating worldwide ideologies, one needs to take into account not only the classes but also the status of groups, generations, military, cultural, political and economic elites, professions and many other groupings. His significant works are Ideologie und Utopie (Bonn, 1929); Man and Society in an Age of Reconstruction (London, 1940); Freedom, Power and Democratic Planning (London, 1951); Systematic Sociology (London, 1957), and Ideology and Utopia (Ideológia és utópia) (1996). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7617.

Manninger, Jenő (Eugene) (Rácbóly, 30 October 1918 - Budapest, 3 October 2008) – Surgeon. His university studies were completed at the University of Pécs in 1942. He started working at the local Pathological Clinic. From 1944 he served at the war-front, became a POW, and worked in Soviet military hospitals. After his release from captivity, he worked at the Anna Koltói Hospital, Budapest from 1948, and continued working there until his death, when the Hospital was transformed into the National Traumatology Institute, where he was Director from 1978 to 1989. He received several scholarships to study the modern methods of hand and hip surgery, which he introduced into Hungary. He succeeded in creating a hand surgery school of international fame. His surgical method is now applied in Western Europe. He wrote and co-authored 227 books, chapters, articles in Hungarian and in other languages. His lifework's monograph was published in English as well as in German, in 2005 and 2007 respectively. He was a member and honorary member of a number of professional societies in Hungary and abroad. He received the Batthyány-Strattmann and Semmelweis Prizes, and the Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary, as well as the title of "Pioneer of Hand Surgery" from the American Hand Surgery Society. – B: 1031, 1880, T: 7103.

Manninger, Rezső (Ralph) (Sopron, 7 July 1890 - Budapest, 4 February 1970) – Veterinarian. He obtained his Veterinary Degree in 1912, and his Doctorate in 1914, from the Veterinary School, University of Budapest, where he was a demonstrator in the Institute of Epidemiology from 1912 to 1921, then an assistant lecturer and, in 1918, an honorary lecturer in Immunology. From 1921 he was Professor of Immunology and Institute Director. From 1928 to 1943 he was Director of the National Institute of Animal Health, and in 1940 and 1941, became its Dean. In 1947-1948 he acted as Vice-Chancellor of the University of Agricultural Sciences. Between 1933 and 1963 he was the Hungarian representative of the International Bureau of Animal Health. From 1953 to 1956 he was President of the Agriculture Section of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, corresponding member (1927) and regular member (1939). He was a member and Honorary Doctor of several Hungarian and international veterinary societies. His research encompasses the whole field of pathology and therapy of domestic animals; he also did work in Bacteriology, Microbiology and Immunology. He wrote a number of books and articles in Hungarian and other languages. He reworked with János (John) Mócsy (until its 11th German edition, 1939), the renowned textbook of Ferenc (Francis) Hutýra, and József (Joseph) Marek, entitled Spezielle Pathologie und Therapie der Haustiere, vols. i,ii,iii (1905, 6th edition 1922), in Hungarian: Állatorvosi belgyógyászat, (1894-1898), This work was an international success, translated into English, Italian, Spanish, Russian and Chinese, and published in several editions. He also published Infectious Diseases of Domestic Mammals (A házi emlősök fertőző betegségei) (1939). He received the Kossuth Prize twice. There is a memorial medal and a memorial plaque in his honor. – B: 1068, 1582, 1730, 1031, T: 7456.→Hutýra, Ferenc; Mócsy, János; Marek, József.

Mansfeld, Géza (Budapest, 26 February 1882 - Geneva, 11 January 1950) – Physician, physiologist. He completed his Medical studies at the University of Budapest in 1905, then, for two years, he pursued further studies at the Universities of Vienna and London. From 1907 he was a demonstrator in the Department of Pharmacology; in 1920, honorary lecturer of experimental pharmacology; in 1916, he became an assistant professor; from 1918, he was Professor of Pharmacology and Pathology at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and later on, at the University of Pécs. In 1944 (when Hungary came under German occupation) he was carried off to the Auschwitz Concentration Camp. After World War II, he returned to Hungary and, between 1946 and 1950, was Professor of Biology at the Medical School at the University of Budapest, and Director of the Biological Institute. His medical work covered almost the entire field of Pharmacology; he also did important work in Immunology. Among others, he was occupied with the diseases of the thyroid gland, the functioning of the endocrine glands, the problems of blood circulation, the temperature control of the system and diabetes. His work includes: Pharmacology (Gyógyszertan) (1912) co-authored with Z. Vámosy and B. Fenyvessy; Die Hormone der Schilddrüse und ihre Wirkungen (1943), and New Pathways of the Physiology of Infection and Immunity (1949). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.

Mansfeld, Péter (Budapest, 10 March 1941 - Budapest, 21 March 1959) – Student of industry, one of the kids of Pest, the youngest martyr of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. When he was four, the invading Soviet Russian troops took away the male members of his family for forced labor (malenki robot) in 1945. His grandfather did not return. His father was a barber. In the early 1950s, his parents were divorced; he remained with his mother and his elder and younger sisters. After completing the primary school at Medve Street, Budapest, he became an industrial student, specializing in turnery at the Mátyás Rákosi Industrial School on Csepel Island (southern, industrial suburb of Budapest). In 1956 he was transferred to the State Railways Engineering Works (MÁVAG). During the Revolution in 1956, he joined the resistance group led by “Uncle Szabó” at Széna Plaza, on the Buda side. At first, he was almost sent away, being considered too young, since he was only 15 at that time, but then he became the vehicular connecting link (liaison), though he did not have a license to drive a car. He stayed with the resistance fighters until 4 November. Thereafter, he was collecting weapons (some of them from the villa of the Former Minister of the Interior, László Piros), hiding them and intending to use them, if the Revolution were to break out again. While actively organizing this, he and his companions were arrested. He was sentenced to death for participating in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. Since he was still a minor, they waited until he turned 18 and, a few days after his birthday, he was executed. His grave is in plot 301 of the New Public Cemetery (Köztemető in District XIX, Budapest). There is a street named after him in Budapest, and the Theater of a School bears his name. His statue in the Veronika Park in Budapest was dedicated in 2004; a film on him entitled: From a Higher Point of View (Magasabb szempontból) was made in 2006. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Boys of Budapest.

Mányoki, Ádám (Szokolya, 1673 - Dresden, Germany, 6 August 1757) – Painter. He was born into the family of a Minister of the Reformed Church. First, he studied Art in Hamburg and in Hanover, where he was a student of A. Scheitz until 1703; and between 1703 and 1707, he was at the Prussian Court in Berlin. After he had painted the portrait of Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, he returned home to be the official court painter. Beside his artistic work, he served the Reigning Prince in a diplomatic capacity as well. In 1709, Rákóczi sent him to the Netherlands, then to Danzig. In 1713 he went to Warsaw, in 1714, to Dresden, and later to Berlin. He painted the portrait of the favorite mistress of the King of Poland, as well as the portraits of many member of the court. In 1717, he became the Court Painter of the Saxon Prince; but later in 1724, following a trip to Vienna, he returned to Hungary. He went to Berlin and Leipzig once more and finally settled in Dresden, in the Court of the Saxon King, where he worked until his death. His art works had a great influence on Central European culture. His portraits are famous all over Europe. Several portraits, among them the Portraits of Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II (II Rákóczi Ferenc arcképei) (1708, 1712), and another portrait of the Prince of 1724, are in the National Gallery, Budapest. His other works include Self-portrait (Önarckép) (1711), also in the National Gallery; The Countess of Dörrhoff (Dörrhoff Grófnő) (1713), and Portrait of Judit and János Podmaniczky (Podmaniczky Judit és János képmása) (1724). He is one of the most recognized, talented and renowned Hungarian baroque portrait painters. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7653.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

MAORT Affair, The – The Hungarian-American Oil Industry Ltd. (MAORT – Magyar Amerikai Olajipari Rt.) owned the Lispe oilfields. When World War II ended, the Americans sent two representatives to Hungary to reorganize production in cooperation with Simon Papp, a university professor, who was also the Chief Executive Officer of MAORT. To prevent the investment of more American capital, and to assist in the nationalization of foreign owned businesses, a charge of sabotage was brought against them on the basis of a report by the ÁVH (Államvédelmi Hatóság – State Security Authority). The two Americans were expelled, and Simon Papp was sentenced to death. However, since there was no other person to operate the oil fields, his death sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. For nearly six years Simon Papp oversaw the already nationalized Lispe oil fields from prison, where he was given a private cell, better food and the privilege of monthly correspondence with his wife. In the meantime, his wife became seriously ill but she did not want to further worry her husband, so she kept her illness a secret. When she died, a professional graphologist, working for the State Security Police (Államvédelmi Hivatal – AVH), continued corresponding with him in her name, because the AVH was worried Simon Papp would stop working for them if he found out about his wife's death. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→Papp, Simon; State Security Police.

Maps of Hungary – The first significant world map was made in England around 1000 AD in illuminated manuscript form. It had Latin place names with dates and descriptions. The Anglo-Saxon Map in Cotton M.S. (manuscript) is now in the British Library. This map includes the names of Pannonia and Tracia and, between them: Hunorum gen., that is: territory of the Huns around 1000 AD. This “Hun Nation” may indicate the area of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania); but the inscription may also designate the environs of Esztergom in Western Hungary. This appears to be the first map to show Hungary. It includes the area occupied by the Huns (Hungarians) around 1000 AD. Maps of the Carpathian Basin were already made early in medieval times. Among them are the ones connected to the most famous Claudius Ptolemaeus School. They surveyed the Roman Empire, the paved roads, fording places and settlements of the times, including the area of today's Hungary. A large number of Hungarian settlement names appear on the map of Al-Idrisi, the Arabic cartographer, drawn in 1154. There is a well-detailed description of surveying methods in the 12 July 1379 letter of the Nyitra Chapter (now Nitra, Slovakia) dealing with disputed properties, although this is not a map.

A series of maps of Hungary started with the work of the German Nicolaus Cusanus, in the middle of the 15th century. Those maps, printed in 1491, are already considered modern. Roselli, an Italian cartographer living in Buda during the era of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) followed Cusanus (also called Cusa) in the middle of the 1470's. He prepared a correct Ungaria-map. In it Septemcastrum Transylvania (Erdély of Seven Castles) was delineated with its rivers, mountains and settlements. On it the Danubius (Danube) as well as the Scames (Szamos), Drana (Dráva) and Uag (Vág) rivers are denominated. Only 50 of the larger Hungarian settlements are on Roselli's map. Not only the first panoramic depiction of Buda can be seen in the famous Scheidel World Chronicle (that had several editions following 1493), but it also includes simplified versions of Cusa's map sheets.

The first Hungarian cartographer known by name dates only from the 16th century, due to the activities of Lázár (Lazarus) scribe, secretary to Archbishop Tamás (Thomas) Bakócz. The very first Hungarian map may have been drawn between 1500 and 1510, the first of its kind that is not only part of a world atlas but it also shows Hungary separately. The first Ingolstadt edition (1528) was found only about 120 years ago. This map was published in Venice (1553), in Vienna (1556), and in Rome (1559). János (John) Zsámboki, Count Marsigli, Louis Ferdinand and astronomer, Miksa (Maximilian) Hell are the great names of old Hungarian cartography. Sámuel (Samuel) Mikovinyi was the great reformer of map design.

Also famous are Pál (Paul) Vásárhelyi, waterways regulator, and Demeter (Demetrius) Görög, the first map publisher. The name of Ferenc (Francis) Karács emerges as the best map engraver. The series of county maps began with County Pozsony in 1735. A full series of Hungary's County maps was completed in 1811. Pál (Paul) Kitaibel prepared the world's first earthquake map in connection with the 1810 earthquake in Mór. The first model and firmament hemisphere with Hungarian inscriptions was prepared for 150 schools under the direction of Károly (Charles) Nagy in 1840.

Pál (Paul) Gönczy was the master mapmaker-draftsman of the 19th century. His first school wall map (1866) was followed by new county maps of Hungary in the 1890's. During the Habsburg era, all military maps were prepared in Vienna. The development of military cartography is connected to colonel Ágoston (Austin) Tóth (active after 1869). The detailed topographic maps appeared only after World War I, at the Royal Hungarian State Cartography Institute. In the first part of the 20th century, the Hungarian Geographic Institute accelerated map making. This is largely synonymous with the name of Manó (Emmanuel) Kogutowic.

Outstanding Hungarian cartographers were János (John) Honterus (1498-1549), János (John) Zsámbori (1531-1584), Gábor (Gabriel) Hevenesi (1656-1715), Mátyás (Matthias)

Béla (1684-1749), János (John) Korabinszky (1740-1811), Miklós (Nicholas) Vay (1756-1824), Demeter (Demetrius) Görög (1760-1833), Ézsaiás (Isaiah) Budai (1766-1841), János (John) Lipszky (1766-1826), Lajos (Louis) Schedius (1768-1847), Ferenc (Francis) Karacs (1770-1838), János (John) Lakatos (1776-1843), Károly (Charles) Mártony Kőszeghy (1783-1848), László (Ladislav) Vörös (1790-1870), Ágoston (Austin) Tóth (1812-1889), Pál (Paul) Gönczy (1817-1892), Manó (Emmanuel) Kogutowicz (1851-1908), Jenő (Eugene) Cholnoky (1870-1950), Pál (Paul) Teleki (1879-1941), László (Ladislav) Irmédi-Molnár (1895-1971), István (Stephen) Turner (1900-1974), József (Joseph) Takács (1901-1986) and Kálmán (Coloman) Bakonyi (1919-1994). – B: 1138, 1020, 1671, T: 7675. → Honterus, János; Zsámboki, János; Hevenesi, Gábor; Budai, Ézsaiás; Schedius, Lajos; Karacs, Ferenc; Gönczy, Pál; Kogutowicz, Manó; Cholnoky, Jenő; Teleki, Count Pál.

Marác, László Károly (Ladislav Charles) (Utrecht, 19 May 1960 - ) – Linguist. He is a second generation Hungarian, born in Holland. His higher studies were at the University of Groningen (1978-1984). He started to work as a scientific associate at the Linguistic Institute of the University of Groningen (1984-1990); from 1990 to 1992 he was on a Niels-Stenson scholarship at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, USA; at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest, and the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Paris. From 1992 he has been teaching at the East European Institute of the University of Amsterdam. His field of research is Hungarian Syntax, the relations between Hungary and the West, and the origin of the Hungarian language. His works include Hungarian Revival - Political Reflections on Central Europe (1996), also in Hungarian translation: Magyar újjászületés. Politikai elmékedések Közép Európáról (2008), and Legal Culture in Five Central European Countries, co-author (2000). He translated into Dutch the novel by Ferenc (Francis) Sánta, entitled: The Fifth Seal (Az ötödik pecsét). He is a recipient of the Bocskai Prize (1996). – B: 0874, 1945, T: 7103.

Márai, Sándor (Alexander) (Grosschmid) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 11 April 1900 - San Diego, CA, USA, 21 February 1989) – Writer, poet. He was born into a well-to-do Saxon family. At the age of 18, he was already writing for the newspaper,

Budapest Diary (Budapesti Napló). He studied Philosophy in Budapest, Frankfurt, Berlin and Paris, and Journalism at the University of Leipzig. Between 1919 and 1923, he lived in Germany and, between 1923 and 1928, in France. He worked for several newspapers, including the Frankfurter Zeitung and the Prager Tageblatt, as well as for French papers. His writing career began as a poet. He also translated, wrote novels, essays, travel articles and plays. From 1928 he lived and worked in Hungary for 20 years. He left his country for the West in 1948, and lived in Switzerland, Italy and the United States, and was a correspondent for Radio Free Europe for a short time. He was a prolific writer and published almost 50 books between 1918 and 1949; many of his plays were presented on Hungarian stages. His prose was noted for its beautiful language, wise elucidations and clear expressions. The Funeral Oration (Halotti Beszéd), which became his most significant poetic work, was written in 1951. At first, it circulated informally until it was officially published, following the political changes in Hungary. He perfected 20th century Hungarian essay writing and his style became de rigueur in Hungarian prose. Even at the dawn of the new era, he devoted himself to the historically declining bourgeois lifestyle and its literary views, though, in his younger years, he had rebelled against it. Although he lived for several decades in a different linguistic milieu, he was able to retain the beauty, clarity and elegant style of his mother tongue. Márai ended his life by his own hands. A selection of his works: Confessions of a Citizen (Egy polgár vallomásai), novel (1934, 1990); Sinbad Goes Home (Szindbád hazamegy), novel (1940, 1992); The True Gentleman (Az igazi úr), novel (1941, 1992); Sea-Gull (Sirály), novel (1943); Diary 1943-1944 (Napló, 1943-1944), (1945, 1990); The Sister (A nővér), novel (1946); Kidnapping of Europe (Európa elrablása), accounts of a journey (1947); The Dolphin Looks Back (A delfin visszanéz), selected poems (1982), and Thirty Pieces of Silver (Harminc ezüstpénz), novel (1983). Some of his plays are: Adventure (Kaland), and Citizens of Kassa (Kassai polgárok). He also wrote plays for radio and television. In spite of spending most of his life in exile, he actually became one of the most influential Hungarian writers, with growing international fame in the second half of the 20th century. His works are undergoing a renaissance in Hungary, with fast growing popularity all over Europe. His books have been translated into a number of languages and have achieved several editions. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1941, regular 1945-1948, posthumous 1989). He was posthumously awarded the Kossuth Prize (1990). – B: 0873, 0883, 1257, 1672, T: 3240.

Máramaros (now Marmures, Romania) – A region of the Carpathian Basin situated partly in Ruthenia (Carpatho-Ukraine, now in Ukraine) and partly in northernmost Transylvania (now in Romania), in the area of the Northeastern Carpathian Mountains and their foothills. Before 1920 (the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty), it had been a county, as a part of Historic Hungary since about 900 AD. The River Tisza divides it into two. The earliest extant records are from 1199. It was a sparsely populated royal hunting area; however, due to its salt-mines, it had significance from the earliest times. The power center of the one-time county was Huszt (now Khust, Ukraine). The chartered (politically and administratively privileged) nature of some of its settlements and towns, the so-called royal free boroughs and the medieval basic Saxon stratum of some settlements played an important role in the development of its Hungarian folk culture. In the time of King Károly I (Charles, 1307-1342), Hosszúmező (now Campulung la Tisa, Romania), Máramarossziget (now Sighetu Marmatiei, Romania), Técső (now Tyachiv, Ukraine), and Visk (now Vishova, Ukraine) enjoyed the rights of the royal free towns. The coat-of-arms of the county – in wooded surroundings at the mouth of an open salt-shaft, stand two miners holding a salt-cutting pick-axe – established in 1748, refers to the basic occupation of its population. On it the four undulating fesses symbolize the four rivers of the County: Nagyag, Talabor, Tisza and Visa. Ruthenians migrated into the county from the north, Romanians from the south. The 1920 Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon split the area into two parts: the northern part was ceded to Czechoslovakia (now part of the Ukraine) and the southern part to Romania. – B: 1134, 1031, T: 7456.

March 15 – The “Ides of March” is a national day commemorating Hungary’s War of Independence of 1848-1849. In the spring of 1848, following the revolutionary events in Vienna and Paris, the young radicals of Budapest (Márciusi ifjak; Youth of March), led by Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi and Pál (Paul) Vasvári, organized a large demonstration, joined by the workers and the bourgeoisie. The demands of the Hungarian nation were outlined in Twelve Points, and Petőfi’s “National Song” (Nemzeti Dal) was recited by the poet on the steps of the National Museum, printed without censorship, and distributed among the demonstrators. The popular meeting in front of the National Museum in the afternoon pressured city officials to accept their Peace Committee for the defense of public order. Then they freed Mihály (Michael) Táncsics from his prison in Buda. The events of this day enabled Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, Leader of the Opposition, to secure the fundamental laws of a semi-independent bourgeois Hungary in the Imperial Court at Vienna, which Austria and the Diet in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) were forced to endorse. However, the Clique of the Court, the so-called Camarilla, undermined the reforms by inciting the national minorities against Hungary, and a Croatian army, under the leadership of the Ban (viceroy) Josip Jellacic, invaded Hungary. Thus began the War of Independence (1848-1849). This has been commemorated throughout Hungary since 1860. While its observance was prohibited during the Soviet occupation following World War II; however, on 10 March 1957, by government decree No. 16/1957, and following the demise of the Communist Regime in 1989, it again became an official National Holiday. – B: 1230, 1138, T: 3240.→March’s Youth; Kossuth, Lajos; Táncsics, Mihály; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

March 1848, 12 Points – The demands, listed in twelve points by the civic revolution of March 1848. While Lajos (Louis) Kossuth was in Vienna negotiating with the Habsburg Government, dramatic events took place in the Hungarian Capital. On behalf of the opposition of the last Diet in the history of the nation, József (Joseph) Irinyi formulated the list of demands on 12 March 1848. Prior to that Kossuth made an epoch-making speech at the Diet in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) on 3 March, in which he demanded sweeping reforms in Hungary.

The Revolution in Vienna was an encouraging event for the Hungarian radical youth in Pest, since it supported Kossuth’s demands for Hungary, and the Austrians demanded similar rights for themselves. Metternich was dismissed and fled to save his life. On the morning of 15 March, a group of young intellectuals (the Pilvax Circle) assembled in the Café Pilvax of Pest, later to become known as the Youth of March (Márciusi ifjak). With their leaders, Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, Mór (Maurice) Jókai and Pál Vasvári, they decided that they would realize the freedom of press; thus they went to the Landerer & Heckenast Printing workshop and seized control. Without prior permission from the censors, the twelve demands and the great poet Petőfi’s National Song were printed. They called a huge meeting in the afternoon at the National Museum, at which some 10,000 people were present. Mór Jókai the great novelist spoke first. He read a proclamation outlined in 12 points:

1. Freedom of the press with the abolition of censorship.
2. Appointment of a Hungarian Ministry.
3. Annual Diet in Buda-Pest.
4. Equality of all in the eyes of the Law.
5. Formation of a National Guard.
6. Collective taxation.
7. Abolition of feudal rights in agriculture. 8. Elected juries for criminal cases. 9. Creation of a national bank. 10. Creation of a national army. 11. Liberation of political prisoners. 12. Union of Hungary and Transylvania

All the points were followed by thunderous applause. Then the great lyric poet, Petőfi, with his powerful poetry stepped forward and declaimed his National Song (Nemzeti Dal) starting with Talpra magyar:

*Rise Hungarians, your country calls!
The time is now, now or never!
Shall we be slaves, or free?
This is the question, choose!*

Then the revolutionary leaders went to the Municipal Council of Pest and to the Viceregal Council, and forced them to grant their demands outlined in the 12 points. They also succeeded in obtaining the release from prison of Mihály Táncsics, a radical politician with socialistic writings representing the peasants. The evening became a festive occasion, when József Katona's great drama, Bánk bán (blacklisted by the Habsburg government), was performed at the National Theater, the great novelist, Jókai, playing the leading role and the famous actress, Róza Laborfalvi, playing the leading female part. This concluded the Bloodless Revolution of the Hungarians in Buda-Pest. A few days earlier, the Crown was forced to retreat: Emperor-King Ferdinand V promised Austria a new Constitution. The Revolution was victorious. In future, 15 March became a National Day in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1031, 1068, 1105; T: 7456.→Irinyi, József; Petőfi, Sándor; Jókai, Mór; Táncsics, Mihály; Katona, József; March Youth; Pillwax Café House; Laborfalvi, Róza; Heckenaszt, Gustav; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Marchland (Borderland, gyepűelve) – After the 896-900 settlement of the Carpathian Basin, a largely uninhabited area at the time, carried out by the Magyar tribal confederation, led by Khagan Árpád, the western border was established inside the legal limit for defensive purposes and was called the gyepű (marchland). The line was drawn from Moson through Kapuvár and Sárvár up to Vasvár. The western limit of the gyepű was the actual border of the country. It was an inaccessible fortified no-mans-land, and crossing was permitted at certain designated points. Certain clans and tribes were settled nearby to maintain and defend the marchland. Those were the tribes that had joined the Magyars, such as the Khabars (Kabarok), Petchenegs (Besenyők) and the Szeklers (Székelyek). The border zone was patrolled and the gate-guards secured the entrance gates. They used their own weapons and sustained themselves without pay but in turn received all the privileges of the other free tribes. Their commander-in-chief was the head-guard delegated by the King. In front of the marchland – beyond the border – the boundary was also an uninhabited strip of land. Thus in the west a doubly guarded border protected Hungary in the Middle Ages. In the 11th century, right behind the marchland, a chain of earthen fortifications (földvárak) was erected with forts like Csákány, Ikervár, Sárvár, and Vasvár. This line of defense slowly moved toward the west during the 12th century. Within the marchland region some forts were erected, like the Benedictine cloister (founded in 1157) that was transformed into a permanent fortification by King Béla III (1172-1196). Right after the Mongol invasion (1241-1242) a chain of stone castles and forts became the backbone of the western defense system of Hungary. The border guards continued their duty after that transformation but their significance diminished in time. – B: 1132, 1143, 0945, T: 3233.→Borderland; Gyepű.

March Youth – The radical writers, intellectuals and university students, most of the members of the group Young Hungary (Fiatal Magyarország), who initiated the 15 March 1848 uprising against the oppressive policies of the Habsburgs. Their leaders were: Dániel Irányi, József (Joseph) Irinyi, Mór (Maurice) Jókai, Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi and Pál (Paul) Vasvári. On the request of the Opposition Circle (Ellenzéki Kör) they drafted the famous 12 points (demands). – B: 1136, 1231, T: 7665.→March 15; Pillwax Café House; March's 12 Points; Petőfi, Sándor; Irinyi, József; Jókai, Mór; Vasvári, Pál; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Marczali, Henrik (Marcali, 3 April 1856 - Budapest, 23 July 1940) – Historian. He studied abroad in Vienna, Paris and Berlin. From 1878 he was a teacher at the grammar school at the Teachers' College of Budapest. From 1895 to 1919 he was Professor of Hungarian History at the University of Budapest. He was engaged in almost every period of Hungarian history. Because of his progressive approach, after the fall of the Soviet Council Republic of 1919, he lost his position. His wide-ranging, positivistic literary works embraced equally the older and more recent themes of Hungarian and world history. From 1898 he edited (and partly wrote the recent history, 3 vols.) the Great Illustrated World History series. He was the first to treat 18th century history of Hungary in more detailed studies, covering also economic, social and cultural aspects, with much appreciation of the Habsburg rulers. Marczali played an important part in the development of Hungarian history and he was a significant representative of the civic historical approach. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (from 1893). His works include Sources of Hungarian History of the Arpadian Era (1880); Hungarian History of the Era of Joseph II, vols. i,ii,iii (Magyarország története II. József korában I-III) (1882-1886); Maria Theresa (1891); History of Hungary from Charles III to the Congress of Vienna 1711-1815 (1896); Die Nationalität vom historisch-philosophischen Standpunkt (1905), and History of Transylvania (1935). He also published The Handbook of the Sources of Hungarian History (1902); Hungary in the Eighteenth Century (Cambridge, 1910) and Ungarisches Verfassungsrecht (Tübingen, 1911). – B: 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7456.

Marczis, Demeter (Demetrius) (Ostoros, 20 November 1931 - Budapest, 28 April 2008) – Opera singer (bass). He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and at the Academia di Tito Schipa, Rome. He was a member of the Hungarian Radio Choir. In 1958 he was awarded 2nd Prize at the Munich International Song Competition; in 1959 he received 1st Prize at the Song Competition of the Academy of Music, Budapest. Between 1959 and 1988 he was lead singer and founding member of the Opera Company of the National Theater of Pécs (Pécsi Nemzeti Színház), and also the Director of the Opera Company (1984-1988), and from 1990, its life member. From 1988 to 1994 he was a guest artist of the Budapest Opera House. Between 1995 and 1997 he was a permanent Guest Singer at the German Theater of Szekszárd (Szekszárdi Német Színház). There are 60 roles in his repertoire, among them: Ozmin in Mozart's Il Seraglio (Abduction from the Seraglio – Szöktetés a szerájból); Sarastro in The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Giovanni and Leporello in Don Giovanni; Figaro in The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Don Alfonzo in Così fan tutte (Woman are Like that – Mindenki így csinálja); Rocco in Beethoven's Fidelio; Basilio in Rossini's Barber of Seville (A szevillai borbély); Ramphis in Verdi's Aida; Mephisto in Gounod's Faust; Tiborc in Erkel's Bánk bán, and Bluebeard in Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú herceg vára). His most memorable roles were in Mozart operas. He also appeared as a Lieder (song) and oratorio singer. His bass roles include 40 oratorios, e.g. by Händel, J.S. Bach and J. Haydn. He has appeared in Europe, the USA, Canada and Asia on 75 occasions. He received the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1965), the Artist of Merit title (1974), the Janus Pannonius Prize (1981) and the Officers' Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary. He was an Honorary Citizen of Budapest, and that of Ostoros. – B: 1445, 1762, 1031, T: 7456.

Marek, József (Joseph) (Vágszerdahely, now Dolná Streda, Slovakia, 18 March 1868 - Budapest, 7 September 1952) – Veterinarian. He obtained a Veterinary Degree from the University of Budapest in 1892. From 1892 to 1894 he was Chief Veterinarian of the town of Pest, later Head of the Laboratory of the Bureau of Animal Health at Kőbánya, a suburb of Budapest. From 1897 he was an assistant lecturer of Internal Medicine at the Veterinary School of the University of Budapest. In 1898 he obtained his Ph.D. in Art, and from 1901 he was Professor of Internal Medicine. He made important contributions in connection with breeding paralysis, sheep rot, glanders and animal rachitis. He defined the chicken paralysis syndrome, to be called Marek Disease later. A number of animal medicines are linked with his name, such as Distol, used for treating the rot. The rhinolaryngoscope (nose-larynx mirror) developed by him is still an important diagnostic tool today. From 1935 to 1940 he was a member of the Upper House of Parliament. He was a member of numerous scientific societies in Hungary and abroad, such as the Hungarian National Veterinary Society (Magyar Országos Állatorvos Egyesület). His publications include Lehrbuch der klinischen Diagnostik der inneren Krankheiten der Haustiere (1912), and Specielle Pathologie und Therapie der Haustiere. vols. i,ii,iii, textbook (1905), co-authored with Ferenc (Francis) Hutýra (7th edition in 1938), (in Hungarian: Állatorvosi belgyógyászat, (1894-1898), He and Rezső Manninger continued it until its 11th German edition in 1939. This work was an international success, translated into English, Italian, Spanish, Russian and Chinese, and several editions were translated into English, Spanish, Polish, Russian and Chinese. He was a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1918, regular 1938, President 1940). He received the Kossuth Prize in 1949. A school and a college in Mohács are named after him. – B: 1730, 1105, T: 7456.→ Hutýra Ferenc; Manninger, Rezső; Mócsy, János.

Márffy, Ödön (Edmund) (Budapest, 30 November 1878 - Budapest, 3 December 1959) - Painter. He studied at the Julian Academy of Paris and at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts. He worked in the Cormon Studio. In 1907 he returned to Hungary, where he led the Hungarian postimpressionism; however, he retained traces of the constructivism of his youth. From 1906 he often appeared in the exhibitions of the Salon d'Automne and the Salon Carre in Paris. Following his return to Hungary, he took part in a collective exhibition, where his works of lyric atmosphere, a result of his plein air ambitions, were featured. After an extensive trip to Italy, he became one of the founding members of The Group of Eight, and became one of the leading exponents of the postimpressionist efforts. In his works, he successfully combined the Paris school with Hungarian traditions. He had a free, richly colored style combined with a dynamic presentation. In 1928 he visited the USA, where he organized a number of successful exhibitions. A number of his works are held in museums abroad; the Hungarian National Gallery also has several of his works. He was a friend of the great lyric poet Endre (Andrew) Ady and, in 1922 he married Ady's widow, Csinszka (Berta Boncza). Pál Pátzay wrote a monograph on him. His works include Girl in the Grass (Leány a zöldben) (1906); Standing Nude (Álló akt) (1911); Still Life (Csendélet) (1930); Self Portrait (Önarckép) (1940); the large size Fruit Pickers (Gyümölcszedők) (1949); the portrait of Lajos (Louis) Gulácsy (1907), and the lithograph St. John's Visitations (Szt. János jelenései). He received the Franz Joseph Jubilee Prize (1907), the Prize of the Szinyei Society (1931), the Gold Medal of the Hungarian State (1947), and the title of Artist of Merit (1958). – B: 0934, 1068, T: 7456. → Ady, Endre; Pátzay, Pál; Gulácsy, Lajos; Eight, The Group of.

Margaret of Scotland, Saint (Skóciai Szt. Margit) (Reska, now the ruins of Réka Castle in Mecseknádasd, ca. 1045 - Edinburgh, 16 November 1093) – Queen of Scotland. She was the granddaughter of Edward Ironside, killed by the Danes. His two sons fled to the court of the King of Hungary, where Prince Edward married the Royal Princess Ágota (Agatha), and Margaret was their firstborn child, followed by seven other children. After the Danish occupation, her father returned to England as heir to the throne (ca. 1057), but he died there soon afterwards. Her family had to flee after the Norman Conquest and her mother, Ágota, wanted to return to Hungary, but a sea-storm prevented her, thus they reached the Scottish shores. King Malcolm III offered protection to the party and took Margaret as his wife. Queen Margaret exercised considerable influence upon the King in matters of religion and piety. She initiated reforms in the Scottish Church, convoked a national synod, and introduced a unified liturgy, and constructed churches and schools. She cared for the sick and destitute and founded the Abbey of Dunfermline, where she was buried in front of the high altar. Her prayer book and contemporary biography, written by Archbishop Turgot and Friar Theodoric, survived. Pope Innocent IV canonized her and made her the Patron Saint of Scotland. There is a chapel named after her in the Castle of Edinburgh. – B: 0945, 1031, T: 7103.

Margit (Margaret) Saint, the Legend – A manuscript about St Margit of the Royal House of Árpád, daughter of King Béla IV (1235-1270), copied by Lea Ráskai in 1510. It is the first Margit legend written in Hungarian. It had 231 pages and three parts: 1) Review of Margaret's life in the nunnery. 2) Details of Margaret's miracles. 3) The facts of her canonization records as testified to by the nuns. Lea Ráskai localized an earlier legend based on topographical conditions of the period. Margaret's confessor, "Fratr Senior", probably Frater Marcellus, most probably wrote its oldest Latin version. Johannes Vercellensis based his work on this version and it was the source of Jorg Walter's German translation. It is the most important Codex of the Dominican Nunnery of the Island of Hares (today Margaret Island) in the Danube at Budapest, due to its cultural historical details. Now the manuscript is held in the National Széchényi Library in Budapest. – B: 1150, 0925, 1031, T: 3240.→Margit (Margaret) Saint, of the House of Árpád; Ráskai, Lea; Codex Literature.

Margit (Margaret), Saint of the House of Árpád, (Klissa, Dalmatia, 27 January 1242 – “Island of Hares” (Nyulak Szigete), now Margaret Island (Margit sziget), Budapest, 18 January 1270) – Nun O.P. She was the daughter of Hungarian King Béla IV (1235-1270) and Maria Laskaris. Her aunt was St. Erzsébet (Elizabeth) of the House of Árpád, her brother King István V (Stephen), and her sisters were St. Kinga and the Blessed Jolán (Yolanda). Following the lost Battle of Muhi against the invading Mongol-Tartar army (11-12 April, 1241), the Hungarian royal family escaped to Dalmatia. The royal couple offered their child to-be-born to God. When they returned to Hungary, the King had a Convent built on the “Island of Hares” in the River Danube, where Princess Margaret settled in 1252, and took her vows in 1254. In the cloister, she carried out difficult services and her life was spent in hard penance. She refused all marriage offers and any release from her vows. She predicted the date and time of her own death. Her father, the King died not long after her. She was buried in front of the altar in the convent’s church. Her long canonization proceeding began in 1276, and was only concluded in 1943 by Pope Pius XII. Her biography was written some 40 years after her death and was copied into a Codex by Lea Ráskai in 1510. Churches, schools, hospitals and pharmacies bear her name. – B: 0945, 1673, T: 7103.→Béla IV, King; Muhi, Battle of; Jolán, Saint (Yolanda), Kinga, Saint; Ráskai, Lea; Codex Literature.

Margitai, Ági (Agnes Margittay) (Budapest, 12 July 1932 - ) – Actress. In 1958, after completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, she accepted an engagement with the Theater in Pécs, from 1962, with the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház), Kecskemét, from 1963 the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház), Budapest and, from 1965, the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Miskolc. In 1968, the Microscope Stage (Mikroszkóp Színpad), Budapest, engaged her. Between 1970 and 1972 she played at the Szeged Theater (Szegedi Színház), from 1972, at the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház) and, from 1978, in the Theater of Szolnok (Szolnoki Színház). From 1982 she was a member of the Hungarian Film Studios and, from 1990, of the National Theater of Miskolc. Her interesting, colorful personality renders her equally suitable for dramatic and comic roles. Her best-known roles include Julia in Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet; Kate in The Taming of the Shrew (Makrancos hölgy); Gertrud in Hamlet; Eliza in Shaw’s Pygmalion; Elisabeth in Schiller’s Maria Stuart, and Sonia in Chekhov’s Uncle Vanya (Ványa bácsi). There are more than 35 feature films to her credit among them: Deliver Us from Evil (Szabadíts meg a gonosztól) (1979); Circus Maximus (1980); Lost Illusions (Elveszett illúziók) (1983); Mesmer (1994); The Fall (A bukás) (1998), and Der Geköpfte Hahn (The Decapitated Rooster) (2006). Among her TV films are: Snow-Queen (Hókirálynő) (1964); At the End of September (Szeptember végén) (1973); Sell-out Sale (Végkiárusítás) (1978), and Presszó (series, 2008). She is a recipient the Mari Jászai Prize (1962), the Merited Artist title (1959), the Outstanding Artist title (1973), and the Kossuth Prize (2010). – B: 1439, 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Margittay, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 16 November 1927 - Budapest, 10 June 1992) – Organist, conductor, musicologist. He studied at the Benedictine High School, Budapest, where he played reed organ at student masses. Later he was a student of Viktor Sugár at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he received his qualifications as organist and conductor 1950. Besides being soloist with the National Philharmonic Society, he gave more than 1000 organ concerts in churches all over the country. Initially he played J.S. Bach's and G.F. Handel's Baroque organ music. Later, his repertoire included works of romantic French and modern composers. He was the first in Hungary to play all of Liszt's organ works. He was frequently on concert tours in Europe. He was choirmaster of the Cistercian Church of Buda, then choirmaster of the Budapest Choir between 1949 and 1978. His oratorio performances were memorable. His works include an edition of Franz Liszt's Organ Works vols. i-iv (1970-1973); the Historia Organoediae, vols. i-xvi., He also made a number of recordings. He was awarded the first Hungarian Grand Prix and numerous foreign prizes. He was honored with the title of Merited Artist. – B: 0876, 0945, T: 7103.

Mária, Queen (1) ( ? 1370 - ? 17 May 1395) – Née Maria of Anjou. She was daughter and successor of King Lajos I (Louis the Great) (1342-1382). Impersonating a boy at the young age of twelve in 1382, she was elevated to the throne and crowned at Székesfehérvár. At first her mother reigned in her place; then, between 1382 and 1387, she ruled independently. After 1387, her husband, Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg), ruled in her place. She inherited the Polish throne but was forced to renounce it in favor of her sister Hedvig. – B: 1078, 1138, T: 7658.→Hedvig, Saint.

Mária, Queen (2) (Brussels, 17 September 1505 - Cigales, Spain 18 October 1558) – Wife of King Lajos II (Louis, 1516-1526), daughter of Phillip I Habsburg (the Handsome), King of Castille and Johanna (the Insane). She was crowned Queen of Hungary at Székesfehérvár in 1521, and of Bohemia in 1522. She lived at the Hungarian Royal Court and kept clerics, filled with the idea of the Reformation. After the death of her husband in the fateful battle against the invading Turks at Mohács, on 29 August 1526, she moved to Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) to successfully assist her brother in obtaining the Hungarian throne. In 1527, Martin Luther dedicated his book Vier tröstliche Psalmen to her. After 1556, she retired to Spain. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7658.→Maria Queen's Dress; Lajos II, King.

Maria, Queen's Dress – A green, silk-damask dress with a matching skirt displayed in the Church of Mariacell, Austria, together with a particularly beautiful man's mantle and shirt. Mariacell was a location of pilgrimage for centuries. During earlier times, it was believed that King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) donated these items to the shrine. The Hungarian National Museum took possession of them in 1928. Experts in the Museum established that the clothing was made in 1520. This year coincides with the date of marriage between the 15-year-old King Lajos II (1516-1526) of Hungary and the 16 year-old Queen Maria on 11 December in Innsbruck, Austria. The dating of the dress to 1520 was confirmed by tests carried out in 1985. Today, the only older dress in existence, dated to 1363, is on display in the Dome of Uppsala, Sweden. The other one, made in 1580, is a jealously guarded treasure of the Museum of Nuremberg. – B: 1020, T: 7662.→Maria, Queen (2); Lajos II, King.

Maria's Lamentation, Old Hungarian (Planctus – Ómagyar Mária-siralom) – The first extant lyrical composition in the Hungarian language dating from between 1280 and 1310, discovered in a 298-page Latin Codex used by the Dominican Order. It was among the material that the Catholic University of Leuven, Belgium acquired from a book store in Munich in 1922. Hence the name: Leuven Codex. A foreign language text on one of the pages was identified as Hungarian by a librarian at the Bavarian State Library in Munich. He notified the Hungarian experts, who translated the already faint writing. As page 134b of the Codex was left blank, an anonymous, Hungarian Dominican friar inserted the Hungarian poem onto it. This suggests that the Codex must have been used in a monastery, where the Hungarian language was known. It consists of 37 lines and 132 words. It already uses rhymes and alliterations, e.g. “Világ világa / virágnak virága” (Light of the world / flower of flowers). According to some linguists, it is a paraphrase of a Latin poem by Godefroy de Breteuil (d. 1194). Others attribute it to the lyrics of a musical composition by the sub-prior of the Augustine Friars of Paris, Godefroy de St. Victoire: Planctus ante nescia (fl. 1170 - 1190). The Leuven Codex was acquired through a book exchange by the National Széchényi Library in 1982; it is catalogued under Mny 79. – B: 1031, 1661, T: 7103. → Muzslay, István S.J.; Codex Literature.

Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen (Maria Theresa) (Vienna, 13 May 1717 - Vienna, 29 November 1780) – Empress of Austria, Queen of Hungary and Bohemia. She was the daughter of Emperor King Károly III (Charles, 1711-1740), who promulgated the so-called Pragmatic Sanction (Pragmatica Sanctio, 1740) to allow his daughter to succeed to the Habsburg throne. This is how she became the Archduchess of Austria and Queen of Hungary and Bohemia. As soon as she ascended throne, competing claimants assailed her, especially Frederick the Great of Prussia. In the War of the Austrian Succession (1740-1748), the Prussian King wrenched Silesia from her and penetrated deeply into Austrian territories. In this critical situation, she turned to Hungary for help: the Hungarian Diet enthusiastically voted for substantial military help by shouting: Vitam et sanguinem (We offer: Our life and blood), and this move saved her monarchy. The Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748 concluded the war. Maria Theresa retained her heritage, except that Frederick kept Silesia. Intent on recovering Silesia, Maria Theresa formed an alliance with France and Russia against Prussia. The resulting Seven Years' War (1756-1763) left things as they were, though she gained some territory including Galicia and Lodomeria as a result of the First Partition of Poland. She also secured Bukovina from the Ottoman Empire and some territory from Bavaria in the War of the Bavarian Succession (1778-1779). After 1763, she pursued a consistently peaceful policy concentrating on internal reforms. Although her methods were despotic, she fostered education, codified the laws, and abolished torture. She curbed the abuses of the Church and expelled the Jesuits. After her death, her eldest son József II (Joseph) became Emperor and King (1780-1790). Maria Theresa was a key figure in the power politics of 18th century Europe, who brought unity to the Habsburg Monarchy and was considered one of its most capable rulers. Among her sixteen children were Marie Antoinette and King Lipót II (Leopold) (1790-1792). – B: 0881,1031, 1683, T: 7103, 7456. → Károly III, King.

Máriássy, Ádám (? - Khotin, Bukovina, 1739) – Colonel in the insurgent Kuruc army, follower of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II. He served in the Prince's army during the national uprising, and not only remained faithful to him but also followed him into exile in Rodostó (now Tekirdag), Turkey (1719). For a while, he was in the military service of the Russians, then in the Polish Army. When József (Joseph) Rákóczi started to organize another uprising, he made Máriássy a general. In 1732 Máriássy became Commander of the Kuruc Cavalry and settled in Khotin (formerly in Poland, now in Ukraine), where he died in 1739. – B: 0942, 0883, T: 7456.→Kuruc army; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Máriássy Family – The Márkus and Batizfalvi families are ancient baronial families. Their first known ancestor was Miklós (Nicholas) Comes, who received permission from King László I (St Ladislav, 1077-1095) to build castles. András (Andrew) (Márkusfalva) received the title of Baron in 1840. Péter, János and István (Peter, John and Stephen) took part in King Zsigmond's (Sigismund of Luxemburg, 1387-1437) wars and also received honors for defeating the Hussite troops. Bishop Sándor (Alexander) was the Archprovost of Eger (1740-1755). Family members often acted as sheriffs in the Counties of Gömör and Szepes. Adam was one of the officers of Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, while Sándor was condemned to death as a general in the 1848 War of Independence; however, after serving six years in prison, he was pardoned. – B: 1640, T: 7676.

Máriássy, Félix (Mikófalva, Hungary, 3 June 1915 - Szőny, 26 January 1975) – Film director, prominent filmmaker of the Communist era. He acquired the mastery of film and movie making from Géza Radványi at the Hunnia film works during World War II. At first, he worked as a cutter, then as an assistant director. After 1945 he joined the Hungarian Film Production Co. and prepared some documentaries. He was a creative team member for the film Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában). In 1949 he came out with his own feature film, Mrs. Szabó (Szabóné). His movie (1954), based on the novel, Relatives (Rokonok), by the eminent novelist Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz; and the other film, Budapest Spring (1955), was based on the novel of Ferenc (Francis) Karinthy. These films brought him fame and placed him among the leading film directors. In 1968, his feature, Budapest Spring, was listed among the best 12 films of the post-war period. His other movies include Marriage of Katalin Kis (Kis Katalin házassága) (1950); Half a Pint of Beer (Egy pikkoló világos) (1958); Trial Road (Próbaút) (1961), and Deluge (Áradat) TV film (1971). He prepared his films mostly with the help of his wife, the drama critique and scenarist Judit Máriássy. From 1948, he taught at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. He was President of the International Association of Film Colleges. He received the Prize of the National Council of Trade Unions (SZOT Prize) (1971), the Kossuth Prize (1956) and the Artist of Merit title (1969). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456.→Móricz, Zsigmond; Karinthy, Ferenc; Máriássy, Judit.

Markusovszky, Lajos (Louis) (Csorba, 25 April 1815 - Abbazia, now Opatija, Croatia, 21 April 1893) – Physician. He studied Law in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), then he undertook private coaching in Pest, while he was completing medical studies at the University of Pest. János (John) Balassa recognized his talent and obtained a scholarship for him. As a result, he continued his studies at the University of Vienna in 1844. Here he became acquainted with Dr. Ignác (Ignatius) Semmelweis and formed a life-long friendship with him. From 1847, he was a demonstrator under János Balassa. In 1848 he taught surgery in the army, and later became Chief Physician of the Military Hospital and Surgeon-Major in General Görgey's army. After the collapse of the War of Independence against the Habsburg rule in 1849, the Habsburg authorities retaliated and did not allow him to return to the University of Pest. For a time, he was a private assistant and a follower of Balassa. The Medical Faculty refused his application for the position of an honorary lecturer because of his Protestant faith. In 1857 he launched the journal, Medical Weekly (Orvosi Hetilap), editing it for 32 years. In 1863 he founded the Hungarian Medical Book Publishers Association (Magyar Orvosi Könyvkiadó Társulat). Together with Endre (Andrew) Lengyel, he edited the Medical-Pharmaceutical Dictionary. From 1867 he was working as lecturer on Medical Education in the Ministry of Education, later lecturing on all university matters until his retirement in 1892. In 1893 he became an honorary professor at the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest. His achievements include the modernization of medical training, the establishment of the Chair of Public Health, development of the clinics and the launching of a medical postgraduate extension course. In articles published in the Medical Weekly, he addressed all these issues. The progressive Hungarian doctors grouped around him and Balassa. He was the leading medical officer to hasten the reforms in public health. He was behind the establishment of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and was a leading force behind raising both universities (those of Budapest and Kolozsvár) to European standards. He was one of those who wrote the text of the Public Health Act for the Parliament (1876). In 1886 he founded the Society for National Public Health. The Szombathely Hospital, named after him, established a Markusovszky Memorial Medal. He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1863, honorary 1890). A Square in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.→Balassa, János; Semmelweis, Ignác.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC) frequently featured him until 1948. In his retirement, he gave private piano lessons until 1972. His compositions include Piano Concerto in B-Major (1948); piano pieces, such as After a Farewell (1949); Nightingale (1949); Amber Mountain (1949); Echo Island (1949); Valse-Etude (1944); Tales from the Vienna Woods, arranged for recital (1944), and Spring Voices, arranged for performance (1944). His collected papers are held at the National Library of Canada. – B: 0893, T: 4342.→Thomán, István.

Marlyn, John (sometimes he used Vincent Reid as a pen name). (Nagybecskerek, now Zrenjanin, Serbia, 2 April 1912 - Canary Islands, 16 November 2005) – Novelist and playwright. Although born in what was then Hungary, he became a Canadian novelist. He emigrated to Canada as a child with his parents and settled in Winnipeg, Manitoba – the setting for his novels. In the 1930s, he worked as a script reader for a studio in England, but returned Canada just before World War II and began to write for the Government. He taught drama and creative writing at Carleton University, Ottawa (1963-1967). His works include Under the Ribs of Death (1957, 1961); Putzi, I Love You, You Little Square (1982), and the Baker's Daughter (2000). Marlyn also published short stories and plays in periodicals. His collected papers are held at the University of Calgary. He received the Beta Sigma Phi First Novel Award (1958), the Canada Foundation Award (1958), the Canada Council Senior Arts Awards in (1969, 1976) and the Ontario Arts Council Award (1975). – B: 0892, 1031, 1672, T: 4342.

Maróczy Géza (Szeged, 3 March 1870 - Budapest, 29 May 1951) – Chess champion. He completed the Zürich Polytechnic, and later, he took part in the preparations for the construction of the waterworks at Káposztásmegyer to provide Budapest with water. From 1903 to 1919 he taught mathematics and descriptive geometry. During the Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary of 1919, he was an administrator for state-run theaters. In 1920 he emigrated to the Netherlands, then visited the USA. In 1927, he returned to Hungary, headed the chess column of the daily paper, Pest News (Pesti Hírlap), and became Captain of the Hungarian Chess Association. He started playing chess in his high school years at the age of 15. He was a student of Master Sámuel (Samuel) Jakobi. He won the International Chess Mastership at Hastings in 1895, and he came second after Lasker at Nuremberg in 1896. Thereafter, he won a series of championships: Paris 1900, placing 3rd, Munich 1900 1st, Monte Carlo 1902 1st, 1904 1st, Ostende 1905 1st, Barmen 1905 1st, Vienna 1908 1st, and 1921 3rd. Maróczy became the most famous Hungarian chess player and a world champion. He was an outstanding chess teacher who wrote a number of works on chess, among them The Guidebook of Modern Chess (A modern sakk vezérkönyve) (1940), and The Theory of Openings (A megnyitások elmélete) (1951). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

Maros Hungarian Autonomous Province (Maros-Magyar Autonóm Tartomány – MMAT; Transylvania, Erdély, now in Romania) – The Soviet Union agreed to hand back Northern Transylvania to Romania on 10 March 1945. This is an over 45,000 km<sup>2</sup> territory that the Second Vienna Award (1940) returned to Hungary as a partial rectification of the unjust Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty (1920). The Russians stipulated that Romania would protect the ethnic rights of the Hungarians. Thus the Romanian government had to set up the Hungarian Autonomous Province (Magyar Autonóm Tartomány – MAT) in Szeklerland (southeastern part of Transylvania with almost 1 million ethnic Szekler-Hungarian population) on 24 September 1952, with Hungarian and Romanian as official languages. The Hungarian population of this area was 77.3 %, while the Romanians amounted to 20.1 %, with a negligible percentage of Germans, Jews and Gypsies, according to the 1956 census. The administrative center of the province was Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș). Initially, it was a Romanian propaganda showcase; however it fell victim to the Romanian government's inability to deal with its own nationalistic ethnic policy.

On 24 December 1960, a governmental decree created the new Maros-Hungarian Autonomous Province with altered boundaries of the former Hungarian Autonomous Province. Its southern part was attached to Stalin Province, later renamed Brașov County, and several other districts were added to it, whereby the purely Hungarian region was merged with ethnic Romanian areas. Consequently the number of its Hungarian population fell from 73.3 % to 62 %. Finally, on 16 February 1968, the Grand National Assembly of Romania extinguished the Maros Hungarian Province "that Hungarian ghetto", and introduced the judet (county) system. There are now three counties in this region: Mures, Hargita and Covasna. Following the 1989-1990 political changes in Romania, the issue of territorial autonomy of the Szeklerland, with a 10,000 km<sup>2</sup> of territory, came again to the forefront. – B: 1230, 1031, T: 7103.→Szeklers.

Maros, Miklós (Nicholas) (Pécs, 14 November 1943 - ) – Composer. He finished his studies in composition at the Béla Bartók Conservatory of Music and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. He completed his music studies at the Stockholm Conservatory of Music under Ingvar Lindholm and György (George) Ligeti. In 1968 he moved to Sweden. Between 1971 and 1980, he taught music at the Electronic Music Studio, Stockholm, and in the Stockholm Academy of Music, where he also lectured on electronic music. Since 1971 he has been presenting his compositions in concerts and on radio programs in various countries around the world and, since 1972, he has also appeared as a conductor. In 1972 he established a chamber orchestra, the Maros Ensemble that became world-famous; he appears with them all over Europe, mainly performing his modern musical compositions and Swedish and Hungarian musical works. He has been a freelance composer since 1980. In 1980-1981, he was "composer in residence" in West Berlin (DAAD), and Vice-President of the Society of Swedish Composers. He has composed some 150 works, among them chamber operas, as well as works for symphony orchestras and choirs; most of his compositions are in the areas of vocal, instrumental and electronic works. In 2005, his opera, entitled Castrates, had its world premiere in Stockholm. Since 1989 he has been a regular member of the Royal Swedish Academy of Music. He was awarded the Swedish Christ Johnson Prize in 2005. – B: 1674, T: 7684.→Ligeti, György.

Maros, Rudolf (Rodolphe) (Stachy, Bohemia, 19 January 1917 - Budapest, 2 August 1982) – Composer, music educator. After completing his studies at the Conservatory of Music of Győr (1937), he attended the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and studied under Zoltán Kodály and Albert Siklós. Between 1942 and 1949 he was a professor and Director of the Pécs Conservatory of Music, while, from 1949 to 1978, he taught chamber music, composition, music theory and orchestration at the Academy of Music, Budapest. He went to Berlin on a scholarship (1971-1972) and served as an officer for the International Society of Modern Music (IGNM) from 1971 to 1975. Maros's early works showed the influence of Zoltán Kodály and Hungarian folk music, a style he broke away from radically at the end of the 1950's. During this period, he built the experiences of his contemporaries' musical orientation into his compositions. Prominent among his orchestral tonality studies is the Euphony series (1963-1965). His unique themes and translucent forms were enriched with a freely interpreted dodecaphonic technique. Later, he endeavored to synthesize traditional tools with the new musical language, while remaining receptive to folklore as a source of inspiration. His major works include Mineworkers' Ballad (Bányász-ballada) (1961); Weekday Requiem (Hétköznapi requiem) (1962); Cinque Studi (1967); Quadros Soltos (1968); Reflexionen (1971); Metropolis (1972), and The Poltroon (1972). He received the Erkel Prize (1954, 1955, 1957) and the titles of Artist of Merit (1973) and Outstanding Artist (1980). – B: 0883, 0886, T: 7657.→Kodály, Zoltán; Siklós, Albert.

Maros Szék – One of the Szekler széks, literally meaning “chair” or “seat”, the center of an administrative area with a Law Court. It covered an area of 14,246 km<sup>2</sup> with Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, Romania) as its center, named after the River Maros. Originally the area included the upper valley of the River Kis-Küküllő, the valley of the River Nyárad, and the vicinity of the town of Marosvásárhely. The area came under Hungarian rule at an early stage of the Carpathian Settlement Period in the 10th century, due to the effort of the Szekler relatives of the Hungarians. Mezőség, Sóvidék, Nyáradmente, Murokország and Szentföld are its sub-regions. Some of the important towns are Erdőszentgyörgy (now Singeorgiu de Padure) and Nyáradszereda (now Miercurea Nirejului). Administratively, the Voivode of Erdély (Transylvania) governed it from his office of Voivode-Seat. The region's population has been overwhelmingly Hungarian ethnically for more than 1000 years with a Romanian-Hungarian mixed population only on its fringe. Following the reorganization of the Romanian county system, the area is now smaller than it originally was. Since then the role of Maros Szék diminished, but recently it is increasing again. – B: 0942, 1134, T: 7103.→Szeklers.

Marosán, György (George) (Hosszúpályi, 15 May 1908 - Budapest, 20 December 1992) – Politician. He took part in the Trade-Union Movement from 1923 on. He was a member of the Social Democratic Party between 1927 and 1948. In the Communist Era, he was Minister of the light industry portfolio from 1949 to 1950. He was imprisoned between 1950 and 1956, then, rehabilitated. He became a member of the Socialist Workers' Party (Magyar Szocialista Munkáspárt – MSZMP) of János Kádár, set up with the help of Soviet military forces after they had crushed the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956. He participated in the formation of the Kádár government and was Secretary of State from 1957 to 1960. In 1962 he resigned from his posts, and from 1965 to 1972 he worked outside the political party; but, in 1972, he rejoined the Party. In 1989 he became Honorary President of the newly reorganized Socialist Workers' Party. His works include There is no Return (Nincs visszaút) (1988), and I Had to Stand Up (Fel kellett állnom) (1990). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456.

Marosán, Julius (Gyula) (Budapest, 1915 - 2003) – Painter. He studied at the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest. He emigrated to Canada in 1956. The Association of Hungarian Freedom Fighters published a folio of his drawings. He was well recognized among the leading abstract painters in Europe and in Canada. His works include Fish (1956); Venice (1956), and Adam and Eva (1957). He had exhibits at the Ernst Museum, Budapest (1940), the Múbarát Gallery, Budapest (1942), and at the Park Gallery, Toronto (1958). Some of his one-man shows were at the Minotaur Gallery, Toronto (1963), the Pollock Gallery (1966), and at The Gallery of Fine Art, Toronto (1969). His works are in public and private collections all over the world. – B: 0893, T: 4342.

Marosi, Ildikó (born: Farkas) (Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mures, Romania, 1 February 1932 - ) – Journalist, literary historian. She completed high school in her native town in 1950, then she obtained a diploma in Stage Directing from the College of Dramatic Art in 1954. For five years she worked as the Editor for the journal Cultural Education (Művelődés) in Bucharest, then, after being unemployed for three years, in 1962, she became the Editor for the pictorial magazine, New Life (Új Élet) of Marosvásárhely. From 1975 she worked as a reporter for the magazine, Week (Hét), until her retirement in 1987. Her occasionally published volumes of bibliographical value preserved the unpublished documents of the Hungarian literature of Romania in the interwar years. Her works include Correspondence of Helikon and the Transylvanian Fine Arts Guild 1924-1944 (Helikon és az Erdélyi Szépművés Céh levelesládája 1924-0944) (1979) Close-up Picture (Közelnkép), interviews, with others (1974), and Conversational Bequest with Count Mihály Teleki (Örökbefogadott beszélgetés gróf Teleki Mihállyal) (1999). She is a recipient of the Áron Tamási Prize (1995). – B: 1257, 0875, T: 7456.

Marosvásárhely (Latin: Novum Forum Sicolorum; Romanian: Târgu Mureș German: Neumarkt) – Main town in Szeklerland, seat of former County Maros-Torda, now Județ Mureș, in Transylvania, since 1920 part of Romania, located on the right bank of the Maros (Mureș) River. After World War I, the town, along with the whole of Transylvania, was ceded to Romania as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon in 1920. During World War II, for a few years (1940-1945), together with the northern 2/5 of Transylvania, the town was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award (1940); but, after 1945, it was again ceded to Romania. Then it became the center of the Magyar Autonomous Region of Transylvania for a few years. It has a fortified citadel, containing a Reformed church built in Gothic style in 1446. There are also several Catholic churches in the town, numerous fine public buildings, a monastery, a county hospital, a museum building, as well as the Count Teleki Palace, which houses the famous 18th c. Telekiana Library (Teleki Téka) of over 70,000 volumes, containing valuable manuscripts, together with a mineral and antique collection. Count Samuel Teleki, Chancellor of Transylvania, founded the Teleki Téka in 1802. It became a library museum after 1822. Some of the Baroque mansions formerly belonged to the Hungarian magnate Teleki and Bánffy families. On the large Széchenyi Square in the town center, there is the imposing Cultural Palace, which contains an Art Gallery, an Ethnographic Museum, a Library and a Music Conservatory; there are also the statues of Louis Kossuth (work of the sculptor Miklós Köllő), and the Honvéd General József Bem. It had a population of 19,522 in 1901, almost wholly Magyar (Hungarian) in ethnic composition and partly Reformed and Roman Catholic by religion; in 1930, 80% (38,116) of the population was Magyar. In 2002, the town population was 150,041, including 75,533 Romanians, 70,110 Hungarians, 3,660 Gypsies, 304 Germans, and 434 others. The inhabitants pursue wine-production, grain and fruitgrowing (especially melons), and also tobacco production and the timber trade; they are engaged in the preparation of leather straps, footwear and pottery. The town has a brewery, a mill, a distillery, a brick factory, and a sugar factory; there is a Roman Catholic High School, a Reformed College with a library and a print shop; also a special school for wood and metalwork, as well as a Teachers College. It also has an ancient Reformed Castle Church. There is a Szekler Industrial Museum, a Theater, a Court of Law, a Medical-pharmaceutical College, and a tobacco warehouse. The history of the town began in the 12th century and it soon developed into a cultural center. In 1704, when Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II was proclaimed “Reigning Prince” of the Transylvanian, part of Hungary at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia), the Szekler center of Marosvásárhely, found itself in a prominent position. In 1876, a large section of the town was destroyed in a great fire, but was rebuilt. A severe atrocity against Hungarians occurred on 19-20 March 1990 at Marosvásárhely. In February, some 100,000 Hungarians demonstrated for the reinstallation of a Hungarian school and university. The Vatra Romanesca nationalist organization regarded this and the observation of Hungarian National Day on 15 March as a provocation against the Romanian State. On 19-20 March, groups of Romanians rushed upon the protesting Hungarians and beat them up, turning the city into a place of street clashes. The result of the “Black March” pogrom was three dead and 100 wounded. Not a single Romanian, but many Hungarians were arrested, accused and sentenced to prison terms. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 7456, T: 7456. → Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty; Vienna Award II; Maros Hungarian Autonomous Province; Marosvásárhely Lines; Marosvásárhely Manuscript’s Szekler Alphabet; Teleki, Count Sámuel; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Marosvásárhely Lines – also known as the Commentaries of Marosvásárhely. Elek (Alec) Farczády discovered this language relic from the first quarter of the 15th century at the Bólyai Library of Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, Romania) as part of the Koncz Codex, on page 102b and 103. The seven lines on page 102b are a Latin summary of the Bible’s second Book of Kings, 17th chapter verses 8-10. – B: 1150, T: 3240. → Codex Literature.

Marosvásárhely Manuscript’s Szekler Alphabet – István (Stephen) Lakatos, a parish priest in Csikkozmas prepared a chart of nine runic letter lines in 1702. As the author noted in the chart, the letters originate from the 17th century. The chart appeared in the work Siculia Accuratius, intended for printing, but never published, although the manuscript was widely spread. Apparently these letters were in use much earlier than their recording in the Marosvásárhely manuscript of 1753. – B: 1289, T: 7669. → Hungarian Runic Script; Runic Writing Research.

Maróthi, György (George) (Debrecen, 18 June 1715 - Debrecen, 16 October 1744) – Theologian of the Reformed Church, mathematician, educator, pioneer of Hungarian choir singing. He came from a well-to-do family. After completing his studies at the Reformed College of Debrecen, he set out on a long study trip abroad. Between 1732 and 1738, he studied at the Universities of Basel, Zurich, Bern, Switzerland, and Groningen, den Haag, Utrecht, Leyden and Amsterdam, Holland. In Basel, he obtained a clergyman’s diploma. He studied Theology, Natural Science, Classical Philology, Mathematics and Astronomy. He also immersed himself into the classical languages: Latin, Greek and Hebrew, as well as German, French, English and Dutch. While in Zurich, and later in Basel, he began advanced studies in Music, and amassed a library-size collection of books for both the Debrecen College and himself. In 1738 he was appointed Professor of Rhetoric, History and Mathematics at the Debrecen College. In 1743 he published his Arithmetica or the Art of Calculation (Arithmetica vagy számvetésnek mestersége) that became the textbook of the century. In it he discussed the elements of Arithmetics in the Hungarian language; in the foreword, ahead of his time, he outlined his views of teaching mathematics. He pioneered the use of the mother tongue as the language of instruction in pre-schools. In 1740 he reorganized the College Choir on the model of Swiss universities, and called it the Collegium musicum; he also established the still-existing choir, the Kántus of the College. During 1740 and 1741 he completed his educational plan, whereby he attempted to implement the educational aspirations of the Enlightenment. This proposal laid down the teaching system of the College for the entire 18th century, by urging instruction in national and relevant subjects. He wrote new textbooks. He initiated the construction of the Physics Auditorium, and he formally opened it with a speech in 1742. Then he resumed his work in Music Pedagogy. In 1743 he published the first Hungarian language choir work on Psalms for four voices: On the Method of Singing Four-part Tunes...according to Harmonious Scores (A' Soltároknak Négyes Nótáik...a harmoniás kóták szerint való éneklésről...) and, with it, he popularized polyphonic singing. This also became the standard text up to the end of the century. He pioneered instruction in the mother tongue. In his short lifetime, Maróthi transplanted into the College, thus into all Hungary, his educational aspirations, ideals and the substance and views of the latest scientific developments of Europe. – B: 0883, 1257, 1068, T: 7456.

Maróthi, János (John) (Maróti) (ca 1366 - 1435) – Army leader, bán. He came from the Gutkeled Clan. In defending the Queen, the wife and daughter of Louis the Great (1342-1382), he was wounded and imprisoned, but was soon freed. In 1391 he won two battles against the Ottoman Turks; thereupon King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437) made him an officer of his bodyguard. In 1393 he fought in the Battle of Nicopolis (now Bitka pri Nikopol, Bulgaria), where he was seriously wounded and escaped only with difficulty. Recovering from his wounds, he held up the invading Turks and Bosnians in County Pozsega, north of the Szava River, on the southern frontier-line of the Kingdom of Hungary. As a reward he was promoted to Bán of Macsó, an area now forming northern Serbia proper, south of the Szava River, at the time, one of the southern tributary lands of the Hungarian Kingdom. During the period of László (Ladislav) Nápolyi's attempt to claim the throne, Maróthi prevented the unification of the Hungarian and Dalmatian insurgents. In 1414 he became Regent of Friaul. In the defense of the southern frontier of the realm, he lost a battle, was captured, but was freed after 3 years for 40,000 gulden. He was over 60 when he set out in a severe winter to reoccupy Wallachia, a former tributary area of Hungary (1369-1396) but he did not succeed. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7456.

Maróthy, János (John) (Budapest, 23 December 1925 - Budapest, 10 August 2001) – Musicologist, music esthetician. In 1948 he obtained a Degree in History of Art Aesthetics and History of Music from the University of Budapest and, in 1951, obtained a diploma in Composition. He was Editor for the Singing People (Éneklő Nép) (1950-1951), then of the journal New Musical Review (Új Zenei Szemle) (1950-1951). He was a postgraduate student from 1951 to 1954, an assistant lecturer from 1955 to 1957, and a research fellow at the Academy of Music. From 1961 he worked at the Bartók Archives of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and was a research fellow in its Institute of Music. From 1974 he was an assistant professor; and from 1980, a professor at the University of Budapest. He obtained a Master's Degree in 1959, and a Ph.D. in Music in 1966. His works include The Birth of European Folk Music (Az európai népdal születése) (1960), The Way of Ferenc Szabó (Szabó Ferenc útja) (1975), and Music and Man (Zene és ember) (1980), in Italian (1987). He was awarded a number of prizes, among them the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1961), and the 4 April Order of Merit (1985). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456.

Maróthy-Meizler, Károly (Charles) (Keszthely, 8 June 1897 - Buenos Aires, 7 September 1964) – Journalist, politician. He studied Law at the University of Budapest and was qualified as an attorney. In the early 1920s he was secretary of the Christian Socialist Party. From 1925 he was a legal adviser for the Catholic League of Nations. In 1936 he became a Member of Parliament on the ticket of the Christian Economic Party of Keszthely. In 1937 he took part in the formation of the Christian National Socialist Front, and was again elected an MP in 1939. In the same year he launched the daily, Pest News (Pesti Újság), and was its Editor until 1944. He emigrated to the West early in 1945, and he settled in Argentina. In Buenos Aires he edited the Hungarian People (Magyar Nép), the weekly of the free Christian Hungarians of South America (1949-1954). The journal Carpath (Kárpát) also published his articles. His works include The Unknown Mindszenty, his Biography and Description of his Era (Az ismeretlen Mindszenty, Életrajz és korrajz) (1958), and Prohászka, the Revolutionary Clad in Sunshine, vols. i,ii (Prohászka, a napbaöltözött forradalmár, I-II) (1960, 1961). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Maróti, Géza (Rintel) (Barsvörösvár, now Červený Hrádok, Slovakia, 1 March 1875 - Budapest, 6 May 1941) – Sculptor, architect, industrial designer. He started out in apprenticeship, later he became self-educated in Budapest and Vienna. This self-made, multi-talented artist distinguished himself mainly with monumental compositions of sculpture. He was also engaged to create façade statues for palatial buildings of Budapest, including the Gresham Palace (1905), façade work on the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1904-1907), and to design exhibition halls. The permanent Hungarian Pavilion at the Venice Industrial Arts Exhibition is one of his works. He provided high-style ornamentation to the Hungarian section of the Milan Applied Art Exhibition building (Milano, 1906); for the Mexico City Teatro Nacional (Mexican National Opera Theatre), today called the Palacio de Bellas Artes, he designed sculptures and mosaic work (1908). His other works include the World Exhibition Pavilion, Torino (1911); the bronze and granite sculptures for the Fischer Building of Detroit; the white marble Livingston Memorial Lighthouse (1927-1932), and the reconstruction plans for golden vessels at the Jerusalem Solomon Temple. He returned to Budapest, became a professor at the Academy of Applied Art, and a lecturer at the Budapest Polytechnic. Prior to the outbreak of World War I, in 1938 he created the Országzászló (National Flag) on Heroe's square; but it remained unfinished due to the war and Soviet takeover of power in 1945. He also built his curious summer cottage at Zebegény (in the Danube Bend north of Budapest) to be used as a hermit cave. In 1930 he traveled through the Near East on horseback and made a reconstruction plan for the Solomon Temple (held by the British Museum). He wrote a 600 pages book entitled Atlantisz on the cultural history of Atlantis, but it remained unpublished. In 1937 he settled permanently in his summer cottage at Zebegény. He was unemployed when died in Budapest in 1941. – B: 1078, 0883, 1031, T: 7675.

Maróti, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest, 18 November 1930 - Budapest, 14 July 1982) – Poet, writer. He studied at Pannonhalma (the site of the famous old Abbey), and in 1949 he joined the Benedictine Order and studied Philosophy on higher level. He left the Order in 1951. In 1955 he completed the course in Mathematics and Physics at the University of Budapest, and became a research physicist in the Institute of Vehicle Development. From 1961 he was a referee of the book-publishing firm Gondolat (Thought), where he headed the literary section (1970-1980). From 1978 he worked as a correspondent for the Theater Institute. His entire career was based on the double attraction of art and science. His works include The Sightless (A világtalan) novel (1967); The Monastery (A kolostor), novel (1968, 1972 2nd ed., 1979 3rd ed.), in it he featured a dictatorship with its usual fanaticism; and The Ostracized (A számkivetett), play (1979). He received the Attila József Prize (1975) and that of the National Council of the Trade Unions – SZOT-Prize (1981). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456.→Pannonhalma, Archabbey of the Benedictine Order.

Marriage – Burial sites of the Hungarian settlement era (AD 896) provide convincing proofs of monogamous Hungarian family life. For peoples around the Carpathian Basin polygamy was a severe obstacle at the time of conversion to Christianity; but no special legislation was needed for Hungarians. Even the royal family observed monogamy, this basic law of the extended family. While in other royal houses of Europe, children born out of wedlock might inherit the throne, in the Árpád Dynasty, that kind of succession was never allowed. In Hungarian legal books, there is only one reference to polygamy. It is in the Law Book I of King Saint László (Ladislav) I (1077-1095), where paragraph 1, 2 regulated the polygamy of foreign priests who went to Hungary. In comparison to its neighbors, the Hungarian concept of family life was already more advanced. – B: 1188, 1020, T: 3233.

Marriage Bread (sweet egg loaf, kalács) – A baked symbol in two forms. One form is when branches are stuck into the braided egg-bread, usually the size of half a table. Then it is decorated with fruits, candles and ginger bread figures. It is carried in a festive procession from the bride's house to the house of the groom and, by virtue of its size it is the main attraction. It is eaten with ceremonial formalities; all members of the wedding party receive a piece of it, and even non-attending family members are sent a piece. Their fruit-bearing branch decorations symbolize the tree of life and fertility. The other form has a pretzel-like round shape. It is called 'keyed milk-loaf' especially in Transdanubia (Dunántúl), where the dough is encased in a stiff net in the shape of old key handles. A number of them are baked, and the officiating persons wear them on their arm. They play a role especially in wedding processions; sometimes they are distributed among the guests. – B: 1134, T: 7684.

Marriage Oath – The traditional Hungarian marriage vow has been preserved in four languages (Latin, Hungarian, German, Slovak) in the Rituale Strigoniense. It proves that Hungarians attributed the protecting role of marriage to the Boldogasszony (The Blessed Woman). The Female protector of marriage was an ancient deity of early Hungarian mythology, later associated with the Virgin Mother. May God and the Boldogasszony protect me, said the text of the oath. In the most ancient format, the Boldogságos Asszony was in two words but later, it evolved into one single word, Boldogasszony. It is remarkable that in the Latin text she is called Beata Virgo Maria but in the Hungarian text the more ancient Hungarian form has been preserved and associated with the Christian context. In the book of Collectio Rituum, the text uses a new expression: Nagy-Boldogasszony or Nagy-Asszony as variations of the same concept Immaculata Virgin Maria. The collection of archaic prayers bears witness to how wide and complex was the reverence of the Boldogasszony among Hungarians. – B: 0945, 1068, 1020, T: 3233.→Madonna, the Great.

Marschalkó, János (John) (Lőcse, now Levoča, Slovakia, 1819 - Budapest, 12 September 1877) – Sculptor. He studied in Vienna; then went on a study tour in Germany, Italy and Paris, before returning to Hungary in 1847. He worked on the statues of the St. Elizabeth Church in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), the Church in Fót, the Csokonai Theater in Debrecen, the Vigadó in Budapest, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, the Municipal Concert Hall, and the Rudas Bath, among others. Marschalkó finished István (Stephen) Ferenczy's busts of Kazinczy and Kölcsey following Ferenczy's death. Among Marschalkó's most well known works are the four lions of the Chain Bridge (1852) over the River Danube in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7675.→Kassa; Ferenczy, István; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Kölcsey, Ferenc.

Marschalkó, Lajos (Louis) (Hajdúböszörmény, 11 September 1903 - Munich, 20 May 1968) – Newspaper reporter. He started his career with rightist papers: he was an associate for the White Paper (Fehér Újság), Future of Hungary (Magyar Jövő), then Hajdú Land (Hajdúföld). In 1934 he was Chief Editor for the Debrecen News (Debreceni Újság). In 1936 he moved to Budapest and, from then on, he appeared also as a writer of novels in the columns of the Capital's newspapers. In 1945 he left for Germany, where he worked as one of the leading figures of the political writers of the emigration; from 1951 to 1954 he was the chief associate for the Brazilian publication New Hungarian (Új Magyarország), from 1960 to 1962 that of the Solidarity (Összefogás) of London and, from 1954, he was one of the editors for the paper, Bridgehead (Hidfő), of London, and then the Almanach of Trianon (Trianoni Almanach) (Munich, 1960). Numerous western organs of the emigrant Hungarians published his articles, some of them written under the pseudonym, Lajos Mátray. His main works include Kőszeg Lost in the Fog (Kőszeg ködbe vész), novel (under L. Mátray, 1948); The Black Star (Fekete csillag), dramatic work (1948); Alone Against Stalin (Egyedül Sztalin ellen) (1949); The Red Storm (Vörösvihar), Reminiscences (Visszaemlékezések) (1954); Neutral Hungary... (Semleges Magyarország...) (1955); World Conquerors (Világhódítók), The Real War Criminals (Az igazi háborús bűnösök), 2nd revised edition (Munich, 1958), in English: The World Conquerors. The Real War Criminals (1958); The Incriminating Gallows. The True Gravediggers of the Hungarian Nation (Vádló bitófák. A Magyar nemzet igazi sírásói), with Ferenc Fiala (1958); To the Bitter End, Historical Narratives (Mindhalálíg, történelmi elbeszélések) (1962), and Conquerors of the Country, From the Emancipation to Mátyás Rákosi (1965). - B: 0883, 1672, T: 7684.→Fiala, Ferenc.

Martin, György (George) (Budapest, 5 February 1932 - Budapest, 31 October 1983) – Ethno-choreologist, music-folklorist, folkdance researcher. In 1954 he obtained a Teacher's Degree in Hungarian Literature from the University of Budapest; subsequently he earned a folklorist-museologist diploma from the Institute of Popular Arts, Budapest. He worked at the Folklore Music Research Institute as a folkdance researcher, then, from 1965, at the Musicology Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1951 he collected folk music and folk dances in Hungary and in neighboring countries with a Hungarian population. During his collecting tours, he wrote notes on both Hungarian folkdances and folksongs. Some of his works are Dances of Somogy (Somogyi táncok), co-editor (1954); Das Ungarische Mädchenreigen (1968), and Dances of the Hungarian People (A magyar nép táncai) (1973, 1974), in English, French and German. He received the Erkel Prize in 1978. – B: 0886, 1160, T: 7103.

Martin, Lajos (Louis) (Buda, 30 August 1827 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 4 March 1897) – Mathematician, inventor. He studied at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Pest. After two years, he switched to Engineering. During the 1848-1849 War of Independence, he was with the artillery at the National Defense; after the defeat he was briefly jailed; then he enlisted in the Austrian Army as a common soldier and worked on perfecting artillery petards. Around 1856 he started to study intensively the problems of rocket technique. Earlier, he taught in Selmecbánya (now Banská Stiavnica, Slovakia), and from 1869 in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). His inaugural address as Professor at the University of Kolozsvár was on the Force of the Bird Wing (A madárszárny erőzete) (1872). He was Rector there in 1895-1896. He constructed a flying machine, the ornithopter that imitated the flight of birds; however, he soon realized that the problems of flying cannot be solved through these means. His interest then turned toward the propeller and wind turbines. He was the first to think about, and apply aileron for airplanes to control the aircraft's turning directions. In 1893 he patented a new type of aircraft the hovering wheel. He also engaged in problem-solving of the use of wind energy, as well as hydrology. His works include The General Theory of Bird-flying (A madárrepülés általános elmélete) (1881); Displaying the Hovering Wheel (A lebegő kerék bemutatója) (1893), and About the Aircraft (A repülőgépről) (1894). He was the first in Hungary to deal with aircraft and airship theory. He is a pioneer of Hungarian aviation. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7675.→Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation.

Martinovics, Ignác (Ignatius) (Pest, 20 July 1755 - Buda 20 May 1795) – Monk, revolutionary martyr. He was of Albanian origin. As a young man he joined the Franciscan Order. The Order soon sent him to the University of Pest to study Arts and Theology. Since his favorite subjects were actually Mathematics and Chemistry, after completing his university studies, he was made teacher of mathematics at the Order's school in Buda. In 1778 he was ordained a priest. After working as an army chaplain for a while, he became Professor of Physics at the University of Lemberg (then in Poland, now Lvov in the Ukraine) in 1783. The first volume of a planned 3-volume textbook on physics deals only with chemistry. In 1791 he left his Chair and was appointed Abbot of Szászváros (now Orăștie, Transylvania in Romania), then was assigned to the Office of External Affairs at the Court of Emperor Lipót II (Leopold) (1790-1792). Following the King's early death, Martinovics devoted all his energies to spreading atheism and organizing a conspiracy. He became chief organizer of the Hungarian Jacobite Movement. Initially, Ferenc (Francis) Gyurkovics, Professor of the University of Pest, worked hard to organize a secret society to spread revolutionary ideas. In 1793, he also included Martinovics in his plans; but the French Jacobite Club of Paris charged Martinovics with forming such a Society. In 1794 he began to enroll members first in Vienna. In Hungary, he founded two societies and wrote the catechism Catechisme de l'homme et du citoyen (The catechism of man and citizen). According to him, power is in the hands of the people, who have the right to abolish royalty. Every new member had to swear an oath to spread the ideas of the Society and to acquire at least two new members. Martinovics accepted the role of leading Director, while the immediate governing work was delegated by him to four Directors: János (John) Laczkovics, József (Joseph) Hajnóczy, Ferenc (Francis) Szentmarjai and Count Jakab (Jacob) Sogray. Their plan was to overthrow the existing social order as soon as the membership reached 250,000. However, after three months, Jeline, an initiated member and private teacher, informed the authorities and thus the conspiracy was discovered. On 23 July 1794, Martinovics and a number of his associates were arrested in Vienna, while on 16 August Laczkovics, Hajnóczy, Szentmarjai and several others were arrested in Buda. A letter of indictment with the charge of high treason was submitted on 30 November, and Martinovics, together with his associates, was summoned on 3 December 1794. The inquiries were completed by 20 April 1795. As leader of the conspiracy, he was sentenced to death and forfeiture of property. On 20 May 1795, he and several of his associates were beheaded on the Blood Meadow (Vérmező) in Buda. Among his works are the Systema universae philosophiae (1781), and the French Catechisms (1795). Later, Pál (Paul) Öz and Szolarcsik, two talented young members of the Jacobite Movement, were also executed. Among the many other sympathizers, Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy, Ferenc (Francis) Verseghy, János (John) Bacsányi and László (Ladislav) Szentjóni Szabó were sentenced to detention in a Fort. – B: 1031, 1068, 1675, T: 7456.→ Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Martinuzzi, György (George) (Juraj Utje-šenovic, a.k.a. Fráter, György: Padre George) (Kamicic, Croatia, 1482 - Alvinc (now Vințu de Jos, Transylvania, now in Romania) 17 December 1551) – Archbishop, Cardinal, Governor of Transylvania, statesman. He was born of a Croatian father and a Venetian patrician mother called Martinuzzi. He preferred to use his mother's name. As a young man, the Szapolyai family employed him and, eventually, he became a Pauline (Pálos) friar at the age of 28, after a brief military career. Later, he was a skilled diplomat and a close adviser of King János I (John) (János Szapolyai or Zápolya, 1541-1551). He succeeded recapturing Buda, the capital city, from the Turks in 1529. In 1534 he became Bishop of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) and, in 1538, concluded the Treaty of Nagyvárad with Austria, whereby the royal title and the greater part of Hungary were ceded to Zápolya, who promoted him guardian of his infant son, János Zsigmond (John Sigismund), who was proclaimed and crowned King of Hungary as King János II (1556-1571), with Martinuzzi as acting regent. However, it was stipulated that, after the death of János II, the country should be placed in the hands of the Habsburgs. Martinuzzi prevented the plan of the Queen Mother, Isabella Jagello, to bring in the Austrians and he turned to the Turks for help instead. They appeared at the fortress of Buda on 28 August 1541 and, while Martinuzzi was dining with the Sultan in the Turkish camp, the Grand Vizier took Buda. Having recognized the necessity of balancing diplomacy with both Austria and the Turks, Martinuzzi signed a Treaty at Gyalu on 29 December 1541 for the implementation of the Treaty of Nagyvárad, whereby western Hungary fell into the hands of Ferdinand (Habsburg), while Transylvania, which became an independent Principality under Turkish suzerainty, reverted to János Zsigmond. In the meantime Queen Isabella succeeded in creating an alliance between the Turks, Wallachians and Moldovans against Martinuzzi in 1550; but Martinuzzi defeated them one by one. The Diet of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) confirmed a peace treaty in August 1551. Martinuzzi retained the governorship of Transylvania and was consecrated Archbishop of Esztergom, also becoming Cardinal. In 1551, the Turks occupied some castles in southern Hungary; but Martinuzzi and the Imperial General Castaldo combined forces, prevailed against them, and even retook Lippa. When Martinuzzi initiated secret negotiations with the Turks, Castaldo accused him of treachery and, with the endorsement of Ferdinand, he hired Martinuzzi's secretary, Marco Aurelio Ferrari, to stab his master at his Castle of Alvinc. Martinuzzi's legacy was to restore and maintain the national unity of Hungary, and set up the independent principality of Transylvania. – B: 0883, 1105, 1031, T: 7103.→Pauline Order; Isabella, Queen; János I, King; János II, King.

Márton, Áron (Aaron) (Csíkszentdomonkos, now Sindominic, Romania, 12 August 1896 - Gyulafehérvár, now Alba Iulia, Romania, 29 September 1980) – Roman Catholic Bishop (in Transylvania, now in Romania). His parents were Transylvanian Hungarian (Szekler) peasants. He did his high school studies in Csiksomlyó (now Sumuleu Ciuc, Romania), Csikszereda (now Miercurea Ciuc, Romania) and finally at the Seminary of Gyulafehérvár. He sustained some injuries on the Italian front in World War I, and received a number of citations. At the end of the War, he joined the Szekler Division, determined to resist the Romanian occupation of Transylvania. Following the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty of 1920, he entered the Seminary of Gyulafehérvár and, on 6 July 1924, Bishop Majláth at Gyergyóditró (now Ditrau) ordained him into the priesthood. First he served at Gyergyószentmiklós (now Gheorgheni, Romania), then at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) but soon returned to Gyulafehérvár and served as Apostolic Regent. In 1933 he established the journal Erdéyi Iskola (Transylvanian School). Pope Pius XI appointed him Bishop of Central Transylvania on 24 December 1938, and he was consecrated on 24 February 1939. Bishop Márton not only preserved the Hungarian heritage entrusted to him, but also enhanced it, despite limited opportunities, and was the pillar of his Church; on occasion he was the lone refuge for ethnic Hungarians under Romanian occupation. In Kolozsvár, on 18 May 1944, in a daring speech, he condemned the persecution of Jews (at that time Northern Transylvania had been returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award and his diocese was cut in half by the new borders). In his memorandum of 18 January 1946, he protested against the discriminatory measures the Romanians introduced against ethnic Hungarians in the Romanian occupied Transylvania. The international attention given to his memorandum exposed a series of harassments committed by the Romanian authorities. He fought ceaselessly for the use of the Hungarian language and the maintenance of Hungarian institutions, and also against the confiscation of church properties. The annual Pentecost pilgrimage to the shrine at Csíksomlyó in 1949 remains a memorable event, not only for those of Csíksomlyó, but for all Szeklers of the region: their Bishop in complete Episcopal attire, riding on a white stallion, led 4,000 pilgrims to the statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary in the shrine. This symbol is inseparable from the history of the Szekler-Hungarians of Transylvania for, apart from its religious element, the statue embodies the resolve of the Szeklers to maintain their Hungarian consciousness and heritage. The Romanian authorities soon discovered the meaning of the pilgrimage and banned this annual event. Following the famous pilgrimage, Bishop Márton was kidnapped from a taxicab on 21 June 1949 on his way to Bucharest, and his whereabouts were unknown until January 1955. When the western press learned about his disappearance, the Oservatore Romano, the official newspaper of the Vatican, delivered a memorial for “The Martyred Bishop of the People” on 1 July 1949. For six years he was at the death-camp of Máramarossziget (now Sighetu Marmatiei, Romania), where prisoners were subjected to a slow starvation. Subsequent to the diplomatic intercession of the Vatican, he was transferred to a prison in Bucharest and released after a six year in detention. The following year, he was placed under house-arrest for 11 years that was only cancelled in 1967, due to the intervention of Cardinal Franz König of Vienna, Austria. All this time, he remained resolute and refused to accept any compromises offered to him and continued to ordain priests of his own choosing. His unwavering attitude worked wonders and gave his church strength comparable only to the Polish Church. His imprisonment and torture took their toll and, upon his own request, Pope John Paul II released him from diocesan functions. While in office, Bishop Márton was in charge of his own diocese as well as the dioceses of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania) and Szatmár (now Satmar, Romania), encompassing all of Transylvania (Erdély). He put a great effort into working for moral, social and cultural growth of all ethnic Hungarians and toward ending the prevailing discrimination on the part of the Romanians. Upon his death, his lying in state became a pilgrimage and over 10,000 people paid their respects. Schools, colleges and a book publisher are named after him – B: 0883, 1153, 1257, T: 7456.

Márton, Árpád (Gyergyóalfalu, now Suseni, Romania, 6 October 1940 - ) – Painter. He studied at the Ion Andreescu Academy of Fine Arts in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); started out as an art teacher at the Lyceum of Mathematics and Physics at Csíkszereda (now Miercurea Ciuc, Romania), then, from 1974 to 1979, he was working in the artists’ colony of Szárhegy (now Lazarea, Romania), and in 1977 in that of Paczkow, Poland. His individual exhibitions were held in local Transylvanian Hungarian Szekler towns, such as Csíkszereda, Kézdivásárhely (now Targu-Secuiesc, Romania), Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania), Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, Romania) and Gyergyószentmiklós (now Gheorgheni, Romania), and also in Kolozsvár, capital of Transylvania. Combined exhibitions were held in New York (1974), Barcelona, (1976), Krakow (1977), Nuremberg (1980), and Washington (1988). In 1967, together with András (Andrew) Gaál and Árpád Pálffy he made a ceramic mosaic, entitled Cantana Profana for the Cultural House of Csíkszereda. He designed, together with András Gaál, the tile-mosaic for the façade of the new cultural house of Gyergyószentmikós. – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Márton, Árpád Ferenc (Francis) (Magyarlapos, now Targu Lopus, Romania, 25 March 1955 - ) – Actor, politician. He studied at the College of Dramatic Art of Marosvásárhely (now Targu-Mures, Romania). From 1979 to 1989 he acted at the Theater of Sepsiszentgyörgy (now Sfintu Gheorghe, Romania). In 1990 he was a town counselor, then secretary and, still later a member of the Covasna District Parliament. Between 1992 and 1996 he was the secretary of the special committee for culture and the Press. His roles include Samu Bobek in János Kodolányi's Earthquake (Földindulás); his productions include Antigone (1988) and Philoctetes (1990) of Sophocles, also C. Petrescuás' Venetian Story (1986). He has been a parliamentary representative of the Romanian Hungarian Democratic Alliance (Romániai Magyar Demokratikus Szövetség – RMDSZ) in Bucharest, and he is a deputy parliamentary representative of Romania at the Parliament of European Union, Brussels. He publishes parliamentary reports, political comments and editorials in papers such as the European Time Europaildo, Orient Express and Weekly Hungary (Heti Magyarország). – B: 1036, T: 7456. → Kodolányi, János.

Marton, Edwin (Edvin) (Lajos Csúry) (Tiszaújlak, now Vilok, Carpatho-Ukraine, 1974 - ) – Violin virtuoso, composer. He showed his musical talent at an early age. He studied at the Tchaikovsky Academy, Moscow (1983), and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1991). He plays on a Stradivarius violin (its value ca. 4 million dollars) that Hungary lent to him for life. He is one of the top Hungarian violinists, mostly known for his performances for skating championships. Evgeni Plushenko, Stéphane Lambiel and other famous skaters have often skated to his music. His compositions are a combination of classical music with modern beats and violin, alternating between pop and classics. The secret of his success is his virtuoso playing and his understanding of how to link up people of different cultures and ages. He appeared with his Monte Carlo Quintet in great shows, such as the 2006 Olympic Games in Turin, Kings on Ice, and the Stradivarius Show. He has toured Germany, Switzerland, Russia, Hungary (Debrecen, Szombathely), and the Middle East. His music reached nearly all countries of the world. He frequently appears in TV and Radio shows. He is also recorded and has produced albums such as the Sarasate (1996); Strings'N'Beats (2001); Virtuoso (2004). and Stradivarius (2006). He is one of the few Hungarian performers to establish himself as an artist and personality on a world scale. – B: 1051, 1750, T: 7103.

Marton, Endre (1) (Andrew) (Budapest, 17 March 1917 - Near Esztergom, 12 October 1979) – Theater and stage manager. He obtained an actor's diploma from the School of Dramatic Art of the National Actors' Association in 1941, then worked as an assistant stage manager in the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest, run by Andor (Andy) Pünkösti. In 1945 he became Stage Manager at the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), where he staged, among others, the plays of Béla Balázs, Béla Zsolt and Aldous Huxley. In 1948 he was Head Manager there. The National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, engaged him as Stage Manager in 1949. From 1950 he taught at the Academy of Dramatic Art, first in the Department of Stage Management, then in that of Acting. From 1971 until his retirement in 1978 he directed the National Theater. He was a man with an organized mind, who could create concerted action. Clarity and texture characterized his productions. He rescued some Hungarian dramatic treasures. He applied to the stage the almost forgotten drama of the great poet Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty, Czillei and the Hunyadis, also Imre (Emeric) Madách's Mózes. As Theater Director, he included plays of modern Hungarian writers such as Lajos (Louis) Nagy, Tibor Déry, Ernő (Ernest) Urbán, Endre (Andrew) Vészi, Imre (Emeric) Dobozy, László (Ladislav) Németh, Károly (Charles) Szakonyi, Miklós (Nicholas) Hubay, Lajos (Louis) Maróti and Magda Szabó. He was also stage manager at the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest. Linked to his name are film directions, TV productions and radio plays, among them the most important is the Military Music (Katonazene), a movie adapted from the short story of Sándor (Alexander) Bródy. Marton died suddenly while he was preparing to shoot a new film for TV. His stage productions include Tolstoy's Anna Karenina; Mihály Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Imre Madách's The Tragedy of Man, (Az ember tragédiája); Chekov's Three Sisters; László Németh's Gregory VII; Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, King Lear, and Goethe's Faust. He received the Mari Jászai Prize (1954), the Kossuth Prize (1957, 1970), Artist of Merit title (1960), and the Outstanding Artist title (1966). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Marton, Endre (2) (Andrew) (Budapest, 29 October 1910 - New York, 2 November 2005) – Journalist (father of Kati Marton, a well-known American journalist). He obtained a Ph.D. from the Department of Economics of the Budapest Polytechnic. In 1936 he was a member of the Hungarian Olympic fencing team. In 1946 he became a press-correspondent for the American news-service, Associated Press, in Budapest (His wife worked for the United Press). Among others he reported on the show trials in Hungary. In February 1955 he and his wife were arrested on trumped up charges of spying and treason. They were sentenced to 3 years' detention in November. Freed from prison in August 1956, he continued his reporting activities for the Associated Press during the Revolution and Freedom Fight as well. In January 1957, to avoid being arrested again, he and his family fled to the American Embassy in Budapest and, later, they escaped to Austria and moved to the USA. Initially, they settled in Chevy Chase near Washington, DC. He worked for the Washington Office of the Associated Press as a reporter accredited to the White House. He retired in 1975. Later, he lectured on the press and on foreign affairs at the School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University. In 1985 he retired from his university position but continued lecturing for another five years, already aged 80. He regularly wrote articles and analyses in American and English papers such as the Los Angeles Times and the Economist-Foreign Report. Between 1960 and 1985, under the name Endre Pataki, he was the Washington correspondent for Radio Free Europe. His works include his memoirs: The Forbidden Sky, Inside the Hungarian Revolution (1971). – B: 1672, T: 7456.→Marton, Kati.

Marton, Éva (Éva Heinrich) (Budapest, 18 June 1943 - ) – Opera singer (dramatic soprano). She studied singing at the Opera Department of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest as a student of Jenő (Eugene) Sipos, and graduated in 1968. She had her debut as Kate Pinkerton in Puccini's Madama Butterfly at the Margaret Island Summer Festival, Budapest. At the Hungarian State Opera, her debut was as Queen of Shemaka in Rimsky-Korsakov's Le Coq d'Or in 1968. In 1972 she appeared as the Countess in Le Nozze di Figaro (The Marriage of Figaro) at the Frankfurt Opera, Germany, and sang Matilde in Rossini's Guglielmo Tell in Florence, Italy, and Odabella in Verdi's Attila, Budapest. In 1973 she made her first appearance at the Vienna State Opera as Tosca, and sang Tatiana in Eugene Onegin. Her repertoire includes all the major soprano roles, such as Eva in Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, the Empress in Die Frau ohne Schatten, Elisabeth in Tannhäuser, the title role of Aïda, Leonora in Il Trovatore, the title role of Die Aegyptische Helena, Leonore in Fidelio, the title role of Elektra, and Brünnhilde in Wagner's Ring Cycle. Her further heroine title roles are: Salome, La Gioconda, and Leonora in La Forza del Destino. She appeared with every major opera company, including the Metropolitan Opera New York, La Scala Milan, Arena di Verona Italy, also in San Francisco, Chicago, Barcelona, Houston, and Washington under the baton of leading conductors, such as Lorin Maazel, Claudio Abbado, Zubin Mehta and Christoph von Dohnányi. She is also one of the most recorded artists. She recorded more than 20 complete operas, as well as solo recitals, aria albums and symphonic works. Her other roles include Kundry in Parsifal in Barcelona and Lisbon, as well as Isolde at the Hamburg State Opera in 2000. She acted and sang in the movie version of the Hungarian National Opera's Bánk bán by Hungarian composer Ferenc (Francis) Erkel. Her concert appearances and recitals include songs and compositions of Robert Schumann, Franz Liszt, Richard Wagner, especially Arnold Schönberg and Gustav Mahler. She has been Professor and Chair of the Voice Department of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Music University, Budapest. Éva Marton has been among the most outstanding dramatic sopranos of the world. She has received many awards and prizes, among them the Silver Rose of the Scala of Milan (1980), Singer of the Year (New York Times) (1981, 1986), Chamber-Singer Vienna (1987), Béla Bartók-Ditta Pásztor Prize (1991), Mario del Monaco Prize (1991), and the Kossuth Prize (1997). – B: 0874, T: 7103.→Opera House; Erkel, Ferenc; Liszt, Ferenc; Dohnányi, Kristof von; Mahler, Gustav.

Marton, Kati (Katalin, Kate) (Budapest, 4 February 1956 - ) – Writer, journalist, actress. With her parents, she emigrated to the USA after the crushed 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, and is now an American citizen. She married the late TV personality Peter Jennings, and is now married to Richard Holbrooke, former UN Ambassador and leading American diplomat. Kati Marton is an enthusiastic supporter of the rights of Hungarians living in the neighboring states, the so-called successor states. In the 1970s Kati Marton was sending reports and news items about Hungary and other Central European countries. She is President of the International Women's Health Coalition, and one of the heads of the Committee to Protect Journalists. She is the author of articles in the press, radio programs, and a number of books (published since 1980), e.g. An American Woman (1987); The Polk Conspiracy (1990); Death in Jerusalem (1996), and Hidden Power: Presidential Marriages that Shaped our Recent History. The most successful of her works was the one entitled: Nine Hungarians, who left their Country and changed the World (2007), dealing with the lives and achievements of nine Jews from Hungary who had to escape to the West from the political developments of National Socialism in all Central European countries. These nine personalities were: Endre Friedmann (Robert Capa) photographer, Andor Kertész (Andre Kertész) photographer, Mihály Kertész (Michael Curtiz) film director, Sándor Korda (Alexander Korda) film director, Artur Köszler (Arthur Koestler) writer, János (John) von Neumann mathematician, Leo Szilárd physicist, Ede (Edward) Teller physicist, and Jenő (Eugene) Wigner physicist. Since its publication, it has had four editions and has also appeared in Hungarian translation, on the occasion of which she was presented with the distinction of the Pro Cultura Hungarica Prize on 10 January 2008. – B: 1893,T: 7456.→Marton, Endre (2); Capa, Robert; Koestler, Arthur; Curtiz, Michael; Kertész, André; Korda, Sir Sándor; Neumann, von John; Szilárd, Leo; Teller, Ede; Wigner, Eugene Pál.

Márton, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 23 April 1959 - ) – Writer. In 1983 he completed an Arts Degree, majoring in Hungarian, German and Sociology. He became a correspondent for the book publishing firm Helikon. In the 1980s his novels show him as determining a generation: he breaks with the traditional narrative logic as well as with the epic requisite of causality with its relatedness to reality. His world, the internal order of his novels, is defined by the contingency, the state of having no center and self-annihilating situations. Several of his works may be interpreted as “philosophical jokes”. His dramatic works are re-interpretations of earlier stage works, which include Asylum (Menedék) novel (1985); Select Ones and Mingling Ones (Kiválasztottak és elvegyülők) (1989); Carmen, play (1991); The True Story of Jacob Wunschwitz (Jacob Wunschwitz igaz története) novel (1997), and Shady Main Street (Árnyas főutca) (1999). He received numerous prizes, among them the Bölöni Prize (1985), Milán Füst Prize (1988), Tibor Déry Award (1991), Dezső Kosztolányi Prize (1993), Imre Madách Prize (Soros) (1996) and the Attila József Prize (1997). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456.

Marton-Lefèvre, Júlia (Marton, Júlia, Budapest, 1944? - ) – Environmental scientist and diplomat. As a young girl (aged 12) she left Hungary with her parents, who were political refugees after the crushed 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. She settled in France, where she spent most of her adult life and completed her education. She married a Frenchman, Lefèvre, raised her two sons and became a French citizen. She studied History, Ecology and Environmental Protection. Eventually, she moved to the USA and, as a US citizen, she began her work as an environmental scientist and diplomat, organizing international conferences and cooperation in environmental planning. Julia Marton-Lefèvre has assumed a number of important positions in her career. She regards herself as a global citizen. She worked as Executive Director of LEAD International (Leadership for Environment and Development), a program established by The Rockefeller Foundation to train scientists and leaders in the field of sustainable development. She established the world’s largest nature-conservation network as Director General of the World Conservation Union (IUCN), and became Rector of the University of Peace (UPEACE), founded in Costa Rica, with campuses in several places in the world. It was mandated by the United Nations to provide education, training and research on issues related to peace and conflict. She was Program Specialist in Environmental Education under a joint UNESCO-UNEP Program. She was also Executive Director of the International Council for Science (ICSU), based in Paris. Its First Scientific World Congress (jointly with UNESCO) was held in Budapest in the summer of 1999, and was, to a considerable degree, her achievement. She gave university lectures in Thailand as a Peace Corps Volunteer. She was Vice-Chair of the World Resources Institute and is currently on the Board of Directors of the International Institute for Environment and Development (IIED). Her main published work is the book entitled Peace Parks: Conservation and Conflict Resolution (Global Environmental Accord) (2007); she also published many papers and co-authored a number of books. She is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of the United Kingdom. In 1999, she received the American Association for the Advancement of Science, AAAS Award for International Cooperation in Science. – B: 1406, 1892, T: 7456.

Márton, Lili (Lilian) (pen name: Kata Kászoni) (Budapest, 12 December 1914 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 27 March 2000) – Journalist. She completed her high school studies in Kolozsvár in 1932. The well-known writer Elek Benedek (she regarded him as her model) discovered her writing talent. Later on, she created a symbol to his memory in her biographical novel, Granddad Elek (Elek nagyapó) (1975), and in her lyric stage work, There was, there was not (Hol volt, hol nem volt) (1983). Between 1934 and 1940 she was theatrical reporter for the paper Opposition (Ellenzék). In 1937 she won a prize with her comedy, Back Alley (Sikátor), at the drama competition of the journal Transylvanian Helikon (Erdélyi Helikon). The Thalia Theater of Budapest (Thalia Színház) presented it in 1938. From 1941 she reported to the Budapest papers, Today (Mai Nap) and Theater Magazine (Színházi Magazin). Until 1951 she worked as a correspondent for the paper, Brightness (Világosság), in Kolozsvár. She was also freelancing from 1941. During the 1950s she could only write under a fictitious name and translate works from Romanian. Transylvanian Theaters staged many of her plays, such as If We Were Alive (Ha élnénk) (1948); Merry Magician (Vidám varázsló) (1967), and The Bad Boy (A rossz fiú), (1980), first as a youth novel (1960). Her stories for children and teens achieved great popularity. Her works include Aunt Anna's Vacation (Anna néni nyaralása) story (1949); The Barrow King (Taligás király) tales (1957); Four Towns and a Little Boy (Négy város meg egy kisfiú) juvenile novel (1961); Suburban Wedding (Külvárosi menyegző) novel (1970); Mothers Don't Die (Az anyák nem halnak meg) novel (1970); Humans, Scenes, Stories (Emberek, tájak, történetek) (1993), and Adventure in the Land of Legends (Kaland a legendák földjén), novel (1995). Her literary translations are also significant. She was a recipient the Helikon Drama Prize (1937) and the Gold Pen Prize (1976). – B: 1257, 0875, 1031, T: 7456. → Benedek, Elek.

Mártonfy, Lajos (Louis) (Szilágysomlyó, now Șimleu Silvaniei, Romania, 21 May 1857 - Szamosújvár, now Gherla, Romania, 20 December 1908) – Paleontologist, geologist and teacher. From 1876 he studied Natural Sciences at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); and, from 1878 to 1880, under the famous Antal (Anthony) Koch, he carried out geological research. After obtaining a Ph.D. in Education in 1880, he became a teacher at the High School of Szamosújvár, where he became Principal in 1895. He was interested mainly in the natural science of Transylvania, mainly its mineralogical-geological aspects, and he also carried out important collecting work. His studies appeared in the journal Bulletin of the Society for Studies on Medical-Natural Science (Orvos-természettudományi Társaság Értesítője) (Kolozsvár). He also wrote a popularizing scientific essay. He was the author of the work (in Hungarian): Paleontological studies on foraminifers (Őslénytani tanulmányok a Foraminiferákról) (Kolozsvár, 1880). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Marton, Veronika (Veronica) (Rábapatoná, 1944 - ) – Historian, Sumerologist and writer. After completing her studies at the Miklós Jurisich High School in Kőszeg, she was unable to enroll at a University for political reasons. After her marriage, she lived in Czechoslovakia for three years, and obtained advanced degrees in the Czech and Russian languages. She worked for a long time as a translator and interpreter. She also received a Degree in Library Sciences in 1983 from the High School Teachers' Training College of Szombathely through correspondence courses, and obtained her teaching qualifications in Hungarian Studies at the Péter Pázmány Catholic University at Piliscsaba. She also studied Chinese for seven years. With the help of Professor Ferenc (Francis) Badiny-Jós, she came into contact with the former Private University of Miskolc. He gave her valuable help in furthering her career. From 1998 she taught Sumerology at the Miskolc Institute of Philosophy for three years, until her retirement. Her published works include Deimel, Anton: Sumerische Grammatik, translation with Imre Kálmán (2000); The History of Sumerian Culture (A sumir kultúra története)(2000); The Chaldean Creation Myth (A káldeai teremtés-mítosz - Enuma elis) (2000); The Stones With Runic Script of Somogy (A somogyi rovásírásos kövek) (2001, 2008); The History of Cuneiform Writing (Az ékírás története) (2005), and *Prayers from the Age of King András I ... Martonyi, János (John) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 5 April 1944 - ) – Politician, lawyer. He studied Law at the University of Szeged and graduated summa cum laude in 1967. He practiced law until 1979, and between 1979 and 1984 worked as Commercial Secretary in Brussels specializing in European integration. Between 1984 and 1989 he was General Counsel at the Ministry of Trade. In 1989 and 1990 he was Commissioner for Privatization (Deputy Minister); in 1990 and 1991, State Secretary in the Ministry of International Trade; from 1991 to 1994 State Secretary at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Between 1994 and 1998, he was managing partner of the Budapest Office of Baker & McKenzie International Law Firm. From 1998 to 2002 he was Minister for Foreign Affairs in the Orbán Government. Since 1984 he has been teaching at various universities and law schools (Budapest, Szeged, Bruges, Natolin), and was Head of the Institute for International Trade Law at the University of Szeged. From 2010 he is again Minister of Foreign Affairs in the 2nd Orbán Government. He has written numerous articles and essays in various languages in the field of international trade law, competition policy and law, European integration, and international politics. His main works are: The Legal Status of Transnational Corporations (A transznacionális vállalatok jogállása); Central Europe and the European Integration (Középeurópa és az európai intergráció), and Europe, Nation, Rule of Law (Európa. Nemzet, Jogállam). – B: 1017, T: 7103. → Orbán, Viktor.

Martsa, István (Stephen) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 23 June 1912 - Budapest, 3 February 1978) – Sculptor. In 1920 he trained as an electrician; then worked as an assistant for the Electrical Works of Esztergom. In 1945 he was a student in Béni (Benny) Ferenczy's class at the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest where, in 1949, he became demonstrator. In 1951 he began working as a teacher in the High School of Art and Applied Art, Budapest. He started his career with modeling small plastic art pieces and small portraits. Later he created a great number of medals, e.g. those of Marx, Van Gogh, showing a fine talent for graphic art. From the mid-1950s he received commissions for preparing outdoor statues. For the buildings of the Housing Estate of Újpest (suburb of Budapest) he designed a series of reliefs. He prepared a Female Nude in front of the Hospital of the Town Council of Ózd. In 1960 he completed his statue Loving Couple (Szerelmespár) and, in 1965, the Martyrs of Auschwitz memorial. His Woman with Parasol (Napernyős nő) expresses graceful charm, while his composition of two figures in front of the Esztergom Hospital expresses gentle solicitude. The open-air statues he prepared for Kalocsa in 1968, and for Vaja in 1969, show solemn peasant figures. In the 1970s he sculpted the equestrian figure of Bottyán Vak for Esztergom, and the memorial statue of János Nagy-Balogh for Kispest, a suburb of Budapest. During his career as a sculptor, he created 62 emblems, 57 small plastic art pieces and 40 statues. Between 1952 and 1978, he appeared regularly in collective exhibitions and shows in Hungary with his medals, plastic art pieces and open-air sculpture designs. In 1956 he organized an exhibition, together with his wife, painter Ilona (Helena) Szűcs. In 1973 he presented one-man shows in Budapest and Esztergom. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456. → Ferenczy, Béni.

Marsigli, Count Luigi Ferdinando (Marsili) (Bologna, 20 July 1658 - Bologna 1 January 1730) – Military officer, diplomat, natural scientist. He was born into an Italian noble family of Bologna. His formal education was left incomplete, but he accumulated extensive knowledge of history, geography, the natural sciences and politics. From 1682 to 1704 he served in the army of Emperor Leopold I (Lipót) of Austria-Hungary (1654-1705), partly as an engineer, and attained a high rank. During these 22 years, he took part in the war against the Ottoman Turks. In 1683 he fell into Turkish captivity and became a water-hauling slave; while doing this, he pried into the weak points of the defense system of Buda Castle, which knowledge he made good use of later. He was freed on 25 March 1684, and continued fighting against the Turks. He took part in the recapture of Buda in 1686. Among others, it is due to him that a number of the famous volumes of the Corvina Library of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 458-1490) were saved: he actually managed to traverse the one-time King's Palace and Library after its recapture and collect as many of the precious volumes as he could. The Emperor also sent Count Marsigli on diplomatic missions to the Pope and on peace negotiations with the Turks. One unfortunate outcome of this was the surrender of Breisach on the Rhine in Baden to the French again, though it was ceded to the Emperor in the Treaty of Ryswick in 1697. During the War of the Spanish Succession, when Imperial troops threatened the Papal States in 1708, it was Marsigli who headed the Papal army. Later (about 1715), he inspected the defenses of the Papal States against possible Turkish raids on the Adriatic coast. In 1702 he built an observatory in his Bologna palace. He founded the Accademia delle Scienze dell'Istituto di Bologna in 1712, which became an active center of scientific research. He decided to investigate the structure of mountains as well as the natural condition of the sea, lakes and rivers, leaving some useful local observations for natural science. In 1724 he published a treatise on oceanography, entitled Histoire physique de la mer. With his engineering and natural scientific knowledge, he prepared a richly illustrated scientific description of the rivers of Hungary of the Carpathian Basin, the fish in the Danube, also the birds, minerals and fossils of the realm, including its hydrographic map, showing mine sites and some geology, still useful for archeologists. He went to London in 1722 to be made a member of the Royal Society and met the famous physicist and mathematician, Isaac Newton. – B: 1882, 1703, T: 7456. → Corvina; Mátyás I, King; Budavár, Recapturing of, Reconquest of Buda in 1686.

Martyn, Ferenc (Francis) (Kaposvár, 10 June 1899 - Pécs, 10 April 1986) - Painter, graphic and ceramic artist. He spent his youth in the home of the well-known artist József (Joseph) Rippl-Rónai. He studied at the Budapest Academy of Fine Art under the direction of Gyula (Julius) Rudnay, János (John) Vaszary and István (Stephen) Réti. From 1926 to 1940 he lived in Paris, became associated with the leaders of the latest artistic trends, took part in their exhibitions, and traveled all over Europe. In 1940 he returned to Hungary, and in 1945 settled permanently in Pécs. He did some sculpting as well. Apprehension of the scene and its memory in geometric, abstract forms characterize his art. His works express the power of experience and the object seen. Loud harmony of dynamism and pure colors dominate his paintings. His more important works are Three on the Seashore (Hárman a tengerparton) (1943); Rooster (Kakas) (1955); Memory of the Sea (Tengeri emlék) (1964); Balaton Landscape with Birds (Balatoni táj madarakkal) (1973), and Birds (Madarak) (1977-1979). Apart from his independent graphic compositions, he produced excellent illustrations for famous literary works, e.g. Petőfi's The Apostle (Az apostol); Cervantes' Don Quixote, and Joyce's Ulysses. In ceramics he created dishes and vases in the porcelain factory of Pécs. He exhibited between 1934 and 1980. He received the Munkácsy Prize (1962) the title of Merited Artist, and title of Outstanding Artist (1970, 1978) and the Kossuth Prize (1973). – B: 0883, 0934, T: 7456. → Rippl-Rónai, József; Rudnay, Gyula; Vaszary, János; Réti, István.

Martzy, Johanna (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 26 October 1924 - Glarus, Switzerland, 13 August 1979) – Violin virtuoso. She studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, with Ferenc (Francis) Gábrriel (1932-1942). As a student, she won the Reményi and Hubay Prizes and was the winner of the musical competition in Geneva (1949). In 1948 she moved to and settled in Switzerland and started performing violin concertos of classical and romantic masters under the baton of Eugene (Jenő) Ormandy, Ernest Ansermet, Otto Klemperer, Paul Klezky, and other famous European and American conductors. From 1966 she performed chamber music as well, with pianist István (Stephen) Hajdu. Her recordings include Brahms and Mendelssohn Violin Concertos, Franck and Ravel Violin Sonatas, Mendelssohn and Mozart Concertos and her own work The Art of Johanna Martzy. She was a widely known violinist. She owned Hubermann's famous Stradivarius violin. – B: 0883, 1676, T: 7103. → Ormandy, Eugene.

Mary, Devotion of – Its origin goes back to the Annunciation, when, Angel Gabriel greeted Mary: “Hail (Mary) full of grace, the Lord is with you, blessed art thou amongst women” (Luke 1: 24). The first words in Latin: “Ave Maria” is a familiar prayer used by the Catholic Church. Devotion to the Virgin Mary in Hungary is as old as Christianity.

The Hungarian King István I (St Stephen, 997-1038) ordered the yearly celebration of the Virgin Mary and appointed August 15 as her day to be observed as a national holiday. He dedicated the Cathedral of Székesfehérvár in her honor. King András II (Andrew, Endre, 1205-1235) ordered the bells to ring daily at noon for Ave Maria. Hungarian literature is rich with themes about Mary. The oldest sermon dealing with the Virgin Mary is found in The Book of Legends of Debrecen (Debreceni Legendáskönyv) from the 15th century. There are many Maria shrines; the Hungarian fine art is rich in images of Mary and the number of her statues is countless. – B: 1078, 0945, 0942, 1173, T: 7103.→Mary's Kingdom; Maria's Lamentation, Old Hungarian.

Mary Legends – These purported stories about the Virgin Mary from her childhood, life, betrothal, death and ascent to Heaven are found in the New Testament. The Hungarian codices that favor stories about Mary's death and her ascent to Heaven are found in the Teleki Codex, Tihanyi Codex and the Érdy Codex. Their common source is Pelbárt Temesvári's Stellarium. – B: 1136, T: 3240.→Temesvári, Pelbárt; Codex Literature.

Mary's Kingdom (Country) – Regnum Marianum was the ancient Catholic name for Hungary. Its origin goes back to King István I (St Stephen, 997-1038), the founder of Hungary as a Christian Kingdom. According to tradition, the dying King without an heir offered the country to the protection of the Virgin Mary. From then on the Virgin Mary was regarded as Patrona Hungariae (Patroness of Hungary). King László I (St Ladislav, 1077-1095) also called Hungary Regnum Marianum. Mary always had serious devotion, probably because of pre-Christian religious traditions. She was called Blessed Woman (Boldogasszony) as well. Mary's picture is on the crown jewels, on coins, and was a symbol during wars and still has holidays such as Fruit-grafting Blessed Lady on 25 March. Churches, communities and parishes often used the name Regnum Marianum. The name Regnum Marianum emphasizes a strong connection between Hungary and Catholicism. – B: 0942, 1078, 1031, T: 7103.→Mary, Devotion of; Madonna, the Great.

Masnicius, Tóbiás (Masznyik, Masník) (Kosztolna, now Kostolná, Slovakia, 28 October 1640 - Zay-Ugróc, now Uhrovec, Slovakia, 28 July 1697) – Pastor of the Lutheran Church. He served in Szenic during 1668; in 1671 he was teacher and chaplain at Illava (now in Slovakia). The ecclesiastic Court, called Delegatum Judicium at Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), charged and sentenced him to galley slavery, along with 41 other preachers. Following his imprisonment in Pozsony and Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia), he escaped with János (John) Simonides in 1675 on his way to the galleys at Naples, and, although they were recaptured, they found Protestant patrons. He spent some time first in Naples, then in Wittenberg and Zittau, where he found an employment to suit his qualifications. Only in 1682 could he return to Hungary and, from that time on, for a short while, he was active again in Illava. From here – persecuted again because of his faith – he moved first to Blatnica, then to Túrócszentandrás (now Liptovský Ondrej, Slovakia) and finally to Zay-Ugróc, where he ministered to the congregation. He was one of the foremost clergymen of the so-called Decade of Mourning. He wrote about their sufferings in Crucis et lucis scola (1678), Unerhörter Gefängnis-Prozess (1878), and Gottes Kraft and Gnade (1681). He put together the Tót (now called Slovak) Grammar (1696) and published in the Tót (Slovak) language the God's Elected Vineyard. – B: 0931, 0942, 1257, T: 7682.→Decade of Mourning; Simonides, János.

Massacre in Mosonmagyaróvár – On 26 October 1956, the people of the town organized a peaceful demonstration in front of the City Hall. There were about 5000 participants: men, youth, and women with babies in their arms. As they passed in front of the barracks of the State Security Office (Államvédelmi Hivatal – ÁVH) people began to shout, demanding the removal of the red star from the top of the building. In response, the AVH guards opened machine-gun fire on the unarmed demonstrators and threw hand grenades among those who tried to shelter themselves on the ground. The massacre resulted in 85 deaths, among them a six-year-old boy and an 18-month-old baby; 50 people were severely injured and about 100 suffered lighter injuries. The AVH guards later surrendered; but their commander managed to escape to Czechoslovakia. – B: 1031, 1687, T: 7665.→State Security Police; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Massacre on Parliament Square (Kossuth Square, Budapest) - In the evening of 25 October 1956, continuing the revolutionary movement that began on the 23rd, tens of thousands of people gathered on Lajos (Louis) Kossuth Square in front of the Parliament in Budapest. They were demonstrating for the withdrawal of Soviet troops and free elections. From the top of the Ministry of Agriculture building across the square, members of the AVH (Államvédelmi Hivatal; State Security Office) began to fire at the unarmed demonstrators with machine guns. The victims, including many women and children, numbered in the hundreds. The massacre ended with the intervention of a Soviet tank. The Fact Finding Commission, set up by the Antall Government in 1993, reported that, according to the Soviet-Hungarian agreement regarding October 24-25, the Hungarian troops were responsible for guarding the bridges, while the “Soviet troops received an order to liquidate the demonstration in front of the Parliament Building”. However, the Commission did not exclude the possibility that “in co-operation with the Soviet army, some Hungarian troops also participated in the massacre”. Opposing this is the unanimous recollection of the participants present on the square that the Soviet tanks did not fire at the demonstrators, many of whom climbed on the tanks and, according to photographs taken at the time, they were waving Hungarian flags without any interference from the Soviet soldiers. Moreover, when the demonstrators came under fire from the top of five buildings, one of the Soviet tanks returned the fire, ending the 1.5 hours attack on the demonstrators. While the number of the officially registered dead was 54, those present recall more than 200 dead. Recent research has put the death toll at more than 1,000 with many more wounded. When the firing ended and the people left the Square, many returned to collect their dead to bury them secretly. The massacre in front of the Parliament Buildings left deep wounds in Hungarians. – B: 1677, 1678, T: 7665.→State Security Police; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Maszyik, Endre (Andrew) (Tiszaföldvár, 24 September 1857 - Budapest, 3 October 1927) – Lutheran theologian, teacher. He studied Theology in Sopron and Pozsony (now Bratislava in Slovakia) completing them in 1879. After some trips abroad, he became a teacher of religion in a high school in Selmečbánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). In 1882 he obtained his Ph.D. with his dissertation: The Beautiful as Magnificent (A szép mint felséges). Later he became a lecturer at the Lutheran Theological Academy of Pozsony, where he was appointed professor in 1885. From 1895 on he was Rector of the Academy until his retirement in 1917. He worked in the Departments of New Testament and Systematic Theology and took part in the research on Church history and Martin Luther. He edited the Hungarian Luther Monograph (in 6 vols. 1904-1914), so far the largest work in this field. Roman Catholic theologians have criticized his works on church history and the New Testament. He was a member of the Committee of the Hungarian Lutheran Literary Society, and founder as well as Editor of the journal, Theological Review (Theologiai Szaklap) (1902-1917). His better-known works are: Luther Biography (Luther életrajz) (1885); Evangelical Dogmatics (Evangélikus Dogmatika) (1888); Life and Epistles of Apostle Paul, vols. i-vi, (Pál apostol élete és levelei, I-VI), (1895-1900); Did Jesus Have Brothers and Sisters? (Voltak-e Jézusnak testvérei?) (1906); Life of Jesus (Jézus élete) (1906), and Translation of the New Testament (Újszövetség fordítás) (1925). – B: 1050, T: 7456. → Bible in Hungarian.

Master (gazda) – (1) The name originally was given to the head of a commune, mostly to the father of the clan, or the oldest male member of the commune, házigazda (owner of the house). In case of the death of the father, the clan assembly elected the most suitable male, the most intelligent member among themselves to be the new gazda. After the election, the community lived under the new master's guidance and supervision. The gazda collected and handled the fruit of the common labor. His duty was to keep proper account of the collected taxes and to satisfy all material needs of the clan members evenhandedly. If any member of the clan practiced some gainful occupation of his own, he had to protect his own. The gazda assigned the duties to each member of the community, but he was exempt from any physical labor and participated only voluntarily in some activities. To emphasize the significance of his position, he made the first symbolic move where male participation was required. He had the right to taste the food and drink first. The cellar was under his jurisdiction and he measured out the wine portions. He decided the sitting order of the guests at the table, he started the dance at the harvest festival, and his duty was to fend for the livestock on Christmas Eve. He and his wife addressed every member of the community with the familiar "thou" (te) basis, but the members had to use the more respectful "you" in response. ('Kend' or 'magázás'). The gazda's wife called her husband's older brother "my senior master" (öregbik uram), his younger brother "my junior master" (kisebbik uram) and addressed them as "you" (magázta őket). Some anthropological researchers attribute this custom to the remnants of an ancient matriarchal social order. (2) In modern usage the word gazda means a yeoman (minor landowner), although, in certain regions, the vestige of the old custom still survives. By use of an affix, the word gazda could specify the main activity or occupation, such as juhós gazda (sheep), szőlős – (vinyard), méhes – (beekeeper), majoros – (poultry), arató – (grain), pince – (cellar) gazda. (3) The name gazda, in connection with associations or organizations, is the person responsible for the wealth or building management. (4) In plant science or animal husbandry, the name gazda is given to the specimen that is misused by some parasite for their own sustenance. The linguistic origin could be traced back to an expression first used in the 'Legend of St Margit' (Margaret), where the community leader is called kazata. This underwent a linguistic metamorphosis throughout the centuries and became házatya, then changed to gazta and finally, in modern use gazda, the word used today. – B: 0942, 1134, T: 3233.

Master M.S. (Mester M.S.) – Painter of the early 16th century, one of the greatest Hungarian Gothic painters, only known by his initials on one of his altar (panel) paintings. He was probably superior to most of his contemporary artists in imagination and craftsmanship in religious (church) painting with great form of culture and rich color scheme, working in the spirit of the Danube School (Donauschule or Donaustil, the name of a circle of painters of the first third of the 16th century in Bavaria and Austria, mainly along the Danube valley). Originally, he prepared a set of eight wall panels for the fortified St. Catherine Church of Selmecebánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). As a result of later reconstructions and a number of Turkish attacks during the 16th century, the eight panels disappeared. Seven of them have been recovered in the course of the 19th century. His best-known panel paintings include Agony in the Garden (Christ on the Mount of Olives), Christ Carrying the Cross, and Crucifixion, while the painting Resurrection displays his well-preserved initials and the date 1506. These four are held in the Christian Museum of Esztergom. The work called Visitation (Meeting of Mary and Elizabeth) hangs in the Museum of Fine Arts, Budapest, and is considered to be the most valuable medieval Hungarian work of art; part of this painting provided the basis for the illustration of the Master M.S. Prize. Another of the panels is held at a museum in France: in one of the small details, it has the supposed self-portrait of the master. One of the altar-panels is in the local church at Szentantal (Szentantal-Bácsfa, now Băc, Slovakia). For centuries there have only been suppositions about the authorship of the famous altar-panels. According to one theory, they are the work of Master Sebestyén (Sebastian). A German art historians ascribe the painting to Jörg Breu of Augsburg without sufficient evidence. Recently, after fifty-year investigation by Miklós (Nicholas) Mojzer, Director of the Museum Fine Art, Budapest, found a solution to the mystery of the sign M.S: it is the initials of Master Sebestyén (Sebastian), a Hungarian painter, whose name is preserved in a document dated 1507, discovered early in the 20th century at Selmecebánya. Due to recent research, it seems almost certain that he was the master from the mining town, whose art is related to the art of Albrecht Dürer, in the spirit of the Danube school, also of Jörg Breu, and particularly of Matthias Grünewald's style, suggestive of folk art but individualistic at the same time. Dramatic depth is combined with richly colored decorative forms. Master M.S. studied most likely at a well-known art workshop. He prepared the altar-panels on commission from a well-to-do Hungarian aristocrat. – B: 0872, 0883, 1031, 1138, 1172, T: 7103, 7456.

Master Márton (15th century) – Painter. His name was preserved on the back of the middle panel of the altar painting of Jánosfalva together with the date 1491. The lumpy, stiff figures in his paintings are repeated in the works of the Maria Altar in Arnót, and on the Vir Dolorum panels of the Mater Dolorosa in Igló (now Spišská Nová Ves, German: Zipser Neudorf, Slovakia) He was a conservative delegate from the school of Szepes (Cípszer or Zipszer region is now in Slovakia) and was active between 1485 and 1500. – B: 1144, T: 7653.

Master Painter of the High Altar of Medgyes (15 century) – According to local legend, he was a master painter working in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) between 1480 and 1490. His major work is the High Altar of Medgyes (now Mediaş – Mediasch, in Sibienbürgen region in Romania); the passion scenes of the side panels are descendants from the engravings of the Schöngauer work from 1474-1479. Famous are the Altar Panels at Proştea-Mare (before: Gross-Probsdorf in Siebenbügen region, Romania) as well. – B: 1144, T: 7653.

Match, Safety – János (John) Irinyi substituted lead peroxide for the potassium chlorate in the match head and, by doing this, he invented the explosion free, silently igniting safety match in 1836. This match has become a widely manufactured commodity ever since. – B: 1138, 1226, T: 7662. → Irinyi, János.

“Match of the Century” – After the Helsinki Olympic Games (1952) the gold medalist Hungarian National Soccer Team received an invitation to England. The Hungarian Team won 6:3 (4:2) the match played at Wembley Stadium on 25 September 1953. The lineup of the team was as follows: Gyula (Julius) Grosics, Jenő (Eugene) Buzánszky, Gyula (Julius) Lóránt, Mihály (Michael) Lantos, József (Joseph) Bozsik, József, Zakarias, László (Ladislav) Budai II, Sándor (Alexander) Kocsis, Nándor (Ferdinand) Hidegkuti, Ferenc (Francis) Puskás, Zoltán Czibor. With this win the Hungarian team broke the English representative team’s undefeated record on home ground. The return match took place in Budapest on 24 May 1954, repeating the victory in England; the Hungarian team won by 7:1 (3:0). Soccer became the most popular sport in Hungary from the early 1950’s, especially due to the world success of the national team. The so-called ‘Golden Team’ won against all leading European and South American teams. – B: 1014, 1031, T: 7675. → Golden Team; Grosics, Gyula; Buzánszky, Jenő Lóránt, Gyula; Lantos, Mihály; Bozsik, József; Zakarias, József; Budai II, László; Kocsis, Sándor; Hidegkuti. Máté, János (John) (Táp, 6 June 1934 - Budapest, 26 February 1998) – Organist, choirmaster, music teacher. His family moved to Budapest in 1942, where he completed his secondary studies at the Lónyai Street Reformed High School, graduating in 1952. At the age of 10, he began his musical studies at a private school; then continued at the Béla Bartók Music Art Secondary School, Budapest. He studied piano in the class of Renée Sándor; in addition, he studied organ with János (John) Hammerschlag from 1951, and composition with Rezső (Ralph) Sugár. In 1955 he received his teacher’s diploma in piano, solmization and singing. In the same year, he was admitted to the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he studied with Jenő (Eugene) Ádám, Lajos (Louis) Bárdos, Zoltán Gárdonyi, Pál (Paul) Járdányi, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Szőnyi, Zoltán Vásárhelyi and Sebestyén (Sebastian) Pécsi (organ). He earned a choirmaster and singing-master diploma in 1959, and the diploma of organ in 1960. From 1948 he was involved in church music, first as organist at the Rákospalota-Újváros Reformed Church until 1968, then at the Calvin Square Reformed Church, Budapest until his untimely death. He was Chair of the Department of Hymnology at the Reformed Theological Academy from 1979, then that of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University, Budapest. In 1990 he was on a study leave at the Music Academy of Cologne, Germany. From 1993 he taught singing at the reopened Lónyai Street Reformed High School, Budapest. His musical activity is multi-faceted: he performed hundreds of organ concerts in concert halls, town and village churches at home and in 11 countries; played organ works of classical, romantic and modern composers, such as Paul Hindemith, Carel Brons, Jos Kunst, Ahrns, Adriessen, Leclair, and modern Hungarian composers, e.g. Z. Gárdonyi, E. Szőnyi, I. Sulyok, Gy. Geszler, M. Kovács. He was deputy choir master of the Choir of the Health Employees' Trade Union for 25 years, and choir master of a couple of church choirs. Together with his wife, Julianna (Juliana) Lőrincz he performed many choir pieces, including the St. Mark Passion and cantatas of J. S. Bach, works F. Mendelssohn and Lajos (Louis) Vass; pieces of B. Britten, Z. Gárdonyi and F. Ottó. With the Ráday Choir he toured Transylvania (now Romania), Northern Hungary (now Slovakia), Sub-Carpathia (now Ukraine), Austria, Belgium, Holland, Sweden and France (1991, 1995). From 1958 he participated in the training of Reformed Church Organists and Cantors. He edited an Ecumenical Hymnbook, a Reformed Hymnbook, wrote several articles and studies, and designed new organs. He corresponded with Albert Schweitzer and made several recordings. He was one of the outstanding Hungarian Reformed Church musicians of the second part of the 20th century. – B: 1088, 1679, T: 7103.→Most of the persons in the article have their own entries.

Maternal Lineage – A social order where the family name, social status and the fortune of the family are inherited on the mother's side. In Hungary, family names are inherited on the paternal line except in in-law relationships at some locations – for instance in Kalotaszeg – where the child receives the mother's or the grandmother's family name. In some cases, maternal and paternal family names might appear jointly, mostly in cases when inheritance is involved, when the first-born female offspring had the priority right to the maternal wealth. – B: 1134, T: 3233.

Máthé, Elek (Alec) (Pécs, 6 September 1895 - Budapest, 22 January 1968) – Minister of the Reformed Church, teacher, literary translator, Hungarologist. Besides his theological studies he also attended a course in Classical Philology at the University of Budapest. After World War I, he furthered his studies in Scotland at the College of Glasgow. He traveled through Greece and Italy several times. From 1926 he taught at the Reformed High School of Budapest. He encouraged several of his students, among them the poet Gábor (Gabriel) Devecseri, to study and practice the ancient Greco-Roman culture. At the end of the 1930s he was the Parish Minister in Kiskunhalas. In 1940 he visited the Hungarian Reformed congregations in the USA and wrote a book about his experiences. In 1945 he joined the Hungarian Radical Party, and he was associated with the World Federation of Hungarians until his retirement. He translated the Parallel Lives of Plutarch (ca. 46-120 A.D.), and also translated from the works of W. Scott, U. Sinclair, E. Hemingway, A. Miller and S. Fitzgerald – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Devecseri, Gábor.

Máthé, Erzsí (Elizabeth) (Erzsébet Mertz) (Budapest, 16 May 1927 - ) – Actress. In 1948, after completing the Art School of the National Association of Actors, Budapest, she played at the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház) of Budapest. Between 1942 and 1952 she performed at the National Theater of Pécs (Pécsi Nemzeti Színház) and, from 1952 to 1983 she acted at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest; and from 1983 at the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház). She is a multi-faceted actress. Her regal posture and deep, sonorous voice predestined her for playing tragic roles. Early in her career, she also played a number of classical leading heroine roles. Her capacity for humor and caricature renders her eminently suitable for comedies. Her roles include Clytemnestra in Aeschylus' Oresteia; Goneril in Shakespeare's King Lear (Lear Király); Queen Margaret in Shakespeare's Richard III; Camilla in Ede Szigligeti's Lilomfi; Mrs. Jourdain in Molière's Le Bourgeois gentilhomme (Az úrhatnám polgár), and Juli Szabó in F. Karinthy's Thousand Years (Ezer év). There are more than 30 feature films to her credit, including Smugglers (Csempészek) (1958); Stolen Happiness (Lopott boldogság) (1962); Palm Sunday (Virágvasárnap) (1969); Színbád (1971), and Stolen Pictures (Lopott képek) (2005). Among her more than 35 TV films are We are not Angels (Nem vagyunk angyalok) (1967); The Black City (A fekete város) (series, 1971); Sunflower (Napraforgó) (1976); Glória (1982), Man and Shadow (Ember és árnyék) (1985), and Peasant Decameron (Paraszt Dekameron) (2001). She received a number of prizes, including the Mari Jászai Prize (1956, 1971), the Artist of Merit title (1976) and Outstanding Artist title (1981), the Kossuth Prize (1985), the Middle Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1997), was made Life Member in the Company of Immortals (1998), as well as Actress of the Nation (2000). – B: 1445, 1031, 1105, T: 7456.

Mathiász, János (John) (Ádámfölde, now Mosurov, Slovakia, 22 February 1838 - Kecskemét, 3 December 1921) – Viticulturist. After completing high school in Eperjes and Kassa (now Prešov and Košice, Slovakia), his higher studies began at the Seminary in Kassa. After a year, he changed over to study Law. Then, for years, he worked as a clerk for County Abaúj. Finally he became a viticulturist, when he bought 3 acres of land near Kassa, where he improved many varieties by grafting. In 1880, he moved to the Tokaj Mountain area and bought a 7-acre vineyard at Mád (15 km from Tokaj). To eradicate the phylloxera, in 1890 he bought a 45-acre stretch of immune sand at Kecskemét in the Danube-Tisza Interfluve, where he settled with his family. Here, toward the end of his life, he became a famous viticulturist, and succeeded in improving countless grape varieties, leading to 3700 new improved ones, of which up to 60 varieties are still grown. His two famous varieties are the Queen of Vineyards (Szőlőskertek királynője) and Pearl of Csaba (Csabagyöngye), but there are many other favorites, e.g. The Beauty of Cegléd (Cegléd szépe), the Flower of Kecskemét (Kecskemét virága), and others. A prize, a Museum in Kecskemét, and a School in Balatonboglár bear his name. – B: 1031, 1068, 1680, T: 7456. – Kocsis, Pál.

Matijevics, Lajos (Louis) (Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 7 July 1940 - Újvidék, now Novi Sad, Serbia, 21 October 1983) – Linguist. He obtained a Degree in Education in Hungarian Language and Literature from the University of Újvidék. At first he taught in the general school of Kishegyes for three years; from 1966 he was a demonstrator at the Faculty of Hungarian Language, University of Újvidék. In 1970 he obtained his Ph.D. at the University of Budapest. Back at the University of Újvidék, he was appointed to the post of assistant professor and, in 1983, he became a full professor and Departmental Head. His articles and studies began to appear from 1970 on in scientific journals and in Yugoslavian weeklies and daily papers. He made his mark as a scholar in the field of grammar, dialect research and jargon studies. He committed suicide. He posthumously received the Bálint Csűry Memorial Medal. His works include The Water-names of the Ferenc Canal (A Ferenc-csatorna víznevei) (1981), and Our Geographic Names (Földrajzi neveink), 1982). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Matkovics, Pál (Paul) (Matkovich) (? , 1836 - Budapest, 25 February 1887) – Writer. In the latter half of the 1850s in Pest he worked under the name Vitéz Bús as a writer and journalist. In 1861 he edited the comic paper Black Soup (Fekete Leves); and from 1870 to 1883 he published the humorous diary Let us Laugh (Nevessüink). Towards the end of his life he became almost completely blind. Mainly his humorous writings proved popular. He translated a number of foreign novels into Hungarian. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Vértesi, Arnold.

Matolcsy, György Huba (George) (Budapest, 18 July 1955 - ) – Political economist, politician and writer. He obtained his Degree from the Department of Industry at the University of Economics of Budapest in 1977; thereafter, he worked at the Institute of Industrial Economics and Industrial Organization. In 1978 he went to the Ministry of Finance, where at first he was engaged with financing the Hungarian carbohydrate industry; later he took part in the renewed economic reform-preparatory work. From 1985 he carried out research on the possibilities of property reform at the Institute of Financial Research. In 1986 he was one of the authors of the study entitled Change and Reform. In 1990, Prime Minister József (Joseph) Antall appointed Matolcsy as his financial adviser and he became Political Under-Secretary of State in the Prime-Ministerial Office. He resigned from there in December 1990, and is now in charge of the Secretariat of Economics and is Secretary of the Economics Cabinet. From early 1991 he worked as director of the Research Institute of Privatization. From October 1991, for three years, he worked at the Directorate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD), London, as a representative of the Hungarian Government; and in 1994, as its Director. In 1995 he was appointed Director of the Institute of Economic Growth. In 1998, as a financial specialist, he prepared the economic program of the Fidesz Party (Fiatal Demokraták Szövetsége – FIDESZ; Young Hungarian Democrats' Alliance) and, from the end of the year he was a member of the economic body of Prime Minister Viktor Orbán, becoming his Minister of Finance during 2000 and 2002. Since 2003 he has been a member of Fidesz Party, and since 2006, a Member of Parliament for County Bács-Kiskun. Early in 2010, in the 2nd Orbán-Cabinet, he became Minister of National Economy. In 1981 he earned a Ph.D. and, from the 1980s, he published a number of works, including a trend-setting essay, the Change and Reform (Fordulat és Reform) (1986); the Years of Our Convalescence (Lábadozásunk évei) (1991); Our Living Memories (Élő emlékeink) (2003); the American Empire (Amerikai Birodalom) (2004), and From Champion Rider to Lagman (Éllovasból sereghajtó) (2008). – B: 0874, 1697, 1031, 2072, T: 7456.→Antall, József; Orbán, Viktor; Political Parties in Hungary.

Mátra Mountain – A volcanic mountain member of the Northeast Hungarian Central Mountains of varied composition, part volcanic, part sedimentary in origin. The Mátra Mtn. is composed of Miocene andesites, positioned between the Cserhát Range and the Bükk Mountain. Its is in the northern part of County Heves, between the valleys of the Zagyva and Tarna Rivers, 37 km long in E-W direction, and 30 km wide in N-S direction. Its highest point is the Kékes (1010 m); slightly lower are the Nagy-Gallya (963 m) and the Saskő (899 m). There are a number of creeks flowing south towards the Great Plain; on these southern slopes some famous types of wine are grown, like Visontai, Domoszlói, Gyöngyösi, Apci, Pásztói. At its southern foot is the town of Gyöngyös, looking towards the Great Hungarian Plain. Forests cover the interior of the mountain. The results of post-volcanic activity are the mineral water springs of Parád and Gyöngyös; there are also traces of geysers in some spots. The mineral wealth of the Mátra Mtn. includes: copper, gold, silver, lead, petroleum, brown coal, and dyer's earth. During the reign of the Árpád Dynasty (896-1301) there was ironmining at Domoszló. The inhabitants of the mountain are ethnic Hungarians (Magyars). Touristically the Mátra Mountain is one of the most exploited areas of Hungary; it has good roads for cars and for tourists, has sanatoriums, hostels, holiday resorts and spas at favorite spots like Kékes, Gallyatető, Métraháza, and Mátrafüred. Parádfürdő, 2 km from Parád at the northern foot of the mountain is a health resort with mineral-water springs, an openair air swimming pool and a large park. – B: 1068, 7456, T: 7456.

Mátrai, Lajos György (Louis George) (Budapest, 6 March 1850 - Budapest, 15 October 1906) – Sculptor. He started his career as a stone and wood carver, and studied in Paris and in Munich; he took part in the ornamentation work on the castle of the Bavarian King Louis II. On his return to Hungary in 1880, he was a teacher at the School of Industrial Arts. He was the creator of a long list of monuments, among them the statue of István Széchenyi in Sopron, the Vásárhelyi statue in Szeged, the memorial of Gáspár Károli in Gönc, and the mausoleum of Miklós (Nicholas) Izsó in the Kerepes Street Cemetery of Budapest. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Mátray Codex – A songbook, its content most probably collected in the Felvidék (Upland, Northern Hungary, now Slovakia) in 1677. The first part contains secular songs, the second religious ones, while the third part is made up of prayers. Only two of the secular songs are historical. One is about the death of Count Miklós (Nicholas) Zrinyi. The other 39 are love songs; hence they are meaningful sources of ancient Hungarian love poetry; 20 religious songs were taken from Balassi-Rimay's Godly Songs (Istenes énekek), published in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). Some of its prayers and notes reflect the influence of Protestant theology. The Codex was named after Gábor (Gabriel) Mátray (1797-1875), Director-Guardian of the Hungarian National Museum's Library and procurer of this significant document. – B: 1150, 1257, T: 3240. → Codex Literature; Mátray, Gábor.

Mátray, Erzsí (Lisa) (Budapest, 16 March 1894 - Budapest, 14 August 1968) – Actress. She completed her training at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and, by 31 March 1913, she had her debut at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, and was contracted in September of the same year. She had a 2-year contract with the Unió Co. She returned to the National Theater, and from 1937 she became its life member. After 1945 she played for a while in the Artist Theater (Művész Színház). She retired in 1952. Good feeling for conversation and dramatic power characterized her acting. Her beauty and her clear, direct speech were particularly suited for her interpretation of Roxanne in Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac, which she played in repeated revivals at the National Theater. Her roles included Ariel in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar); Olivia in Twelfth Night (Vizkereszt); Jessica in The Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár); Márta in Edouard Pailleron's The Mouse (Az egér); Roxanne in Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac, Gertrudis in Katona's Bánk bán, and Athalie in Jókai's The Golden Man (Az aranyember). Her feature films are: Sisters (Nővérek) (1912); When We Became Old (Mire megvénülünk) (1917); A Happy Face, Please (Barátságos arcot kérek) (1926), and The Devil's Fiancée (Az ördög mátkája) (1936). She is a recipient the Farkas-Ratkó Prize (1916). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Mátray, Gábor (Gabriel) (Rothkrepf) (Nagykáta, 23 November 1797 - Budapest, 17 July 1875) – Writer, music historian. Between 1816 and 1830 he was a private instructor for the family of Baron Simon Prónay, and later for the family of Count Lajos (Louis) Széchenyi. He returned to Budapest in 1830 to finish his legal studies. In 1833 he established two periodicals, the Minstrel (Regélő) and Artist of the Homeland (Honművész), and edited them until 1841. From 1837 he worked at the Hungarian National Museum; at the beginning of 1840, he was Director of the newly established Music School Society (Hangászegyesületi Zenede); after 1867 its name was changed to National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede). He was the outstanding founder of Hungarian music history research. The importance of his work lies first of all in his recognition and uncovering of the significance of Hungarian music's historical material. His scientific research is a milestone also in the area of folk music research and, above all, the history of the Hungarian musical culture. Several of his works and publications on music history appeared in print. His works include General Collection of Hungarian Folksongs, vols. i-iii (Magyar népdalok egyetemes gyűjteménye, I-III) (1852-1858), and Tunes of Historical, Biblical and Hungarian Mocking Songs (Történeti, bibliai és gunyoros magyar énekek dallamai) (1859). All are important source material. He also wrote plays, opera libretto, and literary and scientific works. His works mark the beginning of Hungarian music criticism and the first concerts of music-historical quality, and his scientific systematization of the Széchenyi Library is also significant. – B: 1197, 1257, T: 7684.

Mattioni, Eszter (Esther) (Szekszárd, 12 March 1902 - Budapest, 17 March 1993) – Painter. She studied at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, and later she attended the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest. Starting in 1926, she exhibited at home and abroad: Memphis, TN, USA, (1972, 1988), at the Hungarian National Gallery (1977), and in Tokyo (1980). The critics applauded her colorful, rainbow-like pictures. In her works, the influence of the Roman School can be felt. In 1937, at the World Fair of Paris, her gate-decorating pictures won a Diplome d'Honneur. Her picture, the Peasant Bride (Paraszt menyasszony) is in the Louvre, Paris. She toured Italy in 1939 and, in the same year, visited the Scandinavian countries. Between 1931 and 1942 she worked in the Artist Colony of Szolnok. This period was influential in her art; her use and application of color became more moderate, as is apparent in her pictures, such as Tabán of Szolnok (Szolnoki Tabán); Patronal Festival at the Mátra (Mátrai Búcsú), and the Woman of Decs with Bread (Decsi asszony kenyérrel). Together with István (Stephen) Pólya, she developed a particular “multi-colored stone” (hímeskő) technique. It grew out of the mosaic technique; but instead of applying colored pieces of glass, she used colored marble chips and semi-precious stones embedded in concrete. She made compositions for the Stühmer Chocolate Factory, Budapest; for the burial chapel of the Cathedral of Székesfehérvár, and around the tomb of Bishop Vilmos (William) Apor. Her greatest religious composition, The Disciples of Emmaus (Az emmausi tanítványok) is in the Rókus Chapel, Budapest. The Hungarian National Gallery, museums in Hungary and abroad and private collections display her works. In 1981 she donated her collection to the City of Szekszárd. She was one of the greatest Hungarian painters of the 20th century. – B: 0879, 0934, T: 7103.→Rudnay, Gyula.

Mattyasovszky, Ilona (Helen) (Ilona Fraknói) (Esztergom, 31 March 1892 - 1943) – Film actress. For some time she appeared under the name of Ilona Fraknói. In 1913 she already played a leading role in the film, Éva Drághfy, one of the first Hungarian silent films. During World War I, she appeared mainly in the productions of the Astra Film Works. During the rule of the dictatorship of the Council (Soviet) Republic (1919), she was a member of the Film Directorate. After the war, for a while, she maintained a film-school, together with her husband, Géza Bolváry. In 1926 they moved to Vienna, Berlin and to Munich. She was a success in several German movies. Her films include The Terror of the Village (A falu rossza) (1917); The Rich Poor (Gazdag szegények) (1917); Ordeal by Fire (Tűzpróba) (1917); Equality (Egyenlőség) (1918); Prodigal Son (Tékozló fiú) (1919); The Actress (A színésznő) (1920), and The Half of a Boy (Egy fiúnak a fele) (1924). – B: 0883, 1427, T: 7456.→Bolváry, Géza.

Matuska, Márton (Martin) (Temerin, Yugoslavia, 12 October 1936 - ) – Writer, journalist, historian. He completed his higher studies at the Agrarian Department of the University of Újvidék (now Novi-Sad, Serbia) (1957-1961). He edited the local journal, Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) (1956-1957, 1961-1962, 1964-1993) and, after retirement, he became its contributor. He has been President of the Petőfi Hungarian Cultural Society since 1996. His research centered on the genocide of Hungarians in Voivodina, Serbia after the Second World War. His works include Craftsmen of Temerin (Temerini iparosok) (1989); The Days of Reprisal: As they Live in Memory (A megtorlás napjai: Ahogy az emlékezet megőrizte) (1991); Our Homeland, the Stepmother (Hazánk a mostoha), reports (1994), and We are Missing Each Other (Hiányzunk egymásnak), reports (1997). He received the Markovics Prize (1966), the Gábor Bethlen Prize (1991), and the Mihály Táncsics Prize (1999). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.→Atrocities against Hungarians.

Mátyás Church (Matthias Church, Nagyboldogasszony Church), the Coronation Church of Hungary, a cathedral in Neo-Gothic style located in the Buda Castle area (including the Royal Palace and some ministry buildings). The first written document to mention the Church appeared in 1247, soon after the Mongol-Tartar invasion of Hungary (1241-1242), during the reign of King Béla IV (1235-1270). By 1296, the church was referred to as a monument. It was the earliest example of the classical Gothic style in Hungary. King Charles Robert of the Anjou Dynasty was crowned there in 1309. Emperor and King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg) received the Emperor of Constantinople there in 1424. Under King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), between 1460 and 1470, the oratory and the southern church steeple were built as additions. After ascending the throne, King Mátyás I held a thanksgiving service there in 1458, and there were festive celebrations in it during both of his marriages. The church burned down several times over the centuries, but was always rebuilt. When the Ottoman Turks occupied Buda in 1541, they converted it to a mosque. They removed the altars and statues and painted over the wall frescos. After the Turkish occupation ended in 1686, the Jesuits took it over and furnished it in the Baroque style. The medieval arches and walls of the Church fell into such a bad state of repair that renovation became imperative. It was carried out under the direction of Frigyes (Frederic) Schulek between 1873 and 1896. In its present state, only the core of the main wall, the columns of the naves and the lower part of the southern tower are genuinely medieval. The crypt contains many treasures; now it is converted to an exhibition of sacred art. In more recent times, Emperor and King Francis Joseph and Queen Elizabeth were ceremoniously crowned there in 1867. Due to the superb acoustics of the Church, large-scale orchestral performances are held in it, like Beethoven's Missa Solemnis or Mozart's Mass in C minor. – B: 1031, 1681, T: 7456.→Madonna, the Great; Schulek, Frigyes; Buda Castle.

Mátyás I, King (Matthias Corvinus) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 23 February 1443 - Vienna, Austria, 6 April 1490) – King of Hungary and Bohemia, Prince of Austria. He possessed the greatest stature in the history of Hungary in the Middle Ages. He was the second son of János (John) Hunyadi and Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Szilágyi. He received a humanistic education under the guidance of János (John) Vitéz, spoke Hungarian, Latin, German and Bohemian, well above the norm of the nobility of his time. After the execution of his brother, László (Ladislav) Hunyadi, King László V (Ladislav) (1453-1457) took him to Vienna and later to Prague. The trademarks of his character showed early: great personal courage, quick wit, resolute, personal pride and independence.

In 1458, the same nobles who assisted his father, the “Turk-beater” János Hunyadi, elected him king in Buda, but they also selected his uncle, Mihály (Michael) Szilágyi as a regent. Mátyás soon proved unwilling to accept such restrictions on his ability to rule. Meanwhile, his opponents and László (Ladislav) Garai offered the crown to Emperor Frederick III; but Mátyás’ military triumph in 1459, and Garai’s death ended the rebellion and resulted in Szilágyi’s arrest. In 1462-1463 he defeated the Czech forces led by Jan Giskra in Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). In 1463 he occupied Fort Jajca, and in 1464 took Sebrenik and continued the grand designs of his father. He regained the Holy Crown from Emperor Ferdinand and was crowned with it at Székesfehérvár on 29 March 1464. He crushed the despots and oligarchs and strengthened the royal power. He occupied Vienna, where, allegedly, he was poisoned.

Mátyás created a wide diplomatic service and established a mercenary army known as the Black Army (Fekete Sereg). The training tactics of his army were unparalleled and was copied in its entirety by King Louis IX of France. To cover the costs, he revised the taxation system comparable to European practices, putting his yearly income in line with the greatest European leaders. He revamped the administration of the Judiciary System, the Courts, Appeal Courts, and the High Courts. These remained in practice until 1944. He recognized that the best strategy was a defensive warfare against the Turks and developed the country's southern system of fortifications. He wanted to drive the Turks entirely out of Europe through the joint efforts of all the European armies. For this reason, he wanted the crown of the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire. He defeated the Czech Estates and was elected King at Olmütz on 3 May 1469 by the Catholic clergy. He forced the three times stronger Polish army of King Kázmér IV (Casimir), and the army of Czech King Ulászló (Wladislas) into a Peace Treaty at Boroszló (Breslau - Wroclaw, Poland) on 8 December 1474. He entered Vienna on 17 August 1472. His early death prevented further advancement of his plans.

He was a great promoter of the humanities. In the 1460s he began and continued the practice of book collecting at great expense. These were the famous, richly decorated Corvinas, forming the core of his Corvina Library. He established bookshops and print shops in Buda, under the direction of András (Andrew) Hess; he also built an observatory there. He started the construction of the Renaissance-style fort in Visegrád under the supervision of leading Italian artists. The pomp and splendor of his court astounded foreign scientists and visitors alike. However, after 150 years of Turkish occupation, the devastation of Buda and the center part of Hungary (1526-1686), hardly any traces of his splendor remain today. His last enterprise was to ensure the succession of his natural son Prince János (John) Corvin but, despite all the efforts of statute legislation and swearing of the allegiance of the Church, the magnates and the city of Vienna, his efforts failed. His thirty-two-year reign represents Hungary's golden era. His court was the center of Renaissance art and science. He established the middle class and the trade guilds. At the time, Hungary's population was four million, the same as that of France or England.

His court historians immortalized his stature and the history of his reign was thoroughly documented. The first chronicler was János (John) Thuróczi. Later, Antonio Bonfini in Rerum Ungaricum Decades detailed the history of Hungary up to 1496. Galeotto's anecdotes and the people's folklore spread the accomplishments of the "Righteous King" far and wide. He was the most popular Hungarian King. – B: 1230, 0883, 11288, 1136, T: 7658.→Corvina; Mátyás I, King's Corvin's Calvary; Hunyadi, János; Thuróczy, János; Bonfini, Antonio; Hess, András; Zsámboki Codex.

Mátyás I, King, Corvin's Calvary – A cross with a holder made of pure gold, richly decorated with precious stones and pearls. It is a beautiful creation of the late Middle-Age goldsmith art. The height is 730 mm; the weight is approximately 6 kg. It has two parts. The upper one was created in Paris in 1402; the lower part originates from Lombardy, Italy from the period between 1469 and 1490. The upper part is gold, made in the Gothic religious style, and shows the Calvary scene with Christ and three Prophets bound to a pole. The small sculptures are covered with special enamel. This part is the most important relic of the goldsmith's art representative of the Parisian Court. The lower part is made of poured gold. According to the coat of arms and style, an artist from Lombardy created it during the reign of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490). Sphinxes, dolphins and other mythological creatures decorate it along with the coat of arms of the King. As indicated in a letter, kept at the Káptalan (Chapter) Archives, János (John) Corvin first pawned it to Archbishop Tamás (Thomas) Bakócz, then gave it to him in 1494. It is kept in the Esztergom Cathedral's treasury. – B: 1078, 1144, 1020, 1031, T: 7673.→Mátyás I, King; Bakócz, Tamás.

Mátyás I, King, Small Seal of – A round seal of 40 mm in diameter. It has a lead core, while the surface is covered with gold. On one side, the seated figure of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) is visible, holding the symbols of power: the scepter and the orb, in his hands. In front of his feet is the coat of arms with the Hungarian Cross, surrounded by the inscription ADIUTOR MEUS DOMINUS DEUS. On the other side is the coat of arms of the Árpád dynasty, surrounded by an inscription MATHIE D.G. REGIUS HUNGARIE ETC. There is a flap on the side of the seal for a string. A citizen of Szeged found the small seal on 23 December 1987, close to the Witch's Island (Boszorkány sziget) on the shores of the River Tisza that at the time was unusually low. Until then, there were only two similar seals known in Hungary, one in Sopron, and another in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). The Sopron seal is a rare treasure from the Middle Ages; microscopic studies identified the Szeged find with the design of the Sopron seal. It is kept at the Ferenc Móra Museum in Szeged. – B: 1020, T: 7673.→Mátyás I, King.

Mátyás I, King, Throne Tapestry of – The most significant 15th century relic of the European art of weaving. The fabric is velvet brocade, woven on a rectangular-shaped, golden background; the pattern has green velvet contours, filled with hook-stitched golden thread. In the center field's lower part a decorative vase is placed on a base adorned with angel heads. On both sides of the vase is a griffin standing on a cornucopia and a blooming tree branch. Above the vase is a Renaissance style fruit wreath with ribbons; in its center is the coat of arms of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490). The design is probably the work of Pollaiuolo, and was made in the weaving studio of Malochi in Florence, Italy, where they produced only commissioned pieces. This tapestry was originally discovered in the treasury of the Erdődy family, at the end of the 19th century. Since then, it has been kept at the National Museum of Hungary in Budapest. The Museum also treasures scarlet-colored fabric fragments. It is believed that there were two series of these wall hangings: the first had the coat of arms of King Mátyás I, the second that of Queen Beatrix. These were commissioned to adorn the walls of their Buda palace rooms to commemorate their wedding. – B: 1144, T: 7670.→Mátyás I, King.

Mátyás, Ernő (Ernest) (Kristyór, now Criscior, Romania, 16 June 1888 - Sárospatak, 29 May 1950) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian and writer. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1907-1911), and in Geneva (1924-1925). He became an honorary lecturer in Kolozsvár in 1921 and obtained his Ph.D. in Philosophy from the University of Szeged in 1992. Between 1914 and 1925 he was Parish Minister in Székelyföldvár (now Rășboieni-Cetate, Romania). From 1923 to 1925 he was a substitute teacher at the Theological Academy of Kolozsvár. From 1928 he was Professor of New Testament Studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak. As Director of the Reformed College of Sárospatak, he made the College famous by launching such movements as the Village Seminary (Faluszeminárium), People's Academy (Népfőiskola), and Talent Research Work (Tehetség kutató munka) etc. His works include Mysticism of Apostle Paul (Pál apostol misztikája) (1921); Religious Mysticism (Vallásos misztika) (1921); Major Problems of the Gospel of John (János Evangéliuma főbb problémái) (1926); New Testament's Revelation of History (Újszövetségi kijelentéstörténet) (1943), and the Gospel of John (János Evangéliuma) (1950). He is regarded as an outstanding New Testament scholar between the two world wars. – B: 0883, 1160, 0910, T: 7103.

Mátyás, Ferenc (Francis) (Kispestpuszta, 22 November 1911 - Budapest, 18 February 1991) – Poet, writer. He was born into a poor peasant family of many children. He grew up at Tápióbitske and Gyalpuszta and worked for the manors. In 1934 he completed an industrial art course at a technical college. He became assistant in a firm, drawing addresses and coat-of-arms in Budapest. He became acquainted with folk writers and his poems were published in the magazines, Answer (Válasz), People of the East (Kelet Népe), and some in the Nice Word (Szép Szó), with the help of the prominent poet Attila József. He joined the paper, Evening Courier (Esti Kurir) and, after 1945, he was a correspondent of Freedom (Szabadság), and edited the weekly, Free Lőrinc (Szabad Lőrinc). From 1949 he was a correspondent for the National Széchényi Library; later he became a research scientist and section head at the Library. In 1953 he obtained a Librarian Degree. Between 1959 and 1972 he was Editor for the Magvető Publishing House. His early poems show merciless objectiveness in featuring all the aspects of the poor living conditions of the Puszta. Later, he expressed a feeling of anguish over the bitterness and defenselessness in one's life. After 1947 he could only rarely publish his poems but, from the 1960s, his poems started to appear more often. They were permeated with the serenity of recollection and the desire for harmony. His works include I would like to be (Szeretnék lenni) poems (1936); The Village Delegate (A falu küldöttje), autobiographical novel (1942); The Poor Creatures of the Pustas (A puszták szegénykéi) poems (1943); The Only Refuge (Az egyetlen menedék) poems (1979); Silence and Restlessness (Csönd és nyugtalanság), poems (1958), and Our Ephemeral Existence (Tiszavirág életünk) poem, (1988). He received numerous prizes, among them the Attila József Prize (1960). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456. → József, Attila.

Mátyás, Mária (Hajdúdorog, 23 September 1924 - Budapest, 12 September 1999) – Opera singer (soprano). She studied under the direction of Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Hoór-Tempis, Árpád Palotai and Mária (Marie) Budanovits; in Rome, she was a student of Manfredo Polverosi. She made her debut in 1946 at the Opera House, Budapest. She was its soloist from 1945 to 1980. At the beginning of her career, she sang coloratura soprano roles; later she changed to lyric roles and also sang leading dramatic soprano parts with great success. She was one of the most versatile leading sopranos of the Opera House. She played a significant role in the introduction of contemporary Hungarian operas, e.g. by Emil Petrovics and Ferenc (Francis) Farkas. All the female leading roles of the Erkel operas were in her repertoire. The carrying-power of her voice, her range of expressiveness and her interpretation, together with her acting talent, brought her success both on the Hungarian and the international opera stages. She regularly appeared as a guest artist all over Europe. She was also a recording artist. Her roles include Pamina in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Konstanza in Mozart's Il Seraglio (Abduction from the Seraglio – Szöktetés a szerájból); Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata; Desdemona in Verdi's Othello; Marguerite in Gounod's Faust; Senta in Wagner's Flying Dutchman (A bolygó hollandi), and Örzse in Kodály's Háry János. She was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1953), and received the Artist of Merit title (1959), as well as the Outstanding Artist title (1975). – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Erkel, Ferenc; Farkas, Ferenc; Petrovics, Emil.

Matyó (Matyók) – A group of Hungarians living in or near Mezőkövesd, Szentistván and Tard in the western region of County Borsod. They make up one of the ethnic groups of the Palóc. They have mostly large families, and earlier strict endogamy characterized them. From the middle of the 19th century they cultivated their colorful and rich clothing and worked as seasonal laborers. Their Roman Catholic religion played a very important part in their culture. The Matyó embroidery is a much sought-after item, even abroad. – B: 0942, 1153, 1134, T: 7684.→Palóc; Győrffy, István.

Mátyusföld (now Matudova, Slovakia) in Northern Hungary of the Carpathian Basin (now in Slovakia) – The northwestern part of the Little Hungarian Plain, a very fertile talus slope covered by loess at the foot of the Little Carpathians. It is a large island (called Csallóköz, now Žitný ostrov, Slovakia) formed by two branches of the River Danube. It is named after the powerful oligarch of the Anjou period, Máté (Matthew) Csák (1260-1321), who owned this area at the time. In earlier times it was regarded as the third region of Hungary known as Pars Tertia Regni. The region's Hungarian population dates back to the 9th century. A number of place names appear in documents dating back to the era of the Árpád Dynasty (896-1301), such as: Boldogfa, Diószeg, Hegy, Hegysur, Hidaskürt, Kossut, Jóa, Nyék, Pered, Szeli, Taksony, Vizkelet and Zsigárd. Among the small villages a number of agrarian towns developed: Szenc, Szered, Vágselye. The town of Deáki is well known as a cultural-historical heritage site, where the ritual book, known as the Pray Codex was kept in the ancient local church. Albert Szenci Molnár, the famous world traveler, language-reformer and psalm translator was born in Mátyusföld. Zoltán Kodály, the renowned composer, spent his childhood in Galánta, giving rise to his folk song collecting journeys. The area is almost entirely Hungarian inhabited; the Slovaks settled only on the northern perimeter. After World War II the Hungarian population endured the effects of the "Benes Decrees". From Slovakia 100,000 ethnic Hungarians were deported; there were forced population exchanges with Hungary, while 60,000 were taken to Sudetenland for slave labor, including those from the Mátyusföld. In spite of their dire fate, today almost every Hungarian village maintains a folk ensemble, holding cultural festivities and Kodály days. In 1985, nearly a hundred performers made their debut in Budapest. Their dearly valued heritage, musical language and folklore are carefully preserved and passed on from generation to generation. To date, their folk traditions have not been systematically investigated. – B: 0943, 1134, T: 7456.→Csák, Máté; Csallóköz; Pray Codex; Szenci Molnár, Albert; Benes Decrees; Kodály, Zoltán; Palóc; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Mátyus-Land Dialect - Mátyusföld is at the northwestern corner of the Palóc dialect area. → Palóc.

Mauritz Béla (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 3 May 1881 - Budapest, 15 February 1971) – Geologist, specializing in petrography and mineralogy. He studied at the Faculty of Chemistry and Natural History of the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest. In 1902 he obtained his Degree with a thesis on the morphological study of chalcopyrite crystals in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), while he was demonstrator for József (Joseph) Krenner in the Department of Geology. Following a Degree in Education (1905), the patron of Geology, Andor (Andy) Semsey provided him with a scholarship to further his studies for five years at the universities of Heidelberg, Leipzig, Dresden and Vienna. On his return to Hungary, he continued working as a demonstrator until 1910. Then he became a lecturer (1910-1914), and was an honorary lecturer at the Budapest Polytechnic in 1911. He was a professor at the Faculty of Geology of the University of Budapest between 1914 and 1949. In 1943 and 1944 he was Vice-Chancellor of the University. He obtained his Ph.D. in Geology in 1957, and was Editor for the journal Mathematical and Natural Science Bulletin (Mathematikai és Természettudományi Értesítő) from 1937. Following his retirement, he was with the Geological Institute, working on the locating and exploitation of mines; later, he worked in the Petrology Collection of the National Museum, Budapest. For two cycles, he was President of the Hungarian Geological Society. Throughout his career, he studied the petrography of plutonic and eruptive rocks. Dealing with alkaline rocks, he published several studies on the eleolite-syenites near Gyergyóditró (now Ditrău, Romania) in Transylvania; he worked up the trachytes of the Fruska Gora Mountain (now in Serbia) in the Southern Carpathians, the volcanics of the Báni (Vörösmarti) Mountain (now Banskó brdo), and those of the Mecsek Mountain. He also carried out research on the basalts of Transdanubia. His works include The Volcanic Rocks of the Mátra Mountain (A Mátra hegység eruptív kőzetei) (1909), and Petrology (Kőzattan) (1941). He was an ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1923. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.

Mauthner, Ödön (Edmund) (Pest, 1848 - Budapest, 25 November 1934) – Seeds expert, gardener, writer on gardening. After completing his studies at the Agricultural College of Magyaróvár, he worked as a trainee in a number of large estates during the 1860s. At the same time, he studied the problems of seed growing and cleaning under the direction of Professor Nobbe in Germany. In 1874 he established Hungary's largest seed-shop in Budapest. He did pioneering work in Hungary in the field of seed-growing and production of improved seeds. He created the Hungarian seed export. His seed-producing estate was located in Ferenchalom (now Kraljevićevo in Serbia), and Derekegyháza. From 1895 until 1919 he published and edited the journal, The Garden (A Kert), and wrote gardening-related articles in some other journals as well. His works include Mauthner's Illustrated Gardener's Book (Mauthner képes kertészkönyve) (1885), and Mauthner's Small Gardening Catechism (Mauthner kertészeti Kátéja) (1897). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

May Festival – A spring festival of pre-Christian origin, celebrating nature’s renewing strength. Of common origin, but changed in its traditional form, was the May Day festival that appears in most ancient religions. Its characteristic theme is the jubilation after a hard winter to the reawakening nature. The custom of erecting the May Pole is associated with the festival and was common throughout Western Europe. Shakespeare in his play the Midsummer Night’s Dream (Szeniványéji álom) recorded the frolicsome atmosphere of May Festivals of his time. In many places May-ride competitions were also held and the winner received the “King of May” title. In Hungary, the May festival was transferred to Whitsunday. – B: 1078, T: 7682.

Mayer, Ferenc Kolos (Francis) (Eger, 6 July 1899 - Washington, USA, 15 November 1988) – Physician, medical historian, bibliographer. He studied at the Cistercian High School of Eger, later joined the Order. He did further studies at the College of Innsbruck and, apart from Philosophy, he studied foreign languages. In the autumn of 1919 he left the Order, studied Medicine at the University of Budapest, and obtained a Medical Degree (1926). During his medical studies, he became interested in the history of medicine, published a number of articles in the Medical Weekly (Orvosi Hetilap). In 1927 he published his synthesizing work, The History of Medicine (Az orvostudomány története). From 1925 to 1927 he worked at the Institute of Pathological Anatomy of the University of Budapest; later on worked in the Hospital of Uzsok Street, as a pathological anatomist. In 1928 he went on an extensive European study trip and carried out research in distinguished institutes of medical science. In 1930 he settled in the USA. From 1931 to 1954 he edited the medical journal, Index Catalogue, held in the Medical Library, managed by the army. The clarification of the cause of epidemic hemorrhagic fever, causing considerable losses of life in the armies of both sides during the Korean War, is linked to his name. During the last twenty years of his career, he was with the Fort Mayer Hospital of the Pentagon, as a medical practitioner. The US Department of Defense used his wide knowledge of languages (he spoke 19 languages) in their documentation and reference work. He retired in 1974 in the rank of a colonel. He received the Weszprémi and Zsámboky Memorial Medal of the Hungarian Medical History Society and an honorary membership. In 1988 his famous work, The History of Medicine, was republished in a facsimile edition, supplemented with a chapter on the medical history of the 20th century. – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.

Mayer, Móric (Maurice) (Vác, Hungary 1842 - Buenos Aires, 1917) – Argentinean economic specialist of Hungarian descent. He probably obtained an Engineering Degree from the University of Pest. In the early 1860s, he emigrated from Hungary and became the trusted man of György (George) Klapka in the Hungarian legion set up abroad. After the battle of Königgrätz (3 July 1866), he moved to Argentina, where he offered his services to general János (John) Csetz, originally also from Hungary. He took part in the Argentinean–Paraguayan war and, after its conclusion he served in the expeditionary forces ordered to secure the western border region. He left the army in 1875. With his undertakings, he became one of the leading figures of the rapidly developing Argentinean economy. He established the still functional Dock Suri Harbor and Warehouse Company, by which Buenos Aires developed and became one of the busiest harbors of the world. He played an important part in the development of the Argentinean river-navigation and railway network. In 1967, Argentina celebrated the fifty-year anniversary of his death. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456.→Klapka, György; Czetz, János.

Mechwart, András (Andrew) (Schweinfurt, Germany, 6 December 1834 - Budapest, 14 June 1907) – Mechanical engineer. He started his career as a laborer, then learned the locksmith trade and completed his higher education in Augsburg. After joining the little iron-foundry workshop of Ábrahám Ganz (1859) in Budapest, he developed it into the famous manufacturing firm. Following Ganz's death, the firm became a joint stock company, with Mechwart becoming its Director, later the Managing Director. He took over the wagon works division in Budapest and, in 1878, established the Electrical Section of the Ganz Works that, as a separate manufacturing plant, became famous all over the world. Several of his inventions are still recognized and a roller mill was named after him. On the roller frame, the most important part of the mill, he changed the porcelain rollers to chilled cast iron ones that milled the grain much more finely. In exporting these mass-produced rolling mills around the world, the Hungarian milling industry's reputation was decisively established. He also designed the steam and petrol-driven plough (1896) that replaced the plough-iron, using rotating milling iron blades. Although his rotary plough was an excellent structure, its bulky size and considerable price hindered its general use. He made the Ganz Works and its products world famous and received a number of honors for his efforts; he was bestowed a Hungarian knighthood in 1899, and a statue was erected in his memory in Budapest (1913). – B: 0942, 1078, 1285, T: 7456.→Ganz, Ábrahám.

Mécs, Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 10 January 1936 - ) – Actor. He completed his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art (1961). He appeared on the stage of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, as early as 1958. From 1960 he played in the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) and, from 1961 to 1963, at the National Theater of Szeged (Szegedi Nemzeti Színház). From 1963 he was a member of the Thalia Theater (Thália Színház), and of the Arizona Theater (Arizóna Színház); later, he worked at the Artist Theater (Művész Színház) and at the Budaörs Stage (Budaörsi Szín). He also appears on the stage of the Opera House. He interprets heroic, tragic and the lover's roles of classical and modern works. Acting with a light, natural pleasant voice characterizes his artistry. His roles include Laci Joó in J. Darvas's Smoky Sky (Kormos ég); Romeo in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Nagy Jr. in Bródy's The Schoolmistress (A tanítónő); Richard Dudgeon in Shaw's Devil's Disciple (Az ördög cimborája); Marchbanks in Shaw's Candida, and Görgey in Illyés' Torch-flame (Fáklyaláng). There are more than 40 feature films to his credit, including The Promised Land (Az ígéret földje) (1961); Sons of the Stonehearted Man (A kőszívű ember fiai) (1965); At the End of September (Szeptember végén) (1973); Tax-free Marriage (Vámmentes házasság) (1980); The Gambler (1997); Sacra Corona (2001), and Hotel Szekszárdi (2002). He received the Mari Jászai Prize (1970), the Artist of Merit title (1977), the Officer's Cross of Order Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1996), and the Outstanding Artist title (2002). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Mécs, László O.Praem. (Ladislav) (Martoncsik) (Hernádszentiván, now Kostolany nad Hornádom, Slovakia, 17 January 1895 - Pannonhalma, 9 November 1978) – Monk, priest, poet. He completed his high-school studies in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), where his first poems appeared, published in the magazine Our Flag (Zászlónk). In the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest, he studied the Hungarian-Latin curriculum (1913-1914). It was in 1914 that he applied for admission into the Premonstratensian Order and, by 1916 he had resumed his studies for a Degree in Education. In 1918 he was ordained priest at Jászóvár (now Jasovský Podzámok, Slovakia), where he worked as a librarian after the dissolution of the Order. Between 1920 and 1929 he worked as a parish priest in Nagykapos (now Vel'ké Kapušany, Slovakia.) His impressive and moving poems appeared regularly in the Hungarian papers of Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). In 1923 he published his first volume of poems, Morning Bell (Hajnali harangszó) in Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Transcarpathia, Ukraine), and started on his recital tours, giving his poetry great popularity and lionizing the lyricist's sonorous voice and imposing bearing. The theme of his poems is usually social with religious overtones. His poems excel with their consummate versification. Gyula (Julius) Farkas came out with his biography as early as 1929. His superior appointed him parish priest to Királyhalmec (now Král'ovský Chlevec, Slovakia) in 1930. Volume after volume appeared but so did the criticisms, particularly from the journal West (Nyugat). In 1935 he made a successful trip in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and then, during his trip to France, he gained significant recognition with his poem recitals in Paris, where he met Paul Valéry. His collected poems were published in 1941. The following year, in his magazine, Vigilia, edited by him, appeared the anti-Hitler poem, Prayer for the Great Lunatic (Imádság a nagy Lunatikusért) that landed him in legal trouble. In the autumn of 1944, he left Királyhalmec because of the approaching Soviet forces and, after the War, he lived with his friends in Csorna and Pannonhalma. In 1953 he was accused of "repeatedly spreading leaflets", when his hand-written poems were handed out as presents, and was sentenced to 10 years of house arrest. However, he was freed during the 1956 Revolution and resumed his pastoral work in 1957. From the spring of 1958, he preached regularly in the parish church of Óbuda. He celebrated the 60th anniversary of his ordination in 1978. The Benedictines of the Pannonhalma Abbey care for his bequeathed property. His works include Let there be Light! (Legyen világosság!) (1933); Selected poems (Válogatott költeményei) (1934); Collected Poems of L. Mécs 1920-1940, (Mécs L. Összes Versei 1920-1940) (1941), and the Golden Fleece 1923-1968 (Aranygyapjú 1923-1968), selected poems (1987). – B: 0883, 1058, 1257, T: 7456.

Mecsek Mountain (Pécs Mountain) – Fault-block mountain of Permian to Cretaceous sediments, largely carbonates, including the Liassic coal deposit, red sandstone and also some Neogene volcanics. All this overlies a relict mountain of old crystalline rocks in the northern part of County Baranya, in Transdanubia, situated between the Bükkösd Creek and the Baranya and Sárvíz Creeks. In the N and NE a group of hills joins it. Its southern slope is fairly steep. The Mánfa Saddle (394 m) divides into two parts. The average height is 400-500 m, the highest points in the West are Mecsek (612 m) and Misinatető (534 m), in the East, the peak Zengővár (682 m, the highest point of the Mecsek Mountain). The whole mountain is covered with attractive deciduous forests. On its southern slopes there is wine growing, while on its northern slopes and the adjoining hilly countryside there is a well-developed and active agricultural life with a dense population. The Liassic bituminous coal constitutes an important mineral wealth and in the limestone areas are locally karstic. The Abaliget Cave provides special zoological interest with its 184 different animal species living in its galleries (466 m long, mostly 3 m high and 2 m wide). Famous is the Mecsek flora, with the characteristic, so-called leopard's bane Doronicum caucasicum, the orchis Ophrys cornuta and the Asperula taurina among others. Touristically the Mecsek Mountain is fairly well developed and tourism is cared for by the Mecsek Society of Pécs, with building and maintenance of the roads, lookouts and tourist hostels. – B: 1068, 7456, T: 7456.

Medak, Peter (Budapest, 23 December 1939 - ) – Film director of British and American films. He fled Hungary after the Soviet military crushed the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, and soon settled in Britain, where his opera singer aunt helped him to fulfill his dream of movie making. He worked at the Pathé Laboratory in London between 1956 and 1963. In 1963, he moved to the USA, where he was first with Universal Television in Hollywood, then he directed at the Paramount Company. From 1968 he acted as Stage Director as well. His major films are Negatives (1968); A Day in the Death of Joe Egg (1972); The Ruling Class (1972); Ghost in the Noonday Sun (1974); Odd Job (1978); The Changeling (1980); The Men's Club (1986); Breaking Through (1985); The Krays (1990); Let Him Have It (1991); Romeo is Bleeding (1993); The Hunchback (1997), and The Feast of All Saints (2001). Many of his films were successful and he became known for his sensitive artistic work.. – B: 1031, 1814, T: 7103.

Medek, Anna (Budapest, 1 October 1885 - Budapest, 24 August 1960) – Opera singer, (dramatic soprano). She studied singing with Josefa Maleczky, and at the Music Conservatoire of Paris with Jean Lorraine. She made her debut at the Opera House in Budapest, in the role of Elsa in Wagner's Lohengrin (1908). In 1923 she became a life member of the Opera House. She performed abroad as a guest singer in Vienna, Berlin, Hamburg and Ostend with great success. She was also a well-known oratorio singer. From 1932 she taught at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede) in Budapest. Her main roles include Donna Elvira in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Sieglinde in Wagner's Walküre; Elisabeth in Tannhäuser; Éva in Wagner's Die Mastersingers von Nürnberg (A nürnbergi mesterdalnokok); Senta in Wagner's The Flying Dutchman (A bolygó hollandi); Leonora in Verdi's Il Trovatore (Trubadur), and Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet). She was an outstanding representative of Hungarian opera history. In 1932 she was elected life member of the Opera House of Budapest. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7103.→Opera House.

Medgyaszay, Vilma (née Stand) (Arad, now in Romania, 3 May 1885 - Budapest, 5 April 1972) – Actress. She completed the Performing Arts School of the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház), and first appeared on stage in 1903. A year later, the King Theater (Király Színház) contracted her, where she was most successful in interpreting Iluska in Kacsóh's János Vitéz (John the Brave). In 1907 she became a member of the Cabaret Theater Modern Stage (Modern Színpad) where – with her performing ability – she made popular the musical versions of Béla Bartók's and Zoltán Kodály's compositions. For several years, she was on and off a member of the Király Színház (1909-1913). She also took over the management of the Modern Stage between 1913 and 1917. She acted in the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), in the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház) of Budapest, as well as in Vienna and Berlin. In 1918 the Medgyaszay Stage, carrying her name, folded. Her real art was the song, somewhat playful, somewhat sentimental, but always in good taste, a delicate chanson that she performed as light as air and with a dramatic power. Her beauty, her pleasant voice, musicality, temperament and her acting ability contributed to her great success. For years after 1945 she was a member of the Merry Stage (Vídám Színpad). Her more important roles include in Iluska in P. Kacsóh's John the Brave (János vitéz); Lenke in F. Molnár's Matt, the Bird (Madár Matyi), and in Thomas' Charlie's Aunt (Charley nénye). Her feature films include Please, Smile! (Barátságos arcot kérek) (1936); Friday Rosie (Péntek Rézi) (1938), and Háry János (1941). Among her recordings are: The Widow's Song (Az özegy dala) (1906); Lullaby (Altatódal) (1908), and Either, Or (Vagy, vagy) (1908). She received the Outstanding Artist title (1954), and the Kossuth Prize (1958). – B: 0871, 1445, 1031, T: 7684.

Medgyes Clan – One of the six Szekler (Magyars of Eastern Transylvania, now in Romania) clans. Most probably spelled Medies or Meggyes in ancient times. It originates from the branches of Dudor, Gyarus, Kürt and Medgyes – a note from the 19th century also added the Kurta branch to them. – B: 1346, 1078, T: 7676.→Szeklers.

Medgyesi, Ferenc (Francis) (Debrecen, 10 January 1881 - Budapest, 20 July 1950) – Sculptor. After earning his Medical Degree he studied Painting and Sculpting in Paris. The ancient Sumerian, Assyrian, Egyptian and Greek plastic arts made a great impression on him. He studied Etruscan Art, and the works of Michelangelo. His works appeared at exhibitions in Hungary from 1908 on. His first success was the relief work Dancers (Táncolóknak). In World War I he served as an army physician. Between the two World Wars, he had several exhibitions. In addition to small-scale plastic arts, he accepted assignments for monumental sculptures and religious artworks. He modeled four allegorical bronze statues: Archeology, Science, Arts and Folklore for the entrance of the Debrecen Déry Museum, and received the Grand Prix Award of the Paris International Exhibition for them. He modeled outdoor statuary and many relief works. From the 1940s until his death, his style matured into a classical grade; his love for folk carvings can also be detected in his later style. He left behind approximately 400 works, among them the well-known bronze medallion of composer Béla Bartók. His several thousand graphic-works represent a different class of art because he had developed a singularly unique sculpture-like drawing style. His studio was declared a heritage site. He received the title of Outstanding Artist (1955) and the Kossuth Prize (1948, 1957). – B: 0872, 0883, 1144, T: 7675.

Medgyesi, Pál (Paul) (Aranyosmedgyes, now Mediesu Aurit, Romania, 1604 - Sárospatak, 1663.) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian and writer. He studied at Bártfa (now Bardejov, Slovakia), Debrecen, and at the universities of Frankfurt an der Oder, Leiden and Cambridge. From 1631 he taught at the Reformed College of Debrecen; later served as a minister in Szinyérváralja, Munkács (now Mukacheve, Ukraine) and Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) (1633–1638). In the Court of Reigning Prince György (George) Rákóczi I (1630–1648), he was Court Chaplain, interpreter, proclamation translator and, on a number of occasions, delegate and envoy. From 1650 to 1651 he was the minister at Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania). From 1652 on he was a court chaplain for Zsuzsanna (Susanna) Lorántffy, wife of the Prince at Sárospatak. Medgyesi was among the first to embrace Puritanism. He vigorously fought for the Reformed Church, and for the installation of its Sessions (Presbyteriums). In 1650, while serving as a minister in Nagybánya, he wrote the first Rhetoric in the Hungarian language with a Latin title: Doce nos orare quin et praedicare ... (Taníts minket imádkozni, sőt prédikálni is... – Teach us to pray, but also to preach...). From 1660 until his death, he served as a minister in Sárospatak. His literary works served to spread the ideas of Puritanism. Through the tenets of the Reformed Church, he wished to ensure a place for the peasantry in church administration. To this day, his sermons are interesting due to their timeless messages, their depiction of the age and their historical significance. He left behind some 27 major works, including The Faith of St. Augustine (Szent Ágoston vallása) (1632), Praxis pietantis (1636); Seven Days of Conversations (Hét napoki együttbeszélgetések) (1637); Spiritual ABC (Lelki A Be-Ce...) (1645); Burning Torch... (Égő szövetnek...) (1645), Politico-Ecclesiastical Dialogue (Dialogus politico-ecclesiasticus...) (1650), and The Triple Woe of Transylvania and the Entire Hungarian People (Erdély s egész Magyar nép...Hármas Jajja...) (1653). He was one of the leading figures of Hungarian Puritanism. – B: 0877, 0883, 0807, 1908, T: 7657.→Rákóczi I, Prince György; Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna; Munkács; Munkács, Castle of; Sárospatak.

Medgyessy, Péter (Budapest 19 October 1942 - ) – Economist, politician. He studied Theoretical Economics at the Budapest University of Economics, and graduated in 1966, later also obtaining a Doctoral Degree. He worked at the Ministry of Finance (1966). Between 1970 and 1982 he held senior positions in various departments of the same ministry. He was appointed Deputy Minister of Finance in 1982, and Minister of Finance in 1987. The reform of the banking sector and the introduction of the two-tier banking system, as well as a European-style taxation system are associated with him. From 1988 to 1990 he was Deputy Prime Minister in charge of economic affairs. Among his main responsibilities was to promote economic liberalization. From 1990 to 1994 he was Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Magyar Paribas Bank (member of the French Paribas Group). From 1994 to 1996 he was the CEO of the Hungarian Investment and Development Bank (MBFB). He became Minister of Finance again in the government of Gyula (Julius) Horn in 1996. He managed the consolidation of the economic situation, curbing inflation. His Ministry submitted to Parliament a Bill of a European-style pension reform. From 1998 to 2001 he was Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Inter-Europa Bank, and Vice-President of Atlasz Insurance Company. Although he was not a party member, on 9 June 2001, the Hungarian Socialist Party (MSZP) nominated him as their candidate for Prime Minister. After the MSZP won the elections in April 2002, he became Prime Minister on 27 May 2002, and headed a coalition government of MSZP and SZDSZ (Alliance of Free Democrats). On 25 August 2004 he resigned due to his economic policy, opening the way for Ferenc (Francis) Gyurcsány. Medgyessy was appointed traveling ambassador, which ended in mid 2008. He was awarded the Commander's Cross with the Star of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1988), the French Knight of the Legion d'Honneur (2000), the Grand Cross of the Belgian Order of the Crown (2002), the Gold and Silver Star of the Japanese Order of the Rising Sun (2003), the Grand Cross of the Order of Merit of Chile, the Royal Norwegian Order of St. Olav, and he became a Grand Officier of the French Légion d'honneur and received the German Federal Cross of Merit (2004). – B: 0990, 1031, T: 7103. → Gyurcsány, Ferenc; Horn, Gyula.

Medicine woman (Javasasszony) – In ancient Hungarian belief the medicine women were priestess-magicians. Publicly, their goal in life was to help the needy, and this they carried out without delay. But their secret aim was to overthrow the power of the shamans among all the Eurasian nomadic peoples, including the Magyars. Because of their persecution they were rare on the Great Plain, but were more visible in Transdanubia. They first appeared on the great Danube Island in Western Hungary, called Csallóköz (now Zitny ostrov, Slovakia). Many of them tended to settle in a village or in a smaller town, though there were some who wandered about in the countryside. The patron of the medicine women is Ilona Tündér (Ilona Fairy), a type of “honorary” Great Spirit. She usually appeared in human form. Her favorite area on Earth was the Csallóköz, where she had sacred places. She taught the first medicine-women the art of magic. The initiation took place in a similar manner as that of the shamans, but it was sufficient to have the help of one medicine woman. The procedure was not too painful and the girl, restored to new life, personally met Ilona Tündér. – B: 1901, T: 7456. → Csallóköz; Shaman.

Mednyánszky, Baron Alajos (Aloysius) (Prekopa, now in Croatia, 20 April 1784 - Galgóc, 17 June 1844) – Expert on cultural policy. From 1801 to 1804 he studied Philosophy and Jurisprudence at the Academy of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), after which he joined the service of the Hungarian Chancellery. In 1810 he moved to his landed estate in County Nyitra and carried out historical, archeological and literary studies. In 1828 he became a member of the Committee, which was working on the reform plan for schools and education. In 1830 he was appointed Royal Councilor; in 1833 Court Councilor and chancellery spokesman; in 1837, Privy Councilor, Vice-President of the Treasury, and Lord Lieutenant of County Nyitra. In 1839 he became President of the newly formed Committee for the Organization of Schools, and in 1842, Treasurer (President of Treasury). As a cultural politician he fought for the Hungarian language to be introduced in public education, prepared a plan for technical schools, pressed for the higher-level training of teachers, and he wanted to secure more space in education for realistic knowledge. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (Director 1830, honorary 1831). He wrote romantic travelogues and historical articles in German and Hungarian. His short stories and collection of legends are significant. His published works include Malerische Reise auf dem Waagflusse in Ungarn (Scenic trip on the River Vág in Hungary) (1826), and Erzählungen, Sagen und Legenden aus Ungarns Vorzeit (Stories, sayings and legends from Ancient Hungary) (1829). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Mednyánszky, Baron László (Ladislav) (Beckó, now Beckov, Slovakia, 23 April 1852 - Vienna, Austria, 17 April 1919) – Painter. His artistic talent appeared early in life. In 1870 he was a student of the Technische Hochschule of Zürich; from 1872 he studied at the Academy of Art in Munich. Between 1873 and 1875, he furthered his studies under I. Pils at the École des Beaux Arts of Paris. Already in 1877 one of his paintings was exhibited in Paris. He went on a study trip to Italy in 1878. In the early 1880s he kept a studio in Vienna. After the loss of his mother in 1883 he retired to Nagyőr (now Strážky, Slovakia, in the former County Szepes). In 1884 he rented a studio in Budapest and from then on, he regularly exhibited his works. His paintings of this period were gloomy, gray scenes, often depicting Carpathian cliffs, fir tree forests in a snow-covered, foggy atmosphere. From 1889 to 1892 he worked in Paris again, where, under the influence of Impressionism, his painting became lighter in color and more airy in his paintings of swamp scenes of the Great Hungarian Plain, city outskirts and slums. Still later, his paintings featured autumnal mountain and hill scenes. In 1892 he contributed to the Feszty cyclorama with some mountainous scenes that he painted in County Máramaros (now Maramureș, Romania) (1896-1897). He sojourned in Paris in 1900, in Galicia in 1901 on the shores of the Adriatic Sea, followed by four years in Vienna. Between 1905 and 1911 he was in Budapest and later reappeared in Vienna. Despite his advanced age during World War I, he traveled around the various war zones and made sketches for paintings in the battlefields of Galicia, Serbia and southern Tyrol. His soul-stirring experiences were reflected in the harrowing scenes of this series of paintings, revealing deep humaneness. He spent the last summer of his life at Nagykőrös and, from October until his death, he stayed again in Vienna, where he was buried (he was reburied in Budapest in 1966). His works include Fishing on the Tisza (Tiszai halászat) (1880); Old Tramp (Öreg csavargó) (1880); Fall Landscape (Őszi táj) (1890-1895); Iron Gate of the Danube (Vaskapu) (1890-1895); In Serbia (Szerbiában), (1914), and Ruins of a Town (Egy város romjai). His unique, individualistic style of painting remained unappreciated for some time, particularly the representational works: the shipwrecked ones in life and the monumentally conceived, simply molded, deeply felt paintings of peasants. The number of his paintings is unusually large, since his simple, wandering life-style, following his own whim, enabled him to devote all his life to his art. His view of life was mystical; he had a deep-thinking personality, and was one of the most original figures of the early 20th century Hungarian intellectual life. He was awarded a number of prizes. The National Gallery in Budapest holds numerous works of his. – B: 0883, 0934, 1068, T: 7456. → Feszty, Árpád; Miskolczi, László; Feszty Cyclorama; World War I.

Mednyánszky, Mária (Mrs. J. Kulcsik) (Budapest, 7 April 1901 - Budapest, 22 December 1978) – Table tennis star, coach. From 1925 she was with the Hungarian Circle of Physical Exercise (Magyar Testgyakorlók Köre – MTK). From 1926 she was 29 times member of the Hungarian national team, and won 28 medals at World Championships and became the most successful female in the history of table tennis. She became the first official women's world table-tennis champion in 1926. She went on to win the title for five successive years and won a further 18 world records. She retired from the national team in 1936. In 1941-1942 she was the Federal Captain of the Hungarian table tennis national team. During her sport career she won 22 Hungarian Championship. She was awarded the Golden Order of Merit of the Hungarian People's Republic in 1976, Hungary's highest sporting honor. She was inducted into the ITTF Hall of Fame in 2007, and the Italian I Guinness del Tenistavolo, September 2007. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Meduna, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 31 January 1896 - Chicago, 31 October 1964) – Physician, psychiatrist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical School of the University of Budapest in 1921. From 1921 to 1930 he was a demonstrator at the No. 1 Clinic of Neurology and Psychiatry, run by Karol (Charles) Schaffer. From 1930 he was Chief Physician of the National Institute of Neurology and Psychiatry of Lipótmező, Budapest, while, from 1938 he was Chief Physician of the State Psychiatric Institute at Angyalföld. In 1939 he went to the USA on a lecture tour but did not return to Hungary. From 1949 he was Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Illinois. He was the first in the world to introduce convulsiv therapy, one of the effective biological methods for treating schizophrenia. Electroconvulsive therapy (ECT), whereby convulsions are induced by electricity, is the developed version of Meduna's method, which is also known as chemical convulsive therapy. He dealt with the immune chemistry of psychiatric illnesses. Meduna introduced to the clinical practice the anti-psychotic drugs Norimipramin and Ditran. In 1950 he published a monograph about oneirophrenia, a hallucinatory, dream-like state that was first described by him, and was introduced to the literature of psychiatry. He founded the American Society of Biological Psychiatry. He established the internationally recognized magazine, Journal of Neuropsychiatry and remained its editor until his death. His works include Die Konvulsionstherapie der Schizophrenie (1937); Oneirophrenia (1950), and the Studies of a New Drug Ditran in Depressive States, with J. Abood (in Neuropsychiatry, 1959). The Hungarian National Institute established the László Meduna Prize for outstanding achievement in Nervous and Mental Diseases. – B: 1730, 1105, 1771, T: 7456, 7660. → Nyíró, Gyula.

Medveczky, Ádám (Budapest, 15 July 1941 - ) – Orchestral Conductor. Between 1955 and 1961 he studied at the Béla Bartók Musical Training High School of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music (Zeneművészeti Főiskola Szakközépiskolája) under Oszkár Schwartz. From 1968 to 1971 he completed the conductor program of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy, as a student of Andras Koródi. From 1960 to 1969, he was the timpanist of the State Orchestra, then, from 1969 to 1974 he was the leading music coach of the Opera House (Operaház); from 1974 he was its Conductor, and from 1991, its Chief Musical Director. Also from 1974, he was Adjunct Professor of Academy of Music and later its docent in the Voice and Opera Department. In the Opera House, he made his debut with conducting Mozart's Così fan tutte (Women are Like that – Mindenki így csinálja). In 1969 he joined the Hungarian State Opera House. It is his main place of work even today. He has been a voice coach and conductor and, from 1990 to 1993, the Musical Director of the Opera House. From 1987 to 1996 he was Musical Director of the Hungarian Post's Symphony Orchestra (Magyar Posta Szimfonikus Zenekara) (Today it is the MATAV Symphony Orchestra). In 1997 he became the first conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Győr (Győri Filharmonikus Zenekar). He participates as conductor and educator in the musical life of Hungary. Outstanding pieces in his repertoire are Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Verdi's Rigoletto, La forza del destino (Végzet hatalma) and Traviata; Puccini operas: Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony), Tosca, La Bohème (Bohémélet); Rossini's Mosè in Egitto; Gounod's Faust; Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel (Jancsi és Juliska), and Wagner's Ring Cycle. Menyhárth, László S.J. (Leslie) (Szarvaskő, 30 May 1849 - Zumbo, Mozambique, 16 November 1897) – Missionary, botanist. He studied at the Cistercian High School of Eger. He joined the Jesuit Order at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) in 1886. He learned Theology at Innsbruck and St Briavels, England. From 1885 he taught at the High School in Kalocsa, later became its Principal. He studied the plant life of the Kalocsa region and discovered a few new species. In 1889, on the request of István (Stephen) Czimmermann, he went on a mission to Africa with him. They arrived in Boroma in 1890, where they established the Claver St Peter Mission, where he worked along the Zambezi River. Besides missionary work he was involved in botanical collecting and meteorological observations. With his research he successfully created new plant strains that tolerated the local climate and were suitable for mass production. Thanks to his research, he was able to save masses of natives from starvation in Africa. He sent his written observations and his plant collections back to Hungary. The plant collections were verified and published by Professor H. Schintz in Switzerland. His unique insect collection is now in the High School Museum of Kalocsa. Some twenty species bear his name in botanical works. His works include the Flower Garden of the Virgin Mary (Szűz Mária virágoskertje) (1885); another one in the periodical, Harbinger of Jesus Sacred Heart (Kalocsa) and a book, Plant-improvement by Producing Better Strains in the Kalocsa-region (Kalocsa vidékének növénytenyésztése) (1877). From 1947 to 1949 he was Editor for the paper, Star (Csillag). In 1954 he was a member of the Editorial Board of Free People. He turned against Rákosi and broke with Stalinism; therefore, in the autumn of 1955 he was discharged from the paper, Free People. He became a member of the writers' opposition. After the fall of the 1956 Revolution and freedom fight he fled to Yugoslavia, then went to Paris and settled there in 1957. He edited the paper, Literary News (Irodalmi Újság) from 1962 until it ceased publication in 1989. He authored novels, recollections and political studies. His books appeared in various European languages. His works include Imre Nagy (in English 1958); Thirteen Days that Shook the Kremlin (1959); Politik ohne Gnade, study, (1966); Dreiecke, novel (1971), and Life and Death of Imre Nagy (Nagy Imre élete és halála) (1978, 1989). He received the Attila József Prize (1952) and the Kossuth Prize (1953). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Mérei, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 24 November 1909 - Budapest, 28 February 1986) – Child psychologist. From 1928 to 1934 he studied under H. Wallon at the University of Paris (Sorbonne). He obtained two Degrees: one from the Institut National d'Orientation Professionnelle (1933), and one from the Faculty of Art in Education (Psychology, Sociology, Philosophy) a year later (1934). On returning to Hungary, he worked as a volunteer in the State Institute of Child Psychology (1934-1938), and between 1938 and 1940 he also worked without pay at the laboratory of the Training College for Teachers of Handicapped Children. He earned his living by coaching languages in these volunteer years. During World War II, from 1942 he did forced labor on the Russian front. In 1944 he escaped to the Soviet side and, as a captain of the Soviet army and correspondent of the newspaper New Word (Új Szó), published in Moscow, he returned to Hungary, following the Soviet occupying forces. From 1945 to 1948 he headed the Metropolitan Institute of Psychology and taught in two colleges as well. In 1949 and 1950 he was Director of the State Institute of Educational Psychology. In 1950 due to changes in the Communist Party's policies in education, he was relieved of his position and excluded from the Hungarian Workers' Party (Magyar Dolgozók Pártja – MDP). He was unemployed until 1956 and earned his living from translations. Later on he was rehabilitated. He took an active part in the 1956 Revolution. In 1957 he was appointed to the Institute of Psychology of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, while, in 1958, due to political agitation, he was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment, but received amnesty in 1963. From 1964 until his retirement in 1976, he was the leading psychologist of the National Mental Hospital and Neurological Institute (OIE). He received a Ph.D. in Psychology in 1982. In 1947 and 1948, he was a correspondent for the Literary Section of the Hungarian News Agency (Magyar Távirati Iroda - MTI) and in 1949 for the Hungarian Radio. He was Editor for the periodical Educated People (Művelt Nép) (1950-1954), then Editor for the literary paper Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom) (1957-1958). From 1966 he was Editor for the journal, Budapest. In his articles, he featured the life of the lower middle class and the intelligentsia of the 1930s, describing how they were seeking their place in life. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he stressed loyalty to basic principles and breaking with dogmas. In 1958, his play, the People of Pest (Pesti emberek) was staged with great success, and became an initiator of self-examination of the “moralizing” generation. Mesterházi particularly liked to turn to the “fortunate types” of hero, who can resist the attraction of power, capable of remaining pure, even in the storms of history. Among his works are Shiny Breezes (Fényes szellők) novel (1956); Message (Üzenet) play (1960); The Eleventh Commandment (A tizenegyedik parancsolat) play (1961); The Age of Innocence (Az ártatlanság kora) novel (1963); God, by Size (Isten méretre) novel (1966); Cheerful Hours (Derűs órák) stories (1968); The Prometheus Enigma (A Prométheus rejtély), novel, (1973; in Bulgarian 1983); Vacation (Vakáció) novel (1979), and The Logic of Patriotism (A hazafiság logikája) essays (1983). He received a number of prizes, including the Attila József Prize (1952, 1953, 1959, 1973), the Kossuth Prize (1962) and the Prize of the Central Council of the Hungarian Trade Unions (Szakszervezetek Országos Tanácsa – SZOT) (1977). – B: 0878, 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Mesterházy István (Stephen) (Mesterháza, 23 April 1811 - Mesterháza, 8 December 1854) – Honvéd military officer. He studied at the Lutheran Lyceum of Sopron and, from 1831, he was a Cadet in the 32nd Miklós Esterházy regiment. From 1832 he was a Royal Hungarian Body Guard. From 1837 he served in the 6th Cuirassiers Cavalry Regiment, where he became a Captain. During the War of Independence from Habsburg oppression, he fought with the rank of major from 9 July 1848. He was Commander of the National Guard of Mezőtúr and environs; after taking Buda Castle on 21 May 1849 he was promoted to the rank of Colonel. On 16 November 1849 he was first sentenced to death, but the sentence was commuted to 18 years' imprisonment in a fortress. In the last three years of his life, he was imprisoned in turn at Olmütz, Kufstein and Lipótvár. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Mészáros, Ági (Ágnes Éberli) (Budapest, 24 May 1918 - Budapest, 8 March 1989) – Actress. Her mother is the actress Ági Mészáros. Her parents worked in a theater and suggested her to become an actress, thus she acted on stage at the age of 15. She did not go to acting school; however, her acting in country theaters proved to be a good schooling. She became a true actress under the direction of Jenő (Eugene) Sziklai at Szeged, and was noticed early on, because of the sincere charm of her acting. In 1939 Antal (Anthony) Németh offered her a contract at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, and she remained there until her retirement in 1983. She played minor roles in the beginning. Playing Niccodemi's The Brat (Tacsó) in 1943, she already showed her talent. The following years, she was given ingénue roles; she interpreted Molière's young women, as well as Hungarian peasant girls, with attractive sweetness and charm. She received the most important roles of her career after 1945 and, through movies she became one of the most popular actresses in her homeland. Her acting was simple without being artificial; the character of the roles she played manifested itself first of all in her diction. Her more important roles were in Lehár's The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa); in Kosztolányi's Dearest Anne (Édes Anna); Abigail in Scribe's A Glass of Water (Egy pohár víz); Beatrice in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hühhó semmiért); Puck in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentiványéji álm); Izabella in Molière's The School for Husbands (A férjek iskolája); Agnes in Molière's The School for Wives (A nők iskolája); Eliza in Shaw's Pygmalion; Adela in Garcia-Lorca's House of Bernarda (Bernarda Háza), and Elisabeth Proctor in Miller's The Crucible (A szálemi boszorkányok). She also appeared in a number of feature films including Foothold (Talpalatnyi föld) (1948); Gentlemen's Fun (Úri muri) (1949); Guns and Doves (Puskák és galambok) (1961); Singing Bird (Énekesmadár) (1966), and the Tales of Budapest (Budapesti mesék) (1976). Among her TV films are: Amphitrio (1963); The Inspector (A revizor) (1970), and The Enemy of the People (A nép ellensége) (1978). She received twice the Kossuth Prize (1950, 1954), and also the titles of Merited Artist (1950), and Outstanding Artist (1954). – B: 0871, 1445, 1031, T: 7684. → Voith, Ági.

He studied at the Komenský University, Bratislava (formerly Pozsony) (1968-1973), where he obtained a Teacher of Philosophy Degree. After being a manual laborer between 1973 and 1983, he became an adjunct professor at the Komenský University. Since 1983 he has been an Associate at the Bratislava Institute of Philosophy of the Slovak Academy of Sciences. His field of research is History of Philosophy and Philosophy of Society. His works include The Hegel Debate in Hungary... (A Hegel vita Magyarországon...) (1984); The Value of Ideas and the Continuity of Time (Az eszmék értéke és az idő kontinuitása) (1987), and the “As if Being” and Philosophy (“Mintha lét” és filozófia) (1990). – B: 1083, T: 7103

Mészáros, Attila (Vághosszúfalu, now Dlhá nad Váhom, Slovakia, 29 January 1951 - ) – Astrophysicist. He attended Hungarian primary schools in Vághosszúfalu and Vágsellye (now Sala, Slovakia) (1957-1966), and a Hungarian High School in Galánta (1966-1969). From 1969 to 1979 he studied at the Department of Chemistry, then at the Department of Physics, Natural Science Faculty, University of Prague. Between 1976 and 1980 he was an Associate of the Prague Observatory. From 1980 to 1984 he was on post-graduate studies, then an associate at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest. In 1984 he became a lecturer at the Department of Astronomy of the Faculty of Mathematics-Physics, University of Prague. His research fields are: theory of relativity, theory of gravitation and astrophysics. Since 1988 he has been a member of the International Astronomical Society (IAU). His papers appear in the Physical Review; General Relativity and Gravitation; Astrophysical Journal; Acta Physica Hungarica, and Articles; he also publishes in the Week (Hét); New Youth (Új Ifjúság), and in Czech and German magazines. – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Mészáros, Gyula (Julius) (Szakcs, 28 March 1883 - New York, USA, January 1957) – Orientalist, ethnographer, Turkologist. During 1904-1906 he studied Turkish in Constantinople (now Istanbul). From 1906, commissioned by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, he spent 18 months among the Chuvash and Tatars of the Volga region, to collect folkloric material. In 1909 he earned a Ph.D. in the Turkish-Tatar language from the University of Budapest. From 1909 to 1915 he worked at the Ethnographic Section of the Hungarian National Museum in Budapest, where his Bashkir Collection (1909) and the objects of the Constantinople region (1910) were deposited. In 1910 he was searching for the original home of the Magyars in Anatolia. From 1916 until the end of World War I, he was Professor, and Head of the Hungarian Chair at the University of Constantinople. In 1920-1921 he was involved a dubious financial action and was arrested in Vienna, for being active in the preparation of counterfeiting the French Franc; later he was freed on bail. From the mid-1920s he was the Scientific Head of the Anatolian Ethnographic Museum in Ankara. In 1930-1931 he studied the language of the Pakhy people, originally from the Caucasus region, who settled in northwestern Anatolia. On his return to Hungary in 1932 he became a correspondent for the National Committee for the Protection of Historic Monuments, associated with the Museum of History, and was also invited to lecture at the University of Szeged. He studied the influence of the Turkic people and the Eastern Culture on ethnic Hungarians. He also studied the Caucasian languages. During 1943 and 1944 (when historic Southern Hungary – Délvidék was returned to Hungary, after the defeat and disintegration of Yugoslavia during the German campaign), he became a professor at the College of Eastern Commerce of Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia). After World War II, following the reconstitution of the Yugoslavian State, he left Southern Hungary and settled in Turkey. In 1951 he emigrated to the USA, and settled in New York. His theoretical models were not accepted in Turkological research circles. His collected material, especially from the Chuvash territory is of real scientific value. His works include Chuvash Folk Poetry Collection, vol. i (1909), vol. ii (1912); Magna Ungaria, the Bashkir–Hungarian Problem (1910); Early Cumanian Linguistic Records in Hungary (1914), and Die Päkhy-Sprache (1934). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.

Mészáros, István (1) (Stephen) (Pácin, 2 April 1929 - Miskolc, 14 February 2007) – Bishop of the Reformed Church. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Sárospatak (1947-1951) and in Debrecen (1951-1952). He was an assistant minister in Nagyrosvány, Mád, Újfehértó, Debrecen, Abaújvár, Kisgyőr and Miskolc-Hejőcsaba (1952-1956); he was Parish Minister in Kisgyőr (1956-1985), then in Miskolc-Avas (1985-2007). He was on a scholarship at the Theological Seminary in Princeton, USA (1982-1983). He became Bishop of the Cistibiscan (Tiszántúli) Reformed Church District in 1991, and was Professor of Systematic Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Sárospatak, and Professor at the University of Miskolc from 1999. – B: 0873, T: 7103

Mészáros, István (2) (Stephen) (Budapest, 19 December 1930 - ) – Philosopher, critic. He studied in Budapest and Jena. He was a demonstrator for the philosopher György (George) Lukács at the University of Budapest. He obtained a Ph.D. in Arts (Philosophy) and authored studies and critiques. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to the West. From 1958 he was Editor for the literary journal, Consciousness (Eszmélet), and from 1956 to 1959 he gave lectures on Philosophy at the University of Turin. Between 1959 and 1961 he was a research associate at the University of London. From 1961 to 1966 he was an honorary lecturer at St. Andrews University of Scotland. From 1966, he was an honorary lecturer at the University of Sussex in Brighton. In 1972 he became Professor of Sociology at York University, Toronto. He published works only in English. He remained a Marxist thinker, even after his departure from Hungary and its break with Communism; consequently, he faced political difficulties in his professional career. His works include Marx's Theory of Alienation (1970); Lukács's Concept of Dialectic (1972); The Work of Sartre: I. Search for Freedom (1982), and Philosophy, Ideology and Social Science; Essays in Negation and Affirmation (1986). Mészáros, Kálmán (Coloman) (Gyula, 8 May 1894 - Miskolc, 25 September 1971) – Physician, Africa researcher, traveler and writer. During the years 1924 to 1935 he was permanently in Abyssinia (now Ethiopia). The Emperor, Haile Selassie I, initially appointed him physician of the Imperial Army, and later, he made him his personal physician. He had the opportunity to travel over large areas and experience dangerous and exciting hunting trips. In 1938 he was forced to leave Abyssinia because of the occupation of the Empire by the Italian army, and he had to return to Hungary. He continued working as a physician, first in Kiskunfélegyháza, and later in Ároktő in County Borsod, near the River Tisza. His document collection, richly illustrated by photographs and on films, shows his African experiences and observations. His African legacy and trophies are preserved in the Hungarian Natural Science Museum (National Museum) in Budapest. – B: 1731, T: 7456.

Mészáros, Lázár (Lazarus) (Baja, 20 February 1796 - Eywood, England, 16 November 1858) – Hungarian (Honvéd) army officer, politician. After his studies in Law, he joined the Austrian Imperial Army and became Commander of the 5th Radetzky Hussar Regiment. On 7 April 1848 King Ferdinand V appointed him Minister of Defense in the Batthyány Government, and promoted him to General at the same time. As the Minister of Defense, he strove to maintain loyalty to the Habsburgs for a long time, hence he lost his initial popularity. During the War of Independence (1848-1849), he was a member of the National Defense Committee: from 15 April 1849 he was Lieutenant General, between 2 and 24 July Commander-in-Chief, then Chief of General Staff. He also took part in the direction of several military operations and, although he behaved heroically as an army leader, but fortune usually avoided him. In 1844 the Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him corresponding member for his scientific work carried out during his military service. – B: 1150, 1078, 0883, T: 7456.

Mészáros, Lőrinc (Lawrence) (? - 1514) – Priest. He was known as Father Lőrinc, his nickname was “the big-stick” Lőrinc (Nagybotú Lőrinc). He was born into a peasant family of Megyaszó. He became a priest and was Parish Minister in Cegléd, when he joined the army of Görgy (George) Dózsa. He became second-in-command of the Dózsa uprising (1414). He recruited over 2000 peasants from Cegléd and its region for the projected crusade to the Holy Land, announced by the Pope, organized by Archbishop Tamás (Thomas) Bakócz. Mészáros was a skillful and convincing orator. He persuaded Dózsa to command the peasant army’s uprising. After the uprising was defeated at Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania), Mészáros took over the command of the rebels but was defeated by Archbishop Pál (Paul) Tomori. According to certain sources, he hid out in the area of Zilah (now Zalău, Romania). However, he was caught, prosecuted, sentenced to death, and burned at the stake. High Schools, Colleges and Streets bear his name. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7103.→Dózsa, György; Bakócz, Tamás.

Mészáros, Márta (Budapest, 19 September 1931 - ) – Producer, scriptwriter. Her family moved to the Soviet Union, where her father became a victim of the Communist regime. She lived there between 1935 and 1946 and obtained a producer’s diploma from the Federal State Film Academy (Össz-szövetségi Állami Filmfőiskola). At the beginning of her career, she made newsreels and documentary films in Bucharest and Budapest. In 1958 she married the producer Miklós (Nicholas) Jancsó. From 1958 to 1968 she worked as a short film producer at the MAFILM. She has produced feature films since 1967. Her favorite subject is the fate of females. The western feminist movement recognized her works. She settled in Poland and has been living there. She is the Acting President of the Imre (Emeric) Nagy Society. So far she has produced 16 feature films, including Departed Sun (Eltávozott Nap) (1968); Nine Months (Kilenc hónap) (1976) Inheritance (Örökség) (1980); Diary to My Child (Napló gyermekemnek) (1982); Diary to my Loves (Napló szerelmeimnek) (1987); Diary to My Father and Mother (Napló apámnak és anyámnak) (1990); The Seventh Room (A hetedik szoba) (1995), and The Miraculous Mandarin (A csodálatos mandarin) (2001). The Unburied Dead (A temetetlen halott) (2004) is about the trial and execution of Imre Nagy, Prime Minister of Hungary in 1956. She received a number of prizes, including the C.I.D.A.L.S. Prize (1975), the F.R.I.P.E.S.C.I Prize (1977) and the O.C.I.C. Prize (1995). – B: 1031, 1690, T: 7103. → Jancsó, Miklós; Nagy, Imre.

Meszlényi, Zoltán Lajos (Louis) (Hatvan, 2 January 1892 - Kistarcsa, 11 January 1953) – Auxiliary bishop, Vicar-General, martyr. He completed his secondary school education at the Benedictine School of Esztergom, then studied Theology in Rome. He was ordained in October 1915 in Innsbruck. In 1917, on behalf of Primate János (John) Csernoch, he worked in the Primate's Palace. From 1931 he was a member of the Cathedral Chapter, later its Vicar, and Dean of Counties Nógrád and Hont. After the appointment of Pope Sixtus XI, he was ordained Titular (Auxiliary Bishop of Sinope. This appointment rendered him Co-adjutor Bishop for the current Archbishop of Esztergom. He became Vicar General after the Primate József (Joseph) Mindszenty was detained at Christmas, 1949. Shortly before, he himself was detained on 29 June 1950 during his sermon on the occasion of a confirmation ceremony at Siófok, where he painted a gloomy picture of the Hungarian Catholic Church and his own fate, remarking that the age of martyrs was not concluded during the early centuries of Christianity: “The motive force behind the persecutions of our times is the policy that considers the persecuted believers to be the enemies of the State, progress and people and, as such, they are massacred and destroyed”. He was carried off to the internment camp of Kistarcsa, where he became the victim of cruel illtreatment and died. He was exhumed and interned in the Basilica of Esztergom on 24 June 1966. Pope Benedict XVI recognized him as a Martyr of the Church; he was beatified on 30 October 2009. His works include Humble Service, sermons (2007) and Portrait Gallery of Hungarian Primates 1707 – 1945. – B: 1031, 2011, T: 7456. → Mindszenty Trial.

Mészöly, Dezső (Desider) (Budapest, 27 August 1918 - Budapest, 11 October 2011) – Poet, writer, translator of literary works, literary historian, son of Gedeon Mészöly. He attended High School at Szeged and Sárospatak. He completed his studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest (1940) and obtained his Doctoral Degree from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1942). He studied painting at the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest (1940-1943). He went on a study trip to France, and read Literature and theatrical subjects in Paris (1947). He was a drama critic at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), then at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest (1951-1954). He taught at the Dramaturgy Department of the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. He was a contributor for the Hungarian Television (1963-1978), and Editor for the periodical, Free Hour (Lyukasóra). His main interests were Villon and Shakespeare. Some of his works are: Testament of Villon (Villon Testamentuma) translation (1943); Villon and the Others (Villon és a többiek) translations (1966);

Shakespeare in a New Mirror (Shakespeare új tükröben), essays, drama translations (1972); In Moliere's Workshop (Molière műhelyében) (1975); Self-portrait Without Retouching (Önarckép retus nélkül) poems (1975); Ideas and Essays (Eszmék és esszék), studies (1978); The Complete Villon (A teljes Villon) (1980); Shakespeare Diary (Shakespeare napló) (1988); New Hungarian Shakespeare (Új magyar Shakespeare) (1988), and In the Footsteps of Don Quixote (Don Quijote nyomában), collected poems and Villon translations (1999). He translated almost all works of Villon and most of the articles and studies written about him. He also translated many works of W. Shakespeare, B. Saw, J. Molière, P. Merimée, V. Hugo, Agatha Christie, H. Heine, and N. Gogol. He received a number of prizes, among them the Prize of European Publisher (1984), Knight of Palmes Academiques (1988), the White Rose Prize (1992), the Small Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1993), the Gyula Illés Prize (1993), the Alternate Kossuth Prize (1998), the Kossuth Prize (1999), and the Hungarian Heritage Prize (2008). – B: 0874, 0878, 0879, 0877, 1031, 1257, T: 7103.→Mészöly, Gedeon.

Mészöly, Gedeon (Gideon) (Tabajd, 10 June 1880 - Budapest, 29 May 1960) – Linguist, translator of literary works. He taught at the Reformed High School of Kunszentmiklós (1903-1914). He was Keeper of the Manuscript Collection of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest from 1914; Professor of the Ural-Altai languages at the University of Szeged from 1922. He was Editor for the paper People and Language (Nép és Nyelv) (1941-1944). His main interests were the Hungarian codices and literary language relics from the point of view of style and language. His selected works are: Tinódi Sebestyén (1906); Phonetical and Inflectional Characteristics of the Funeral Oration (A Halotti Beszéd hangtöréneti és alaktani sajátosságai) (1926); Historical Language and Style Interpretations of the Old Hungarian Maria-Lament (Ómagyar Mária-siralom nyelvtörténeti és stílustörténeti magyarázata) (1944), and Old Hungarian Texts with Historical Language Interpretations (Ómagyar szövegek nyelvtörténeti magyarázatokkal) (1956). His selected translations are: Pushkin's Eugene Onyegin (Anyegin) (1945), Phaedra by Racine (Racin Phaedrája) (1949), and Odyssey (Odüsszeia). Also significant are his historical and critical style studies in and translations from the language of old Hungarian codices; he was one of the greatest experts on them. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences until his membership was terminated in 1949, but restored posthumously in 1989. He received the Sámuel Prize (1913) – B: 0878, 0879, 0877, 1257, T: 7103, 7456.→Mészöly, Dezső; Tolnai, Gábor.

Mészöly, Géza (Sárbogárd, 18 May 1844 - Jobbágyi, 12 November 1887) – Painter. Following his law studies, he went to Vienna and to the Munich Academy; then became Director of the Painting School for Women. Mostly, he painted the landscape and people of Lake Balaton. He established a distinct genre painting of that region with the intimate portrayal and representation of the fishermen's hut, the reeds, etc. Later, he abandoned the genre painting motives and captured the beautiful scenery around Lake Balaton. The fine workmanship and intimate connotation of his paintings greatly influenced the art of landscape painting of his time. He was one of the first landscape painters, who mostly and almost solely painted the distinct Hungarian scenery. His famous works include the Fisherman's Cottage at Lake Balaton (Balatoni halásztanya) (1874); Flat Land with Haystacks (Sík vidék szénaboglyákkal) (1872); Farmhouse (Tanya) (1879); Hunting Party (Vadásztársaság) (1882); A Flock of Sheep (Birkanyáj) (1885), and Balaton Shoreline (Balatonpart) (ca. 1885). Many of his paintings are held at the National Gallery, Budapest. – B: 0883, 1124, T: 7456.→Balaton, Lake; Aggházy, Gyula.

Mészöly Kálmán (Coloman) (nickname: Szőke Szikla) (Budapest, 16 July, 1941 - ) – Football (soccer) player and coach. He played 61 matches, scored 6 goals for the National Team, and participated in the 1962 FIFA World Cup, the 1964 UEFA European Football Championships and the 1966 FIFA World Cup. He played in several World All Star games during the 60s and 70s. He later had three terms as head coach of the Hungary National Football Team: 1980-83, 1990-1991 and 1994-1995. He led Hungary to the 1982 FIFA World Cup. He resigned as special adviser to the President of the Hungarian Football Federation in 2007. – B: 1031, T: 1031.

Mészöly, Miklós (Nicholas) (Molnár) (Szekszárd, 19 January 1921 - Budapest, 22 July 2001) – Writer, dramatist, poet. He studied at the University of Budapest and obtained a Doctorate in Law (1942). During his military duties in World War II, he fell into Serbian captivity and was released in 1945. He became a newspaper editor in 1947; his first novel appeared in 1948; then he changed his name from Molnár to Mészöly. In 1951 and 1952 he was a dramaturgist at the Puppet Theater (Bábszínház), Budapest. From 1956 he was a freelance writer. Due to the political climate of the time, his career could not run smoothly and he was even discriminated against. Following the political changes of 1989 he became a spokesperson of the Democratic Charter (1990). From 1990 he was a member of the Presidium of the Hungarian Writers Alliance (Magyar Írószövetség). In 1992, he was Founding President of the Széchenyi Literary and Art Academy (Széchenyi Irodalmi és Művészeti Akadémia). His works include Wild Waters (Vadvizek) stories (1948); Dark Signs (Sötét jelek) stories, fables (1957); Death of the Athlete (Az atléta halála) also in French and German translation (1966); Reporting on Five Mice (Jelentés öt egérről) (1967); Saul (1968); Touches (Érintések) (1980); Home and World (Otthon és világ) (1994); Bunker, dramas (1979), and Evening Map (Esti térkép) poems (1981). In his works he fought for human rights and wrote about the cruelty and dread that fell upon twentieth-century individuals. He received the Tibor Déry Prize (1986), the Book of the Year Prize (1988, 1989, 1991), and the Kossuth Prize (1990). – B: 1105, 1031, 1257, B: 7103.

METEM – Acronym for the Hungarian Ecclesiastical Historical Research Team (R.C.) (Magyar Egyháztörténeti Enciklopédia Munkaközössége)(R.K.), Pannonhalma-Budapest and for the METEM International Society of Toronto, as it relates to Hungarian Church History. The charitable corporation was set up to support Hungarian Church History Research in Hungary and abroad. Its main aims are: (1) preparing and publishing an Encyclopedia of Hungarian Church History; (2) collecting documents and sources in archives and libraries inside and outside of Hungary related to the above-mentioned topics; (3) supporting publications of the collected materials for critical assessment prior to their incorporation into the Encyclopedia; (4) promoting public interest in historical places related to Church history in Canada, in Hungary and other countries; (5) establishing and maintaining facilities with archives and libraries to hold meetings and exhibitions related to Church history; and (6) establishing funds and scholarships for university students studying Church history in Hungary, Canada and abroad, promoting historical and archeological research. Membership is extended to individuals of all denominations, cultures, countries and religions capable of making contributions to the realization of the enlisted subjects. Publications: "Essays in Church History in Hungary" vols. 1-17, 2002; METEM books 1990, 50 vols; METEM Archives (since 2000 it has established a special archive for the Hungarian Church in Emigration 1900-2000). – B&T: 7643.→Horváth, Tibor S.J.

Meter – Internationally accepted linear unit of measure with a scientific basis established in 1790, based on the 40 millionth part of the Earth's meridian circle and approved by the French National Assembly during the French Revolution. This length is marked between two lines on an iridium/platinum bar, which is preserved at the Sèvres Institute, near Paris. Since the survey for this purpose was not exact, in 1965, on the proposal of Zoltán Bay, it was defined again but with greater accuracy, this time based on the speed of light per second. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 7675.→Bay, Zoltán.

Methodist Church in Hungary – It grew out of the Anglican Church and was founded by John Wesley in England. It appeared in Hungary in 1899. The name comes from the fact that they set up biblical methods to measure their progress in holy life. Their tenets of faith can be found both in Lutheran and Calvinist teachings. They practice both infant and adult baptism. They control not only the faith but also the private sphere of life of their members. In Hungary they number about 1800. The Hungarian Methodist Church is a member of the Ecumenical Council of Hungarian Churches and the World Council of Churches. It is a part of the Central European (Zürich) and Southern European Episcopacy. The Church has 2 diaconal institutions. The Evangelical Brethren's Community broke away from it. – B: 1042, T: 7390.→ Ecumenical Council of Hungarian Churches.

Metzenauer, Margarete (Margaret) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 1881 - Van Nuys, California, USA, 19 May 1963) – Opera singer (mezzo-soprano). Her father was a conductor and a singer. She studied voice in Graz and then in Munich with Ernst Preus, who became her husband in 1902. In 1901 she played the part of Puck in Weber's Oberon in Strasbourg, where she remained for three seasons. In 1904 she joined the Munich Opera, where she sang for seven years. After several years in Germany, she made her debut at London's Covent Garden in 1914, as Ortrud in Wagner's Lohengrin, under the baton of Arthur Nikisch. In the same year, she sang Isolde in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, in the Champs Elysées Theater in Paris. On 13 November 1911 she had her debut at the Metropolitan Opera, New York, as Amneris in Verdi's Aïda. During her career, she sang most of the Wagner's operas (Walküre, Götterdämmerung, Siegfried, Parsifal and Rheingold). However, her forte was the domain of Italian mezzo-soprano roles. Matzenauer had a warm tone and her tessitura (range of voice) was extremely extended, permitting her to sing a wide variety of roles. Her voice was powerful, and this made it ideal for dramatic Wagnerian heroines, yet she could also be a lyric soprano.

After her retirement, she taught in California and New York, where she even sang Dalila in Saint-Saëns's Samson et Dalila in 1934, giving a final concert in 1938. Metzner was one of the leading and renowned opera-singers of her time. – B: 0903, 2023, T: 7103.→Nikisch, Arthur.

Metzger, Frigyes (Frederick) (Budapest 27 March 1921 - Vancouver 9 March 2011) – Minister of the Reformed Church, and the Presbyterian Church in Canada, and also a missionary. His secondary and tertiary studies were in Budapest and Debrecen. After obtaining his theological qualification at the beginning of World War II, he served in the Industrial Ministry. From 1943 he participated in the work of the Good Shepherd (Jó Pásztor) mission organization of the Reformed Church, which provided shelter for the persecuted, including tens of thousands of forced labor individuals and 1600 Jewish children. After World War II, as the secretary of the Evangelical World Alliance, he and the Canadian Margaret Friesen, later his wife, participated in the great revivalist movement in Hungary. In 1949 they had to leave Hungary because of political change, and they moved to Switzerland in 1949. On a commission from the World Council of Churches, Geneva, they visited all Hungarian refugee camps in West Germany. In 1950 they arrived in Canada, and the Presbyterian Church in Canada appointed Metzger to congregation-organizing work in Edmonton in 1950, and in Vancouver in 1953. In both places, he founded the Calvin Hungarian Presbyterian Church for Hungarian emigrants. He also edited a monthly periodical, entitled: New Life (Új Élet). During the Hungarian Revolution in 1956, by the joint appointment of the Presbyterian Church in Canada and the Canadian Government, he was sent to Vienna, Austria, with 1,800 blank Canadian visa documents, and he arranged for 5,000 Hungarian Protestant refugees to move to Canada in two steamers as landed immigrants, among them, three ministers of the Reformed Church and two theological students with their families. Metzger served in Hungarian Reformed Churches in Canada until 1963; thereafter, he served at the St Colomba Presbyterian Church of Vancouver, and later he was minister in the Vancouver City Mission. In 1966 he founded the Westminster Foundation, which, for ten years provided education of and clinical spiritual care for 300 ministers of different denominations. At the same time, he was a co-founder of the Vancouver Crisis and Suicide Prevention Center. Between 1967 and 1977 he organized study trips to the Holy Land. In 1966, the Westminster Foundation and the Biblical Museum of Canada combined into the Quest Exhibit and moved to the Colombia Bible College, Abbotsford, BC. Frigyes Metzger was a recipient of the Pilgrim Medal of Pope John Paul II (1984), the Honorary Doctorate of the Presbyterian College of McGill University (1997), and the Yad Vashem Prize of Israel (2006). – B: 2122, T: 7103.

Metzger, Nándor (Ferdinand) (1895 - Tuscaloosa AL, 13 August 1987) – Orientalist, journalist, literary translator. He studied Japanese Culture at the University of Budapest. In Vienna he worked in the Far-Eastern section of the General Headquarters of the Austrian-Hungarian Army. He took part in international delegations. He published a paper, East-Asian Hungarians (Keletázsiai Magyarok), for Hungarian prisoners of war who went to China and Japan from Siberian POW camps. From the early 1920s until 1945, he was the cultural secretary of the Hungarian Consulate in Tokyo. For a while, he was a reporter for the Hungarian News Service (Magyar Távirati Iroda - MTI). He compiled and published the first complete Japanese-Hungarian Dictionary, wrote the history of Hungary in Japanese and translated literary works, e.g. Petőfi's János vitéz (John the Brave) into Japanese. After World War II, he lived in France and Italy. In 1959 he settled in the USA, and lived in Los Angeles as a translator and correspondent of the weekly, New World (Új Világ). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Mezei, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 17 January 1942 - ) – Physicist. He received his Ph.D. in Physics from the University of Budapest. He has been a professor at the History of Science Faculty since 1996. In 1972 he discovered the principle of spectroscopy for neutron spin echo, together with its practical realizations and use in research of condensed materials. Since 1990 he has been President of the Hahn-Meitner Institute, Berlin. Between 1986 and 1989 he was a member of the Editorial Board of Zeitschrift für Physik, and a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent, 1982 ordinary 1987). He is one of the renowned physicists of the world. He received the Hewlett-Packard Prize (1986), the Walter Halg Prize, and the Jenő Wigner Prize (1999). – B: 0874, 1682, T: 7456.

Mezey, István (Stephen) (Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 25 November 1895 - Budapest, 24 October 1970) – Orientalist, international jurist. In 1924 he established the Hungarian Nippon Society in Budapest, and was its Acting Vice-President for two decades. He also oversaw Hungarian-Japanese cultural exchanges. His memories of being prisoner of war in Japan during World War I were the basis of his involvement. His six-month propaganda tour to Japan, on a semi-official assignment began at the end of 1937. His visits to the Emperor's Court, Japanese ministries and universities, radio-lectures and magazine articles helped to prepare the Japanese-Hungarian Cultural Pact. In recognition of his works, he was named Honorary Professor at the Tokyo Senshu University. A Hungarian Faculty was also to be established there. – B: 1020, T: 7675.

Mezey, Mária (Mezei) (Kecskemét, 16 October 1909 - Budakeszi, 20 April 1983) – Actress. Cutting short her university studies at Szeged, she applied to the Acting School of Kálmán (Coloman) Rózsahegyi. She took her exams at the School of the State Actors' Society (Országos Színész Egyesület Iskolája), then, Mihály (Michael) Sebestyén gave her a contract to the Miskolc National Theater (Miskolci Nemzeti Színház). After a few years in country theaters, the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház) and the National Theater of Budapest contracted her in 1935. Her restless nature and her constant search forced her to move around. She played in almost all of the Capital's private theaters. At the time of the German invasion in 1944, she broke her commitment and only after 1946 did she appear again on stage at the Inner City Theater and the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest. For a certain period, she was ignored, thus she played in cabarets, nightclubs and platform programs. She never gave up her demanding nature and eventually captured the attention again as an outstanding poetry recitalist and songstress. It was in 1957 that she received her deserving place in the artistic life, when she played at the Madách, Petőfi and Thalia Theaters. In 1964, she became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház). Her refined personality, her curious mind and enthusiasm shaped her into a very effective character on stage. Mária Mezey was equally at home in sparkling humorous conversations, or in somber tragic roles. Her more important roles were: Karola in Zilahy's Firebird (Tűzmadár); Princess in Eugène Scribe's A Glass of Water (Egy pohár víz); Julia Gosselyn in Maugham's Theater (Színház); Rebecca West in Ibsen's Rosmersholm; Masha in Chekhov's The Three Sisters (A három nővér), and Alexandra del Lago in Williams' The Sweet Bird of Youth (Az ifjúság édes madara). There are more than 40 feature and TV films to her credit including A Girl Starts Off (Egy lány elindul) (1937); Flames (Lángok) (1940); A Night in Transylvania (Egy éjszaka Erdélyben) (1941); Johnny (Janika) (1949); State Department Store (Állami Áruház) (1952), Dearest Anna (Édes Anna) (1958); Two Lives of Aunte Mici (Mici néni két élete) (1962); Widowed Brides (Özvegy menyasszonyok) (1964), and Forbidden Territory (Tiltott terület) (1968). Her books are Business Card (Névjegy) (1941), and Confession-fragments (Vallomástöredékek) (1981). She received the title of Merited Artist (1965) and Outstanding Artist (1969). – B: 0871, 1445, T: 7684. → Rózsahegy, Kálmán.

Mező, Ferenc (Francis) (Grünfeld) (Pööskefő, 13 March 1885 - Budapest, 21 November 1961) – Sports-writer, teacher. He studied at the University of Budapest, where he read Latin and Greek literature and obtained his Teacher's Degree. He earned a Ph.D. with his dissertation Tibullus in Hungarian Literature (Tibullus a Magyar irodalomban). He taught at the Junior Boys' High School, Zalaszentgrót (1913-1914). Thereafter, he served 32 months in World War I. Following the war, he taught at Nagykanizsa's high schools, then moved to Budapest and became a teacher at the Mátyás High School of Buda (1918-1934), thereafter at the Berzsenyi High School (1935-1942), the Kölcsey High School, and finally, he was posted to the Ministry of Culture. He wrote sports articles and books; his research field was the history of physical training in the Classical World and in Hungary. He wrote the History of the Olympic Games (Az olimpiai játékok története); with this, he earned a gold medal in the literary category of the Amsterdam Olympic Games (1928). It was published in Hungarian, in German (1929, 1930), and in other languages as well. After World War II, he helped to restart the sports life in Hungary. He taught for three years at the Academy of Physical Education (Testnevelési Főiskola). He became a member of the Olympic Committee in 1948, and that of the Scientific Council of Physical Education. In 1948 he was elected a member of the International Olympic Committee (Nemzetközi Olimpiai Bizottság – NOB). He published 40 books including the Hungarians at the Olympic Games (Magyarok az olimpián) (1932); General Sports History (Egyetemes sporttörténelem) (1940); The Olympic Games in Helsinki (A Helsinki olimpia) (1952); The Olympic Games in Stockholm (A stockholmi olimpiai játékok) (1955); The New Age Olympic Games from Athens to Melbourne (Az újkori olimpia Athéntől Melbourneig) (1956), and The New Age Olympic Games from Athens to Rome (Az újkori Olimpia Athéntől Rómáig) (1959). Mező was well-known for his sports-history writings, and for promoting and organizing the Olympic Movement. Schools bear his name. – B: 0883, 1698, T: 7103.

Mezőkeresztes Battle – It took place on 26-28 October 1596. It was fought between the victorious Turkish Army of Sultan Mehmed III, and the united army of Prince Miksa (Maximilian) Teuffenbach, Captain of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), and Reigning Prince Zsigmond (Sigismund) Báthory (1581-1598) of Transylvania. The United Army lost 8,000 soldiers in action, and all its military equipment including the canons; but Zsigmond Báthory managed to escape. According to contemporary views, the lost battle was as tragic in its consequences as that of Mohács in 1526. – B: 1153, T: 7103.

→Báthory, Prince Zsigmond.

Mezőség – The northern and northeastern part of the Transylvanian Basin (Transylvania, Erdély, now part of Romania), bordered by the Rivers Szamos, Maros and the three branches of the Küküllő. It was named after its treeless nature, a hilly country of "grassy fields", fairly high above sea level (400-500m), covering about 6,000 km<sup>2</sup>. Originally oak forests covered it; now it is agricultural land. Among its hills in the broad valleys, there is a variety of small lakes, some of them used to be artificially dammed up. The area is composed of Upper Mediterranean shale deposits and Sarmatian sandstone. Landslides are frequent in the areas of the shale outcrops. It has been populated since ancient times; excavations have uncovered items of prehistoric origin. It could be the "Csigla Field" (Csigla mező), mentioned in the chronicles, where the Szeklers lived after the collapse of the Hun Empire. Its Hungarian population suffered greatly during the Turkish occupation; many were killed and many others fled the area, especially after the fall of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) in 1660. Today, Hungarian ethnic pockets are still found in the villages. Szék (now Sic, Romania), a characteristic Hungarian town, is rich in medieval churches, lakeside manor houses and peasant homes. The towns of Apanagyfalu (now Nuseni, Romania), Mezőkölpény (now Culpiu, Romania) and others are rich in carpentry traditions. – B: 0942, 1068, 1134, 1153, T: 7456.→Maros Szék.

Michael de Ungria (15th century) – A monk, preacher and theologian. He was a member of the Pauline Order and was educated in Paris. He became a popular preacher and polemist in the country, and was even known at the French Royal Court. However, he was banned from Paris for allegedly using illegal means to get a higher position. Later, he was permitted to return to Paris, where he died. His sermons are lost, only their references survived. – B: 1078, T: 7103.→Pauline Order.

Microgroove Long Playing Record – A long-playing (LP) record, featuring much more densely spaced grooves as compared to the older standard records. The pre-heated raw material, using various fillers in a vinyl base, was placed between the press moulds (in contrast with the standard records). It took up less space and its playing time was considerably longer than that of the standard records. They first appeared in 1947 in three sizes: with diameters 7, 10 and 12 inches (170, 250 and 300 mm respectively) and in two speeds: 45 and 33 rotations/minute. Its playing time was about 5.5, 15 and 22-26 (maximum 30) minutes. The invention of Péter Károly (Peter Charles) Goldmark, submitted in 1948, perfected this kind of record. – B: 1138, 1226, T: 7456.→Goldmark, Péter Károly.

Micromanipulator – An instrument used in cytological research for microscopic interventions (cell operations, injections, etc.). Tibor Péterfi constructed the first micromanipulator that worked with fine-threaded screws; the later ones slid along on a metal ledge. – B: 1138, T: 7456.→Péterfi, Tibor.

Migration Legend Cycles – These legends are closely connected with the Hun-Hungarian legend cycle and with Hungarian legends of the Settlement Period of the 9th century AD. Its oldest segment is the legend of Hunor and Magor that symbolically reflects the historical development of the Hungarians. The “Wonderous Stag” legend reflects the memory of their migration into Europe around 700 BC, and assumed material representation in the Scythian Gold Stag objects found in the Carpathian Basin dating from 500 BC. The second wave of migration is associated with the arrival of the Huns in the area in the 5th century AD. – B: 1134, 1020, 7017, T: 7617.→Hun-Hungarian Legend Cycle; Wondrous Stag Legend.

Migration of Early Hungarians – A branch of the Turkic peoples, the Ogurs (branch of the Bolgar-Turkic Onogurs) moved westward from their Asian homeland. They became in increasingly close contact with the Magyars and gradually formed one community, one ethnic group. The Magyar tribal confederation, thus compounded, was made up of seven tribes (joined later by the three Khabar tribes) and they moved on to the steppes of the Kuban River south of the River Don but north of the Caucasus Mountains, to the Maeotis (now the Sea of Azov) area, positioned between the Khazars south of them and the Bolgars north of them. They stayed here primarily in the 7th century. The ever-increasing Arab advance northward was only stopped by the line of fortresses the Khazar Khanate built by the Caucasus Range.

By the middle of the 8th century, the Magyars had moved to the Don-Dnepr steppes north of the Black Sea (in the present day Ukraine). Their homeland here was called Levedia (Lebedia), where they lived in alliance with the Khazars. They abandoned Levedia in 889, due to some internal troubles within the Khazar Empire and presumably to their refusal to accept Judaism. They decided to move west to the Carpathian Basin, which some of them had already visited on exploratory expeditions. The defeat of the Avar Khanate in the Carpathian Basin by Charlemagne took place in 803. It is likely that the so-called late Avars (related to the Magyars) were still in the Carpathian Basin before 896, the time of the arrival of the Magyars. Also, a small number of Magyars from earlier exploratory expeditions could have remained in the Carpathian Basin among surviving groups of Avars, together with the Szeklers, held to be the survivors of the Huns in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). A little later these related peoples were welcoming and helping Árpád's Magyars in the occupation of the new homeland. In the Carpathian Basin, the Magyars found a people speaking a language similar to that of the majority of the occupying tribes.

Etelköz (between the Dnepr River and the lower course of the Danube, near its delta) was the last stop for the Magyars immediately before the Carpathian settlement. It was here that the so-called Blood Covenant (Vérszerződés) was made between the Magyar tribes, and Álmos, the head of the Megyer Tribe became their leader (khagan) and planned the migration to the Carpathian Basin. However, he was unable to enter the Carpathian Basin and the Magyars, led by Khagan (Supreme Leader) Árpád, carried out the final settlement during the years 895 to 900. This was a gradual occupation: first settling mainly in Transdanubia, the Danube islands (especially Csepel Island) and the Danube-Tisza Interfluve; the occupation of Northern Hungary and the more easterly parts of the Basin as well as Transylvania followed later. The Bulgar Khanate (the Danube Bulgars) was successfully forced out of the eastern part of the Carpathian Basin. – B: 1068, 1553, 7456, T: 7456.→Khazars, Avars, Petchenegs, Bulgars, Bulgar Khanate, Mihalkovics, Géza (Pest, 30 January 1844 - Budapest, 12 July 1899) – Physician, anatomist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Pest in 1869, and became a demonstrator at the Institute of Anatomy. From 1872 to 1874 he was an honorary lecturer of Embryology at the University of Strasbourg. In 1875 he became Associate Professor of Embryology at the University of Budapest, and in 1878 a full professor. Between 1881 and 1889 he was professor at the Department of Regional Anatomy and Histology; from 1890 to 1899, at the Institute of Anatomy (No. 1). During 1898 and 1899 he was Vice-Chancellor of the University and, for several periods, Dean of the Medical Faculty. He was mainly interested in histology and engaged in cerebral research and comparative anatomy. His works include Study of Surgical Dressing (Sebészeti köttan) (1868); Growth of the Brain (Az agy fejlődése) (1877); General Anatomy (Általános bonctan) (1881), and Anatomie und Entwicklungsgeschichte der Nase und ihrer Nebenhöhle (1894). – B: 1730, 1160, 0907, T: 7456.

Mihalovich, Ödön (Edmund) (Fericence, Slavonia, 13 September 1842 - Budapest, 22 April 1929) – Composer. From 1855 he studied Music under the direction of Mihály (Michael) Mosonyi at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. In 1865 he studied with M. Hauptmann in Leipzig and, in 1866 under P. Cornelius in Munich. In 1865 he met Richard Wagner, Hans von Bülow, and also Ferenc (Franz) Liszt, and appeared with Liszt in several concerts. In 1870 he held his first orchestral concert. In 1872 he was President of the Wagner Society of Pest. In 1881 he became Director of the Academy of Dramatic Art. From 1887 until his retirement in 1919, he was Director of the Academy of Music, Budapest. Wagner strongly influenced his style. He really came into his own during his directorship, reaching European standards and securing outstanding musicians for the Academy (B. Bartók, Z. Kodály, E. Dohnányi). His compositions include four symphonies, seven symphonic poems, a Faust fantasy, piano works, operas (Eliana, Wieland der Schmied, Toldi's Love), male choirs, songs, musical articles and critiques. – B: 0883, 0907, T: 7456. → Mosonyi, Mihály; Liszt, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Mihály, Dénes (Denis) (Gödöllő, 7 July 1894 - Berlin, 20 August 1953) – Mechanical engineer, inventor. At the early age of sixteen, he wrote a technical book on automobiles, followed by another on motorbikes. While completing his higher studies at the Budapest Polytechnic, his interest turned to the problems of sound-film and television. In 1916 he conducted successful experiments in the field of sound-films. In fact, he may well be regarded as its inventor. On 30 April 1918 he submitted his patent called Projectophon. He perfected several transmitter systems; his Telehor of 1919 was designed using selenium cells and a coiled oscillograph; a piece of equipment suitable for transmitting motionless pictures to a distance of several kilometers; it was a prototype of the picture-transmitter. To further develop his inventions, he accepted the invitation of the Allgemeine Elektrizitäts Gesellschaft to work in Berlin. During the 1928 Berlin radio exhibition, he employed the Nipkow-dial (his modification) and glow discharge lamp as a light-relay. For the first time in the world, on 8 March 1929, the Radio Station of Berlin-

Witzleben transmitted a motion picture broadcast, based on Mihály's patent. He then established a company for the manufacturing of television appliances. The apparatus he brought out in 1933 had a layout featuring a reflex-perimeter, glow-discharge lamp. In conjunction with the physicist E.H. Traub, a more advanced design, known as the Mihály-Traub Receiving Set with rotary mirror, was introduced in 1935. During the Hitler era, he was hiding persecuted people and he was subsequently interned; a consequence that led to a relapse of his tuberculosis, ultimately causing his death. – B: 0883, 1123, T: 7456.

Mihályfi, Ernő (Ernest) (Bér, 3 September 1898 - Budapest, 20 November 1972) – Politician, journalist. He was born into a Lutheran Pastor's family. He studied at the Faculty of Art of the University of Budapest, and obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Szeged in 1923. While still a student, he was involved in journalism; he was a contributor for the newspaper, Evening (Est). In 1923, he emigrated to the USA, where he was a manual worker, but sent reports to his newspaper, the Est. When he returned to Hungary, he continued working for the same newspaper. He was a versatile journalist, working for other papers as well. He became involved in politics. He befriended some leading intellectuals and artists, among them Endre (Andrew) Bajcsy-Zsilinszky, Pál (Paul) Pátzay, Gyula (Julius) Derkovics and Péter (Peter) Veress. From 1942 he was involved with the antifascist Hungarian Historical Memorial Committee (Magyar Történelmi Emlékbizottság) and entered the Smallholders' Party (Kisgazda Párt). During the German occupation in 1944, he was hiding in Bér, his village of birth. After World War II, he edited two newspapers and participated in the political life. From 1947 until his death he was a Member of Parliament, filling various positions, including Ministerial Offices and membership in the Presidential Council. He was also a Presidium member of the Patriotic People's Front (Hazafias Népfront,) and that of the National Peace Council (Nemzeti Béketanács). He was lay-superintendent of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Hungary, from 1957. He was Co-President of the Friends of Soviets Society (Szovjet Baráti Társaság) and President of the Hungarian Society of the United Nations (Magyar ENSZ Társaság). He received a number of prizes and awards, among them the Ferenc Rózsa Prize (1962) and the Order of the Banner of the Hungarian People's Republic (1965). A posthumous documentary film was made about him. A foundation for talented young journalists bears his name. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7103. → Bajcsy-Zsilinszky, Endre; Pátzay, Pál; Derkovics, Gyula; Veress, Péter; Evangelical-Lutheran Church in Hungary.

Mikes, Éva (Misics) (Budapest, 22 December 1938 - Budapest, 5 February 1986) – Pop singer. She did her musical training privately under Júlia Majláth, as well as in the Hungarian Radio Dance music Studio under Péter Tamás Balassa. Toward the end of the 1950s she often appeared with János (John) Koós, Mária (Mary) Toldi and Katalin (Catherine) Sárosi. Her characteristic voice and tender style made her quickly known throughout the country. Apart from the concert stages of Hungary, she also appeared in a number of other European countries. She won a prize at the International Dance-song Festival of Sopot, Poland. Her popular songs include What is on my Heart, it is on my Mouth (Ami szívemen a számon) (1964), A Little Luck (Egy kis szerencse) (1965), and

First Love (Első szerelem) (1965). She had many radio and gramophone recordings. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Majláth, Júlia; Koós, János.

Mikes, George (1) (György) (Siklós, 15 February 1912 - London, 30 August 1987) – Writer, journalist. He received a Degree in Law at the University of Budapest in 1933. He became a journalist, wrote for the weekly Morning (Reggel), created the Intimate Stevie (Intim Pista) column for Theater Life (Színházi Élet), as well as submitted works for other newspapers. On moving to England, he became the London correspondent for the Morning (Reggel) and the 8 o'clock News (8 Órai Ujság) in 1938. During World War II, he was a correspondent for the Hungarian Section of the BBC, later a staff member until 1950. He was President of the London Group of the Expatriate Writers' PEN Center, regularly wrote for English and Hungarian émigré papers and prepared television reports. Between 1957 and 1963 he was one of the editors of London's Word of the People (Népszava). He worked for Radio Free Europe's Hungarian Program from 1975 until his death. His first book, England in Slippers (Anglia papucsban), made him famous. Besides humor, he wrote travel guides, journals, and political analyses, they were translated into many languages. His major works include How to be an Alien (1946); How to Scrape Skies (1946); Milk and Honey (1950); Down with Everybody (1951); Shakespeare and Myself (1952); Über Alles (1953); The Land of Promise (Ígéret földje) (1953), The Hungarian Revolution (1957); Wheelbarrow (Talicska) (1958); How to Unite Nations (1963); The Land of the Rising Yen (1970); How to be Seventy (1982), and How to be Decadent (1986). – B: 0877, 0883, 0878, T: 7657.

Mikes, György (2) (George) (Privigye, now Prievidza, Slovakia, 29 July 1929 - Budapest, 9 June 1986) – Writer, humorist. Following his commercial high school studies he worked as a bookkeeper. From 1951 until his death, he was a correspondent for the satirical weekly Crafty Matt – the Goose herd (Ludas Matyi); in the 1970s became its Night Editor, then Editor-in-Chief. His major works include Girl With a Half-million (A félmillió lány) (1957); Splinter and Beam (Szálka és gerenda), humorous sketches (1961); Peas Thrown at the Wall (Falra hányt borsó), humorous sketches (1963); The Lions Left Home at Four O'clock (Az oroszlánok négy órákkor mentek el otthonról) (1965), and I Go Under the Water (Megyek a víz alá), humorous sketches (1972). – B: 0883, 0878, T: 7456.

Mikes Imre (Emeric) (Gallicus, pen name from 1951 to 1967) (Budapest, 9 February 1900 - Kihei, Hawaii, USA, 30 March 1990) – Journalist, writer. He wanted to be a seaman but chose journalism instead. He first worked in the editorial office of the paper, Szamos, of Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania) from 1920. Later, he worked for the Eastern Newspaper (Keleti Ujság) of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), then for the Brassó Papers (Brassói Lapok) (now Braşov, Romania), and eventually became Editor-in-Chief for the Nagyvárad Diary (Nagyvárad Napló) (now Oradea, Romania). He was also a correspondent for the journal Our Age (Korunk). He participated in the editing of the volume, Metamorphosis Transylvaniae, (1934) (Transylvania, Erdély now in Romania). Due to a series of articles, Everything Silent on the Bank of the Dnepr (A Dnyeper partján minden csendes), published in the Brassó Papers, he was sentenced by the new Romanian leaders of Transylvania to three and a half years' imprisonment. For his work The Way of Transylvania from Greater Hungary to Great Romania vols. i,ii (Erdély útja Nagymagyarországtól Nagyromániáig, I-II) (1936), he was deported to Hungary in 1936. In Budapest he joined the editorial office of the daily, The News (Az Újság). He reported to the daily, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). While working at The Journal, (Az Újság), he was assigned as a reporter to Paris; and after World War II he served as Press Secretary of the Hungarian Embassy in France. Due to his anti-Communist articles from the Paris Peace Negotiation, he had to leave the Magyar Nemzet (1947). After emigration to the West, he launched the weekly, Western Herald (Nyugati Hírnök) and its French edition, the Courrier de l'Occident. In 1951, he joined Radio Free Europe (Szabad Európa Rádió), and edited the Reflector Program, where he worked until 1976. He settled in Hawaii in 1982. One of his other works is Reflector – Historical Documents (Reflektor – Történelmi dokumentumok) (1977). – B: 0883, 0921, 1438, 1672, T: 7456.

Mikes, Kelemen (Zágon, now Zagon, Romania, ca 15 August 1690 - Rodosto, now Tekirdag, Turkey, 2 October 1761) – Writer, author of the Letters from Turkey (Törökországi Levelek). His father was of Transylvanian lesser nobility, participant of the Thököly uprising, executed by the Habsburgs in the year of his son's birth. He studied at the Jesuit School of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) until age 17. In 1707 he became a page of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, and was inseparable from the Prince thereafter. He participated in the Rákóczi Freedom Fight (1704-1711), and was a member of the Noble Company (Nemesi Társaság). He went into exile with the Prince. At first, he traveled with the Prince to Poland and England, and then in 1713 to France via Danzig. He familiarized himself with Paris and learned French. At the Sultan's suggestion, he went to Turkey with other refugees in 1717. The fugitives were relocated to Rodosto (the present Tekirdağ) on the shore of the Sea of Marmora in 1720. As Rákóczi's page and chamberlain, he observed the life in exile for four decades. He describes his experiences in his Letters from Turkey. It is a collection of letters in the French literary style, most probably written after 1735, and addressed to a fictitious aunt, Countess P.E. in Istanbul.

After the death of the Prince, he traveled close to Hungary in the in course of József (Joseph) Rákóczi's project in 1738-1739. Later in 1739 he also saw the borders of Transylvania (Erdély now part of Romania) as the Sultan's envoy, while traveling to Jászvásár (now Jasi, Romania), to see the Voivode of Moldova. Empress Maria Theresa refused his return but “permitted” him to correspond with his family in Transylvania. He filled his monotonous lifestyle producing literary works and with translations from French. The Kuruc fugitives died one after the other and he became the leader of the local Hungarian colony in 1758.

For 41 years, he wrote about the life of the refugees in his Letters from Turkey. His work is an important historical source, the peak of the Hungarian artistic prose of the 18th century. There is a commemorative monument marking his home in Zágon. – B: 0883, 1257, 1288, T: 3240. → Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Kuruc.

Miklós (Nicholas) – A church dignitary in the 10th century. He was Bishop of Győr from 1052 to 1064. He was the notary of King Andrew I (1046–1060), and he composed the wording of the Founding Charter of the Tihany Abbey in 1055. It is possible that he was also the first chronicler. It is assumed that he summarized in writing the origin of Hungarians, their occupation of the Carpathian Basin, their western campaigns, and the history of their first king, St. Stephen, in a text that was purportedly lost, but whose one-time existence is highly probable. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Miklósa, Erika (Kiskunhalas, 9 June, 1971 - ) – Opera singer (coloratura soprano). She spent her youth as an athlete, training for the heptathlon. Due to an accident, however, she was forced to switch career paths. Because of her good singing skills she chose to be a singer. At first, she sang at family gatherings, weddings and formal celebrations. On one such occasion, a singing-master heard her and almost immediately began to teach the 16-year-old Erika. Soon she went on to study music at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Szeged, as well as in Milan and New York. She became a soloist at the Hungarian State Opera, Budapest, in 1990, and made her debut in 1991 as Papagena in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola). She was also a participant in the Interoperett concerts and appeared in TV programs. Her "image" role is the Queen of the Night in Mozart's Magic Flute. She also sang at the Opera House in Brussels, where her international career began in 1992. She sang at the Royal Opera in London, at the Staatsoper in Vienna, at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Washington and Chicago, and other famous opera houses. Her international fame is still growing. She is also a recording artist, mostly of Mozart's works (The Mozart Album, Die Zauberflöte). Her awards include Europe Cultura Award for the role of "Queen of the Night" in Zauberflöte, Zurich (1991); Pro Opera Lyrica Opera Singer of the Year 1993 (Hungary); International Mozart Competition - 1st Prize in Voice category (1993); European Award for Culture, Zurich (1995); the Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1998), the Kossuth Prize (2012), and was made an Honorary Citizen of Kiskunhalas (1999), and Artist of Bács County (2003). – B: 1031, 2016, 1031, T: 7103.

Miklós, Jutka (Judith) (J. Van den Bussche) (Berettyóújfalu, 7 September 1884 - Creteil, France, 18 February 1976) – Poetess. She was a member of the writers' circle of the journal Tomorrow (Holnap). She started composing poems at age fifteen. József (Joseph) Vészi published her poems in the Budapest Journal (Budapesti Napló). Such outstanding literary figures as the great poet Endre (Andrew) Ady, as well as Margit (Margaret) Kaffka and Béla Révész enthusiastically welcomed her emergence. She moved to Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) from Budapest, where she formed a friendship with Gyula (Julius) Juhász, and got in touch with Ákos Dutka. She was included in the anthology of Tomorrow (Holnap). She spent three years in the USA (1910-1913), and learnt photography. On her return to Nagyvárad, she opened a photo studio; during the years of World War I, she made a living from this. After the fall of the Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary (1919), she went to Berlin, prepared herself to become a film director and worked for a while as an assistant director. From there, she moved to Paris and opened a photo studio on Montparnasse. In her circle of friends were Count Mihály (Michael) Károlyi and his wife; Lajos (Louis) Tihanyi, Bertalan (Bartholomew) Pór, György (George) Bölöni and his wife. In Paris she married the Flemish-speaking Belgian engineer, Van den Bussche. Due to his wartime illness, the couple was forced to settle in a warmer climate. This is how she ended up in Rabat, Morocco, where she opened a cosmetic salon. World War II reached her there. In her free time, she translated the works of contemporary Hungarian poets into French. At that time, she wrote poems only occasionally. After her husband's death, she returned to France in 1964. She lived in Chateauroux and later in Vitry sur Seine near Paris. Toward the end of her life, she again wrote some poems and, in 1971, she published a volume of her selected poetry. Other of her works include Poems (Versek) (1904), and The Earth Embraces You Back (Visszaölel a föld) (1971) – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Ady, Endre; Kaffka, Margit; Juhász, Gyula; Dutka, Ákos; Pór, Bertalan; Károlyi, Count Mihály; Council (Soviet) Republics of Hungary.

Miklósházy, Attila S.J. (Hungary, 5 May 1931 - ) – Roman Catholic Bishop. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1949 and left Hungary during the Revolution in 1956. He completed his philosophical and theological studies in Budapest, Pullach, Germany and Toronto, Canada, and obtained the STD Degree at the Gregorian University in Rome in 1968. After his ordination to priesthood in Toronto in 1961, he taught Theology at Loyola College, Montreal, at Regis College, Toronto (1968-1974), at St. Austin Seminary, Toronto, and the Toronto School of Theology (1984-1988). For thirteen years, he served as Dean of the Faculty of Theology at St Augustine's Seminary, as a member of the National Liturgical Council of the Canadian Bishops, and of the Canadian Liturgical Society (ecumenical), and also participated, for fifteen years, in the Anglican-Roman Catholic Dialogue in Canada. In 1999 he received the Degree D. Div. honoris causa from St Michael's College of the University of, Toronto. He is Professor Emeritus of Systematic Theology and Liturgy. In 1989 he was appointed titular Bishop of Castelminore for spiritual assistance of the Hungarian emigrants all over the world, and continued his Episcopal duties by visiting the Hungarian communities around the world, until his resignation in 5 April 2007. His successor is Bishop Dr. Ferenc (Francis) Cserháti. – B: 0997, T: 7678.

Miklósi, Péter (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 4 July 1946 - ) – Writer. He completed his studies at the Hungarian High School of Pozsony (1959-1963); he was a member of the Czechoslovakian National Saber Team (1963-1966), and a reporter for the paper New Word (Új Szó) (1964-1971). For political reasons, he lost his position and was unemployed for a while. Although a member of the Czechoslovak Communist Party (1968-1970), he was expelled. He lectured at the Central Theater of the Czechoslovakian Hungarian Workers' Cultural Federation – CSEMADOK, (1972-1973). He worked as a reporter (1974-1975) for the Week (Hét), but his right of publishing was revoked. He was a clerk at the CSEMADOK Center (1975-1978), and reported again for the Week (1978-1990). Finally, he was rehabilitated in 1990. He worked as an associate of New Word, and later became its acting Editor-in-Chief. In 1990 he was Press Chief for the Coexistence Political Movement in the election campaign. Since 1966 his reports, theatrical notes, critiques, portrayals of artists, interviews and his translations of Czech and Slovakian prose fiction literature has been published in various newspapers and magazines, such as the New Youth (Új Ifjúság), and New Word, Week. He published The Home of Hungarian Culture in Prague (A magyar kultúra otthona Prágában) (1981). His translations include Fairyland Adventure (Meseország kaland) by Ladislav Luknar, stage work (1973), The Center Forward's Ascension to Heaven (A középcsatár mennybemenetele) by Jozef Kot, novel, translation co-author Elemér (Elmer) Tóth, and The Nationalities (A nemzetiségek), monograph by Ludovit Klimits (1985). – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Mikó, Count Imre (Emeric) (Zabola, now Zăbala, Romania, 4 September 1805 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 16 September 1876) – Writer, reform and culture politician, literary historian. He was called “The Széchenyi of Transylvania”. He studied at the Bethlen Reformed College of Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania), then he read Law from 1826. He launched the paper, Kolozsvár Journal (Kolozsvári Közlöny) (1844). He was President of the National Assembly of Agyagfalva during the War of Independence (1848-1849). Although he was under house arrest, he had a relevant role in the restoration of the Bethlen College of Nagyenyed and its library, which had been ruined during the war. He established the Transylvanian Museum (Erdélyi Múzeum) in 1856, and the College of Sepsiszentgyörgy (now Sfântu Gheorghe, Romania) in 1859; it was later named after him. He was Governor of Transylvania in 1861. He was a member of the Supervisory Committee of the National Theater of Kolozsvár (1843-1875), founder of the Hungarian History Association and its President between 1867 and 1876, and was Minister of Public Works and Transportation (1867-1870). Some of his literary works are: The Life and Works of Péter Bod (Bod Péter élete és munkái) (1862), and On the Separation of Transylvania from Hungary (Erdély különválásáról) (1860). – B: 0882, 0877, T: 7103. → Bod, Péter.

Mikó, Ferenc (Francis) (hídvégi) (Hídvég, now Hăghig, Romania, 1585 - Gyulafehérvár, now Alba Iulia, Romania, 15 July 1635) – Politician, diplomat, writer. From 1600, he was a page to András (Andrew) Barcsai, then he was a page, and from 1602 Secretary to Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen, Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). After the lost battle of 17 July 1603, he fled with Gábor Bethlen to Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania), then to Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrade, Serbia). After his return, he managed his estates in Hídvég and Oltzem. In 1610 he was Vice-Captain of County Csík. In 1611 he took part in the campaign against Radul Serbán. From 1613 he was Captain-General of the seats of Csík, Gyergyó and Kászón. In 1613 he had the still extant Mikóújvár built at Csíkszereda (now Mercurea-Ciuc, Romania). From 1617 he was Lord Steward, from 1622 Treasurer. On several occasions, he performed diplomatic missions in the Turkish Court and for western Monarchs. In 1625 Gábor Bethlen sent him to György (George) Brandenburg, on a mission to look for a wife. At the Peace of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) (1626), he was the chief envoy of the Prince. For his services, he received substantial grants in property. His memoirs are among the most valuable sources of early 17th century Hungarian history (1594-1613 published in 1863). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Bethlen, Prince Gábor.

Mikó, Imre (Emeric) (pen names, László (Ladislav) Könyves Tóth, István (Stephen) Miklós) (Bánffyhunyd, now Huedin in Transylvania, Romania, 27 March 1911 - Kolozsvár, (now Cluj- Napoca, Transylvania, Romania), 21 March 1977) – Writer, translator of literary works, lawyer and politician. In 1934 he obtained a Ph.D. in Law from the University of Kolozsvár, where he also studied Unitarian Theology. In his first book, The Transylvanian Village and the Problem of Nationalities (Az erdélyi falu és a nemzetiségi kérdés) (1932), he was the first to investigate sociologically the reciprocal influence of different nationalities in Transylvania in the new situation under Romanian rule. It was about this time that he became a correspondent for a number of Transylvanian papers and magazines, e.g. Hungarian Minority (Magyar Kisebbség); Transylvanian Museum (Erdélyi Múzeum), and Our Age (Korunk). He studied International Law on a scholarship in Paris (1934-1936). In 1937 he opened an attorney's office in Kolozsvár. After the Second Vienna Award (1940), which returned the northern part of Transylvania to Hungary, he became a Member of Parliament in Budapest. During the fall of 1944, the occupying Soviet forces took him prisoner in Kolozsvár and he spent four years in Russia at Taganrog on the Sea of Azov. While there, he learned the Russian language and, on his return to Transylvania, he obtained a Degree in Education for teaching Russian. He did that for ten years in Kolozsvár. He wrote textbooks and worked as a translator. Following the Hungarian Freedom Fight in 1956, he was a laborer, and later a store clerk at the county's book distribution center. From 1958 he was a book distributor and seller. In 1970 he became the Editor for the Publishing House, Kriterion, in Bucharest, Romania. Many of his articles and essays appeared in the re-started magazine, Our Age (Korunk), and in other magazines and papers from the end of the 1950s. Later on, from the end of the 1960s he published mainly essays, studies and novels and participated actively in Transylvanian literary life. He edited the Kriterion's Téka series. In 1969 he became a member of the Romanian Writers' Association. He was Lay President of the Unitarian Church until his death. His works include Country Citizens and World Citizens (Honpolgárok és Világpolgárok) (1967), The Tree that Fell upon a Peak (A bércre esett fa) (1969); Nationality Law and Nationality Politics (Nemzetiségi jog és nemzetiségi politika) (1944); Petőfi in Transylvania (Petőfi Erdélyben) with Gy. David (1972); Those Who Walked Before Me (Akik előttem jártak) (1976); The Quiet Petőfi Street (A csendes Petőfi utca) memoirs (1978), and Variations on a Theme (Változatok egy témára), 1981. – B: 0878, 0882, 0877, 0883, 1257, T: 7456. →Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II.

Mikó, Jenő (Eugene) (Felsőhutka, now Vysnia Hutka, Slovakia near Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 17 May 1931 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 1 July 2004) – Bishop of the Christian Reformed Church in Slovakia, theologian. He attended high school at his birthplace and at the Reformed College of Sárospatak, but matriculated in Kassa. He studied Theology at the Comenius Faculty of the University of Prague, and completed it in 1954. He was Bishop's Secretary, then Assistant Minister in Léva (now Levice, Slovakia), Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky) and Vértfarkasd (now Vlcany). He studied Theology in Basel under Karl Barth and Oscar Cullmann in 1966. He was Parish Minister in Pozsony from 1981, and became Bishop of the Christian Reformed Christian Church in Slovakia (Szlovákiai Keresztyén Református Egyház) from 1988 to 1996. He edited the bilingual Calvinist Review (Kálvinista Szemle) (1981-1988). He was Dean of the Bratislava Deanery (1986-1988), and President of the Ecumenical Council of the Czechoslovakian Churches. He was Parliamentary Representative of the Co-existence Political Movement and, from 1991, President of the Ecumenical Council of Czechoslovakian Churches and Vice-President of the Hungarian Reformed World Federation. He participated in the foundation of the J. Calvin Reformed Theological Academy, Komárom (now Komarno, Slovakia), and he was its Professor of Systematic Theology. He represented his Church at a number of international Church Conferences.

From 1960, he published articles on theological subjects. – B: 0941, 1083, 1890, T: 7103, 7456.

Mikola, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Nándor Josef Mikolajcsik) (Budapest, 27 November 1911 - Unkari, Finland, May 3 2006) – Painter. Following in the footsteps of his father, he studied lithography at the Budapest College of Arts and Crafts and, at the same time, he studied painting at the Budapest Free Academy of Arts. Later he completed his studies at the Graphic Institute of Vienna, and in the Graphics Department of the Helsinki Athenaeum. He moved to Finland in 1936, and settled in Vaasa. He had his first exhibition in 1943, but he achieved his main breakthrough at the Exhibition of 1953, and several study trips abroad followed: Paris, Spain, Kenya, China, Mexico, Spitzbergen and Provence. His work reflected informality but he also painted landscapes, still life and abstract themes, sometimes in large watercolors. He had numerous courses on watercolor painting and he is regarded as the Master of Finnish Watercolor Painting. He exhibited in several capitals, in Budapest and in Stockholm. The Museum of Art in New York has one of his paintings, and there are several in the state collections of both Finland and Hungary. In 1995 he opened his own museum in Vaasa. He also made eight documentary films. He received a High Medal of Honor of the State of Hungary, and was awarded Honorary Professor of Art, and the Medal of the Order of White Rose of the State of Finland. – B: 0908, 1031, T: 7103.

Mikola, Sándor (Alexander) (Péterhegy, now Gornji Petrovci, Slovenia, 16 April 1871 - Nagykanizsa, 1 October 1945) – Physicist, politician. He studied at the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Degree in Mathematics and Physics in 1895. For a year, he worked with Baron Loránd (Roland) Eötvös, the renowned physicist. From 1895 till his retirement in 1935, he was a teacher and, from 1928 Principal at the Lutheran High School, Budapest. He was an outstanding teacher. He introduced laboratory works to his students. Jenő (Eugene) Wigner, Nobel laureate, was one of his students. His field of research was acoustics and physics of dielectrics. He invented the Mikola-tube for studying constant movement. He was an expert advisor to the Hungarian Delegation at the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty preparation in 1919. In 1945 he was arrested and put in the Kidričevó Detention Camp. He died soon after his release. He was a bridge between two great generations of physicists; on the one hand, Loránd Eötvös, on the other, Wiegner, Neumann and Harsányi. His works include The Development of Basic Concepts in Physics (A fizikai alapfogalmak kialakulása) (1911); The World of Thought of Physics (A fizika-gondolatvilága) (1933); Bases of Epistemology in Physics (A fizikai megismerés alapjai) (1941), and The Past and Present of the Wends (A vendiség múltja és jelene) (1928). He was President of the Hungarian Cultural Society in the Wend territory (Vendvidéki Magyar Művelődési Egyesület), and he was corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1921, and ordinary member from 1942. He was President of the Physicist Society of the Loránd Eötvös University, Budapest. A prize was created and named after him in 1961. – B: 0883, 1465, T: 7103.→Eötvös, Baron Loránd; Wiegner, Eugene; Neumann, von John; Harsányi, John C.

Mikoviny, Sámuel (Mikovini) (Ábelfalva, now Ábelová, Slovakia 1698 – Beside Trencsén, now Trenčín, Slovakia, 23 March 1750) – Mathematician, engineer and cartographer. After finishing his studies in Besztercebánya (now Banská Bystrica, Slovakia), Berlin, Altdorf and Jena, he became Court Mathematician of the Duke of Saxony. In 1727 Count József (Joseph) Esterházy invited him to Tata to develop a water-regulating plan for the area. In 1728, in his work Epistola, he published his methods and practices of map-making, astronomy determinations, the use of quadrant, telescope, diopter and limbus calibrated in seconds, and also the development of a modern triangulating network. His work earned him membership in the Berlin Academy of Sciences. From 1728 he carried out geographical calculation of locations and land surveys in Hungary, and completed the maps of 49 counties in just seven years. Of these 23 are still in use. In 1733 he joined the large-scale geographical undertaking of Mátyás (Matthias) Bél. Eleven of his county maps were published in the four volumes of Notitia Hungariae that appeared between 1735 and 1742, a mere fraction of Mikoviny's prodigious cartographical activities. The first map of Hungary, prepared on astronomical assessment, was based on his work. From 1735 he was appointed Hungarian Treasury Engineer in Selmecebánya (Schemnitz, now Banská-Štiavnica, Slovakia), and the first Professor of the newly established Institute of Mining Officer Education. He established a water-catchment system to secure the energy supply for the mining works of Selmecebánya. It was unheard of in his time, but the 16 reservoirs stored 7 million cubic meters of water. In 1745 he took part in the Silesian Campaign as Major of the Engineering Corps. He also worked on road and bridge constructions. After the war, he participated in the preparation of the rebuilding plans for the Royal Castle complex of Buda. It was typical of his versatility that he also pursued interests in metallurgy, forestry and archeology. He also excelled as a copper engraver. He was an important Hungarian polyhistor of his age; the first Hungarian to practice scientific cartography and a pioneer of Hungarian higher education in technology. In his honor the Mikoviny commemorative medal was established in 1950. – B: 1123, 1257, 1031, T: 7456.→Bél, Mátyás.

Mikszáth, Kálmán (Coloman) (Szklabonya, renamed in 1910 Mikszáthfalva, now Sklabiná, Slovakia, 16 January 1847 - Budapest, 28 May 1910) – Writer, journalist. He was the child of a smallholder family; his father worked on a few acres of land and that is how he became acquainted with the people of his childhood. The colors of the village life, the Palóc (Slovak) countryside and its people impressed him early. The folksongs and folk-tales were the first literary imprints of his life. He studied in Rimaszombat (now Rimavská Sobota, Slovakia), and graduated from Selmecebánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). His first poems and novels were influenced mostly by the historical past. The latent national consciousness, during and following Habsburg absolutism, inspired his emotions and his thoughts. His favorite teachers bestowed on him the spirit of the lost freedom fight of 1848-1849, and he reflected on it until the end of his life.

Following his graduation, he became a law student in Pest, but did not graduate. In 1871 he was employed as a Juror of the District Administrator of Balassagyarmat and, from 1872, he was a law clerk, while sending his articles to newspapers in the Capital. After his wedding, he moved to Pest in 1873, where he began his fight for survival as a writer. In spite of his frugal lifestyle, he was able to finance the publishing of his novels in two volumes, the Short Stories (Elbeszélések) in 1874; but they did not stir much interest. The Diary of Szeged (Szegedi Napló) published his first novels, The Fox of the County (A vármegye rókája), and My Father's Acquaintances (Az apám ismerősei), which caused some sensation. The most beautiful pieces of his short stories, the Slovak Kinsmen (Tót atyafiak) and the Good Palóc Folks (Jó palócok) were conceived in Szeged.

He worked from the time of the founding of the paper, Herald of Pest (Pesti Hirlap) in 1881 with short interruptions, for almost 25 years. At that time, he was already a well-known writer, member of several literary societies, and the Hungarian Academy of Sciences also accepted him as a member. Out of the Two Elections in Hungary, 1893-1897 (Két választás Magyarországon, 1893-1897), grew his first political and parliamentary criticism. He exposed the despotism of the oligarchy in the Siege of Beszterce, (Beszterce ostroma) (1895). His novel, The Umbrella of Saint Peter (Szent Péter esernyője) was also published in 1895, and it became a great success, while in 1898, the New Zrinyiad (Új Zrinyiász) was a satirical novel about society life at the end of the century. His first critical realist novel, the Unusual Marriage (Különös házasság), published in 1900, is a passionate indictment of the clergy and the aristocracy. In the Black City (A fekete város), published posthumously in 1910, he illustrated, through the conflict of the city of Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia) and the county, how the aristocracy and the bourgeoisie gave up the great national goals due to class interests. His other major works are: The Two Beggar-students (A két koldusdiák) (1885); The Talking Gown (A beszélő köntös) (1889), and The Women of Szelistye (Szelistyei asszonyok) (1901).

He had an artful narration technique. He was an excellent stylist and his characters are full of dimensions. His language reflects the nuances of every-day language. He was the great master of the Hungarian critical realist prose. “I did not study writing from the great authors but from the Hungarian peasants” he used to say. Irony and emotional humor were his most important characteristics. His most artistic works are his short stories and his novels.

His birthplace was renamed to Mikszáthfalva soon after his death. His marble bust is at the building of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; the Mikszáth Museum opened in his country house in Horpács in 1953. – B: 1150, 0883, 1138, 1257, T: 3240.

Mikuleczky, Ferenc (Francis) (Miskolc, 25 September 1884 - Castle of Freudenstein in Tyrol, 1964) – Naval Officer, a Hungarian pioneer of aviation. He studied at the Naval Academy of Fiume; in 1905 he was made a Class I. naval cadet. It was in 1908 that his interest turned to aviation and the problems of plane-manufacture. In 1916 and 1917 he was leader of the naval aviation of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy as a Naval Lieutenant. Later, he became director of a plane factory in Budapest. After World War I, he left Hungary. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation.

Mikus, Balázs (Blaise) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 25 July 1955 - ) – Painter. He studied under the guidance of J. Želibský at the School of Art of Pozsony (1974-1980), and engaged in “chamber-painting”, applied graphics, mural techniques and designing of stage scenery. Regarding the artistic content, his chief interest lies in the struggle between the individual and his environment, attempting to employ expressions of gesticulation. From 1981 he participated in group-exhibitions in Prague, Pozsony Túrócszentmárton (now Martin, Slovakia), Dunaszerdahely (now Dunajská Streda, Slovakia), Szenice (now Senica, Slovakia), Trencsén (now Trenčín, Slovakia), Budapest, Komárom (Komárno, Slovakia) and Berlin. He had individual exhibitions in Szenc (now Senec, Slovakia) (1979), Komárom (1983), Pozsony (1984, 1986, 1990), Vágsellye (now Sal'a, Slovakia) (1986), and Privigyé (now Prievidza, Slovakia). In 1982 he prepared costume and stage designs for Ibsen's Nora at the Thália Theater of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia); from 1985 to 1987, he worked on a mosaic for the Border Guard Plaza (Határőrök tere) in Pozsony. In an all-Slovakian art-show in Pozsony, he was awarded a Painting Prize (1986). – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Mikus, Sándor (Alexander) (Sződ, 11 August 1903 - Budapest, 17 September 1982) – Sculptor. He was self-taught, made drawings and portraits. In 1924 he was working at the United Incandescent Lamp Factory (Egyesült Izzó Gyár) Újpest, as a technician, when he sold a portrait, My Old Mother (Öreganyám), to a research engineer colleague, who helped him to finance a six-month long study trip. Except for short breaks, until 1930, he lived mainly in Florence and in Rome, where he met Pál (Paul) Pátzay. On his return to Hungary, he worked at his studio. His first one-man show was at the Ernst Museum, Budapest (1932). He also became a member of the Munkácsy Guild, the Rippl-Rónay Society, and the KÚT (Képzőművészek Új Társasága – New Society of Artists). From 1938 he was Vice-President of ÚME (Új Művészek Egyesülete – Society of New Artists). In 1941 the Tamás Gallery showed his more recent creations in bronze miniature sculptures, emphasizing the essential plastic elements of the human body: Bathing Woman (Mosakodó nő); Woman Combing her Hair (Fésülködő nő); Bare-footed Woman (Mezitlábás nő), as well as his medals. The Woman Combing her Hair was also shown at the New York World Fair. In 1949 his Petőfi statue was unveiled in Ózd. The Academy of Applied Art, Budapest appointed him professor, and he worked there until 1976. In 1950 he won the competition and completed the Stalin Monument that was demolished during the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. After 1957, he had numerous commissions for public square statues, using his earlier small-scale compositions. Many of his medals are also significant works, such as Pál Pátzay (1934) and József Rippl-Rónai (1937). In his compositions, using classical sculptural traditions, he expressed man's everyday activities, life situations and routine movements. His human forms suggest serenity, strength and timelessness. His exhibitions in Hungary include the one-man show at the Art Gallery (Múcsarnok), Budapest (1961), Ferenc Móra Museum, Szeged (1963), and the Historical Museum, Budapest (1974). His overseas exhibitions include Athens (1966), and New Delhi (1969). A memorial exhibition was arranged for him at the National Gallery, Budapest (1984). Some of his works are at the Hungarian National Gallery and also in Vienna, Moscow, England and Mexico. He received the sculptural prize of the Szinyei Society (1933), two Gold Medals at the Paris World Fair (1937) and the Kossuth Prize twice (1949, 1952). – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456. → Pátzay, Pál; Munkácsy, Mihály; Rippl-Rónay, József; Melocco, Miklós.

Milkó, Bishopric of Moldova (Petcheneg Bishopric (1227- ca. 1512) – Established for the conversion of Cumanians (Kuns). At the beginning of the 13th century, on the request of Pope Honorius III (1216-1227), King András II (Andrew, Endre, 1205-1235), supported a Dominican Mission already working on the conversion of the Cumanians. At the request of the Cumanian leaders Barc and Membrok, Róbert, Papal Legate and Archbishop of Esztergom consecrated Tódor (Theodore), Head of the Dominican Order in Hungary as Bishop of Cumania in 1227. The town Milkó, located between the Carpathian Mountain Range and the River Szeret (now Siret, Romania), became the center of the new bishopric. On the request of the Pope, King Béla IV (1235-1270) built a church there. Due to the resettlement of the Cumanians with Prince Kötöny in Hungary, the population of the bishopric drastically decreased and the Tartar-Mongol invasion in 1241 sealed its fate. Later there were several attempts to resurrect it until 1441, but to no avail. – B: 0942, 0945, T: 7103.

Millennium – 1896 marked the 1000th anniversary of the Settlement of Hungarians in the Carpathian Basin. Festivals, exhibitions and the inauguration of such great projects in Budapest as the Underground Railway (beneath the Andrásy Boulevard), Heroes Square (Hősök tere) and the Fishermen's Bastion (Halászbástya) marked the event together with large-scale celebrations throughout the country. The recognition of the Settlement became Law and appropriate monuments were erected in seven different parts of the country: Brassó (now Brasov Romania), Dévény (now Devín, Slovakia) Munkács (now Mukacheve, Ukraine) Ópusztaszer, Pannonhalma, Zimony (now Zemun, Serbia) and the Zobor Mountain (now in Slovakia). Later, additional monuments were also erected at numerous locations. Following the Versailles-Trianon Dictated Peace Treaty (1920), the newly-created countries destroyed all the monuments erected in the former parts of Hungary, now ceded to them. – B: 1078, 1153, T: 3240.→Feszty Cyclorama.

Millennium Celebrations, Hungarian, 1896 – On 2 May 1896, with the ringing of church bells in the background, Emperor and King Ferenc József (Franz Joseph) opened the Millennium Exhibition in the Budapest City Park (Városliget), and also the first underground railway on the European Continent. The Royal Couple, accompanied by the chief office bearers of the country, statesmen, artists, and the delegations of the Capital City and the counties, all dressed in the ceremonial national costume, visited the main venues. The celebrations continued the same day with a gala performance at the Opera House. Next day, a Thanksgiving Mass was held in the Matthias (Mátyás) Church on the Buda Hill. Special light displays illuminated the city and spectacular fireworks were held on Gellért Mountain. On 4 May the Exhibition Hall officially opened and, the next day, the King held a special review of the 17,000 troops on the Blood Meadow (Vérmező) in Buda. On 6 May, accompanied by military Honor Guards, the Guards of the Crown with ceremonial halberds and the Chief of the Official Guards of the Realm, the Hungarian Holy Crown was carried from the Royal Palace to the Mátyás Church. The next day, the King laid the cornerstone for the construction of a new wing of the Royal Palace. The 8 May began with an equestrian parade of the ceremonial equestrian units of the Parliament and those of the counties and municipalities, stationed on the Vérmező, to the Castle in front of the Mátyás Church. The colorful cavalry escorts, wearing historical or ceremonial Hungarian garb, left the Mátyás Church, crossed the River Danube to the new Parliament Building that only had the entrance and cupola hall complete at this time. Here, Prime Minister Pál (Paul) Gyulai read two laws on “Commemorating the Millennium of the Founding of Hungary”. Then the Members of Parliament accompanied the Holy Crown back to the Royal Castle, where they paid homage to the Monarch amidst the firing of salutes from guns of the Citadel and the Danube flotilla in the background. They expressed a sentiment that mutual trust between the King and the Nation is the solid basis “of that blessed harmony, whose strength alone can guarantee progress in the centuries to come". The spectators came from every region of the country and numbered nearly 6 million. – B 0899, T: 7665.→Underground Railway.

Millecentennial Celebration, Hungarian, 1996. – Hungarians celebrated the 1100th anniversary of their ancestors' settlement in the Carpathian Basin. It started when the main Magyar forces under Prince Árpád crossed the Verecke (now Veretski, Carpatho-Ukraine) Pass of the North-Eastern Carpathians and descended into the Great Plain in 895 AD. Historical and archeological evidence shows that the Magyar tribes had a semi-nomadic, semi-agricultural way of life. Their system of social and political institutions, modeled on those of the Khazars, can be seen as the antecedent of the Christian Kingdom of Hungary. The natural endowments of the new country and the compulsion they were under to end their military sorties led the Magyars to settle permanently in the Carpathian Basin. The economic, social and political processes that ensued under the new conditions resulted in a renewal of Hungarian society and the emergence of a new system of power. One of the outstanding contributors to this process was Prince Géza (d. 997) who showed great political acumen in navigating a path between East and West. Géza's son, István (later St. Stephen, 977-1038) became Hungary's first King and founder of the Christian State. István requested and received a crown from the Pope (his crown with its Byzantine part is the Hungarian Holy Crown), and in doing so, irrevocably opted for the Western-type European path of development that has defined Hungary's place up to the present. The settlement brought an end of an era of more than 1000 years. As a result, among the peoples arriving from the East, the Magyars were the first to become a European nation in the Carpathian Basin, blending the various tribes into one.

Although the original settlement is dated to 895, according to Byzantine sources it should not be tied to a single year, since Hungarian troops had already appeared near the eastern and southern slopes of the Carpathian Mountains by 830. Furthermore, there is evidence that they advanced into the Carpathian Basin and that their military campaigns reached beyond the Dévény Gate, the entry point of the River Danube into the Carpathian Basin. Results of the latest research suggest that the Magyars were already acquainted with agriculture when they arrived in the Carpathian Basin and, at the beginning of the 10th century they played an equal political role among the European powers. It is no accident that the strong Christian state in Central Europe, established by Prince Géza, then by his son King István I (St Stephen) was finally consolidated by King László I (Saint Ladislas, 1077-1095). The 50,000-volume library, the famous Corvina of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinu, 1458-1490), was exceptional in Europe in the second half of 15th century.

The loss of the Battle of Mohács to the Turks on 29 August 1526, followed by 150 years of Turkish rule in central Hungary, interrupted the development of the Hungarian nation. Then the Habsburgs exploited the weakness of the nation and prevented the country from fully recovering. The Mongol-Tartars (1241-1242), the Turks (1526-1686), the Austrians (1541-1867) and Russians (1849) all ravaged the country over the centuries; but the nation survived and could only recover its full independence centuries later. By the beginning of the 20th century, Hungary, as part of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, was progressing well both industrially and socially, achieving a relative prosperity for the people.

However, World War I derailed the development and the following Peace Dictate of Versailles-Trianon (4 June 1920) reduced Hungary's territory by two-thirds, took away one-third of its ethnic Hungarian population, and deprived the country of most of its natural resources. Due to its geographic location, Hungary invariably ended up on the losers' side.

After World War II, Hungary came under Communist rule that endeavored to suppress all attempts of national freedom and made Hungarian interests subservient to those of the Soviet Union. Though handicapped in the twentieth century, the highlights of her earlier history place Hungary among the important European nations. St István's policies and laws proved him to have been a true European ruler, and the House of Árpád gave more saints to the Christian religion than any other royal house in Europe. János (John) Hunyadi, with his victory at Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrade, Serbia) in 1456, stopped the Turkish menace threatening Christian Europe. The first decree granting freedom of religious observance in Europe was passed in 1568 at the National Assembly in Torda, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In the sciences, Hungarian discoveries and achievements have received international recognition. The love of country and freedom inspired extraordinary deeds in Hungarian history. The Rákóczi insurrection lasted from 1704 to 1711 and the 1848-1849 War of Independence involved the whole nation. Though the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight was short-lived against the powerful Soviet Union, it shook the Communist system to its core. After this defeat, the nation was severely oppressed and sank into apathy; but the fall of the Communist system in 1989 opened up new vistas with a promising future.

The official commemorations of the millcentennial celebrations were based on scientific knowledge of the historical events, gained from archeological finds and written sources. Also explored and revived in these celebrations was the country's popular image and its awareness of the past, as revealed in myths and legends, chroniclers' traditions, and later romantic accretions to these.

The settlement (honfoglalás) emblem refers to the bow used as a weapon of choice by the Magyar ancestors. The seven arrows pointing skyward or seven rays of sunshine stand for the seven Magyar tribes, as well as for the rise of today's Hungarians and their reintegration into Europe. – B: 1099, T: 7665, 7103. → Many of the above persons and events have their own entry.

Millennium Celebration, Hungarian, 2000 – Hungarians celebrated the millennium of Hungarian Christian statehood at home and all over the world. Hungarian tribes, who had settled in the Carpathian Basin around 895, formed a Christian Kingdom on Christmas of 1000, when the first Hungarian King István I (Steven, later St. Stephen, 997-1038) was crowned with the Holy Crown received from Pope Sylvester II.

On 1 January 2000, the Holy Crown of István I was transferred in a solemn ceremony from the National Museum to the Hungarian Parliament in Budapest. Thus began the celebration of Hungary's Millennium, marking 1,000 years of statehood. State President Árpád Göncz referred to the Crown “as a symbol of continuity of the State of Hungary”; Prime Minister Viktor Orbán spoke of history as a “giant river of time” as he recalled Hungary's survival against overwhelming odds through centuries of struggle, subjugation and sacrifice. Throughout those years, the Hungarian Crown served as a living symbol of the nation's will, unity and legitimacy. “It was the Holy Crown that created the opportunity for Hungary to join Europe 1,000 years ago, and as such, is better seen as a living symbol of the state and national unity than as a museum relic,” the incumbent Prime Minister declared. The millennium year was rich in celebration and events. On August 20, the national day of St. István (St. Stephen), a magnificent fireworks display took place on the Gellért Mountain in Budapest. Special commemorative events and exhibitions were held countrywide and in neighboring countries, as well as worldwide (altogether 52 countries) where Hungarians live. In addition to a series of official celebrations hosted by the Hungarian Embassies worldwide, Hungarian communities abroad organized festive events, where visiting politicians and artists from Hungary emphasized the importance of the Special Year of the Millennium. New York Governor George E. Pataky was the first to greet Hungary's Millennium with a proclamation in January, followed by congratulations from practically all countries of the world. – B: 1098, T: 7103.→Holy Crown, Hungarian; Göncz, Árpád; Orbán, Viktor; Pataky George E.

Millennium Monument Budapest (Ezredéves emlékmű, Budapest) – The monument created as a memorial to the 1000th anniversary of the Hungarian settlement in the Carpathian Basin. It is a clearly defined work of art in the Heroes' Square (Hősök tere) of Budapest near the City Park. Fourteen renowned figures of Hungarian history found their place in this composition, redesigned on several occasions. In the middle, the spirit of victory personified by Archangel Gabriel, stands on top of a 36-meter tall Corinthian column, designed by architect Albert Schikédanz. The Monument is a semicircular construction, 85 meters wide, 25 meters deep, and 13 meters high; the span of the two wings is 20 meters. Between the pillars stand 14 statues of Kings and Princes, 7 on the left and 7 on the right. On the pedestal under the open niches in which the statues stand are reliefs with inscriptions, illustrating historical events from the life of the person depicted by the statue above, or from that period of history. The statues are: King István I (St. Stephen); King László I (St Ladislav); King Kálmán (Coloman Beauclerc; Könyves Kálmán); King András II (Andrew); King Béla IV; King Károly Róbert (Charles Robert); King Lajos I (Louis the Great); János (John) Hunyadi; King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus); Prince István (Stephen) Bocskai; Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen; Prince Imre (Emeric) Thököly; Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, and Lajos (Louis) Kossuth (the Governor). There are two groups of statues on either side above the rows of pillars. The statue created by György (George) Zala won a Grand-Prix at the 1900 Paris World Exhibition. The bronze archangel is nearly 5 meters high, with extended wings holding up the Hungarian crown with one hand, a double cross in the other. The statues of Khagan Árpád and the other conquering tribal leaders on horseback stand around the pedestal of the column. The original inscription on the National Heroes' Memorial (Nemzeti Hősi Emlékmű) was: “For the 1000-year old borders” – meaning the historical borders of Hungary within the Carpathian Basin. It was removed after 1945. It was replaced in 1956, and renamed: Hungarian Heroes' Memorial, designed by Béla Gebhardt, decorated with a laurel branch. Its capital bears the inscription: In memory of the heroes who sacrificed their lives for the freedom of our people and independence of our nation. – B: 1230, 1442, T: 1442, 7456.→István I, King; László I, King; Kálmán, King; András II, King; Béla IV, King; Károly, Róbert, King; Lajos I. Miller, Albert (Tapiószele, 6 January 1818 - Leoben, Austria, 1898) – Engineer, inventor. He taught at the Selmezbánya Academy (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia) until the demise of the Hungarian War of Independence from Habsburg rule (1848-1849), then at the Leoben Academy. He invented the Polar and Orthogonal bar Planimeter as well as the Compensating Polar Planimeter in 1855. He was also the first to describe and write down the concept of a globular planimeter. – B: 0883, 1731, T: 7456.

Millner, Tivadar (Pécs, 7 March 1899 - Budapest, 27 October 1988) – Chemical engineer. In 1923 he received his Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic, and in 1948 his Ph.D. From 1924 to 1958 he was a member of the engineering staff of the Tungstam Company. From 1958 until his retirement, he was Deputy Director in the Technical Physical Research Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and later, scientific counselor. He was appointed a titular professor at the Miskolc Heavy Industrial University. He was granted a number of patents. On the basis of one of his patents, wolfram filaments are used worldwide. He is particularly appreciated for the solution of the important basic problems of the wolfram filament and for the translating of the solution into practice. He published nearly 100 scientific papers, mainly in journals abroad. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1954, ordinary 1961). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1954), the State Prize in 1970, and the Plaque of the International Union of Powder Metallurgy in 1981. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Milotay, István (Stephen) (Nyírbátor, 3 May 1883 - Rheineck, Switzerland, 10 February 1963) – Journalist, politician. He read Law at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and obtained a PhD. For a short while, he worked for the administration of County Szabolcs, later became a journalist. From 1907 he worked for the newspaper, Budapest News (Budapesti Hírek), edited by Jenő (Eugene) Rákosi. From 1913 he edited the paper New Generation (Új Nemzedék). After the collapse of the Council (Soviet) Republic (Tanácsköztársaság) on 1 August 1919, he fought for the fulfillment of the demands of the Christian middle-class and requested the introduction of a Numerus Clausus to limit the number of Jewish university students. As Editor for the New Hungarians (Új Magyarorság), he fought against the consolidation policy of István (Stephen) Bethlen's government. In 1920 he was a representative in the National Assembly and, in agreement with Prime Minister Gyula (Julius) Gömbös, he started a new government newspaper, the New Hungarians (Új Magyarorság). From 1933 he was Member of Parliament again on various platforms. Later he became a supporter of Prime Minister Béla Imrédy. After the Arrow Party's putsch on 15 October 1944, he remained a member of the National Alliance of Legislators (Törvényhozók Országos Szövetsége). Ahead of the Soviet occupying army, he moved to Austria, Germany and later to Latin America. Finally, he settled in Switzerland at the end of 1950s. Many of his articles were collected and published. He is regarded as one of the leading journalists of the 20th century in Hungary. His works include In the Shadow of Independence (A függetlenség árnyékában); The Unknown Hungary (Az ismeretlen Magyarország); Toward a New World, vols. i,ii (Új világ felé, I,II) (1940), and Popular Crises, Popular Hungary (Népi válság, népi Magyarország) (1944). – B: 0883, 1257, 1672, T: 7103.→Rákosi, Jenő; Gömbös, Gyula; Imrédy, Béla.

Mindszenty, József (Joseph) (Pehm) (Csehimindszent, 29 March 1892 - Vienna, 6 May 1975) – Archbishop of Esztergom, Prince-Primate of Hungary, Cardinal. He was born into a peasant family. He attended the Premonstratensian High School in Szombathely and, after graduation he entered the Szombathely Seminary in 1911, and was ordained in 1915. He taught religion in Zalaegerszeg in 1917, and was arrested on 9 February 1919 during the Revolution following World War I, but was later released. In October 1919 he became Parish Priest in Zalaegerszeg. In 1921 he was appointed Archdeacon; and in 1924 he became the titular Abbot of Pornó (Pornóapáti). In 1927 he was the Episcopal representative of County Zala. In 1940 Prime Minister Count Pál (Paul) Teleki asked him to organize the National Political Service in Transdanubia (Dunántúl), to combat the growing Nazi influence among the ethnic Germans in Hungary. The Pope appointed him Bishop of Veszprém on 4 March 1944. On 31 October 1944, the bishops sent a memorandum to Prime Minister Ferenc (Francis) Szálasi calling for an end to the hostilities. On 27 November, Mindszenty and several seminary students were arrested and taken to Sopronkőhida; they were set free by the Soviet forces. On 5 September, Pope Pius XII appointed him Archbishop of Esztergom and Prince-Primate of Hungary. He became Cardinal in Rome on 18 February 1946. Mindszenty was uncompromising to the mounting Stalinist influence in the country. Following a press campaign against him, the Secret Police (ÁVO) arrested him on 26 December 1948. He was severely tortured and, on 8 February 1949, was sentenced to life imprisonment, a sentence that was condemned by the UN General Assembly. Due to his declining health he was under house arrest from 17 July 1955 in Püspökszentlászló, and later in Felsőpetény. During the 1956 Revolution, János Horváth, President of the State Office for Church Affairs (Állami Egyházügyi Hivatal – ÁEH) visited him on 29 October, and wanted to take him to Budapest or Esztergom – but to no avail. On the following day the ÁVO freed him. The same night, a detachment of officers of the Rétság armored regiment took him to their barracks. On 31 October they took him to the Archbishop's Palace in Buda. On 1 November he received a large number of Hungarian and foreign visitors and issued a press statement. Zoltán Tildy and Pál (Paul) Maléter also visited him on behalf of the Government. On the evening of 3 November Mindszenty addressed the nation on the radio. In his speech, he emphasized the need to restore peace in the country and to establish a just society based on a multi-party system. At the same time, he called upon the “successors of the defeated system” to call the guilty to account through impartial courts, to restore freedom of worship and to restore the Catholic Church to “institutions and societies”. In view of the intervention of the “Russian Empire”, he called the events a Liberation Struggle not a Revolution. At dawn on 4 November, when the second Soviet military intervention occurred, Mindszenty went to the Parliament at Tildy's request and then fled to asylum to the United States Embassy. He left the Embassy and Hungary under an agreement between the Hungarian state, the US government and the Vatican on 28 September 1971. Pope Paul VI received Mindszenty who moved into the Pázmáneum, a Hungarian seminary in Vienna. His main task was to enhance the morality of the Hungarian community worldwide and to travel abroad. On 1 November 1973, Pope Paul VI called upon Mindszenty to persuade him to offer his resignation in the interests of the Vatican's opening toward the Communist countries. Mindszenty was not prepared to do this, hence the Pope declared the Archbishopric of Esztergom vacant on 8 November. Mindszenty died on 6 May 1975 in Vienna, and was buried in the Basilica of Mariacell, Austria. His remains were reburied in the crypt of the Esztergom Basilica on 4 May 1991. His works include The Mother (Az édesanya) (1916); Life and Age of Márton Bíró Padányi, Bishop of Veszprém (Padányi Bíró Márton veszprémi püspök élete és kora) (1934); Who and what is a Child? (Ki és mi a gyermek?) (1942); Justice and Love (Igazság és szeretet), selected sermons (1956); My Memories (Emlékirataim) (1974), and Daily Notes. American Embassy 1956-1971 (Napi jegyzetek. Amerikai követség 1956-1971), edited by Emil Csonka (1979). There is a Museum in Esztergom and numerous institutions, societies, places and streets that bear his name. – B: 0883, 1031, 1230, 1257, 1684, T: 1684, 7103. → Teleki, Count Pál; Maléter, Pál; Tildy, Zoltán; Mindszenty Trial; State Office of Church Affairs;

Mindszenty Trial – From 1945 on, with the backing of the Soviet Union that had occupied Hungary since 1945, the Hungarian Communist Party began the oppression of churches. It began with the Roman Catholic Church, the largest in the country. At first the Communist Party used the politics of division, the “salami-tactics”; but this policy failed, due the united front of the members of the Church. The Communists then rejected the proposals made by the Roman Catholic administration in 1947-1948, for cooperation between State and Church, and proceeded to nationalize the Church's schools, prohibit all religious associations, and confiscate all their properties. An intense press campaign, full of false accusations, preceded these actions and the arrests of some religious leaders. Cardinal József Mindszenty in his Pastoral Letter of 18 November 1948, rejected all the accusations voiced against him in the press and stated his support of those, who suffered persecution and torture due to their faith.

On 19 November 1948, in Esztergom the AVH (AVH – Államvédelmi Hatóság – State Security Police) arrested Rev. Dr. András (Andrew) Zakar, secretary to the Cardinal, and interrogated him under torture for 4 days in the infamous AVH building on 60 Andrassy Street, Budapest. On 23 December they took the extremely tortured Zakar back to Esztergom, to the Cardinal's palace to show what they could do to anyone who fell into their hands. József Mindszenty prepared for his arrest and the same day gave a short written statement to the senior Bishop of Kalocsa that was also transmitted to the West: “I have not participated in any conspiracy. I will not resign my post. I have nothing to confess and I do not sign any confessions. If I should do this in the future, it would be the consequence of the inherent weakness of the human body and I hereby declare it to be invalid”. On 25 December 1948 in Esztergom, the Cardinal was arrested without a written order and taken into custody.

For thirty-eight days he was interrogated in the Soviet way. He was given mind-altering drugs in his food, provided by the Soviets, that temporarily paralyzed his will.

His public show trial was held between 3 and 8 February 1949. The charges were: organizing a conspiracy, treason and black market deals in foreign currency. During the trial he confessed to all these unfounded and impossible charges. The “incriminating documents” were forged by the AVH as the two graphologists confirmed, who prepared the documents and later escaped to the West, confirmed. The sentences were: József Mindszenty life imprisonment; Jusztin (Justin) Baranyai 15 years; András Zakar 6 years; Prince Pál (Paul) Eszterházy 15 years; Miklós (Nicholas) Nagy life imprisonment, and László (Ladislav) Tóth 10 years. In addition there were several other accused, sentenced to various prison terms; among them Assistant Bishop Zoltán Meszlényi, the Cardinal’s Deputy, and Gyula (Julius) Harza, Superintendent of Religious Education, who died in prison.

The Mindszenty trial shocked the civilized world. It was obvious that there was no legal basis for the Cardinal’s arrest. There was no conspiracy and no treason. The confessions were made under torture, the charges were false, the whole case was a typical Communist show trial and the sentences were absurd. – B: 1376, 1685, 1020, T: 7665.→Mindszenty, József; State Security Police; Zakar, András.

Mine Shaft Plumb-Line Mirror – An instrument known in foreign literature as the “Cséti mirror” and used in the construction and safety checks of mine work, invented by Ottó Cséti, mining engineer (1836-1906). – B: 1226, T: 7674.→Cséti, Ottó.

Mine Trolley, Hungarian – Transporting medium, formerly used in mines for carrying the extracted material, where the diameter of the back-wheels were greater than that of the front-wheels and the center of gravity of the loaded trolley was on the hind wheels. As a consequence it was easy to stand the trolley on its hind wheels and in that position it was easy to turn it in any direction. – B: 1078, T: 7456.

Mineral Resources in Hungary – Hungary that is the truncated Hungary since the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), is relatively poor in mineral resources. Among the ore-deposits of magmatic and hydrothermal origin, the only important ones are the copper-ores with some gold, the lead-zinc-ores of Gyöngyösoroszi, and the iron-ore of Rudabánya. Of the ores of sedimentary origin, the bauxite, formed during the Cretaceous Period, is important, even on a world-scale; present-time Hungary is the second-largest producer of bauxite in Europe. Bituminous coal only occurs in the Mecsek Mountains of southern Transdanubia (Dunántúl), but brown coal is mined in a number of other areas. Of the petroleum and natural gas reserves, the oil fields of Zala County in the west are important; more recently petroleum and natural gas wells have also been developed on the Great Hungarian Plain by means of hundreds of deep-drillings. Uranium ore was mined until the beginning of 1990s in the Mecsek Mountains. Other exploitable minerals include manganese ore, dolomite, gypsum, talc, barytes, fluorite, pumice, perlite, trass, bentonite, kaoline, kaolin, diatomaceous earth and earthen quartz. In mineral waters and medicinal waters, even present-time truncated Hungary is one of the richest in Europe. About 500 mineral springs have been registered. – B: 0883, 1046, T: 7456.

Mining towns – In Hungary there were many different methods of mining already in the time of the House of Árpád (896-1301). In the beginning, the King distributed the mining rights and he also worked them. Later, the landowners, who owned the rights, worked the mines. The mining cities grew out of the mining camps, but were permitted to form only if they had an important mining output. If the mining output was reduced, the respectability of the town also diminished, or it even ceased being a mining town. The free towns belonged to Kings, bishops and to landowners; their significance changed only in 1863. Well known were the seven mining towns in Upper Hungary: Bakabánya, Bélabánya, Besztercebánya, Körmöcbánya, Libetbánya, Selmecebánya and Újháza (Pukanec, Banská Belá, Banská Bystrica, Kremnica, Ľubietová, Banská Štiavnica respectively, now in Slovakia). The salt mine towns of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), Dés, Torda, and Parajd etc. made up a separate group. - B: 0942, T: 7668.

Mini soccer – A version of soccer played on a smaller field, unlike the game of indoor soccer. The teams consist of eight players a side, and there is no goalkeeper. The size of the playing field is usually 35-20 m, the height of the goal standards is 1 m and its width is 2.5 m. The playing time is 4x13 minutes, and the rules are similar to the game of soccer. Endre (Andrew) Gaál introduced the game in 1963. – B: 1153, T: 3269.

Minstrels (Igric) – Hungarians had a rich, national minstrel culture. They were called igric, regős (bard, gleeman). They were jokesters and played on musical instruments. The name “minstrel” was first mentioned in the 13th century. There were several settlements in medieval times called Igric or Igrici, even today there is still a village bearing this name. They were storytellers accompanied by music or they sang the stories. Their musical instruments differed from those of the violinists and lute players. They were part of the royal courts from the time of the Árpád Dynasty (896-1301), although King István I (St. Stephen) (997-1038) persecuted them for preserving the old pagan customs.

Hungarian historians from the 11th century to the beginning of the 13th century drew their information from these minstrel songs, recording the events preceding and following the period of the settlement of the Carpathian Basin, and from the legendary songs of the Kings’ era. Such is the Hun-Szekler-Hungarian connection that became the colorful frame of these epic songs. From the 14th century, lute players, pipers and fiddlers (kobzos, sípos, hegedűs) replaced the minstrels in the royal courts and in aristocratic households, and the minstrels became merry makers and entertainers. Their importance came somewhat to the forefront again during the Renaissance era, as singing pages. In the 16th century, György (George) Szondi’s household had two certified singing pages. The historical song literature of the 16th century is the direct descendant of the minstrel tradition. In the 17th century, they were only rarely mentioned in Hungarian aristocratic households. – B: 0942, 1078, 1134, 0037, T: 3240.→Regös.

Mirage – On very hot summer days when the air is still and peaceful on the plains or over a large water surface this atmospheric light phenomenon can be observed. The hot air mass reverses the image of tall objects in the far distance. The necessary condition for a mirage is that the air temperature right at the bottom level should increase at least one degree per every meter toward the higher strata. In 1781, Tóbiás (Tobias) Gruber provided the first scientific explanation of this phenomenon. – B: 1134, 1153, T: 3233.

Miska, János (John) (Nyírbéltek, 20 January 1932 - ) – Author, editor, bibliographer, librarian, literary translator. He moved to Canada in 1957. He studied at the University of Budapest, at McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario (B.A.), (1961) and the University of Toronto Library School, where he obtained a B.LSc. (1962). He was an Engineering Librarian at the University of Manitoba (1962-1966); Head of Acquisitions at Agriculture Canada's Libraries (1967-1972); Chief Librarian and Area Coordinator in Alberta (1972-1983), and Regional Director of Central Canada (1983-1991). Following his retirement in 1992, he moved to Victoria and was appointed Editor-in-Chief of the monthly journal Tárogató, the official publication of the Hungarian Cultural Society of Greater Vancouver, which he edited between 1994 and 1998. He is Founding President of the Hungarian-Canadian Authors' Association (1966), and Editor for its Anthology Series: three volumes in Hungarian (1968-1972) and two in English (1974, 1989). He compiled 20 book-length bibliographies on the sciences and the humanities, the latter include Canadian Studies on Hungarians (1987), and Ethnic and Native Canadian Literature (1990). In addition to more than 200 papers, he has published the following books: A Mug of Milk (Egy bögre tej), short stories (1969); On our Own Homestead (A magunk portáján), essays (1974); From Canada with Love (Kanadából szeretettel), essays (1989); Literature of Hungarian-Canadians, essays (1991); Mostly about Ourselves (Többnyire magunkról), essays (1996); In our Footprints (Lábunk nyomában), essays and memoirs (1997), and Blessed Harbours (ed) (Áldott kikötők), an anthology of 35 Canadian Hungarian authors (2002). He received several grants and awards, including the Queen's Jubilee Silver Medal (1977), an Alberta Achievement Award for Excellence in Literature (1978), and a silver and gold medal for his books of essays from the Árpád Academy, Cleveland, OH, USA. Perhaps the highest honor he received was in 2004, when he was inducted into the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 2005 his hometown named him an Honorary Citizen. – B: 0893, 1672, T: 4342.→Shawm; Canadian Hungarian Literature.

Miskócz Clan – One of the grass-roots clans of the County Borsod. Its first known member, Jákó, was Lord Lieutenant of County Borsod during the time of King Kálmán (Coloman) (109-1116). In 1194, a member of this clan, Domonkos (Dominic) Bán, was considered as King Béla III's (1172-1196) blood relative. Domonkos established a monastery at Kéthely. His son, Bors, was Lord Lieutenant of the County Borsod at the beginning of the rule of King Béla IV rule (1235-1270). Members of this clan also showed great valor on the battlefield. – B: 1078, T: 7676.

Miskolc Codex Fragment – A Hungarian language relic from 1525, originally part of the Vitkovics Codex, published and annotated by György (George) Volf, in the 13th volume of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences' linguistic records. – B: 0942, T: 3240.→Codex Literature.

Miskolczi, László (Ladislav) (Hajdúszoboszló, 16 October 1923 - Budapest, 7 July 1988) – Painter. While doing his secondary studies in the Reformed College of Debrecen, his teacher, G. Kálmán (Coloman) Szabó, noticed his talent. In 1949 he obtained a diploma from the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest. István (Stephen) Szőnyi was his master and he worked for him on a scholarship later, as a demonstrator. From 1949 he appeared regularly in exhibitions. For a while he worked as an engineering draftsman, and from 1952 until his retirement (1983) he taught at the Special High School of Art and Industrial Art. Between 1956 and 1959 he was on a Derkovits scholarship. His painting, Morning Atmosphere (Reggeli hangulat) won the silver medal at the World Youth Meeting of Moscow (1957). In 1982 he won first prize for his portrait of Zoltán Kodály at the Debrecen Exhibition. For his works, presented at the Autumn Exhibition of Hódmezővásárhely, he received the first prize posthumously. His lyric atmospheric paintings reflect the traditions of the post-Nagybánya School. He was influenced by the art of Aurél Bernáth and László (Ladislav) Mednyánszky. Thorough drawing design, compositional ability and large color spots characterize his pictures. His landscapes express the love and respect for his birthplace and its people, interwoven with childhood memories. He also painted a number of portraits: of Béla Bartók, Zoltán Kodály, László (Ladislav) Németh, and Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi. He regularly exhibited in Hungary and abroad, at the Hatvan Gallery, Debrecen Summer Show, and the Biennial Show of Venice, also in Beijing, Berlin, Brussels, Cairo, Moscow, Prague and Warsaw. His one-man shows in Budapest were presented at the Adolf Fényes Hall (1956, 1961), the Ernst Museum (1973), and at the István (Stephen) Csók Gallery (1982). Some of his paintings are at the Hungarian National Gallery, including the Morning Atmosphere, Winter, Homeward, Sentry, Demonstrators, and Daydreamers; others are at the Ferenc (Francis) Móra Museum of Szeged, the Déri Museum of Debrecen, and in private collections. He received the Munkácsy Prize twice (1963, 1974). – B: 0883, 1815, T: 7456. → Mednyánszky, Baron László; Bernáth, Aurél.

Miskolczy, Dezső (Desider) (Baja, 12 August 1894 - Budapest, 31 December 1978) – Physician, neurologist. His Medical Degree is from the University of Budapest (1919). Between 1921 and 1926 he was a demonstrator at the Institute of Braintissue Studies of the University. From 1930 to 1935 he was Associate Professor of Psychiatry at the Medical Faculty of the University of Szeged, and was a professor there from 1935 until 1940. In the period of 1940-1944 (when northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award), he was Professor of Psychiatry at the Medical Faculty of Kolozsvár University (now Cluj Napoca, Romania), and Director of a local clinic. In 1944-1945 he served as Vice-Chancellor of the University. After World War II, when the Paris Peace Treaty (1947) returned Northern Transylvania to Romania, he moved to Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania) and was Professor of Psychiatry at the Medical Faculty of the University of Marosvásárhely from 1945 to 1964. He also headed the local Research Institute of the Romanian Academy of Sciences (1955-1964). From 1964 until his retirement in 1969, he was a professor at the University of Budapest and Director of the Psychiatric Research Institute. He was a member of numerous European scientific bodies and societies, among them the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1939, ordinary 1946, 1958), the Leopold Natural Science Academy, Halle, Germany (1938), and the Romanian Academy of Sciences, (ordinary 1955). His main fields of research were neuro-psychiatry and neuro-pathology. He studied the inherited diseases of the nervous system and the pathological histology of schizophrenia. He was first to apply the experimental method of the cellular degeneration of the synopsis for recognizing the fiber connections, synopsis and cell-system of the cerebellum. He pioneered the healing of modern neurotic and mental illnesses. His works include Inheritable Mental Disorders at a More Advanced Age (A haladottabb kor öröklődő elmebetegségei) (1934); Histopathology des Neurons (1938); Psychiatry (Elmekórtan) co-authored (1953), and Károly Schaffer (Schaffer Károly) (1973). He received the State Prize in 1973. – B: 1730, 1031, T: 7456. → Vienna Award II.

Misoga, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 16 June 1895 - Budapest, 8 April 1969) – Actor. He studied in the Acting School of Szidi Rákosi in Budapest. He stepped on stage first at the Theater of Nagyvárad (now Carei in Romania) in 1919. Between 1922 and 1928 he was with the Company of Mihály (Michael) Fekete, playing in Transylvanian theaters. From 1929 to 1931 he was a member of the Csokonai Theater of Debrecen; from 1931 to 1932 of the Theater of Szeged and, from 1932 to 1934 of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc. From 1934 to 1944 he played at the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest, and he was its Artistic Director between 1940 and 1944. He was a guest artist at the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház) in 1935, at the Royal and Municipal (Városi) Theaters in 1939, and at the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház) in 1944 and 1945. From 1945 he appeared at a number of theaters in Budapest. He also performed at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) (1952-1958), and the Petőfi Theater (1958), Budapest. From 1957 to 1966 he was member of the Gaiety Stage (Vidám Színpad), Budapest. He began his career as a comic dancer and, with his excellent caricaturing ability and humor he became a popular artist of the cabaret genre. His roles include Basil in Lehár's Count of Luxemburg (Luxemburg grófja); Zsupán in J. Strauss Jr's The Gipsy Baron (A cigánybáró), and Rosenkrantz in Shakespeare's Hamlet. From 1938, he appeared in more than 120 feature films sometimes in minor roles, including Black Diamonds (Fekete gyémántok) (1938); Men on the Mountains (Emberek a havason) (1942); Life-Sign (Életjel) (1954); Merry-Go-Round (Körhinta) (1955); Yesterday (Tegnap) (1959); The Suitable Man (A megfelelő ember) (1960); Two Half-times in Hell (Két félidő a pokolban) (1962), and Sweet and Bitter (Édes és keserű) (1966). He frequently performed on the Hungarian Radio. – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456.

Misztótfalusi Kis, Miklós (Nicholas) (Misztótfalusi) (Alsómisztótfalu, now Teușești, Romania, 1650 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 20 March, 1702) – Typesetter, letter-cutter, printer. He studied Philosophy and Reformed Theology at the Nagyenyed College in Transylvania (now Aiud in Romania). From 1677-1680 he was a schoolmaster in Fogaras (now Făgăraș, Romania). In 1680, on behalf of Bishop Mihály (Michael) Tófeus, he went to Holland to supervise the orthography of the Bible in the Hungarian language just being printed there, and at the same time to continue his studies. However, instead of theology, he became interested in the printing trade and in Amsterdam he learnt the trade of lettercutting and printing to an unusually high, artistic degree. Because of the war-time situation he almost completely broke connection with the Transylvanian Reformed Church, made himself independent, and for a number of years he worked there as a printer, receiving orders from every part of Europe. He cut and engraved letters also in Greek, Armenian, and Hebrew, and prepared the letters of the first Georgian (Grusian) printed alphabet. The antique letters, prepared by him, but for a long time attributed to Anton Janson, are still in use today.

The incomes he earned with the lettercutting he devoted to the publication of the Bible in Hungarian. In the course of publishing he corrected numerous mistakes and meaningless expressions in the translated text and in addition he introduced innovations (modernizations) in spelling, like setting up type in: ‘c’ for ‘cz’, ‘f’ for ph and ‘i’ for ‘y’. At his “own expense and letters” in small, easily manageable form he had the Károli Bible, as well as the Psalms translated by Albert Szenczi Molnár re-printed, adding to these even a new edition of the New Testament.

In 1689 he gave up his Amsterdam workshop and returned to Hungary to directly serve the cause of Hungarian culture in Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania). He took on himself the management of the printing shop of the Reformed Church at Kolozsvár, which, after various petty problems, only opened in 1693. He had a great variety of works printed and published at his own expense: works of history, useful informations, calendars, volumes of verses, etc. In ten years he had about a hundred works published in Hungarian and Latin, carefully edited, with the highest standard of the typographic taste of his times.

His selfless work was not appreciated and recognized; instead, he was facing only intrigues and slanders. In fact, the self-respecting authors of manuscripts, who were Reformed ministers and schoolteachers, did not tolerate his corrections in their texts. The orthodox Reformed Church leadership laid charges against him, accusing him with text-falsification, falsifying the Holy Scripture by his textual-philological corrections, and that his aim was to discredit the ecclesiastical and secular leadership of the country. He tried to defend himself in his work Apologia Bibliorum in 1697; then, he answered the accusations against him in his Justification of his Own Person (Maga személyének Mentsége) in 1698. Both of his writings are powerful indictment against the petty ecclesiastical and secular leaders opposing any progress or modernization. Because of his two books he was summoned to a church council, where he was forced to publicly apologize for, and recant the contents of his writings. Copies of his books were then burnt.

Tótfalusi Kis was one of the great pioneers of Hungarian culture. The denigration of his completely misunderstood modernizing work and his character assassination ruined his health and spirit and died as a broken man at the age of 52. Ferenc (Francis) Páriz Pápai wrote his first biography (in verse form), Lajos (Louis) Dézsi published a more recent work on him entitled: Misztótfalusi Kis Miklós (1898). – B: 1078, 0883, 1020, T: 7456. → Szenczi Molnár, Albert; Pápai Páriz, Ferenc; Felvinczi, György; Comenius, Ámos János; Balassi, Bálint; Károli Bible; Bible in Hungarian.

Misztrál Ensemble – A group of musicians, formed in 1997 with the aim of setting to music the little-known verses of poets of Hungary and abroad in an original and individual tone. In their songs, they blend the history, tradition and the unusual world of original Hungarian songs and modern songs. Members of the ensemble are: Sámuel Csóka, sound engineer and technician; Miklós Heinczinger, flute, clarinet and vocals; Mihály Hoppál, viola and double bass; Gábor Pusztai, percussion; Tamás Tobisz Tinelli, guitars and vocals; and Máté Török cello, guitar and mandolin, lute and song. They annually organize the Legend-walking Misztrál Festival at Nagymaros (Nagymarosi Regejáró Misztrál Fesztivál) in the Danube Bend, North of Budapest. The Mistrals, criss-crossing the country, endeavor to engage with the public and share with them the valuable literary-musical culture, by means of concerts, stage appearances and literary hours. The Legend-walking Misztral Artistic Club network serves the same purpose: they are active in a number of towns in Hungary. In the club evenings, along with the regularly appearing Mistral Ensemble, numerous well-known figures of the musical life of Hungary also appear, thereby enriching the program. Up to the present, acting in response to invitations from a number of countries abroad, they have appeared in the Felvidék (Northern) area of Hungary (now Slovakia), Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), Carpathian-Ukraine, Poland, Estonia, Finland, Italy and the USA. Their CDs include Mezőn széllel járók (2004) and Megkopott harangszó (2006). They are recipients of the Béla Bartók Prize (2006) and the Bálint Balassi Memorial Medal (2008). – B: 2051, T: 7456.

Mitrovics, Gyula (Julius) (Sárospatak, 29 June 1871 - Stuttgart, 17 March 1965) – Esthete, education specialist. He studied at Sárospatak, at the University of Budapest, and the Universities of Vienna and Berlin (1890-1891), finishing with a Ph.D. in Arts (Esthetics, History of Art and Hungarian Literature). From 1893 he taught at the high school of Sárospatak; from 1904 he was Principal of the girls' high school of Miskolc; from 1909 he lectured at the Reformed College of Debrecen, and from 1914 worked there as Head Librarian. From 1918 he was Professor of Education and, in 1940 and 1941 Vice-Chancellor at the University of Debrecen. He retired in 1941, and moved to Budapest. In 1960, he settled in Stuttgart. He edited the Booklets on Esthetics (Eszttétikai Füzetek) (1934-1935), and Esthetics Review (Eszttétikai Szemle) (1935-1938). He was President of the Esthetic Society (Eszttétikai Társaság) from 1937 until 1945. He was the student and follower of Zsolt Beöthy, the well-known esthete and literary historian. Naturalism and positivism influenced him with a dose of Kantian theory of values and racial myth-ideologies. Later, he turned away and dealt mainly with the history of ideas. His works include The Philosophical Basis of National Mentality (A nemzeti szellem bölcseleti alapjai) (1910); The Basic Principles of Esthetics (Az aesthetika alapvető elvei) (1916); History of Hungarian Esthetic Literature (A magyar esztétikai irodalom története) (1929), and The Outlines of Education (A neveléstudomány alapvonalai) (1933). – B: 1068, 1257, 0883, T: 7456. → Beöthy, Zsolt.

Mitterpacher, Lajos (Louis) (Bélye, now Bilje, Croatia, 25 August 1734 - Pest, 24 May 1814) – Naturalist, agronomist. In 1749 he joined the Jesuit Order and studied Mathematics and Theology at the University of Vienna. He was Governor of the Theological Seminary Pázmáneum of Vienna, and Tutor to Count Lajos (Louis) Batthyány. After the dissolution of the Jesuit Order by Emperor József II (Joseph) in 1773 he obtained a Ph.D. in Art. In 1777 he became the first professor of the newly established Department of Agronomy at the University of Buda and continued on when it was moved to Pest in 1784. In addition to agronomy, he taught Geography, Technology and Natural Science. His many-sided, rich literary activity was translated into several different languages. In his textbook on agriculture, he campaigned for the modern crop-rotation method of farming. His works include Kurzgefasste Naturgeschichte (1774, 1789); Elementa rei rusticate in usum academiaram regni Hungariae conscripta, vols. i-iii, university textbook (1779-1794; new edition (1816-1817), and also in Italian; Anfangsgründe der physikalischen Astronomie (1781), Technologia oeconomica (1794), Compendium Historiae Naturalis, university textbook (1799), and Summarium tractatus de vitis cultura (1813), published in Latin, German, Slovakian, Serbian, Romanian and Hungarian during the years 1815 to 1823. Several of his works are still in manuscript form at the National Museum, Budapest. – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7456. → Batthyány, Count Lajos; Pázmáneum.

Mizser, Attila (Losonc, now Lucenec, 26 January 1975 - ) – Writer and poet. In 2001, at the University of Miskolc, he received a Degree in Education, majoring in Hungarian Literature. Since 2008, he has been Editor-in-Chief of the journal Palócföld (Palóc-country) in Salgótarján. Mizser is one of the promising young generations of writers-poets. His works include Without Foam (Hab nélkül) poems (2000) and Abduction to an Overcrowded Area (Szöktetés egy zsúfolt területre), novel (2005). – B: 1890, T: 7456.

Mocsár, Gábor (Gabriel) (Nyírmártonfalva-Guta, 24 February 1921 - Debrecen, 3 December 1988) – Writer, journalist. He studied at the Reformed College of Debrecen, and apprenticed in the engine-fitter trade. He worked at Diósgyőr, Budapest and Debrecen. He became a Soviet POW in World War II. On his return from captivity he joined the Communist Party and worked in Debrecen. His writing career started in journalism. His articles and reports appeared in the People's Newspaper (Néplap), Debrecen, and he became Editor-in-Chief for the County Newspaper in Győr-Sopron (1950-1954). He was a member of the editorial board of the newspaper, Free People (Szabad Nép) (1954-1956). After the 1956 Revolution he worked in Debrecen again (1957-1961). He edited the periodical, Lowland (Alföld) from 1962 until his dismissal in 1964. He moved to Szeged and participated in the editorial work for the periodicals, Tisza-Region (Tiszatáj), and the Tisza Region Sower (Tiszatáj-Magvető) until 1986. He edited the anthology Tisza Region (Tiszatáj). In his works, he represented the popular movements of the time, used sociological and fact-finding methods sometimes in humorous-satirical forms. He also resettled in Debrecen and initiated the extension of the series, The Discovery of Hungary (Magyarország fölfedezése). His works include Burning Gold (Égő arany) reports (1970); From the Beginning (Eleitől fogva) autobiography (1986); Hot Days (Forró napok) novel (1956), and Spirit and Centuries (Szellem és századok) essays (1961). He was awarded a number of prizes, among them the Attila József Prize (1968), the Art Prize of Szeged (1970) and the Literary Prize of the Art Foundation (1985). – B: 0878, 0883, 1257, T: 7103.

Mocsáry, Lajos (Louis) (Kurtány, near Fülek, now Filakovo, Slovakia, 26 October 1826 - Andornak, 7 January 1916) – Politician. He completed his university studies in Pest. During the 1848-1849 War of Independence from Habsburg rule, he was abroad at the health resort, Gräfenberg, due to an illness. In 1851 he married the widow of Miklós (Nicholas) Wesselényi. As a member of the Party of Representation (Képviselői Párt) he continued to demand the restoration of the 1848 Acts of Parliament, starting with the 1861 Diet. In 1868 he joined Kálmán (Coloman) Tisza and, as one of the leaders of the Freedom Party, he took a stand against the approval of the 1867 Compromise with the Austria (led by Ferenc Deák). In these years, Mocsáry's policy endeavored to prevent a fusion between Deák's Party and Kálmán Tisza's Party. Adhering to the policies of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, he demanded the equitable and exact carrying out of the 1868

Nationality Law. He represented the idea of a personal union but opposed the policy of Austrian-Hungarian common businesses. He sympathized with the federative aspirations of the Czechs and Poles within the Habsburg Monarchy, and he considered their autonomy necessary for the retention of Hungary's independence. In the 1870 Franco-Prussian war, he supported France, and opposed the Monarchy's expansionist policy toward the Balkans. He opposed the Austrian government's efforts to centralize the public administration. He represented a fair nationality policy that supported the preservation of the unity of Historic Hungary, including the whole Carpathian Basin, and would allow relatively extensive use of various administrative and cultural languages. He took a stand against the Hungarian Government's magyarizing policy, hence by 1888 he was completely isolated in his own party and the impatient, chauvinistic general atmosphere forced him to withdraw from active political life in 1892. In his own Independence Party, he represented the liberal attitude of the medium landowners. His name became symbolic for the appeasement between Hungarians and other nationalities. His works include Nationality (Nemzetiség) (1858); Question of Questions (Kérdések kérdése) (1866), and The Independence Party (A Függetlenségi Párt) (1890) – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Tisza, Count Kálmán; Deák, Ferenc; Kossuth, Lajos.

Mócsy, János (John) (Kalocsa, 30 November 1895 - Budapest, 16 August 1976) – Veterinarian. He obtained his Veterinary Degree from the Veterinary Department of the University of Budapest (1918), and his Ph.D. from the same University (1921). He worked at the Bacteriological Section from 1918 to 1921 and, from 1921, in the Department of Internal Medicine. He studied in the USA on a Rockefeller scholarship in 1926. Two years later (1928), he became an honorary lecturer, from 1935 associate professor and, from 1940 professor, and was Dean of the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine (1949-1950), at the University of Budapest. From 1964 he was a member of the editorial board of the journal, Hungarian Science (Magyar Tudomány). His field of research was Pathology of Domestic Animals, but was also active in bacteriology and internal medicine of domestic animals. He was successful in using contact poison, applied through the mouth, for healing skin diseases among animals. He was also interested in numismatics and was President of the Hungarian Numismatic Society (1970-1973). His collection had some famous Greek and Roman medals and coins. His works include Spezielle Pathologie und Therapie der Haustiere, I-II, with other authors (1938), translated into English, Spanish, Italian, Polish, Russian and Chinese), and Internal Medicine of Veterinary Science vols. i, ii (Állatorvosi belgyógyászat I-II), with R. Manninger (1943). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1941, ordinary 1946) and, from 1954 to 1956, Secretary; from 1967 to 1970 he was President of the Veterinary Committee of the Academy. He received an honorary doctorate from Humboldt University of Berlin. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1952) and the State Prize (1970). Also a János Mócsy Prize was established and his Bust is in Budapest. – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.→Marek, József; Manninger, Rezső.

Mód, Aladár (family name Oszkó) (Krakow, 20 August 1908 - Budapest, 21 November 1973) – Historian, writer. He studied at the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Degree in Latin and Hungarian Literature. From 1932 he was member of the Communist Party (Kommunisták Magyarországi Pártja). Between the two World Wars, he published articles, studies and essays in the leftist media, such as the Thought (Gondolat), People's Word (Népszava), and Free Word (Szabad Szó). Under the pen-name, Aladár Oszkó, he edited the periodical Freely (Szabadon) (1931-1932). In 1932 he was arrested for distributing flyers and was in custody for 4 months. He took part in the fight against Fascism. He was imprisoned in 1941. After his release, he worked for a partisan group in Újpest (a northern suburb of Budapest). After the war, he filled various important positions in the Communist Party. From 1954 until his death he chaired the Department of Scientific Socialism at the University of Budapest. His works include Materialist Ontology (Materialista lételmélet) (1943); Marx und die ungarische Geschichte (in Acta Historica, 1954); 1849 and its Political Heritage (1849 és politikai öröksége) (1949); Marxism and Patriotism (Marxizmus és hazafiság) (1956); Fate and Responsibility (Sors és felelősség) essays (1967), and Nation and Socialist Nation (Nemzet és szocialista nemzet) essays (1974). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7103.

Modern Hungary – After the disastrous battle against the invading Turks at Mohács (1526) Hungary broke into three parts. The middle area was under Ottoman Turkish occupation for 150 years; Northern Hungary or Upland (Felvidék, now in Slovakia) and certain Western parts were in the hands of the Habsburgs; while the Eastern part, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) soon gained semi-independent Principality status. In the meantime the Reformation Movement was fully on the side of progress. Later on, however, its main branches integrated into the existing social and political order and became their defenders. In Hungary, the Habsburg Kingdom and the higher aristocracy supported the emerging Counter-Reformation. Thus all attempts at gaining independence from Habsburg rule appeared in conjunction with religious demands. Frater György (George) Martinuzzi, the creator of the independent Principality of Transylvania, was the first to attempt the unification of the three parts of Hungary; but his attempt failed (1551) due to the Habsburg policy that was directed toward the subjugation of Transylvania. However, the Transylvanian National Assembly enacted the Freedom of Religion at Torda in 1568 – the first in the world. Turkish forces captured several Hungarian cities and some smaller fortresses; only Eger was successful in defeating the Turkish siege in 1552. In 1566 at Szigetvár, Count Miklós (Nicholas) Zrinyi stopped – at the cost of his life – the Turkish army's advance to Vienna. The soldiers of the fortresses, defending the borders of Royal Hungary, came mostly from the lower social classes, including escaped serfs, members of the lesser nobility, who had lost all their possessions in the Turkish wars, and the free peasants, called Hajduk. In the territories occupied by the Turks (called Hódoltság), the numerous taxes, the frequently occurring military campaigns, and the lack of personal and economic security delayed economic development for decades.

The fifteen-year war, between 1591 and 1606, caused serious damage in other parts of the country without achieving lasting results against the Turks. In the end it was the Peace Treaty of Vienna of 1606 that ended the István (Stephen) Bocskai insurrection against the oppressive policies of the Habsburgs and brought peace with the Turks. It granted freedom of religion and also ensured the recognition of Hungary's ancient Constitution and the independence of Transylvania. After the death of Bocskai, the increasing power and activities of the Counter-Reformation and the return of the Habsburgs' tyrannical policies led to renewed armed conflicts under the leadership of the princes of Transylvania. Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen, relying on the internal resources of the Principality, made alliances with the anti-Habsburg Protestant powers but, since he received no material or military support from them, he could only achieve partial results. He prevented the total incorporation of Royal Hungary into the Habsburg Empire, preserved the relative independence of the Principality, and obtained assurances for the preservation of religious freedom, though the latter largely remained on paper. After the Thirty Years War, to compensate for their losses in the West, the Habsburgs were looking for economic advantages in the East.

During the rule of Lipót (Leopold) I (1654-1705) Count Miklós (Nicholas) Zrinyi worked out a political program for the restoration of Hungary's independence. Unfortunately, his outstanding military and political activities were terminated by his sudden death. Even before his death, in 1664, the Viennese Court signed the Peace Treaty of Vasvár with the Turks, thereby nullifying the victory of the battle of Szentgotthárd and the successes of Zrinyi's military campaign. The nationwide anger and resentment, following the unfavorable peace treaty, resulted in an anti-Habsburg organization led by Count Ferenc (Francis) Wesselényi. After its discovery, a revenge of terror and tyranny followed. The fugitives, soon to be called Kuruc, fled to the Partium, an area of Hungary at the western edge of Transylvania, and renewed the struggle against the Habsburgs alone, since they could no longer rely on the Principality of Transylvania (Erdély) that had weakened in the meantime. In 1678, Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly, a Protestant aristocrat fleeing from the danger of Habsburg capture, accepted he leadership of the Kuruc insurrection and, after significant military successes, created the Principality of Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). His further successes were, however, prevented by his Turkish-oriented foreign policy. Most of the Kuruc soldiers joined the Austrian Imperial Army in 1683 that, with Western European support, recaptured the castle of Buda from the Turks in 1686 and, by 1699 expelled the Turks from the territory of Hungary, except for the Temesvár region. The Viennese court considered the liberated parts of Hungary as occupied territory and distributed large areas of it to foreign nobles as a reward for their services to the court. The Viennese Court forced the recognition of the Habsburgs' eternal right to the Hungarian throne, incorporated Transylvania into the Habsburg Empire as a Principality, and again challenged the Protestants' right to practice their religion freely. The Austrian armies wreaked havoc in the country, eventually causing an armed rebellion by the serfs against the Habsburgs and the higherr nobility supporting them.

The failed insurrection in northeastern Hungary in 1697 was a prologue to the wide-scale insurrection by the Kuruc that was to follow, whose leader, Tamás (Thomas) Esze and his companions, succeeded in gaining the support of Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II. The Rákóczi insurrection of 1703-1711 began with the slogan "For the homeland and for freedom!" (Pro patria et libertate!) and, at first, the peasantry and deserting soldiers from the Imperial Army mainly supported it. Later on, the majority of the anti-Habsburg lower nobility and some members of the aristocracy joined them. At the beginning, the insurrection achieved great successes against the Imperial Army and the pro-Habsburg Hungarians (called Labanc) fighting alongside them, and a large section of the country became unified under Rákóczi's rule. However, low level of discipline in the infantry units, the lack of sufficient artillery and the absence of the promised foreign help led to the eventual defeat of the insurrection. In the 1711 Peace Treaty of Szatmár, the landed aristocracy, in order to preserve their privileges, made a compromise deal with the Habsburgs. During the rule of Károly (Charles) III (1711-1740), the colonial imperialist policy of the Habsburgs came to full fruition in Eastern-Central Europe. They considered Hungary to be one of their provinces, and Southern Hungary, as a Military Frontier Area, was taken under Austrian military administration. In the mostly uninhabited areas, liberated from Turkish rule, they created a considerable new land-owning class loyal to Vienna, by granting large land-holdings. The new settlers, especially Germans, were given preferential treatment over Hungarians wishing to re-settle from the central plains. By strengthening the privileges of the Catholics, they limited the religious and political rights of the Protestants. Thus the Carolina Resolution of 1731 barred the Protestants from holding public offices. In the counties, besides the newly endowed foreign landowners, the Hungarian aristocracy, having made a deal in the Peace Treaty of Szatmár, also became willing servants of the Viennese court. The excise duties made Hungary into the provider of raw materials for Austrian industry, thereby significantly hindering the development of industry in Hungary. The increasing exploitation by the state led to peasant rebellions between 1735 and 1753, and between 1763 and 1765.

In the period of enlightened despotism, Empress and Queen Maria Theresa (1740-1780) introduced several progressive reforms in the areas of education and health care. Her son, József II (Joseph) (1780-1790) attempted to put into practice certain ideas of the enlightenment. However, his aggressive policies, aiming at the incorporation of Hungary into the Habsburg Empire, and his program of Germanization, resulted in widespread opposition to and a failure of his policies even before his death. The 1784 Language Decree, regarding the compulsory use of German was actually the main catalyst in the resurgence of the Hungarian language. The first large-scale reform program was designed by Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi, who introduced and implemented many of them himself. The leading members of the opposition, demanding significant socio-economic reforms, united under the leadership of Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey, Miklós (Nicholas) Wesselényi and – later on – Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, whose vision for the social, economic and political transformation of Hungary was fully embraced by the group.

The 1848 Revolution in Paris (February) and in Vienna (March) pushed into focus and sharpened the debate concerning the demanded reforms. The tensions from the long-existing demands for change and the lack of positive response from Vienna erupted in a revolution on 15 March 1848, in Pest as well. Being threatened by the various rebellions and revolutions in the Empire, the Habsburg government was forced to make concessions. On 7 April 1848 King Ferdinand V (1835-1848), appointed the first independent Hungarian ministry, the Battyány Government, and approved the liberation of the serfs that had been passed by the Hungarian Parliament early in April. Immediately after these forced concessions, the Viennese Court began to take counter-measures. On 11 September 1848, Count Josip Jellachich, the newly appointed Croatian Bán (viceroy), relying on the Croatian troops of the Military Frontier, began his attack against the Hungarian insurrection. The national – Honvéd – army, created virtually within days, defeated Jellachich's army on 29 September at Pákozd. From this time on, the national uprising became a War of Independence. During the year, the ethnic minorities were incited by Vienna, while Austrian troops conducted numerous attacks against Hungary. At the end of February 1848, the Honvéd army went on a counter-offensive and, during the course of the glorious spring campaign it expelled the enemy troops from most of the country. On 14 April 1849, the Hungarian Parliament, in its Declaration of Independence, abrogated the right of the House of Habsburg to the Hungarian throne and elected Lajos Kossuth as Governing President. Due to the successes of the Honvéd army, Franz Joseph (Ferenc József), the new Habsburg King, asked for the Russian Czar's help to defeat the Hungarian Revolution. The Russian attack began in mid-June and, in a few months its overwhelming force pushed the Honvéd army back to the line of the River Maros. Seeing the hopelessness of the situation, the Hungarian commander-in-chief, General Arthur Görgey, surrendered to the Russians on 13 August 1849 at Világos. A cruel revenge followed the shameful failure of the Habsburgs, who could only defeat the Hungarian Revolution with Russian assistance. Under Baron Julius Haynau, a merciless military terror followed. The first phase of despotic rule, initiated by Austria, was called the 'Bach Period' after the Austrian Minister of the Interior. The country was divided into districts, controlled by the military and administered by a bureaucracy, under the direction of Vienna. The aim was to incorporate Hungary, both militarily and economically, into the Habsburg Empire. German became the official language, resulting in widespread resistance to the regime, despite the brutal persecution of secret organizations striving for independence. However, by the end of the 1850s, mainly due to failures in Austrian foreign policy, accompanied by military defeats, Habsburg despotism was beginning to weaken. Thus, in 1860, the Habsburg Empire restored Hungary's ancient constitution. However, in 1861, the Hungarian parliament refused to accept the concessions of the "October Diploma" and insisted on the restoration of the laws of 1848, whose major provision, the abolition of serfdom, remained in effect even under the despotic system following 1848. Due to the internal and financial difficulties faced by the Habsburg government and the loss of the war against Prussia and Italy in 1867, the Austrian government made the Compromise Agreement with Hungary.

According to the terms of the Compromise Agreement, the Habsburg Empire was transformed into the dualistic Austro-Hungarian Monarchy with two centers of power and Franz Joseph had himself crowned King of Hungary. Though the Compromise Agreement allowed for a faster pace of economic development, it retained many out-of-date regulations and practices, hindering development, and it failed to solve many social problems that came to the fore in 1848. The foundation of a modern manufacturing industry was laid, but its growth was handicapped by the competition of its stronger Austrian counterpart and the lack of sufficient internal markets. Still, with the economic development of the country, changes for the better did occur in the social sphere as well. However, the international agricultural crisis had a severe effect in Hungary also and led to the mass emigration of impoverished smallholders and renters to the New World, at the turn of the 19-20th centuries.

Because of the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand (Ferenc Ferdinánd), the heir to the throne of Austria-Hungary, on 28 June 1914 in Sarajevo, a month later, on 28 July 1914, the Austrian Foreign Minister, despite the objections of the Hungarian Prime-Minister, István (Stephen) Tisza, declared war on Serbia, thus World War I began. Although the country achieved military successes during the war, by 1918 the people wanted peace. This desire for peace was derailed by the victory of the Russian Socialist Revolution toward a similar revolution in Hungary. The Democratic Revolution in October 1918, led by Count Mihály (Michael) Károlyi, abolished the institution of Kingdom on 16 November 1918 and formed the Hungarian Republic. Power soon slipped from Károlyi's Republic to the Communists returning from Moscow who, on 21 March 1919, declared Hungary to be a Council (Soviet) Republic. This alien form of government could only maintain itself by dictatorial methods and terror that was met with wide resistance among the people. At the end, after 133 days in existence, this regime collapsed at the demands of the Entente Powers.

On 1 March 1920 the Hungarian National Assembly restored the institution of Kingdom in Hungary and named Rear-Admiral Miklós (Nicholas) Horthy as governing Regent of Hungary. The Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon, signed on 4 June 1920 deprived Hungary of two-thirds of her territory, one third of her Hungarian ethnic population and of almost all of her natural resources. When the provisions of the Treaty of Trianon were executed on the western border, an insurrection broke out in Western Hungary against the concessions of certain areas to Austria. The Venetian Agreement, brought about by Italian mediation, resulted in a plebiscite in the disputed area. As a consequence, Sopron and its surroundings remained part of Hungary. With the loss of two-thirds of the country and most of the natural resources, and facing a large reparation payment for the loss of the war, the revival of economic activity faced almost insurmountable obstacles. Further difficulties arose from the Habsburg restoration putsch attempts in 1921. To help re-start the economy, the country received loans from the League of Nations that placed the economic development largely under Western control. The desire to regain the lost territories led to several revisionist movements. The 1929-1930 Depression had a grave effect on Hungary's industrial and agricultural production. One third of the industrial workers became unemployed and, in the mid-1930s, the number of unemployed professionals was over 25,000. After Adolf Hitler came to power, Germany succeeded in regaining some of her lost territories by diplomatic means. To decide on the return of her territories, Hungary asked for a four-power conference (England, France, Germany and Italy); but England and France refused to participate. In 1938, on the basis of the First Vienna Award, Hungary – after bilateral negotiations and mutual agreement with Czechoslovakia – regained the purely Hungarian-inhabited strip from southern Slovakia. Then, when Czechoslovakia fell apart later in 1938, Hungarian troops re-annexed Sub-Carpathia or Ruthenia (Kárpátalja), located in the northeastern border region of Historic Hungary, and Slovakia became an independent state. In 1940, the Second Vienna Award, after bilateral negotiations and an agreement, Romania returned to Hungary the northern parts of Transylvania and the Szekler districts with a large Hungarian population. After Germany attacked Yugoslavia in 1941, it fell apart, with Croatia becoming an independent state. Hungarian troops entered the mostly Hungarian inhabited Baranya Triangle and the Bácska area, because they were harassed by Serb partisans and, at the request of the local population, the region of the River Mura as well. On 27 June 1941, in response to a Russian air attack on the city of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), the circumstances of which continue to remain unclear, Hungary joined in the war against the Soviet Union. Thus Hungary entered World War II on the side of the Axis Powers.

At first, the Hungarian military leadership accepted only a policing role in the areas behind the German lines. However, after the Germans lost the battle of Moscow at the end of 1941, Hitler demanded more participation in the war from Hungary, and the 2nd Hungarian Army was sent out to the front lines along the River Don. Since the army lacked proper heavy weapons and winter clothing, and since the promised modern weaponry never materialized from the Germans, in the January 1943 great Soviet offensive, most of the 200,000 men of the army were killed or captured and only a fraction made it back to Hungary. When the Germans learned of Hungarian plans for a separate peace, they occupied Hungary on 19 March 1944. In October 1944 the Hungarian Government turned to the Allied Powers seeking a separate peace but its request was rejected. At the same time, the organization that planned armed resistance against the Germans was discovered and its leaders were captured and executed. When, after these events, on 15 October, Regent Miklós Horthy sought a separate peace with the Soviets, the Germans forced him to appoint the leader of the Hungarian Nazi Arrow Cross Party, Ferenc (Francis) Szálasi, as the new Prime Minister. Horthy was taken – as a prisoner – to Germany and kept there under guard until the end of the war. Until October 15 1944, the Hungarian Jews were somehow protected, their deportations started only under the new regime. The Soviet army, after heavy battles lasting 6 months, including the siege of Budapest, captured Hungary and remained there as an occupying force for more than 40 years, until 1991. During this time, the so-called “Soviet advisors” controlled in reality the main aspects of the country’s political, economic and cultural life.

After World War II, the Treaty of Paris, on 10 February 1947, while Soviet Military forces kept Hungary under occupation, re-established Hungary’s Trianon borders as they had been in 1938 with some additional losses of Hungarian territory and obliged Hungary to pay 300 million dollars in compensation. On 21 December 1944, in the Soviet-controlled eastern town of Debrecen, the Provisional National Assembly, with the approval of the commander of the Soviet occupation forces, formed a so-called “Provisional National Government”, while, in the larger, German controlled part, a government approved by the Germans was still in power. The new Provisional Government declared war on Germany (though it never entered into an actual state of war) and on 20 January 1945, signed the Moscow Armistice Agreement with the Soviet Union. The Provisional Government initiated a land reform, nationalizing the large land-holdings over 100 acres but leaving the ‘kulak estates’ (well-to-do peasants) intact up to 200 acres. On 1 January 1946 the mines were nationalized, and on 1 February 1946, the Hungarian Republic was declared. Within a three-year plan, a clearing of war ruins and the rebuilding of the country began. At the end of 1946, the largest industrial plants were nationalized. From 1947 began the so-called anti-republican conspiracies that reflected a popular opposition against the newly forming Soviet type regime. In 1947, first the large banks, then industrial enterprises employing more than 100 workers were nationalized. The oppression of the well-to-do peasants (in Communist phraseology: kulaks) followed. Their land was confiscated and, together with their children, they were barred from any but the most menial of occupations. 1948 was called the year of the turning point because in this year – supported by the Soviet troops – the Communists gained overwhelming power in the new Government. About 50 years after the Commune of 1919 the Communists again set up a dictatorship of the proletariat in Hungary. Despite wide opposition, forced collectivization of agriculture followed, including the small land-holdings distributed in the land reform of 1946. On 20 August 1949, Hungary’s New Constitution was ready and the country became a People’s Republic. Municipal governments were also altered to match the Soviet pattern of having a ‘freely elected’ council that – in reality – was appointed by the local Communist Party organization. By the end of 1949, the Communists nationalized all manufacturing enterprises employing more than 10 workers, rental apartments and church schools. They also dissolved all non-Communist oriented organizations or associations.

The first five-year plan was announced in 1950. Its purpose was to lay down the basis of a socialist economic system and, first of all, to push for an accelerated rate of development in heavy industry. After the first year of the five-year plan, grossly overestimating the results and ignoring the country's limited resources, the Communist Party drastically increased production quotas for the plan, resulting in a severe decrease in the standard of living. Though, under the plan, new industries and new industrial cities were developed, the fast rate of development caused serious raw material and energy shortages. The building of housing was neglected and the production of consumer goods was insufficient to supply even the peoples' basic needs. Years after World War II, food ration coupons were introduced and villagers had to go to the cities to get bread. The peasants were obliged to hand in most of their produce to the State at artificially low prices and thus resentment toward the Communist system ran high in the countryside. The grave errors committed in the economic sphere were closely connected to the personality cult that emerged around the person of Mátyás (Matthias) Rákosi, chief secretary of the Hungarian Communist Party. The personality cult not only made possible, but in fact encouraged the violation of legality and the conviction of innocent people on false charges and directly led the country to the 23 October 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight.

Due to the provocative intervention of the organs of the Államvédelmi Hatóság – ÁVH (State Security Police), the peaceful demonstration of 23 October 1956 changed into an armed uprising. The population of the country unanimously supported the participants, mostly university students and young industrial workers. Frightened by the anger of the masses, the Government and the leaders of the Communist Party, essentially the same people, citing the terms of the 1955 Warsaw Agreement, called on the Soviet Union for armed support. The victory of the 1956 Freedom Fight was short-lived (from 23 October to 4 November). The promised western military help did not materialize, consequently, in a few days, the newly invading, overwhelming Soviet tank, artillery and air attacks crushed all significant resistance. The new Government of János (John) Kádár, formed with Soviet backing began the so-called Kádár Period lasting until 1988. In retaliation for the Revolution, the leaders and hundreds of young revolutionaries were executed and thousands deported to Soviet labor camps and some 200,000 Hungarians emigrated to western countries.

Learning from its mistakes, the Government decided to focus on the general economic improvement of the country, when it launched the second three-year plan in 1957. It discontinued the previous system, under which the peasants were obliged to hand over to the state most of their produce at nominal prices, and introduced a market approach by allowing more equitable pricing and even small private plots. This practice was significantly different from the agricultural practices in the Soviet Union at that time. The government, however, re-established the socialist collective farms, spontaneously disbanded under the Revolution, although they continued to function at a loss. Due to her relative prosperity in the Communist world, within about 15 years, Hungary became known as the place of Gulyás Communism. However, since this prosperity was largely due to foreign loans, by the end of the 33-year-long Kádár regime, the country was increasingly under economic pressure by the dangerously mounting foreign debt, totaling some 22 thousand million USD.

In 1989, in the first free election, the Soviet style government system was replaced by a freely elected government with József (Joseph) Antall as Prime Minister. Hungary became a democratic republic, but it was difficult to get rid of the residue of 45 years of Soviet occupation and Communist rule. For some years, the country's economy was still significantly connected to that of the Soviet Union, and following its dissolution, to those of its successor states. Another problem was that a large section of the new middle-class, who grew up and developed their careers under the Communist system, still harbored Communist ideas. This is why, in the 1994 (second) free elections the remnants of the so-called Reform Communists united in the Socialist Party and managed to gain power with Gyula (Julius) Horn as Prime Minister. However, economic difficulties grew steadily. To curb them, the government introduced the so-called 'Bokros Package' that caused further troubles. At the election in 1998, a center-right coalition won, with Viktor Orbán as Prime Minister. They turned around the economy and, with ambitious projects they started to modernize the country. They extended helping hands to 2.7 million ethnic Hungarians in the neighboring states, who had been neglected and badly treated in the previous 45 years. Their number dwindled from 3.2 million at the time of the 1920, Trianon Peace Treaty to 2.7 million. By introducing the so-called 'Status Law', they were declared members of the Hungarian nation, despite separating borders drawn artificially by peace dictates. In the election of 2002, however, the Socialist Party-led coalition returned to power with a slight majority. In the election campaign they promised a better, prosperous life, although it was soon obvious that this could not be achieved. On 1 May 2004 Hungary became a member of the European Union. In the fall of 2004, Prime Minister Péter (Peter) Medgyessy was replaced by Ferenc (Francis) Gyurcsány, and the country sank deeper into national debt. On 5 December 2004, a plebiscite was held and lost on the issue of "dual citizenship" for Hungarians living outside the country.

This caused a deep frustration among the 2.5 million Hungarians living in the detached territories. As the election of 2006 approached, the governing coalition was abundant in promises but, after having won the election, the new Gyurcsány government announced a stern economic policy, with increasing taxation, privatization of hospitals, schools, industries, etc., that resulted in more difficulties, socio-political tension, protests and frustration. On May 26, 2006, in a speech in Balatonöszöd, Gyurcsány admitted that he had lied to the people in order to be re-elected, and the population became increasingly frustrated with the Government and the Prime Minister. The Alliance Free Democrats (Szabad Demokrata Párt – SZDSZ) left the governing coalition on 30 April 2008, and, in March 2009 Gyurcsány declared that he would resign. He left the country in a financial crisis. Gordon Bajnai succeeded Gyurcsány as Prime Minister by. At the 2010 elections a Fidesz-KDNP coalition won with more than 2/3 majority. The 2nd Orbán Government started to rebuild Hungary after three terms of devastating MSZP-SZDSZ reign. – B: 1133, 1020, 7103, T: 7665, 7103.→Hungary, History of; Most of the persons and events have their own entry.

Módis, László (Ladislás) (Szatmárnémeti, now Satu Mare, Romania, 9 December 1903 - Debrecen, 14 April 1972) – Minister of the Reformed Church, church-historian, librarian. He studied at the Theological Faculty of the University of Debrecen (1924-1928) and in Vienna (1929-1930). He read Semitic Philology at the University of Vienna and in Budapest (1931-1932). He obtained a PhD in Old Testament Sciences from the University of Debrecen in 1932. He was Assistant Minister in Debrecen, Vésztő, and Budapest, and again in Debrecen (1927-1935). He also taught courses at the Theological School in Losonc (now Lucěnc, Slovakia) (1929). He taught religion in Debrecen (1935-1945). Between 1945 and 1950 he was an advisor in the Ministry of Culture, Budapest. From 1950 he worked as Deputy Director of the University Library in Debrecen. From 1959 he was Professor of Old Testament Science at the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen and simultaneously from 1961 he was Director of the Great Library and Archives of the College and later Chief-Director. He was also one of the leaders of the National Reformed Collection Board (Református Gyűjteményi Tanács). His work was considerable as a bibliographer, chief contributor and Editor for the periodical, Theological Review (Teológiai Szemle) (1941-1944). He also edited the periodical, Reformed Ministerial Association (Lelklészegetyület) (1936), and the Memorial Books of Sándor (Alexander) Csikesz vols. i-iv (Csikesz Sándor emlékkönyvek I-IV) (1941-1944). His most important work is the Reformed College and Great Church of Debrecen (A debreceni Református Kollégium és Nagytemplom) (1966). – B: 0883, 1617, 1257, T: 7103, 7456.

Moesz, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Körmöcbánya, now Kremnica, Slovakia, 21 October 1873 - Budapest, 8 December 1946) - Botanist, mycologist. During his formative years, his interest centered on Geology and Minerals and he collected plants as well. Later, he started his higher studies at the University of Budapest as an engineering student and eventually took some courses in natural sciences. After university, he worked as a geologist for a while. He obtained his Degree in Education in 1897. He taught in a High School in Brassó (now Braşov Romania) (1899-1906). From 1906 he worked with the Botanical Collections at the National Museum, Budapest. At first, he studied the flora of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), later he was increasingly involved in mycological research. He earned international recognition by working out how to counter fungal diseases in agriculture. He became an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest in 1915. During the Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919, he became Manager of the Botanical Collections but was discharged in 1921, and was reinstated only in 1931. After his retirement in 1934, he continued with his mycological research and published the results with his own illustrations in scientific and popular journals. He fully covered the mycological flora of Hungary. His main work was: Fungal Flora of Hungary (Magyarország gombaflórája), Fungi Hungariae, vols. i-iv (1925-1941). His other works include Gull-nuts of Hungary (Magyarország gubacsai) (1938) (in: Botanical Bulletin (Botanikai Közlemények)); The Fungi of Budapest and its Environs (Budapest és környékének gombái). ibidem (1942). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1945). – B: 0883, 1691, T: 7456.

Móga, János (John) (Boczkó, now Bocicáu, Romania, 1785 - Szászkerked, now Archiud, Romania, 10 November 1861) – Army officer. Early in his career he was an officer in the Imperial Army of Austria. In the summer of 1848, he was appointed Lieutenant-General, acting as Commander of the town of Pest. From September 1848 he was Commander of the Hungarian Honvéd army sent against the invading forces of Jellačić (40,000 men); on 29 September. Móga won the Battle of Pákozd (near Budapest). He pursued the army of the fleeing Jellačić to the Austrian border. He was partly responsible for the defeat by the Hungarian Forces due to his hesitation and delay at the lost Battle of Schwechat on 30 October 1848. He resigned from his rank and active military life on 1 November, and went into seclusion. Following the surrender of the Hungarian Forces to the Russian Army, called in by the desperate Austrian Emperor Francis Joseph I in the Hungarian War of Independence from Austrian rule, Móga was sentenced to a 5-year imprisonment in a fortress. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Arad, Martyrs of.

Mohács Battles – Two significant battles happened at this location in Hungary.

(1) The first one took place on 29 August 1526, and is referred to as the Disaster of Mohács (Mohácsi Vész).

Preliminaries: At the 11 November 1522 Imperial Assembly of the Holy Roman Empire, the Hungarian ambassadors asked for 20,000 foot-soldiers and 4000 cavalry troops to fight against the Turkish menace. They were promised only 4000 footsoldiers; but even this promise went unfulfilled. The 24 April 1523, the Hungarian National Assembly was preoccupied with other matters: laws were enacted about the return of serfs, who escaped during the peasant rebellion led by György (George) Dózsa in 1514; there was discussion about the confiscation of Lutheran properties and their supporters, and the collection and use of taxes. Prior to 10 October 1523, the emissary of the Turkish Sultan was sent to Croatia, promising tax exemptions and security to the Croatian aristocracy's properties, if they would allow the Turkish troops to pass through their territory to the Austrian provinces. At the end of the year, the French King Francis I, in Spanish captivity, sent Croatian aristocrat, János Ferenc (John Francis) Frangepán, on a secret mission to Suleiman I, the "Magnificent", requesting him to attack the Habsburg territories. Frangepán returned in the spring of 1526 with the Sultan's promise to do so. At the meeting of the Assembly of the Holy Roman Empire, which began on 28 July 1526, the Hungarian Royal Chancellor, Tamás (Thomas) Nádasdy, presented the repeated request of the Hungarian King Lajos II (Louis, 1516-1526) for help. On 18 August, he was promised 4000 foot soldiers. Lajos II also requested help from the Holy Roman Emperor Charles V, the English King Henry VIII, the Portuguese King John III, Austrian Archduke Ferdinand, and Pope Clement VII; but no help was forthcoming. Between 26 and 28 July, King Lajos II sent contradictory orders to János (John) Szapolyai, the Transylvanian (Erdély, now in Romania) Voivode, first instructing him to join the main army; then telling him to stay where he was. On 15 August, Szapolyai began to move with the Transylvanian army from Torda toward the royal army camp. On 16 August, at Bata, the military council elected Pál (Paul) Tomori, the Bishop of Kalocsa and Captain-General of Southern Hungary, as Commander-in-Chief.

The Sultan, not intending to wage battle on 29 August, ordered his troops to set up camp. Some of the troops were in the process of encampment, when the Hungarian Army began to take up battle positions. Due to the indecision of the Hungarian Court, János Szapolyai with his 20,000 men missed the main battle altogether. Similarly, the Czech mercenary troops, having reached only Győr, and the Croatian troops of Count Kristóf (Christopher) Frangepán, one of the elected leaders of the Hungarian Army, also failed to reach the battleground in time. Thus, the Turkish army had a threefold numerical advantage over the hastily assembled and poorly trained Hungarian army. In addition, the Hungarian army also lacked a suitable military commander.

The battle: Its location was well chosen by the Turkish military leadership; they controlled every hill in the region and could move their troops behind them without being noticed. They were ready to outflank and even pursue the Hungarians if the opportunity presented itself. The spirited initial attack of the Hungarians was successful but the fire of the 300-piece Turkish artillery halted it. Then the death of the Hungarian commander led to a disorganized withdrawal to the River Danube and the surrounding swampy areas. This withdrawal deteriorated into a chaotic flight and with his 75,000 men the Sultan was victorious. It is now a historically proven fact that the guns that ensured victory were loaned to the Turks by Francis I, “the most Catholic” French King. Of the 25,000 Hungarians, about 21,000 were killed, among them Pál Tomori, the Commander-in-Chief, György (George) Szapolyai, the Chief Magistrate of the County of Szepes, László (Ladislav) Szalkai, Bishop of Esztergom, as well as 5 other bishops, 28 members of the high aristocracy, and another 500 members of the nobility. And as a final blow, King Lajos II drowned on horseback in the Csele Creek as he was trying to flee the battleground. There were also Czech, German and Polish mercenaries among the fallen. The 2000 captives were beheaded on the Sultan’s orders on the day following the battle. Only some of the cavalry managed to escape.

A Historical Memorial Site was established at Mohács on the occasion of the 450th anniversary of the battle on 29 August 1976. The Hungarian National Nature Protection Office declared in 1975 a 7.5 ha (17.5 acres) protected area south of the town of Mohács, the place where the mass graves of the casualties of the Battle of Mohács (29 August 1526) were excavated in 1963.

In Hungarian history, two other disasters of comparable magnitude occurred: the lost battle of Muhi against the invading Mongol-Tartar army on 11 April, 1241, with the consequence of a completely devastated country, the massacre of 2 million Hungarians, half of the population of Hungary. The other was the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate on 4 June 1920, that dismembered Hungary in such a way that 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians fell under foreign domination. It was an unjust collective punishment on the Magyar people, repeated by the Paris Peace Dictate on 10 February, 1947.

(2) The second battle of Mohács took place on 12 August 1687. The combined leadership of Charles, Prince of Lorraine, Prince Miksa (Maximilian) of Bavaria and Prince Louis of Baden and their armies helped the Hungarian army against Vizier Suleiman’s Turkish Army. At first, by pretending a fleeing withdrawal, they induced the Turkish Commander to move his army from its camp around Eszék (now Osijek, Croatia) across the River Dráva toward Mohács. The Grand Vizier followed and set up his camp at Baranyavár, near the location of the 1526 Mohács battle. Then Prince Charles moved the joint Hungarian-German army to Siklós and, on the hillside of Harsány, he finally engaged in battle at a site of his own choosing. The clash of the 50,000-man Hungarian-German army with the 60,000 strong Turkish army ended with the total defeat of the latter. Eight thousand Turks fell, many more drowned in the Dráva River while fleeing, and seven thousand were captured. The full exploitation of this victory, the liberation of Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrade, Serbia) was not achieved, due to the conflict among the leaders. – B: 0942, 1031, 1288, 1686, T: 7665.→Mohács Tragedy; Mohács, Historical Memorial Site of; Lajos II, King; Tomori, Pál; Kanizsai, Dorottya; Szapolyai, Mohács, Historical Memorial Site of – A commemorative site built in 1976, on the 450th anniversary of the fatal battle fought on the 29th of August 1526, near the town of Mohács against the Turkish forces. With the lost battle, a 150-year-long suffering befell upon Hungary in the tragic struggle against Turkish occupation. The memorial bronze gate at the entrance was made by the goldsmith József (Joseph) Pölöskei. The monumental artwork closes in an arch, symbolising the fallen heroes. Its bronze units are held together by 28,000 rivets, indicating the approximate number of fallen soldiers. In the yard of the atrium building there is a fountain, its white stone rose figure symbolizing the country divided into three parts. Along the atrium there is a battle-related historical, war-historical and archeological exhibition. There are five mass-graves in the cemetery-garden; in each of them are the remains of some 400 male corpses. Among the mass-graves there are the statues of King Lajos II (Louis), who drowned in the Csele stream; of the Hungarian Commander Pál (Paul) Tomori; of Dorottya (Dorothea) Kanizsai, who buried the dead; and of Turkish Commander Sultan Sulejman I The Magnificent; there are also many wood-carved statues in memory of the fallen heroes, as well as wooden grave markers (kopjafák) symbolizing horses and weapons. A 10-m high cross was erected for the memory of the fallen Christian soldiers in 1990. The artifacts were created by sculptors József (Joseph) Király, Sándor (Alexander) Kiss, Pál (Paul) Kó, and István (Stephen) Szabó Jr. The designer of the entire memorial site was György (George) Vadász, architect, winner of the Ybl and Kossuth Prizes. – B: 2132, T: 7103. → Lajos II, King; Tomori Pál; Kanizsai, Dorottya; Mohács Battles; Mohács Tragedy.

Mohács Tragedy – On 29 August 1526, in the Battle of Mohács, more than the best of Hungarian military and national leadership was lost: Hungary's independence was also lost for centuries. Though in 1541 the Sultan captured Buda only by a ruse, after the battle of Mohács, there was no national army to oppose the Turks. Only half of the army that uselessly sacrificed itself at Mohács would have been sufficient to defend the capital of the country. After the Turks occupied Buda they burned Pest, and sent an endless stream of ships to Istanbul with the spoils from Hungary. The loss of the battle of Mohács caused Hungary's exclusion from European development for centuries and started hundreds of years of suffering for the Hungarians. After the 150 years of Turkish rule, Hungary's population barely reached 2 million, just half of what was before. For all these adverse effects, Mohács has become the symbol of national tragedy in Hungary. – B: 1686, 1031, T: 7665. → Mohács Battles; Mohács, Historical Memorial Site of.

Mohai Szabó, Béla (Erdély, Transylvania, now in Romania, 1915 - Sao Paulo, Brazil, March 1991) – Reformed Minister in Brazil. Following his matriculation at the Reformed College in Debrecen, he entered the Royal Ludovika Military Academy in Budapest, where he received his commission as Lieutenant. Following World War II, he emigrated to Brazil with his family. In Buenos Aires, Mohai Szabó felt the call of the Church. Concurrently with his daytime employment, over a period of several years, he completed his studies at the Presbyterian Seminary in Campinas. Following his ordination, he became a minister of the Brazilian Hungarian Reformed Church. He was familiar with all aspects of the life of the local Hungarian community. He faithfully visited the elderly at the Church's Care Center and took part in the Ecumenical Movement, spending several years serving the Brazilian Hungarian Lutheran Church. He was an active member of the Diaconia Organization of the Brazilian Christian churches. He also headed the Hungarian Veterans' Association. – B: 0906, T: 7617.→Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy.

Mohás, Livia (Olivia) (Bogács, 17 November 1928 - ) – Writer, psychologist. She studied at the School of Physical Education between 1948 and 1952. From 1952 to 1969, she taught physical education. At the same time, she studied Psychology at the University of Budapest (1965-1968). She worked as an editor (1969-1973), lectured at the Ministry of Culture and Education (1973-1974), and was a correspondent for the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1974, and of the National Educational Institute from 1981. From 1983 she was a freelance writer and a psychologist. Her novels lead us into the world of the past, the dreams and the reveries, the memories and family myths. Her works include Students of the City Outskirts (Peremvárosi diákok) (1972); Fox-hunting (Rókavadászat) novel (1985); Theodora, novel (1995), and The Dancer, the Politician, the Woman (A táncos, a politikus, a nő), essays (1998). Moholy-Nagy, László (Ladislav) (Bácsborsod, 20 July 1895 - Chicago, 24 November 1946) – Painter, photographer, art critic, architect. He studied Law in Budapest and later studied painting. He moved to Vienna after World War I, then to Berlin. He joined the Ma and the Gestaltung groups because of their progressive ideas. He taught at the Bauhaus in Berlin between 1920 and 1923, and worked with W. Gropius and became a renowned representative of the Bauhaus Movement. He painted abstract pictures. He lived in England between 1935 and 1937. Later he moved to the USA, and established the New Bauhaus School in Chicago in 1937. In his writings, he dealt with abstract art and issues of applied art. He composed his works in the constructivism style, such as Bridges (1921); United Construction (1922); Construction (1923); Composition A II (1924), and Floating Form (1945). His idea of non-representational art consists of pure color, texture, light and equilibrium of forms. He was an eminent member of the Bauhaus Movement, and was influential in the development of fine and applied arts in the mid 20th century. – B: 0872, 1934, T: 7103.

Mokry, Sámuel (Monostorszeg, 8 May 1832 - Budapest, 10 June 1909) – Agronomist, Lutheran Pastor. After completing the Lutheran Theological Academy and the Agricultural College of Keszthely, he began to farm in 1864. He went abroad for a number of study trips. In 1867 he became Secretary of the Agricultural Society of County Békés and Editor for its journal Bulletin (Értesítő). After the great drought of 1863, he strove for years to produce biological improvements to the wheat of the Great Plain, to develop it into a more resistant plant with larger ears. Soon the farmers were growing the new, improved version. He published his methods of improvement in special papers. He became the first wheat improver in Hungary. He summed up all his plant-improving work and techniques in his book, Wheat Improving Methods (Búzanemesítés) (1875). – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.

Moldova, György (George) (12 March 1934 - ) – Writer. He studied at the Scenario Department of the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest (1952-1957). Then he became a manual laborer, and from 1964, a freelance writer. Strong social inquiry, satirical and ironical ways of seeing things, with an ability to expose the inner contradictions of issues characterize his works. He is regarded as the best continuity of the Hungarian satirical literary traditions. He describes the tough world of the Pest suburbs with sentimentalism and through exotic eyes. In his novels he seeks answers to the tragic contradictions of the 20th century through the fate of his solitary heroes. In his satires, he singles out the absurdities of society and castigates the corruptness of the community. Inordinate, romantic management of action, extreme characterization and detached, angular interpretation characterize his work's literary value. His many publications include Dark Angel (Sötét angyal) novel (1964); The Forty Preachers (A negyven predicator) novel (1973); My Life is Short (Az életem rövid) novelette (1987); The Last Frontier (Az utolsó határ) novel (1990); Hitler in Hungary: the Secret Proviso (Hitler Magyarországon: a titkos záradék) novel (1992); The Gate of Fear (A félelem kapuja) novel (1992), and János Kádár, vols. i-ii (Kádár János, I-II), (2006). He received a number of prizes, including the Attila József Prize (1973, 1978), the Kossuth Prize (1983), the Karinthy Ring (1993), the Lajos Nagy Prize (1993) and the Maecenes Prize (1994). – B: 1257, 0978, T: 7456.

Moldova, Hungarians in (Csángók) – Hungarians in Moldova, Romania, are ancient settlers, whose origin is substantiated by the geographical names of the area. These settlers remained between the eastern slopes of the Carpathian Mountains and the mountain valley, bordered on the east by the River Seret (Szeret). According to some opinions, including Professor Béla Gunda, the Hungarians around Bakó are the descendants of some of the Magyars, who remained outside of the Carpathian Basin. The mountains stretching on the two sides of the rivers Tatros and Beszterce have Hungarian, Csángó, Uzbek, Petcheneg and Cumanian names. There are still 160 villages with Hungarian names, which are either totally or partially inhabited by Hungarians in Moldova. Among them are 36 villages named Magyarfalva (Hungarian Village). Characteristically, Hungarian village names did not include such prefixes as “Saint”. This suggests that the establishment of these villages happened prior to the conversion to Christianity. The border of these closely situated Hungarian villages beyond the eastern Carpathians stretches east of the Szeret River. The majority of Hungarians of this area is made up of ancient settlers who came to Moldova more than a thousand years ago. Over time, they absorbed some Petcheneg, Uzbek and Cumanian tribes.

During their history the Moldovan Hungarians considered themselves as a part of the Hungarian nation and, even in hostile circumstances throughout their history they insisted on being Hungarians. 85% of the Hungarians of Moldova live in the proximity of the counties of Csík (now Ciuc, Romania) and Háromszék (now Trei Scaune, Romania) and their territory forms an ethnographic unit with Szeklerland.

The inhabitants, who escaped into the mountains from the Mongol-Tartar invasion (1241-1242), rebuilt their villages after the enemy departed. King Béla IV (1235-1270), dispatched missionaries to convert the Mongols left among the Hungarians. King László IV (1272-1290) directed Franciscan friars from Transylvania (Erdély) to the areas inhabited by the Hungarians. In 1591, of the 46,000 inhabitants of Moldova, 15,000 were Hungarians. In 1622, Rome considered Moldova a missionary territory and, for about two hundred years, entrusted the spiritual care of Moldovan Hungarians to Polish bishops and Italian missionaries. In September 1642, the Italian Franciscan cleric, Bartolomeo Basetti, called a general ecclesiastical meeting of the Catholic priests and clerical missionaries. This was necessitated by the chaotic situation caused by the many different liturgical practices. They worked out a uniform Liturgical Order and submitted it to Rome for approval. However, it was not acted upon until Pater Dr. István (Stephen) Bordogh discovered it in 1992, in a disorganized bundle of documents in the manuscript library of the Holy Congregation of the Propagation of Faith. In 1671, the residents of Szabófalva sent a letter of complaint, written in Hungarian, to the Holy See. In it, they requested a Hungarian priest for Szabófalva and the neighboring 5 villages. In 1929 the number of Hungarian and Csángó population of Moldova numbered 120,000. In 1946 and 1947 the Romanian Government forcibly closed the more than one hundred Hungarian schools. Following this, the people of Szabófalva turned to the Bishop of Transylvania, again requesting a Hungarian-speaking priest. As a result, the local authorities sent some of the petitioners to prison and introduced the whip and carrot policy. In 1987, close to 200,000 Hungarians and Csángós lived in Moldova, who still spoke the Hungarian language, but in the schools they are only taught Romanian.

The Romanization of the ancient Hungarian and Csángó peoples of Moldova dates back to much earlier times, and was of a larger scale than that of the Transylvanian Hungarians. The Roman Catholic bishops were responsible for the Wallachization. The first such bishop was Nicholas Josephus Camilli, born in 1840, in the Italian city of Monterubiano. He was the Apostolic Visitor for Moldova, appointed on 10 September 1881. As the contemporary Romanian minority leaders reported, the life of Hungarians in those days was hardly bearable. Petru Pal Josif, Romanian minority leader, described the methods of Romanization on page 93 of his book Originea Catolicilor din Moldova (Origin of Moldovan Catholics) published in 1942, by the printing office Serafica of Szabófalva.

Romanians now insist that the Csangós are Hungarianized Romanians. However, in 1716, Dimitri Centamir, a Moldovan Ruler, wrote a monograph to the Berlin Academy. In it he stated that the "Csangós know the Moldovan (Romanian) language but their national language is Hungarian". The Finn scientist, Yrjö Jooseppi Wichmann, studied the language of the Csangós (1906-1907) and reached the same conclusion. For the commission of the Europe Council, Tytti Isohookana-Asunmaa, the Finn diplomat, wrote a report on the Csángós that she submitted at the Council's Istanbul meeting in 2001. In it, she stated that the "...Csángós are a Hungarian ethnic minority, living in Moldova since the Middle Age...". – B: 0942, 1020, 1031, T: 7684. → Csángó.

Moldován, Stefánia (Stephanie) (Sajóúdvárhely, now Șieu-Odorhei, Romania, 24 August 1931 - ) – Opera singer (soprano). She studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under the direction of Dr. Jenő (Eugene) Sipos (1948-1953). She started her singing career in the Choir of the Budapest Opera House. In 1954 she made her debut as Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged, where she was a member from 1954 to 1961. From 1961 she was a soloist at the Budapest Opera House. Her balanced, full-tone voice and her dramatic and passionate interpretations placed her among the leading sopranos of the company. Above all, she had outstanding successes as Verdi's heroines; but her repertoire also includes the leading soprano roles of Mozart and Puccini operas. She regularly appeared in international concerts and operatic presentations, even in six feature and TV films including Johann Strauss' Die Fledermaus (The Bat - A denevér) (1965) and Puccini's Gianni Schicchi (1975). She sang Leonora in Beethoven's Fidelio, also in its original version named Leonora. Her other roles include Donna Elvira in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Melinda in Erkel's Bánk bán; Leonora in Verdi's La forza del destino (The Force of Destiny - A végzet hatalma); Desdemona in Verdi's Othello, and Elisabeth in Verdi's Don Carlo. She also made a number of recordings. She received the Franz Liszt Prize (1959), the Artist of Merit title (1978), and was made Member of the Society of Immortals (2005). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Mollay Károly (Charles) (Sopron, 14 November 1913 - Budapest, 3 April 1997) – Linguist, education historian. He completed his high school studies in Sopron (1932). In 1937 he acquired a Degree in Education (majoring in German and French) at the University of Budapest, where he also obtained a Ph.D. in Art (1938), as a trainee and demonstrator. In subsequent years, he taught in various high schools. From 1942 he lectured at the Teachers' (Eötvös) College, University of Budapest. He became an honorary lecturer in 1944. In World War II, he was enlisted in the army, and he became a prisoner of war. Back in Hungary, between 1951 and 1954, he lectured at the College of Foreign Languages; and from 1954, in German Linguistics and Medieval History of Literature at the University of Budapest, where he became professor in 1977. He acquired a Master's Degree in 1960, and a Ph.D. in 1975 in Linguistics. He dealt with the Hungarian-German Linguistic and Cultural Historic Relations during the Middle Ages, and researched the history of German settlers in Hungary, as well as the cultural history of Sopron. He was a member of the editorial board of the Sopron Review (Soproni Szemle) from 1938, and its Editor-in-Chief from 1970. He retired in 1984. His works include Medieval Family Names of Sopron (Középkori soproni családnevek) (1938); Das älteste deutsche Lehngut der ungarischen Sprache, Acta Linguistica (1951), and The German-Hungarian Linguistic Connections – Our Language in the Danube Region (A német-magyar nyelvi érintkezések – Nyelvünk a Duna-tájon) (1989). He received the György Káldi Prize (1941), the Golden Class of Order of Labor (1983), the Academy Prize (1984) and the Pro Urbe Sopron Medal (1987). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456.

Mollináry, Gizella (Gisela) (Mrs. Gusztáv Gebauer) (Budapest, 7 September 1896 - Budapest, 23 February 1978) – Poet, writer. She had to fend for herself from early childhood and worked, amongst other positions, as a mortar carrying girl, a textile worker, servant, and an army-camp follower. During the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (21 March - 1 August 1919), she took part in the Communist Government and was in prison from the end of 1919 for a year in Balassagyarmat. In 1920 she fled to the Serbian-Croatian-Slovenian Kingdom (later Yugoslavia), and sent her first poems to the journal, West (Nyugat) from there. When she received amnesty, she returned to Hungary. Due to her anti-German attitude, she was arrested and imprisoned by the Gestapo in October 1944, but she escaped. Earlier in her life she wrote poems; later on, she wrote an autobiographic novel-cycle, describing her colorful life's ups and downs. It saw several editions and was translated into Italian. Her latest poems were published in the periodical, Vigil (Vigilia). Her works include Womanly Humility (Asszonyi alázat) (1927); The Countenance is Darkening (Az arc elsötétül) (1931), and God is Silent (Az Isten hallgat) (1947). – B: 0883, 1250, T: 7456.

Molnár, Ágoston (August J.) (Cleveland, OH, USA, 1928 - ) – Minister of the Reformed Church, educator, archivist in the USA. After graduating from the Brush High School, Lyndhurst, he studied at the University of Michigan, the Lancaster School of Theology, and at Columbia University. His scientific career started at the Elmhurst Academy where he set up the Department of Hungarian Studies (1952-1959). At Rutgers University, he took part in the development of Hungarian Studies (1959-1965). In 1957, he was a founding member of the “Hungarian Project in Hungary” at Columbia University. Since 1995 he has been President of the American Hungarian Foundation. Under his leadership, the Hungarian Heritage Center opened in New Brunswick, New Jersey (1989). He is the author of a number of scientific essays and volumes, as well as documentary films. He has been Editor for the Hungarian Science periodical since 1973. Since 1991, he has been a board member of the Corvina Foundation of Princeton University. His contribution is outstanding for the realization and operation of the Hungarian Heritage Center, whereby he built a cultural bridge between Hungarians and Americans. His works include Hungarian Writers and Literature (edited studies of József Reményi) (1964). – B: 1037, 1672, T: 7103.

Molnár, Antal (Anthony) (Budapest, 7 January 1890 - Budapest, 7 December 1983) – Music historian, musicologist, composer, violinist. He studied composition at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1907-1910) under Viktor (Victor) Herzfeld, and also studied the viola. He was one of the first who recognized the genius of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. He collected folk music in Transylvania in 1910 (now in Romania) and in Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now forming Slovakia) (1912). He played with the Waldbauer-Kerpely String Quartet between 1910 and 1917; they presented Bartók's First String Quartet; then he worked as member of the Dohnányi-Hubay Piano Quartet (1917-1919). He started his music educational work as a professor at the Music Academy of Buda and at the Municipal College of Music of the Capital City, where he was the first to teach music history and solfège. From 1919 to 1959 he was a professor at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, and lectured on Chamber music, Esthetics and Theory of Music. He was an outstanding music critic as well. At the age of 70, at the peak of his powers in 1960, he was forced to retire. He edited the Popular Music Booklets (Népszerű zenefüzetek) between 1934 and 1940, and from 1957, he was Editor for the Gondolat Publishers' (Gondolat Kiadó) series, The Little Music Library (Kis Zenei Könyvtár). He was one of the founders of Modern Hungarian Music as a discipline. For many years, since 1954, he published informative works and critiques in a program booklet. In the fields of music psychology and sociology, his writings, books and lectures are of particular significance. He also composed music for teaching and educational purposes, especially for violin and piano, composed a string quartet and the Comedy Overture. His main works include String Quartets of Bartók (Bartók's kvartettjei) (1911); History of European Music up to 1750 (Az európai zene története 1750-ig) (1920); Zoltán Kodály (1936); The Music of Today (A ma zenéje) (1936); Smetana-Dvorak (1967); The World of the Composer (A zeneszerző világa) (1969); Applied Music Esthetics (Gyakorlati zeneesztétika) (1971), and Heretic Thoughts on Music (Eretnek gondolatok a muzsikáról) (1976). He received the Haynal Prize for his composition, Missa Brevis (1910), the Francis Joseph Prize (1914), the Baumgarten Prize (1938), the Kossuth Prize (1957), and the Outstanding Artist title (1970). A Music School in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1495, T: 7456. → Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Molnár, Béla (1) (Munkács, now Mukacheve, Carpatho-Ukraine, 7 June 1886 - Budapest, 1962) – Physician, surgeon. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and received his Ph.D. in Medicine in 1910. From 1911, he worked as Senior Surgeon at the No.1 Surgical Clinic, from 1913 at the Brody Children's Hospital of Budapest, and from 1921, as Senior Surgeon in the Jewish Hospital, Budapest. In 1945, he became an honorary lecturer; in 1946, Associate Professor; in 1956, Professor and Head of the Surgical Department. He was involved with children's surgery and medical extension training. He was also a well known art-collector and artist. His works include The Precancerous Pathological Changes (A praecancerosus elváltozásokról) (1951); Antibiotics in Surgery (Az antibiotikumok a sebészetben) (1955), and The Early Diagnosis of Cancer (A rák korai diagnosztikája), co-authored (1959). He received the Kossuth Prize (1958). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Molnár, Béla (2) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 24 February 1892 - Kassa, sometime after 1945) – Physician, medical historian. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical School of the University of Budapest (1914), later was a resident doctor at the No. 3 Internal Medical Clinic of the University. During World War I, he served as an army doctor, and at the same time he was a demonstrator at the University (1921-1938); and in the summers of 1922-1938, he also worked as a senior physician at the Baths of Carlsbad. Between 1938 and 1945, he was Chief Medical Officer of the Kassa Hospital. Early in his career he dealt with diabetes, especially its complications, such as articular diseases, arthritis and gout. Later in life, he turned to the field of medical history, especially the history of medicine and pharmacology at Kassa. He also wrote about the diseases and pathology of famous Hungarians, who visited Carlsbad for medical treatment. His works include Dietary Guide for Diabetics, Arthritic and Obese People (Diétás tanácsadó cukorbeteg, elhízottak és köszvényesek számára) (1924); János Arany at Carlsbad (Arany János Karlsbadban) (1933), and Medical History of Kassa (Kassa orvosi története) (1943). – B: 1730, T: 7456. → Arany, János.

Molnár, C. Pál (Paul) (Battonya-Tompapuszta, 28 April 1889 - Budapest, 11 July 1981) – Artist, graphic artist. He is one of the most popular figures of Hungarian graphic art of the 20th century. While completing his high-school studies at Arad (now in Romania) he won first prize in the national drawing competition (1912). He studied at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest (1915-1918) then, with the famous artist, Pál Szinyei-Merse and his family, he went to Switzerland as a private tutor. It was in Lausanne and Geneva, where they organized a combined exhibition. After staying in France for a year, he returned to Hungary in 1923 and arranged for a one-man show of his religious paintings at the Belvedere Salon. As recognition of his artistry, the paper, Evening (Est), invited him to become the illustrator for three of their syndicate papers. In 1928, as a result of his painting St. Francis Assisi Preaching to the Birds, he received a three-year scholarship to Rome. His decade of successes started in 1931. After 1945 he took part in a series of exhibitions. In 1955 he had an individual exhibition at the István (Stephen) Csók Gallery, followed by others in 1960, 1965 and 1970. Later, he arranged numerous other exhibitions, including the ones in Szeged (1976), Battonya (1979), Dürer Hall, Budapest (1979), a permanent exhibition at his Budapest home (1984), and at the Ferenc Móra Museum of Szeged (1993). The popularity of his art goes back to a peculiar combination of the classical Mediterranean traditions and the restlessness of 20th century man. His mostly sacred scenes were infused with direct, sensuous visual perception. His graphic art is characterized by a combination of careful observation, elegant, bold stylization, and expressiveness. His works include Annunciation (Angyali üdvözlés) (1928-1929); Indian Summer (Vénasszonyok nyara) (1928-1930), and The Secretary (A titkárnő) (1968). His murals (state- and church-commissioned) include three triptychs, that of the Church at the Peace (Béke) Plaza of Budapest (1942), the Altar of the Inner City Parish Church, Budapest (1948), and the panel at the ceremonial hall of the University of Pécs. He prepared numerous book illustrations, such as D. Kosztolányi's Figures (Alakok), and Shakespeare's Coriolanus. Many of his works are in museums abroad, in Nuremberg, Munich, Rome and Venice. The National Gallery, Budapest, has 12 of his paintings. His written works include Confessions about his life, vols. i-iv. He received the Grand Prix of the Szinyei Society (1934), two gold medals from the International Wood-cut Biennial of Warsaw, and the International Church-art exhibition of Padua, the jubilee gold medal of the Hungarian Capital Budapest (1936), and his panel won him the Grand Prix of the 1937 World Fair. There is a Molnár C Pál Friendship Circle, a Studio Museum in Budapest, and a Memorial House in Battonya. – B: 0883, 0934, 1031, T: 7456. → Szinyei Merse, Pál.

Molnár, Farkas Ferenc (Francis Wolf) (Pécs, 21 June 1897 - Budapest, 12 January 1945) – Architect, painter. He studied at the Budapest Polytechnic and at the Staatliches Bauhaus, Weimar, where he was a student of W. Gropius. His Red Boxhaus (Vörös kockaház) was quite a sensation at the Bauhaus exhibition in 1923. From 1927 he worked in Budapest, at first with Pál (Paul) Ligeti, then on his own, and finally with József (Joseph) Fischer. They built mostly villas and family homes. His works are the first and best representatives of constructivist and functionalist architecture in Hungary. He was Hungary's representative at CIAM – an international alliance of modern architects – and was its group-leader in Hungary between 1928 and 1938. He published in the periodical,

Space and Form (Tér és forma), propagating modern architecture. His works include villas in Lejtő Street, Harangvirág Street, Lotz Károly Street, Székács Street, and a block of flats at Toldy Ferenc Street in Budapest. Among his paintings are: Humanity (Emberiség) (1922); Archers (Nyilazók) (ca. 1920); Orvieto (1921), and Lamentation (Sírítás) (1921). His book is entitled Works of Farkas Molnár (Molnár Farkas munkái) (1923). – B: 0883, 0934, T: 7103.

Molnár, Ferenc (Francis) (originally Ferenc Neumann) (Budapest, 12 January 1878 - New York, 1 April 1952) – Writer, playwright, journalist. He was known as Franz Molnar in the USA. Born into a middle-class Jewish family of German descent, he was the son of Dr. Mór (Maurice) Neumann and Jozefa (Josefa) Wallfisch. He attended the Lónyai Reformed High School, Budapest (1887-1895). In 1896 he studied Law in Budapest and Geneva, then, in 1897, he visited Paris. Instead of continuing his studies, he started working as a journalist, and adopted the name Molnár. He published his first volume of short stories in 1898, his first novel in 1901, and his first play in 1902. He also started living high, a lifestyle that lasted for the rest of his life. He became a member of the Petőfi

Society (1907) and of the Kisfaludy Society (1911). He was a war correspondent on the Galician front in Russia (1914-1915). English and American papers, including the London Morning Post and the New York Times, published his reports. He lived mainly in Western Europe between 1920 and 1940. His high income as a writer was unprecedented and he maintained five luxury apartments in the best hotels of Budapest, Vienna, and Carlsbad, Venice and Nice. He married several times; his first wife was Margit (Margaret) Vészi, the second Sári (Shari) Fedák and the third Lili Darvas. He was awarded the Grand Cross of the French Legion of Honor (1927), after the Paris production of his play, The Swan (A hattyú) (1921), that had several film versions as well, the latest one made in 1956. His collected works were published in 20 volumes (1928), and they were published in English in the USA (1929). He moved with his wife, Lili Darvas to the United States permanently in order to escape from the rising anti-Semitism (1940). He settled in New York and resided in the Plaza Hotel until his death 12 years later. He was among the greatest Hungarian dramatists and novelists of the 20th century. In his works, he paid special attention to love stories, seduction, jealousy, eroticism, sexuality and the battle of the sexes. He was an incomparable master in the development of dialogues and in the creation of effective and peculiar stage situations. The life in Budapest is treated in two of his novels: The Hungry City (Az éhes város) and The Story of a Derelict Boat (Egy gazdátlan csónak története) (1901). As a novelist, he is remembered mainly for The Paul Street Boys (A Pál-utcai fiúk) (1907), originally written as a juvenile novel, telling the story of two rival gangs of youths in Budapest, featuring the themes of solidarity and self-sacrifice; it is a classic of juvenile literature, published in fourteen different languages. It has also been made into a movie several times, the most notable one in 1969. His other novels include The Story of a Girl from Pest (Egy pesti lány története) (1905); Music-making Angel (A zenélő angyal) (1933); The Green Hussar (A zöld huszár) (1937); Farewell My Heart (Isten veled szívem) (1945) German: Leb wohl, mein Herz (1950); Viaggio in autunno (Autumnal Travel – Őszi utazás) (Róma 1946); Companion in Exile, Notes for an Autobiography (New York, 1950), in German: Gefährtin im Exil (Bad Wörishofen, 1953), and Utítárs a száműzetésben (Budapest 1958). Molnár's most popular plays, apart from The Swan, include The Devil (Az ördög) (1907); Liliom (1909), which become eventually familiar as the Rogers and Hammerstein musical, Carousel (1944); The Guardsman (A testőr) (1910); The Wolf (A farkas) (1912); Carnival (Farsang) (1917); Riviera (1926); Olympia (1928); The Good Fairy (A jó tündér) (1930); The Unknown Girl (Az ismeretlen lány) (1934), and Delila (1937). Internationally, Molnár is one of the most famous Hungarian playwrights and novelists. – B: 1031, 1068, 1445, 1672, T: 7456.

Molnár, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 2 December 1908 - Budapest, 29 October 1980) – Hunter, globetrotter, travelogue writer. In 1927 he received an agricultural qualification at Pápa and, for 2 years, worked in manors as a hunter trainee. In 1930 he answered an advertisement for a planned North-Brazilian Expedition and was accepted. They arrived in South America in June 1930. Molnár traveled alone ahead to Manaus, the capital of Amazonas State, where he was informed, that the expedition members he had left behind had become sick and had returned home. Molnár had to work in the village of Bona Vista as a farm-head of the Ford Company's rubber plantation. Using his money, he organized a two-month-long collecting trip that he subsequently repeated several times. During these trips he sailed the full length of the Amazon and its major tributaries: the Tapajos, Cupari, Jatapu, Uatuma and Rio Negro. He continuously sent the collected material back to Hungary. On 7 March 1932 he lost his eyesight. He returned to Hungary the same year and learned to write on a Remington typewriter, and began to write about his adventures. At first, he published in a newspaper, later in book form as well. Eighteen others followed his first book. Accompanied by his wife, he traveled to Mongolia in 1964, and repeated the trip again in 1968. Then, in 1972, he spent several months in South American countries as a guest of the Brazilian External Affairs Ministry. During his stay, he went to the villages of a number of little-known Indian tribes. Molnár was first and foremost a collector of natural science specimens and samples. He also traveled to and studied almost unknown areas. His colorful and powerful descriptions and lively stories earned him popularity. In the 20th century he was the most popular writer of hunting trips and expeditions. – B: 1122, 1614, T: 7456. → Jesuits, Hungarian, in Latin America; Brentán, Károly. Éder, Xavér Ferenc.

Molnár, János S.J. (John) (Csécsény, now Čačín, Slovakia, 13 June 1728 - Szepesvárálja, now Spišské, Slovakia, 15 February 1804) – Preacher, Canon, writer, poet. He joined the Jesuit Order in 1745 and studied at Szakolca (now Skalica, Slovakia) Graz and Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). From 1759 he taught at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia); from 1767 at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), also at Buda and Győr. From 1784 he was Canon of County Szepes. He wrote sermons in Hungarian, apologetic works in Latin, the results of polemics with the works of Voltaire, Rousseau, Montesquieu, De ratione critica legendi libros moderni temporis (On reading the books of modern times with sober critic – Az új idők könyveinek józan kritikával való olvasásáról) (1776). He wrote also on dogmatics and exegesis; he published the first cultural history in Hungarian: About Great Old Buildings (A régi jeles épületekről) (1760), and church history also in Hungarian: The History of our Church (Az anyaszentegyháznak története) (1769-1788). His educational-moralizing work: Pastor Man (Pásztor ember) (1775) was modeled on Ferenc (Francis) Faludi. He wrote and edited the first Hungarian-language literary journal: Hungarian Book-House (Magyar Könyv-Ház) (1793). He published altogether 22 volumes (1793-1804). Among them is his first Hungarian-language study on physics, and some abstracts and summaries of other authors' works, as well as their reviews. He was one of the pioneers of metrical poetry in Hungarian. – B: 1257, T: 7456.

Molnár, János (John) (Zsibó, now Jibou, Romania, 16 October 1955 - ) – Minister of the Reformed Church. He studied at the Protestant Theological Institute of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) graduating in 1980. He obtained a Ph.D. in 1990. Molnár, Jenő (Eugene) (Szentés, 1891 - Edmonton, AB, Canada, 19 January 1986) – Minister of the Reformed Church, philosopher, writer. He studied Theology and Philosophy at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) where he received a Doctoral Degree in Philosophy (1915). He also studied Experimental Psychology with Edward Claparede in Geneva, Switzerland (1910), where he was invited to a lecture by Vladimir Ilyich Lenin, the Russian revolutionary. Molnár was the only Hungarian Reformed Church Minister who ever met V. I. Lenin. He also met John Mott, the evangelist, a great influence on his life. He served as a minister in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and as Army Chaplain during World War I. After the war he worked at the General Convent of the Reformed Church, Budapest. In 1926 he moved to Canada and became Parish Minister in Békevár. He also served in Windsor, Hamilton and Calgary, as well as in Lackawanna, San Bernardino and Bathurst in the USA. He was the initiator of the "Justice for Hungary" historic Ocean flight of György (George) Endresz and Sándor (Alexander) Magyar in 1931. When he retired, he moved to Edmonton, Canada. He wrote articles and essays on philosophy, psychology and education and translated into Hungarian E. Kant's work The Critique of Practical Reason (1921). His other works include The Common Daily Wakefulness and God (1947), The Slave of Ea, novel (London, 1932). His wife, Rózsa Waldman, was a renowned pianist and friend of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. – B: 0906, T: 7103. → Endresz, György; 'Justice for Hungary' Ocean Flight; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Molnár, József (1) (Joseph) (Budapest, 27 August 1918 - Munich, 1 December 2009) – Writer, printer. He spent his childhood at Csepreg (east of Kőszeg in Transdanubia), moved to Budapest in 1930, where he completed his secondary education in a commercial high school. He worked in banks as a private official and was also active in the Social Democratic Youth Movement. Influenced by folk literature, he joined the National Peasant Party in 1945. At first, he headed its propaganda section, later became secretary to the Party's Greater-Budapest organization. In 1947 he resigned from the party and secured his livelihood with physical work, while writing articles and dealing with the history of Agrarian Socialism. In 1948 he fled to Switzerland, where he continued to make his living from physical work; he became correspondent to the Western Herald (Nyugati Hírnök), New Hungarian Way (Új Magyar Út) and Horizon (Látóhatár). In the following years, he worked in an American establishment in Augsburg and later emigrated to the USA, where he supported himself and his family as a manual laborer and at the same time acted as an outside consultant for Radio Free Europe. Between 1955 and 1957 he was a member of the editorial board of Radio Free Europe in Munich. While correspondent and Co-Editor of Horizon (Látóhatár), he was also Executive Editor for New Horizon (Új Látóhatár). In 1961 he established a printing shop in Munich and ran it until 1983. He initiated the Aurora Book series and printed it in his shop. He wrote essays, studies and critiques for the New Horizon. Since the 1970s he had been researching the life and works of Miklós (Nicholas) Tótfalusi Kis, which he published in five volumes. His works include Studies on the Hungarian Revolution (Tanulmányok a magyar forradalomról), co-edited with Gyula (Julius) Borbándi (1966). He received the Gábor Bethlen Prize (1991). – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Borbándi, Gyula.

Molnár, József (2) (Joseph) (Debrecen, 12 December 1931 - ) – Research scientist. He started his university education at the Horticultural University of Budapest. Following the Freedom Fight of 1956, he emigrated to Canada and continued his studies at the University of British Columbia, obtaining his BSA (1961), MSA at the University of Alberta (1966) and his Ph.D. from the University of Manitoba (1971). He joined Agriculture Canada's Ottawa Research Station as a research scientist, doing work in horticultural studies. Later he became a section head. He was appointed Director of the Saanich Research Station (1977) and continued his research work there. He introduced the Peruvian Lily to Canada. He also initiated research regarding pepino, a vegetable crop from South America, and introduced the kiwi fruit to Canada. He was an invited guest to several research establishments in Japan, the Netherlands, Israel and the USA. He was appointed Director of the Agassiz Research Station (1985,) and remained in that position until his retirement in 1995. Other researchers in China and the USA adopted some of his research techniques. He was Elder of the First Hungarian Presbyterian Church of Vancouver (Calvin, 1955), and President of the Hungarian Cultural Society of Greater Vancouver. – B: 0893, T: 4342.

Molnár, Kata (Kate) (Nagykanizsa, 26 December 1899 - Budapest, 11 June 1967) – Writer. She studied economics, then music, and later she turned to literature. Although she was among the older generation, the starting point of her career as a writer still rendered her a member of the third generation of the literary circle, West (Nyugat). She improved the genre of psychological novel with some exciting works. At first she mainly drew on the experiences of her own life and provided finely drawn, wonderful shades of the female soul. Later, she considered action in her novels as a secondary element only and she endeavored to grapple with the most important points in human life. After World War II, she sank into a long period of silence; she penned only a couple of short stories. Then in 1955 she published a volume of short stories. Her works include The Lanterns are Glowing (Égnek a mécsek) novel (1936); The Soul is Getting Ready (A lélek készülődik) novel (1938), and Mothers are Born (Anyák születnek) short stories (1955). She received the Baumgarten Prize (1939). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Molnár, Lajos (Louis) (Hajdúnánás, 1919 - Far Rockaway, N.Y., USA, 24 March 1995) – Minister of the Reformed Church in the USA. He graduated from the Reformed Junior College of Kecskemét (1937) and enrolled at the Reformed Theological Academy in Sárospatak. After receiving his Degree in 1941, he continued his studies at the University of Debrecen, where he obtained a certificate as a secondary school teacher in 1944. He later moved to Csurgó, where he taught Hungarian and English language and Literature. At the beginning of the Communist rule, he was arrested for refusing to lead the students in demonstrations. After spending 385 days in prison, he was interned for three months in forced labor camps. In 1949 he escaped and went to Yugoslavia. He was arrested but he escaped again and found his way to Trieste, Italy, where he served as Minister to the Hungarian refugees. Subsequently, he attended the Graduate School of Theology in Lausanne, Switzerland. He arrived in the United States with a World Council of Churches fellowship to study at the Oberlin School of Theology in Oberlin, Ohio. While in Oberlin, he was a frequent guest speaker and visiting minister in the greater Cleveland area's Hungarian Reformed churches. Oberlin awarded him the degree of M.Theol. He became Minister of the Hungarian Evangelical and Reformed Church of Gary, Indiana. Here, he continued his theological education and became a doctoral candidate at the University of Chicago. During the 1956 Hungarian Revolution, he sponsored several Hungarian refugees. In 1957 he accepted a new pastorate in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. In 1958 he was called and installed at the Hungarian Evangelical and Reformed Church of Dayton, Ohio, but he resigned in 1965. He moved to New York City, retrained himself, and became active in the business world. While there, he also served as a pulpit supply in the First Hungarian Reformed Church between 1969 and 1972. – B: 0906, T: 7617.

Molnár, Mária (Győr, 11 September 1886 - Pacific Ocean, 18 March 1943) – Deaconess of the Reformed Church. From 1927 she was a missionary. She arrived in Manus Island of the Admiralty Archipelago, where, besides her missionary activity, she also provided health services and education to the Melanesian Papuans. In 1943 the Japanese troops occupied the island and took her, together with her missionary companions and put them on a torpedo-boat destroyer, shot them and threw them into the ocean. A number of mementos acquired from the Papuans are kept in Sárospatak, Hungary. She wrote on her missionary experiences in the Reformed journals and almanacs. A Reformed Handicapped Children's Home in Cegléd bears her name. – B: 0883, 0911, T: 7456. → Cserepka, János.

Molnár, Miklós (1) (Nicholas) (Budapest, 28 October 1918 - 2003) – Historian, journalist. He studied at the University of Budapest (1936-1938), and at the University of Geneva (1958-1963). From 1937 he worked as a journalist; from 1945 he was a correspondent for the Free Word (Szabad Szó), and from 1947 for the Free People (Szabad Nép). From 1950 he was Editor of the journal Literary News (Irodalmi Ujság). On 29 October 1956 he wrote an article in the newspaper, Free People (Szabad Nép); in it he rejected the accusations against the Hungarian Revolution, published by the Soviet newspaper Pravda. “Molotov Cocktail” (Gasoline or petrol bomb) – An improvised incendiary weapon, used during the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight against the invading Soviet’s armored cars and tanks. The gasoline-filled closed bottles of 200-300 ml size were thrown on the tanks, where they broke and the liquid flowed in through the openings. There were two kinds: a rag tied to the neck of the bottle, soaked with gasoline and lit before throwing; this ignited the liquid inside the bottle upon impact. The other kind was only a closed bottle, used only to enhance the effect of the pilot bottle. The gasoline bottle’s popular name was “Molotov Cocktail”, named after Vyacheslav Molotov, the Soviet Foreign Minister during World War II. It was first employed in the Spanish Civil War, then in the Finno-Soviet Winter War; in the Warsaw Uprising, and in the Hungarian Revolution, and in many more cases. This simple device was used by guerilla forces and rioters. – B: 1031, T: 7668.→Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956.

Mongol-Tartar Invasion of 1241-1242 – The Mongol-Tartar Empire launched an all-out attack against Europe. The armies of Genghis, the Great Khan of the Mongols – who had already conquered most of Asia – swept through Russia, destroyed the Armenian, Lithuanian, Ukrainian and Cumanian Principalities. By the spring of 1241, they had reached Hungary's eastern borders.

The campaign was planned against the Holy Roman (German) Empire and aimed for its total destruction; it was rumored that the Tartar armies wanted to reach Rome and beyond. Batu Khan, the leader of the campaign, saw Hungary as the strongest military power in Europe and at first he offered a military alliance to King Béla IV (1235-1270), who vehemently rejected it. Therefore, Batu Khan concentrated his main attack on Hungary, sending his weaker northern wing against the Germans.

The Mongol invasion started on 12 March 1241 and became the greatest tragedy of Medieval Hungary. The Mongols, as well as later the Turks, wanted the Hungarians as allies in the campaign against the Christian West due to their racial and geographic origin and their military strength. However, once their offer was rejected, the Mongols, as well as later the Turks regarded the Hungarians as their chief enemies and were determined to annihilate them as a nation. For this reason, both the Mongols and the Turks handled the conquered Eastern and Balkan nations more mercifully than the desperately resisting Hungarians.

They invaded Hungary from three directions: from the north via Moravia under Orda Khan, after they had annihilated the united German-Polish army at Liegnitz; from the south under Kadan and Bogotai Khans. After they had trampled Wallachia and Cumania, they broke into Transylvania through the Borgo, Ojtoz and Vöröstorony Passes; the main army, under the leadership of Batu Khan and Subutai, attacked Hungary directly through the Verecke Pass. In the Verecke Pass, Batu's troops almost completely destroyed Palatine Dénes's poorly equipped army. Before the wounded Palatine, with a few of his remaining men, could reach the King, the Mongols, led by Sibán, took the town of Vác on 17th March, burned its buildings and massacred all of its inhabitants, down to the last babe in arms. They annihilated the army of Ugrin, Archbishop of Kalocsa, sacked the town of Eger, and scattered the troops of Benedek, Bishop of Várad that were dispatched against them.

After the destruction of Vác, the Hungarian nobility, until then unwilling to fight, joined the King's army and thus King Béla IV could muster about 50,000 men against the main body of the Mongol army. Batu, pretending to escape, lured the Hungarians to the swampy banks of the River Sajó, where the light Mongol horsemen had a distinct advantage over the heavily armored Hungarian cavalry. In the ensuing tragic battle of Muhi, most of the 50,000, including the Palatine of the country, the Chief Judge and the Archbishop of Esztergom, were killed. Palatine Dénes and the bodyguards sacrificed their life to save the King.

The Mongols soon surrounded the town of Pest and, despite the heroic defense of its citizens, captured it in three days. The resulting blood bath darkened the waters of the Danube River. By the middle of April, hardly a house was standing; burning ruins, smoke and blood covered everything. The loot was collected in heaps on the Field of Rákos. In the meantime, the Mongols coming from the North burned all of northwestern Hungary, with the exception of the fortified castles.

At the end of April – at the invitation of Frederick II, Prince of Austria and Steier -- King Béla IV went to Hainburg, where the Prince forced him to pay a ransom. He was only freed when he agreed to concede the counties of Locsmánd, Moson and Sopron to Frederick. The Prince even occupied the town of Győr, but the Hungarians forced him to relinquish it. Béla IV then went to Zagreb and, from there on 18 May 1241, dispatched a request for help to Pope Gregory IX, Louis I, King of France, Frederick II, the Holy Roman Emperor, and Conrad IV, the German King.

By the end of June, the Mongols controlled the country up to the Danube River. On 1 July 1241, Gregory IX called for a crusade in the defense of Hungary and promised some concrete help. However no help arrived from anyone.

During the hard winter of 1242, the Mongols crossed the frozen Danube and destroyed Buda and Pilis in quick succession. In March 1242, Kadan's army pursued the fleeing King and his family, as far as Spalato (now Split, Croatia) on the Adriatic coast and then to the town of Trau.

At the end of March, the news of the death of the Great Khan Ogotai reached the Mongol armies and, to participate in the election of a new chief khan, the Mongols left Hungary. Had Ogotai not died at this time, Europe's history and, with it, the history of the world would have taken a different turn.

The 1241-1242 Mongol invasion killed more than half of the 2 million Hungarians, mainly the civilian population of the unfortified villages and towns. The Mongols destroyed every village and town that they could capture.

In "April of the Lord's 1241st year" a Bavarian monk wrote these lines in his diary: "350 years after her foundation, in this year, the Tartar invasion annihilated Hungary as a state". This is what the indifferent Western chroniclers believed. – B: 1231, 1288, 1153, 7114, T: 7665.→Ogotáj; Béla IV, King; Montroyal, Jakab; Templars, Knights of; Muhi Battle.

Monomachos Crown – Constantine IX, (Monomachos) Byzantine Emperor sent this crown to King András I (Andrew, 1046-1060), who was the adversary of Henrik III, the Holy Roman Emperor. A fragment of the crown is at the Hungarian National Museum. – B: 1138, T: 7662.

Monorail – In 1845, József (Joseph) Kliegl, a Hungarian technician for a short-lived Slavonian timber exploitation company, constructed the first model of a horse-drawn stretch of rail. The following year another company constructed a stretch of monorail 732 m. in length. This company also went bankrupt. – B: 1226, T: 7456.→Kliegl, József.

Monoszlay Clan – According to official documents, the clan’s ancestor was Makarias Comes from the time of King Béla III (1172-1196). Monoszló was the clan’s ancient nest in the County of Körös. Makarias’ son Tamás (Thomas) was Lord Lieutenant and Viceroy of the County of Valkó during the time of King András II (Andrew, 1205-1235). The clan died out in 1313 with Makarias’ great grandson, Egyed. Egyed was the notorious Master of The Royal Treasury and Lord Lieutenant of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), who, at the end of 1272, gave his support to Ottokar, the Czech King. He gave him the Castle of Pozsony that consequently became the cause of war in 1273. – B: 0942, T: 7676.

Monoszló, Dezső (Desider) (Monoszló M. Dezső, pen-name: Márk Máté) (Budapest, 28 December 1923 - ) – Writer, poet, translator of literary works. He obtained a Degree from the Law School of the University of Budapest (1946). From 1946 to 1968 he worked as a bricklayer, miner, sailor, teacher, radio mechanic, and director of a publishing firm in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). He was Associate Editor for the journal, Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle). He settled in Yugoslavia in 1968, and moved to Vienna in 1970. He translates Czech and Slovakian literary works. His works include I Send a Message from Heaven (Égből üzenek) (1941); We Only Live Once (Csak egyszer élünk) poem (1959); Kiss (Csók) poem (1965); Desert (Sivatag) short story (1968); Flight from Sodom (Menekülés Szodomából) novel (1975); The Last Hunt (Az utolsó vadászat) short stories (New York, 1983, in German: Die letzte Jagd, 1984), Die fünf Jahreszeiten der Liebe, short stories (Vienna, 1989), and in Hungarian: A szerelem öt évszaka (The Five Seasons of Love) (1991). He was awarded a number of prizes, including the Imre Madách Prize (1967), the Theodor Körner Prize (1979), the Life-achievement Prize (Vienna, 1986), the Golden Medal of Merit of the Republic of Austria (1989), and also the Literary Prize of the Pen Club (1996). – B: 1257, 0878, 1672, T: 7456.

Montágh, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 29 July 1935 - Budapest, 1 August 1986) - Logopedist, linguist. He received his qualifications from the Training College for Teachers of Handicapped Children (Gyógypedagógiai Tanárképző Főiskola) Budapest (1959). First, he dealt with deaf-mute children. While he was training amateur actors he became involved in the training of speech techniques. From 1973 he taught speech techniques at the Academy of Dramatic Art; gave lectures and wrote articles about his field of expertise. He lost his life in an accident. His works include the Clear Speech (Tiszta beszéd) (1976). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Monti, Count Alessandro (1818 - 1854) – Military officer in the Habsburg Imperial Army, and also Colonel in the Honvéd (National) Army of Hungary. In 1848, at the outbreak of the insurrection in Brescia, Italy, he left the Imperial Army and as captain entered into the service of Piedmont. He arrived in Hungary as Piedmont’s Ambassador but, after the Italian defeat at Novara, he offered his services to Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, who appointed him leader (Colonel) of the Italian Legion, whose formation had already begun in March 1849. The Headquarter of the Legion was in Szeged, with an approximate membership of a thousand men. After the battle of Temesvár (now Timisoara, Romania), he went to Turkey and later returned to Piedmont. – B: 0883, 1321, T: 7665. → Kossuth, Lajos; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Montroyal, Jakab (Jacob) (? - Muhipusztá, 12 April 1241) – He was Master of the Hungarian Slavonian Templars. Accompanied by his Italian and French knights, under the leadership of Prince Kálmán (Coloman), he came to the aid of King Béla IV (1235-1270) in 1241, against the Mongols attacking Hungary. He fought valiantly in the Battle of Muhi on 12 April 1241. At first, in cooperation with Prince Kálmán and Archbishop Ugrin, they prevented Sibán's Mongol army from crossing the Sajó River. The army of Batu Khan was about to retreat, when south of the battle Subutai crossed the river and attacked the Hungarians from the rear. Montroyal and his Templar knights fell in a heroic battle. – B: 0942, T: 7665.→Béla IV, King; Mongol-Tartar Invasion; Templars, Knights of.

Monumenta Hungarica – A series of volumes of Hungarian historical sources translated into Hungarian. The Hungarian Helicon published this series. It contains: János (John) Thuróczi's Hungarian Chronicle; Bonfini's King Mátyás (Matthias Corvinus); Márk (Mark) Kálti's Illustrated Chronicle; the Chronicle of János (John) Küküllei, and the Nameless Minorite; György (George) Szermémi's Deterioration of Hungary; Miklós (Nicholas) Istvánffy's Of the History of the Hungarians, and István (Stephen) Szamosközy's Transylvanian History. – B: 1150, T: 3240.→Thuróczi, János; Bonfini, Antonio; Kálti, Márk; Istvánffy, Miklós; Szamosközy, István.

Moon Mother – In Hungarian folk tales the house of the Moon Mother stands on the summit of a steep silver mountain. This notion indicates a very ancient cultic concept. – B: 0942, T: 7677.

Moór, Artúr (Arthur) (Budapest, 8 January 1923 - Sopron, 26 August 1985) – Mathematician. After completing his general education in Szeged, where he obtained a Degree in Education (majoring in mathematics and physics) from the University. World War II and captivity interrupted his studies. He worked as a teacher in Szarvas and Debrecen for five years; then, from 1953, he was a postgraduate student, and obtained a Master's Degree (1955) and a Ph.D. in Mathematics (1964). Between 1956 and 1968 he lectured at the University of Szeged. Afterwards, until his death, he was Professor of Mathematics and Physics at the University of the Forestry and Timber Industry of Sopron. In the wide scope of his professional work, with 103 published studies and articles (mainly in German), he specialized in the Riemann and Finsler geometry and in most fields of modern differential geometry (Weyl, Cartan, Otsuki fields) with notable new results. He also treated the space theory of modern physics with some resulting publications. He was a member of the Differential Geometry School, developed in Debrecen, under the leadership of Otto Varga. He was elected member of the Japanese Tensor Society. Through two cycles, he was a member of the Mathematical Specialist Committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and President of the Sopron Chapter of the János Bolyai Mathematical Society. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Moór, Emánuel (Emmanuel) (Kecskemét, 19 February 1863 - Mont Pélerin sur Vevey, Switzerland, 20 October 1931) – Pianist, composer. He studied music at the Academies of Music in Budapest and Vienna. For two years he toured and gave concerts (for a while with Lili Lehmann) in the USA, then in England and Germany (1885-1887). He designed the Duplex-Coupler Grand Pianoforte. It had two keyboards one above the other, while reduplicated pedals rendered it easier to carry out greater jumps, bigger grasps, rapid scale passages and to provide the possibility to create new sound effects. Together with his wife, W. Christie, he introduced and exhibited the new instrument in Budapest in 1928. His works include symphonies, concertos, string quartets, violin sonatas, operas (Die Pompadour; Andreas Hofer; Hochzeitsglocken), instrumental mass and songs. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Moór, Mariann (Marian) (Budapest, 5 February 1943 - ) – Actress. After completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, the Theater of Kecskemét (Kecskeméti Színház) gave her a contract. (1965). She became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Budapest (1969); from 1984 she played at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) and, since 1992, she has been a member of the National Theater, Budapest. Early in her career, she played in dramatic roles, but later, her excellent sense of humor and style became evident. Her roles include Julika in F. Molnár's Liliom, adopted for the musical play Carousel, by Oscar Hammerstein II; Beatrix in Molnár's The Swan (A hattyú); Melinda in Katona's Bánk bán, and Roxanne in E. Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac. There are more than 40 feature films to her credit, including The Culprit is Unknown (A tettes ismeretlen) (1957); In the Current (Sodrásban) (1962); Outbreak (Kitörés) (1970); An October Sunday (Októberi vasárnap) (1979); The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) (1993), and The Unburied Dead (A temetetlen halott) (2004). Amongst her numerous TV films are: Princ, the Soldier (Princ, a katona) (series, 1966-1967); Good Evening Summer, Good Evening Love (Jó estét nyár, jó estét szerelem) (1972); The Elephant (Az elefánt) (1978); Solness Masterbuilder (Solness építőmester) (1982), and Andersen, the Fable of Fables (Andersen, a mesék meséje) (2006). She received the Mari Jászai Prize twice (1969, 1978), the Artist of Merit title (1984), the Kossuth Prize (2004), and she is Member of the Society of Immortals (2004). – B: 1445, 1504, T: 7456.

Mór O.S.B. Blessed (Maurice) (ca. 1,000 - ca. 1,070) – Roman Catholic Bishop. He attended school on the Mount of St Martin (later renamed Pannonhalma) during the reign of King István I (St Stephen) (997-1038), then he entered the Benedictine Order and became its Abbot around 1030. In 1036, King István I appointed him Bishop of the newly created Diocese of Pécs. He was unhurt during the time of the pagan revolts. Together with two priests, he crowned King András I (Andrew, 1046-1060). He witnessed and signed the founding charter of the Abbey of Tihany. He wrote the first book in Latin on the biography of András and Benedek, the two hermits of Zoborhegy. The painter, Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely immortalized him on the altar-picture of the chapel of the Basilica of Szeged. His statue is in the Abbey of Pannonhalma; a High School in Pápa and a College in Pécs bear his name. – B: 0945, 0883, T: 7103.→Gellért, Bishop, Saint.

Móra, Ferenc (Francis) (Kiskunfélegyháza, 19 July 1879 - Szeged, 8 February 1934) – Museologist, writer, journalist. He studied under difficult conditions due to his family's poverty. He obtained a Degree from the University of Budapest in Geography and Natural History; after that, for a year he was an assistant teacher in Felsőlövvő. He became a contributor for the Journal of Szeged (Szegedi Napló), and lived in Szeged from the beginning of the 20th century. Between 1913 and 1919, he was Editor-in-Chief for the same newspaper and stayed with the paper until his death. His journalistic articles and his perfectly composed special articles were published in the newspaper Southern Hungary (Délmagyarország) of Szeged. From 1904 he was the Guardian, later Director of the Somogy Library and the City Museum of Szeged. His articles about the findings at the archeological sites around Szeged and the Great Plain's (Nagyalföld) ancient settlements are of great value. His writing career began with his poetry. In his novels and short stories, he most sensitively described the defenseless peasantry. In 1905 his interests turned to youth literature. In his books: Sons of the Captive Man (A rab ember fiaia) (1909) and The Treasure-searching Small Sheepskin Mantle (Kincskereső kis ködmön) (1918), he drew on his childhood experiences and they became classics of Hungarian youth literature. His lyrical novels about the peasants are exceptional; among them is The Song of the Wheat Fields (Ének a búzamezőkről) (1932). An excellent story-telling ability, a subdued humor and a clear descriptive style using the spoken language come through in his works of fiction. His books have been translated into several languages. – B: 0883, 1153, 1257, T: 3240.

Moravcsik, Ernő Emil (Earnest), (Bér, 16 March 1858 - Budapest, 4 October 1924) – Physician. He received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest, and was a demonstrator in the Psychiatry Department of the Medical School from 1883. He became an honorary lecturer in Psychiatry (1886), Professor of Forensic Psychiatry and Psychology (1892), and Director of the Forensic Medical Observational and Mental Hospital (1896). From 1901 until his death, he was Professor of Psychiatry. In his wide field of research and publishing activity, he dealt mainly with forensic psychiatry, the psychomotor symptoms of dementia praecox, catatonic schizophrenia, and the mechanism of mental delusions. He was a member of the Société Clinique de Médecine Mentale of Paris, the Italian Società Freniatrica Italiana, and the German Verein für Psychiatrie und Neurologie. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1924). His publications include Outline of Practical Psychiatry (A gyakorlati elmeorltan vázlat) (1888, 1897); Medical Treatment of Neurological Diseases (Az idegbetegségek gyógyítása) (1903), and Mental Disorder and Therapy (Elmekór- és gyógytan) (1913). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.

Moravcsik, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 29 January 1892 - Budapest, 10 December 1972) – Philologist, historian, Byzantinologist. He studied at the University of Budapest, finishing with a Ph.D. in Art (1914). His topic was the legend of the Miraculous Stag in Hungarian mythology and the presence of the legend in Byzantine writings. In World War I, he fought on the Russian front and became a prisoner of war (1915-1920). Following his return from the captivity, at first he taught in a Budapest High School; then lectured at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest and, in 1924 he became an honorary lecturer in Mediaeval Greek Philology and Hungarian-Byzantine connections. By 1936 he was Professor and Chair of Greek Philology at the University of Budapest. In the field of Greek Philology and Byzantinology, he attained international recognition. He treated every aspect of the Hungarian-Byzantine connections, also explored and criticized their sources and single handedly succeeded in establishing Hungarian Byzantinology. In his fundamental work, the Byzantinoturcica, he brought together all the Byzantine historical sources related to the Turkic peoples, summarized the results of related historical literature complementing the results of his own studies, and added an exhaustive bibliography. For this work, he was awarded First Prize of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, where he was a corresponding member since 1934, and regular member since 1945. In addition, he was a corresponding member of the Bavarian, the then East German, Austrian, Serbian and Bulgarian Academies of Science. He translated and published with the original text 10th century Byzantine Emperor Constantinos Porphyrogenetos' On the Administration of the Empire (De administrando imeprio) (1950). His works include Daughter of King St Ladislas and the Byzantine Pantokrator Monastery (Szent László leánya és a bizánci Pantokrator-monostor) (1923); The Byzantine Sources of Hungarian History (A magyar történet bizánci forrásai) (1934), Byzantinoturcica vols. i-ii, (Budapest, 1942-1943, revised and enlarged edition, Berlin, 1958), Byzantium and the Magyars (Amsterdam-Budapest, 1970), and Einführung in die Byzantinologie (1976). He received the Kossuth Prize (1949) and an honorary doctorate from the University of Athens (1964). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Móré, Fülöp (Philippe) (csulai) (Cylanus, Philippus; Gyulai Móré Fülöp) (ca. 1470 - Mohács, 29 August 1526) –Roman Catholic Bishop, diplomat. He was educated in Bologna (1490), returned to Hungary in 1501, was Royal Secretary between 1502 and 1516, and Chief Official of the Queen's Court. Between 1512 and 1524 he was an envoy in Venice, where he was well known in humanist circles. From 1524-1526, he was Bishop of Pécs. He died in the Battle of Mohács in 1526. It is known from book dedications to him that he was an excellent poet and orator. None of his works survived. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7665.→Mohács Battles.

Morel, Gyula Keresztély S.J. (Julius Christian), (Budapest, 17 December 1927 - ) – Sociologist, Jesuit priest. He entered the Order of the Society of Jesus (SJ) in 1946. He started his university studies in Budapest in 1948, continued them in Belgium, France and Austria, studying Philosophy, Theology and Sociology. He earned his Ph.D. in Sociology from the University of Vienna. In Vienna and Munich, he did youth educational work. In 1962 he participated in organizing the Institute of Hungarian Church Sociology and has been one of its leaders since then. In 1968 he became an honorary lecturer, in 1969 a professor at the University of Innsbruck, and Head of its Institute of Sociology. Apart from general sociological issues, he was deeply involved in dealing with the position of the Hungarian Catholic Church and the sociological projection of its functioning. His works include Religion in der kommunistischen Presse (1969); Werbung für Atheismus in Ungarn (1981); Hungarian Catholicism: a Handbook, with Imre (Emeric) András (1983), and Ordnung und Freiheit, Die soziologische Perspektive (1986). – B: 1672, T: 7456.→András, Imre S.J.

Morelli, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Budapest, 20 February 1879 - Budapest, 11 January 1961) – Physician, dentist. He studied Medicine at the Universities of Berlin, Zurich, London, Paris and Budapest, and received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest (1902). From 1903 he did his internship at the No. 1 Internal Medical Clinic, Budapest, where later he became a demonstrator. During World War I, he served as a regimental Medical Officer; from 1919 he worked as physician at the Stomatology Clinic of the University of Budapest, where he organized the Department of Oral Infections. In 1923 he became an honorary lecturer of Pathology and Therapy of Oral Illnesses. From 1926 he was titular Associate Professor. From 1925 he edited the journal, Dental Review (Fogorvosi Szemle), and from 1932 to 1947 he was President of the National Dental Association. He retired in 1936. His field of research was oral symptoms of illnesses of internal medicine and the independent oral diseases. He dealt with mastication pressure and constructed a mastication-pressure meter named after him. He was very much interested in the history of dentistry. His publications appeared in Hungarian, English and German. His most important works are the Oral Illnesses (A száj betegségei) (1922), and the Connections of Hungarian Stomatology Abroad (A magyar stomatológia külföldi kapcsolatai) (1945). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Móricz János (John) (Juan Moricz) (Tokod, 1912 - Ecuador ? 2006) – Miner and discoverer. He was born into a barber's family, one of five children. The family moved to Dorog and he studied at the Benedictine High School in Esztergom. He was good in drawing and his teacher encouraged his father to send him for higher studies to the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest. His father collected a fund for this but he unfortunately was cheated out of his money. Móricz found a job as a miner at the Augusta Pit of the Salgótarján Coal Mine Company. Soon he became a pump manager, later a pay-roll clerk. In the meantime he became a member of the rightist Arrow-Cross Party. During World War II, he was conscripted into the army and served as a radio-operator. In April 1945, he and his family were evacuated to Passau, Austria, and they moved to Munich, Germany, where he studied painting.

After the war, they emigrated to Central America. Finally, they settled in Ecuador, where Móricz worked at his three leased goldmines. While he was working, he became acquainted with white Indian tribes in remote places of the country, in Peru and in the Amazon region. What struck him was that he was able to talk to them in Hungarian. He also learned that in the 1920s, Hungarian engineers had had the same experience. It was worth a thorough investigation. Móricz found four tribes there: the Cahari, the Cayapak, the Mochia and the Puruha, and discovered that he could communicate in Hungarian with the members of these tribes. For example the Cayapak used, among others, the following words: apa=apa (father); aya=anya, (mother); nap=nap (day); vin=vén (old); kit=két (two); us=ős (ancestor); cu=kő (stone), pi, bi=víz (water); fuel=foljó (river); pille=pille, lepke (butterfly), etc. Based upon Móricz's research, the Instituto de Antropología y Geografía of Quito established that Hungarian was the original language of these tribes which were almost annihilated by the Spanish conquerors. There are corresponding names such as: Tanay, Damma, Taday, Mór, Momay, Mansy, Pil, Béla, Uray, Zillahi, etc. With the help of the Indians, Móricz found a huge cave system in the jungle of Ecuador. In one of its caves he found a "museum", including a library with runic writings engraved onto golden plates, statues and cultural artifacts. He named it "The Cave of the Táltos" (Táltosok Barlangja). Encouraged by his findings, Móricz began archeological and archive research, and he collected more than ten thousand identical geographical and family names. Based upon Móricz's research a university in Argentina appointed Móricz its councilor. In the mid 1960s, Móricz disclosed his findings, which caused a world sensation, and inevitably attracted many friends, as well as adversaries, including Mormons, Romanians, Yugoslavs and Spaniards. Móricz was warned more than once that he should abandon his research work but he just went ahead. Finally, in 2006 Móricz suddenly disappeared without a trace; presumably he was murdered. – B: 2107, T: 7103.→Hungarian Runic Script.

Móricz, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Tiszacsécse, 2 July 1879 - Budapest, 5 September 1942) – Writer, journalist. He was educated at the Reformed High Schools of Debrecen, Sáropatak and Kisújszállás. His first volume of short stories, Seven Pennies (Hét Krajcár) (1909) brought him immediate popularity. His first novel, Gold Nugget (Sárarany) (1911) deviates from earlier folk themes. Its language is flowing, words pour forth in the style of great storytellers. He was a member of the Writer's Directorate during the Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919. After its collapse, he was discriminated against for a while. The novel, Be Good Unto Death (Légy Jó Mindhalálig) (1920), is still one of the most popular youth novels. In 1929 he assumed the editorship of the literary prose column for the literary review, West (Nyugat), and filled the post until 1933. In his historical trilogy he gave a tableau of 17th century Transylvania, (Erdély); (Fairy Garden (Tündérkert) (1922); The Great Reigning Prince (A nagy fejedelem) (1935), and The Shade of the Sun (A nap árnyéka) (1935), which is a literary masterpiece. His other major works include Butterfly (Pillangó) (1925); Gentry's Fun (Úri muri) (1928); Hot Fields (Forró mezők) (1929); Relatives (Rokonok) (1931); The Happy Man (A boldog ember) (1935), and the novels about the outlaw, Sándor (Alexander) Rózsa (1937-1942). His writings are characterized by high dramatic tension, identification with national heroes, poetic vision, as well as by meticulous use of language, expressing all shades of thought and feeling. He is the most outstanding Hungarian prose writer of realism in the 20th century. He received the Rothermere Award (1932). His daughter established a literary award named after him. – B: 0883, 1153, 1257, T: 7617.

Mormon Church (Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-Day-Saints – Jézus Krisztus Mai Szentjei Egyháza) – It originated in the United States. Joseph Smith in Manchester, New York founded it in 1830. Besides the Bible (especially the Letters of Paul) they honor and use as a Holy Book the Book of Mormon that teaches Jesus' earthly life, his miracles and its elected apostles in the United States. To escape persecutions, Joseph Smith and the members of his church settled in Salt Lake City, Utah, where they built their church (1853-1893). Besides Jesus Christ, they worship several persons who possess transcendent powers. They are expecting the second coming of Christ and the Last Judgment. Their worldwide community has a membership of more than 6 million. Their life is characterized by strict moral principles, a family-centered life and love of work. They renounce stimulants, even tea. One branch of the Mormons, the Mormon Fundamentalists allow polygamy. Their supreme organism is the Council of Apostles. In Hungary, their activity started in 1987 with a prayer by one of their apostles on Mount Gellért, Budapest. It gained official recognition and became a denomination in 1988. They number about 140-150. – B: 1042, T: 7390.

Morphine – An opium derivative. It is a bitter-tasting, highly addictive powder made up of needle-shaped crystals. In humans, morphine acts on the pain receptor area of the cerebral cortex to alleviate pain. It is used to relieve strong pain, and reduces the trauma and fear of death. It first paralyzes the cortex of the cerebrum, then its center, as well as the medulla oblongata and the spinal cord. In 1925, János (John) Kabai developed a procedure in Hungary for how morphine can be extracted directly from the dry poppy head. – B: 1421, 1138, T: 7660.→Kabai, János.

Mortar Sprayer Machine (Cement gun) – The engineer József (Joseph) Vass invented it in 1908. It became known as the “concrete gun” all over the world. – B: 1226, T: 7662.

Morvai, Krisztina (Christina) (Budapest, 22 June 1963 - ) – Lawyer. She studied at the Law School of the University of Budapest, where she also read Political Science and obtained her Degree in 1986. For a year, she worked as a lawyer candidate at the Law Chamber of County Pest, and acquired qualification as a judge. Since 1987 she has lectured on Penal Law at the University of Budapest. In 1989 she read Law at the King’s College of the University of London, where she earned a Master of Law (LL.M) Degree. In 1993 and 1994 she taught at the Law School of the University of Wisconsin (Madison), USA. In 1995 she became a lawyer of the European Human Rights Committee in Strasbourg. In 1993 she obtained her Ph.D. Between 2002 and 2006 she was a member of the Committee on Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) of the United Nations. Her field of research is the border area of penal law including the violence within family, prostitution, and women’s rights, and since 2006, also violence against civil rights. Her activities had an impact on the feminist movement in Hungary. She became well-known for establishing the Civil Lawyers’ Committee (Civil Jogász Bizottság) and became its Co-President following violent police attacks against a large number of people peacefully commemorating the 50th anniversary of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight in Budapest. In 2009 she was elected EU representative of the patriotic Party Jobbik, the Movement for a Better Hungary. Her studies and books include Terror in the Family (Terror a családban) (1988); Kitti – Dread and Violence – at Home (Kitti - rettegés és erőszak – Otthon) (2005), and What is Missing: the Rhetoric of Choice? (UCLA Women’s Law Journal 1995). – B: 1031, 1105, T: 7103.→Political Parties in Hungary; Gaudi-Nagy Tamás; Vona, Gábor.

Morvamező, Battle of (Battle of Dürnkrut-Still-fried) – The armies of the Holy Roman Emperor Rudolph I (Habsburg) and the Hungarian King László IV (Ladislav, 1272-1290), won this battle on 26 August 1278 against the Czech King Ottokar II. The Hungarian-Cumanian contingent, making up the right wing of the combined armies, played a deciding role in the victory. Palatine Máté of the Csák Clan led them. The Czech King was killed in the battle and his death ended the struggle for the Babenberg Succession that began in 1246, and ensured the subsequent rise of the House of Habsburg. – B: 1230, 1153, T: 7665.

Morvay, István (Stephen) (Szatmárnémeti, now Satu Mare, Romania, 16 November 1904 - Budapest, 16 April 1970) – Minister of the Reformed Church. He completed his secondary education in Budapest (1923). He studied Theology between 1926 and 1931, and was ordained in 1934. He served in Harkány, Paks and Kecskemét, also in the Hungarian Reformed Foreign Mission Federation from 1932 to 1934, and worked as an assistant minister for the Soli Deo Gloria (SDG) Student Association of the Reformed Church (1934-1939). Later, he taught religion in the schools of Budapest (1939-1943). From 13 October 1943 he was Parish Minister of the Congregation at the Valeria Settlement in Budapest, until his suspension on 13 April 1956. He was not employed by the Church from 14 April 1956 until 31 January 1959. After that, he served as a hospital chaplain in Budapest from 1 February 1959 until his death. In 1948 he established and then edited the Reformed weekly, The Way (Az Út). He wrote a number of articles in church papers. – B: 0883, 0911, T: 7456.

Móry-Szakmáry, Magda (Magda Szakmáry Móryovú) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 29 September 1905 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 8 March, 2001) – Singer, pianist. She studied piano under Laura Rappoldi-Kahrer, and singing under Luise Ottermann at the Conservatory of Music, Dresden (1921-1925). She also studied piano in Vienna under Emil von Sauer and singing under Jenny Korb (1926-1928). In 1928 and 1929, she was in Budapest and studied singing under the guidance of Teréz Krammer. In 1929, she had a six-month long concert and recording tour in England. Between 1930 and 1934, she was a soloist at the Neues Deutsche Theater in Prague, appearing in about 20 roles. From 1934, she did a concert-tour as a solo singer and pianist, appearing chiefly on the radio in Kassa, Brunn, Ostrava, Berlin, Budapest, Vienna and Pozsony, and she sang at the Opera Houses of Essen, Stuttgart, Berlin, Budapest and Prague. From 1953, she taught singing at the Bratislava Conservatory of Music. Among her students at the Opera House of Pozsony (Bratislava) were Anna Kajabova-Pedaskova, Marta Nitranova and Ruzena Illenbergerova. Her main roles were: Ännchen in Weber's Der Freischütz (A bűvös vadász); Blonde in Mozart's Il Seraglio (Entführung aus dem Serail); Musette in Puccini's La Bohème, and Marcellina in Beethoven's Fidelio. She recorded Debussy's piano works at Columbia Records, London (1929). She made several hundred TV, radio and film appearances. For political reasons, she used the pseudonym Maria Mathiarova. She was a member of the Franz Liszt Society from 1980, and received a number of prizes and awards. – B: 1083, 1031, T: 7456.

Mosdóssy, Imre (Emeric) (Imre von Mosdossy) (Budapest, 15 January 1904 - Ontario, Canada, 1995) – Painter, graphic artist. Following matriculation, he studied painting at the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest. He went on a study trip to Holland, France and Italy. He taught at the School of Industrial Design Budapest. He left Hungary in 1945 and worked in South Germany. In 1948 he moved to Paris, France, in 1949 to Colombia; then, in 1963, settled in Ontario, Canada. Between 1934 and 1942 he designed, among others, the decoration for many Hungarian exhibitions including the Hungarian Pavilion at the 1939 New York World's Fair. He painted portraits of world leaders, and made pictures for church interiors. He designed plasters for bronze: Moses, (1967); Deposition, bronze (1974); Dante Meets Beatrice, bronze (1979), and the Donald Cameron bronze medal for the Banff School of Fine Arts (1982). He designed 890 postal stamps for 10 countries, including Colombia, Canada, Haiti and Honduras. In Colombia, 11 churches have his canvases, altars, and colored mosaic windows. He also created plaques, small sculptures, medals and medallions and frescos, including a plaque of R. Pinilla, President of Colombia; H. Keller memorial plaque; and a plaque for Canada at the 750th anniversary of the death of St. Elizabeth. He edited the magazine, Sculpture. – B: 0893, 1020, 1031, T: 4342.

Mosonyi, Mihály (Michael) (until 1859, G. Brand) (Boldogasszonyfalva, 2 September 1815 - Pest, 31 October 1870) – Composer. He completed his teacher training in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), but never had a systematic music training. Between 1835 and 1843 he was a private piano tutor for the family of Baron Pejacsevich, and he started composing more seriously during these years. He moved to Pest in 1842. One of his operatic overtures was performed in 1843. In 1844 he was appointed Archivist to the Music School (Hangászegyesület) of Pest-Buda. As a member of the National Guard, he participated in the 1848-1849 War of Independence. In 1857-1858 he furthered the development of an independent Hungarian national music. He realized his ideas on reform first in smaller works for piano, then through cantatas and, finally, in major symphonic works. He started publishing his Hungarian national compositions in 1860, by then under the name of Mosonyi. As a main contributor (until 1867) to the Musical Pages (Zenészeti Lapok), started in 1860, he outlined a program of Hungarian music, based on his theoretical principles and criticism. His most significant work was the Beautiful Helena (Szép Ilonka) (1861) that made him famous. Franz Liszt conducted his Festive Music (Ünnepi Zene) in an 1865 performance. Following the 1867 Compromise, he composed less and less and eventually stopped writing music. He was a groundbreaker of the Hungarian operatic culture. – B: 0883, 0886, T: 7684. → Mihalovics, Ödön.

Most Brave City (Communitas Fortissima) – Kercaszomor, in County Vas, was awarded this title in 2008 for its brave fight against a Serbian-Coatian-Slovenian armed unit that wanted to occupy the settlement on 1 August 1920. Finally, Kercaszomor could remain in Hungary despite the Trianon-Versailles Peace Dictate (4 June 1920), which would have ceded it to Burgenland, Austria. – B: 1916, T: 7103. → Prónay, Pál; Ragged Guard; Lajta-Banate.

Most Loyal City (Civitas Fidelissima) – Title of Sopron after the 1922 plebiscite. The City, together with the area of Western Hungary (Burgenland) was ceded to Austria by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty in 1920. However, the city of Sopron and ten villages rebelled. Finally, a referendum was allowed on whether to stay with “little” Hungary or join the former part of Hungary called Burgenland, ceded to Austria. On 14 December 1922, the people cast their vote that resulted in the town’s stay within Hungary. Consequently it received the title Civitas Fidelissima, meaning the “most loyal town”. Since then, 14 December has become the town’s official holiday. – B: 1353, T: 7103. → Civitas Fidelissima; Prónay, Pál; Ragged Guard; Lajta-Banate.

Mother, Divine – The Great Divine Mother, the Magna Mater is the mother of the universe and all the gods, a supreme figure in Man’s primeval culture. She is associated with the Earth: the fruitfulness of nature. She is the preserver of earthly existence; she gives mortal body to the soul. Since nature has a dual role – heavenly and earthly – so the mission of the Mother is also contradictory. The Mother is primarily portrayed all over the world through the Tree of Life; sometimes it is symbolized just by a pillar. Receptive objects with hollow insides (horn of plenty, pottery, chest and urn) and the elements of water and earth also symbolize her. The water refers to the beginning of existence, while the earth refers to the end of life. The mother-figure of Hungarian ancient belief is the “Blessed Mother”. After converting to Christianity this changed to the form of the Virgin Mary. – B: 1621, T: 7685.→Madonna, the Great.

Mother Earth – In popular belief, she is regarded as the ancestral mother of the Hungarian nation. This belief is rooted in the ancient nature worship recorded in now extinct sacred poetry. According to Byzantine sources, the Hungarians honored the elements of fire, air and water. They sang songs honoring the Earth, while the Creator of the World was known as God. – B: 1141, T: 7682.→Mother Earth Cult.

Mother Earth Cult – Traces of it can be found practically in all cultural traditions. According to the ancient Hungarian creation belief, Earth emerged from the sea and rests on the backs of three whales. When they move, the earth rocks. In ancient traditions, the Earth was associated with motherhood that was later transformed to the Mother Earth Cult. These beliefs are supported by legends, even that God made the first man out of clay. The early 7th century Greek writer Theophylaktos Simokattes noted of the Magyars: “They venerate the Earth and praise it with songs”. Traces of mythology also point to the belief of the early Magyars that the Earth possesses protective, forgiving and cleansing qualities. As late as the beginning of the 20th century, in certain regions of Hungary, the newborn child was placed on the earthen floor of the house to purify it, for the people believed that the mother and her newborn baby were unclean for a specified period. Not only were the sick placed on the earth so that it could “suck out” the illness from their body, but also the dying to ease their agony. In Kalotaszeg (now Țara Călatei, Transylvania, now in Romania), they put some earth in the mouth of those who died unexpectedly or without the benefit of the last rites; hence they would find peace in the womb of the Earth. – B: 1078, 1621, T: 7617.→Mother Earth.

Mound Grave (kurgan) – A mound used for burials, often studded with stones. It was an ancient form of burial among the nomads, including the Scythians, during the great migration period. The ancient Magyars were also familiar with it. Most of the mound graves were found along the migration line on the Russian Steppes. The bodies with or without coffins were placed at the bottom of the mound, sometimes 20 meters high, with articles of personal use, horses and, on occasion, in company of their wives and servants, all in accordance with their afterlife beliefs. – B: 1136, T: 7617.

Mountain Crystal – A clear, transparent quartz crystal found in almost all mines of the Carpathian Basin. It was very popular in ancient times. Goblets, pitchers and vases were made of it. Various names were given to it in commerce, according to its origin, e.g. “diamond of Máramaros” (the region’s southern part is now Maramureș in Romania, its northern part now in Carpatho-Ukraine). There is a 7-cm diameter crystal orb on the top of the Hungarian Royal Scepter. For the people of Hunor this crystal may have been regarded as magical, since it is described in the Hungarian chronicles that the ancient homeland is the land where crystals are found. – B: 1078, 1153, T: 7680.→Hunor and Magor Legend.

Mountain Cult – A cult based on animism that endows lifeless objects with life or personifies them. Ancient Greeks venerated Mt. Olympus and Mt. Parnassus as the thrones of Zeus and Apollo. The Mountain Cult was found in the most highly developed Asian cultures where, according to a cosmic idea, mountains bridged Heaven and Earth. Traces of this cult are found in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), where ancient Hungarian beliefs in the mountain cult developed. In old legal customs, it played a great role. On certain days of the year, kings, princes or their emissaries and judges set up their tent on mountains to administer justice. – B: 0942, T: 7677.

Mózes, Attila (Marosvásárhely, now Targu-Mureș, Romania 8 April 1952 - ) – Writer, literary critic. In 1971 he completed his high school studies in his native town, after which he obtained a Degree in Education, majoring in Hungarian and French, at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1976. He worked as a French and sports teacher at Székelyhid. In 1979 he became Editor of the paper Útunk (Our Way) and, from late 1990, was Editor of the prose-column of Erdélyi Helikon (Transylvanian Helicon). He published an anthology of contemporary writers, entitled: Ajtó (Door); its 12 volumes include Transitions (Átmenetek), short stories (1978); Smoke Soot (Füstkorom) short stories (1984); Indian Summer (A vénasszonyok nyara) small novel (1991); Western Wandering (Nyugati vándorlás) (2000), and History of Dissolute Times (Céda korok történelme), (2004). Attila Mózes is one of the significant members of the Transylvanian contemporary generation of writers. He is a recipient of the György Méhes Grand Prix (2002) and the Prose Prize of the Romanian Writers' Association (1981, 1983, 1986, 2004). – B: 1257, 1742, T: 7456.

Mócsi, Ferenc (Francis) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 3 May 1924 - ) – Educator. He completed his secondary education in 1944, at Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia), then studied Hungarian History and Music through correspondence course of the Department of Fine Arts at the University of Pozsony (1950-1959). In 1972 he received a Ph.D. from the University of Budapest, where he taught between 1950 and 1960, later becoming Headmaster of the Pedagogical School of Komárom (now Komarno, Slovakia) that subsequently became a Training College for Kindergarten Teachers. He was Section Head at the Department of Minority Issues in the Slovakian Ministry of Education (1960-1978). He was Professor and Head of the Department of Divinity of the University of Pozsony (1978-1987). He was member of the Didactics Subcommittee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1972-1978). His educational and esthetics-related articles were published, among others, in journals such as the Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle); Adult Education (Népművelés); Socialist Education (Szocialista Nevelés), and On Bilingualism (A kétnyelvűségről); he was Editor for this journal (1967-1979). His works include Preserving and Surpassing (Megőrizve meghaladni) a series: Why Beautiful? (Miért szép?); Let Music Belong to Everybody,

From the Folksong to the Symphony (Legyen a zene mindenkié. A népdaltól a szimfóniáig) (1961); On the Development of Schools with Hungarian as the Language of Instruction in Czechoslovakia, from the Viewpoint of the Teacher (A csehszlovákiai magyar tannyelvű iskolák fejlődéséről, tanítói szemmel) (1961); Teachers' Manuals (1969-1970); Let us Sing (Énekeljünk), for various grades, co-authored (1971, 1977, 1979, 1984); Development of the Mother Tongue in the Kindergarten (Az anyanyelv fejlesztése az óvodában), and Music Education for Various Schools and Grades (Zenei nevelés) (1973, 1976, 1985-1987, 1989). He wrote more than 40 textbooks. His main work is: The Kaleidoscope of Hungarian-Slovak Cultural Connections (A magyar- szlovák kulturális kapcsolatok kaleidoszkópja), textbook, with Imre Bertók (1975). – B: 1083, 1692, T: 7456.

Mudi – Name of a Hungarian shepherd dog used to drive and herd sheep. When the definite characteristics of the other Hungarian dogs, the “puli” and “pumi” came about, it was discovered that there existed another type of shepherd dog. Its development goes back to the turn of the 19-20th century. Elek (Alec) Fényes, Museum Director of Balassagyarmat first described it, named it, and organized its breeding. The mudi has a proportionate body structure, lively temperament and is hardy and energetic. Its hair is 3-7-cm long, shiny and black, occasionally speckled with white or completely white. It is quite wavy or curly but straight and short on the head. It weighs about 8-13 kg. The ears are upstanding, head elongated, body slopes toward the rear with a hanging tail. The breed is much favored for shepherding but its breeding is so far not sufficiently organized. – B: 1562, T: 7684.→Hungarian domestic animals; Herding dogs; Komondor; Puli; Pumi.

Muharay, Elemér (Elmer) (Hajtapuszta near Jászberény, 20 October 1901 - Budapest, 2 February 1960) – Actor and theater manager. His schooling was interrupted a number of times. In 1922 he completed the course at the Acting and Theatre Management School of Mattyasovszky-Bolváry; however, he could not find work in his field, so he undertook casual work. From 1926 to 1928 he traveled abroad, studying the theatrical life of France and Germany, already noting the possibilities of combining folk art and modern art pursuits. In 1928 he returned to Hungary and contracted to work as an actor and manager in country troops. In 1931 Muharay opened the Elizabeth Theater at Pesterzsébet (southeast suburb of Budapest), starting the action “Classical Series with Cheap Rent” and beginning to organize the laborers. However, the administration of the suburb withdrew their permission to use the premises. For a short time, he worked in the Magyar Theater, but for similar reasons, he was expelled. In 1934 he joined the organization of the New Thalia Theater (Új Tália Színház). From 1934 to 1936 he took part in the editing of the journal Hungarian Writing (Magyar Írás), and was also its theater and film-critic; at the same time, he wrote articles for the Prague Hungarian Weekly (Prágai Magyar Hetilap). From 1935 until 1937 he edited the journal People of the East (Kelet Népe). In 1936 he established the Artist Studio (Művész Stúdió) to develop Hungarian acting and dancing, in the spirit of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. In 1938 the Artist Studio was closed down by the police. In the same year Muharay launched the village-stage movement. In the meantime, he was expelled from all the villages of the country. In 1939 and 1940 he founded the folk group of the Vasas Stage Actors; however, the performances were disallowed by the police. In May 1941 he organized the large-scale Open-air Plays of Csíksomlyó in the presence of 20,000 people, where he also included one of the mystery plays of the Csíksomlyó Franciscans. In 1942 he was asked to lead the Levente Central Artist Ensemble, which had great success in Weimar and Florence. During the German occupation of Hungary in March of 1944, the Ensemble broke up. He and several members of the Ensemble took active part in the resistance movement. In March 1945 he joined the National Peasant Party and, on 15 March, he launched the folk theatrical group with more than 150 performances. In 1951 the Folk Art Institute was formed, the ethnographic section of which he led until his death. Muharay was a legendary teacher and organizer. His memory is preserved in the Muharay Prize, the Folk-Art Association, and a folkdance ensemble named after him. – B: 2052, T: 7456.

Müller, Baron Ferenc József (Franz Joseph) (Müller von Reichenstein) (Nagyszeben, now Sibiu, Romania, 1 July 1740 - Vienna, 12 October 1825) – Mineralogist, explorer. Initially he studied Law and Art at the University of Vienna; then, from 1763 he studied at the Mining Academy of Selmechánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). In 1768 he was appointed mining engineer for the mines of Southern Hungary. In 1770 he became Director of the Bánát Mines and, from 1778 he worked as a mining consultant in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In the same year he identified the mineral, Tourmaline in the Tyrol, and in 1872 the chemical element, Tellurium, in the gold-ore found at Nagyszeben (now Sibiu Transylvania, Romania). Emperor Joseph II (1780-1790) put him in charge of all the Transylvanian mines in 1788. In 1798 he was entrusted with the administration of the Viennese Center of the Transylvanian Board of Mines. He retired in 1818. In his honor the Hyalite glass was renamed Müller-glass. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Mundzuk (Mundiochos, Munduguz, Bendeguz, 5th century) – Hun Reigning Prince, youngest son of Prince Balambér, ruler of the eastern branch of the Huns, who played a less significant role in the historical events than his brothers Oktar and Rua. His sons were Buda (Bléda) and Attila. According to the Illustrated Chronicles, and Thuróczy's Chronicle of the Magyars, the returning Csaba, the youngest son of Attila, also known as Irnik, found him aged but in good health. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7658.→Attila; Buda.

Munich Codex (also called Jászay Codex after its first copier, Pál Jászay) (Tatros, now Târgu-Troțuș, Transylvania, in Romania) – The earliest complete section in Hungarian of the Hussite Bible Text in Bastarda script on paper and parchment, with 125 letters of 200x135 mm size, containing the Hungarian translation of the four Gospels, presumably for the use of the local Hungarian Hussite congregation. The so-called “wheel calendar”, at the front covers the years from 1416 to 1435; the first number indicates the approximate beginning of the translation. According to the Codex the manuscript was translated by György (George) Némethi in the Moldovan town of Tatros in 1466. In the volume, apart from his handwriting, the work of two further hands may be recognized. At the beginning of the Codex, the very first Hungarian-language calendar may be seen, valid for the years 1416 to 1435. The first sheet, which contains the calendar, is parchment, but the rest of the Codex is written on paper. The Munich, Viennese and Apor Codices are integrally interconnected: the three memorials preserved various parts of the earliest Hungarian Bible translations, recorded by the scholarly literature as the Hussite Bible. According to a note in the volume, the Codex, at a later stage, became the property of Albrecht Widmanstetter (1506-1557), one of the best-known humanists, diplomats and book-collectors of the era. After the death of Widmanstetter, his books, together with the Codex, were acquired by Bavarian Prince Albrecht V, in 1558. This language relic, earlier referred to as the Jászay Codex, named after the first publisher of scholarly literature, was probably discovered by Gábor (Gabriel) Fejérváry in 1833. The Codex received its current title after the place where it is kept at present. – B: 1136, 1257, 1552, T: 7456. → Hussite Bible; Tatros Bible; Apor Codex; Viennese Codex; Bible in Hungarian; Codex Literature.

Munich Agreement – It was made and signed on 29-30 September 1938, by Chamberlain and Daladier, the English and French Prime Ministers respectively, and by Hitler and Mussolini, Heads of State of Germany and Italy, at their meeting in Munich. In the four-power agreement, Great Britain and France obliged Czechoslovakia to concede the Sudetenland with its three million ethnic Germans to Germany. The Prime Ministers of Great Britain and France were indifferent to the Hungarian territorial demands supported by Mussolini. The Czech, Romanian and Croatian governments did not object to the liberation of Hungarian minorities in the southern part of Czechoslovakia (Slovakian section previously Upper Hungary, Felvidék), nor to the Polish territorial claims. On Hitler's proposal, the Munich Agreement referred the settlement of these claims to direct Hungarian-Polish-Czechoslovakian negotiations to be held at a later date. However, these negotiations became the responsibility of Czechoslovakia. After negotiations between the Czechoslovakian and Hungarian delegates, an agreement was reached, according to which the Hungarian populated southern strip of Slovakia was to be returned to Hungary, the territories with mixed population were equally divided. This was signed at the First Vienna Award on 30 September 1938. With it some 600 thousand Hungarians returned to the mother country. This was the only rectification of the fundamentally unjust Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate (1920). Both partners considered this agreement as just. After World War II, the victors abolished this agreement, although it was signed in peacetime, before the outbreak of World War II. – B: 1138, 1030, 7103, T: 7665, 7103. → Trianon Peace Treaty; Hitler, Adolf; Mussolini, Benito; Vienna Award I; Paris Peace Dictate.

Munk, Peter (Budapest, 8 November 1927 - ) – Businessman, industrialist and philanthropist. He was born into a well-to-do Jewish family. He was a teenager when German troops occupied Hungary in March 1944. With the help of Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat, his family escaped from being deported to Auschwitz, because they were offered seats on the Kastner train transporting 1684 Jewish refugees to safety in Switzerland. This was an arrangement between Rudolf Kastner of the Zionist Aid and Rescue Committee and senior SS Officer Adolf Eichmann. They first stayed in Switzerland, then, in 1948, they settled in Canada. He earned his living as a laborer on the tobacco farms of Ontario. He studied at the University of Toronto and graduated as an electrical engineer in 1952. However, he began a career in business. In 1958 he founded Clairtone of Canada, with business partner David Gilmour, manufacturing stereos and later televisions. The best-known Clairtone designs were the “Project G” series, seen in the film The Graduate. In the 1970s he founded and became Chairman and CEO of Southern Pacific Hotel Corporation, the largest hotel and restaurant chain in Australasia. He was also founder of the Trizec Properties, and became involved in the resort business as well. He bought hotels in Fiji and soon he had 54 luxury hotels. He later sold them for $300 million. While in Toronto, he bought an exhausted American gold mine that, with modern methods, he made profitable again. Munk is the founder and chairman of the mining company Barrick Gold, the world’s largest gold-mining corporation. From the profits, Munk bought 117 skyscrapers, which he rented out as offices. Their revenue brings in $1 billion per year. He built the Polus Center, the West End City Center, and the New City Center on the Danube promenade in Budapest. He is Head of the Trizec-Hahn Corporation, one of North America’s largest real estate companies. He founded the Horsham Corporation in 1987, to identify and develop strategic business opportunities. His principle on wealth is that what originates from society must be returned to it. He donated $37 million to Toronto General Hospital in 2006; this donation supported the Peter Munk Cardiac Centre, which he originally created with a $6 million donation in 1997. He is a member of many volunteer associations and is an Honorary Doctor of Upsala College, NJ. (1991), the University of Toronto (1993), Bishop’s University, Quebec (1995) and the T.I. Institute of Technology, Haifa. He is an Officer of the Order of Canada (1993) and was promoted to Companion in 2008, and a recipient of the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1997). He is a member of the World Gold Council. – B: 1031, 1037, T: 7103, 7456.→Wallenberg, Raul.

Munkács (Ukrainian: Mukacheve; Czech: Mukačevo) – Town in the northeast of Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin and in the northeastern edge of the Great Hungarian Plain; since 1990 in Carpatho-Ukraine. In the inter-war years (1920-1938), it was ceded to Czechoslovakia by the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920); then returned to Hungary (1938-1945) by the First Vienna Award in 1938. After World War II, Carpatho-Ukraine (Transcarpathia, or Ruthenia) was annexed by the Soviet Union, and in 1991 fell to the Ukraine. It is on the left banks of the Latorca (Latoritsy) River, tributary of the Bodrog, then the Tisza (past the town of Tokaj). Munkács is an attractive town at the foot of the Northeastern Carpathians (128m above sea level) with the historic Rákóczi castle, a monastery (both from the 14th c.), a Baroque-style palace (from the mid-18th c.), the old salt-loft, several churches (including a wooden church from the 18th century built in Ruthenian architectural style), and some public buildings. Two kilometers southwest of the town, built on a 60m-high trachyte cliff, rises the Castle of Munkács, dating from 1352. The town has administrative authorities, high schools, and a lively trading life; in its fairs, timber, domestic animals and mineral water of Transcarpathia get exchanged for the agricultural products of the Great Plain. Industry is represented by sawmills, furniture factories, paper, chemical, textile, tobacco, wine and canned-food factories, brick-works, flour mills and petroleum refineries. Its population was 14,416 in 1901 (Hungarians, Germans and Ruthenians, by religion: 6,567 Jews, 3,493 Greek-Catholics and 2,751 Roman-Catholics; 29,400 Ruthenians, Jews and Slovaks in 1930. In 1991 it had 81,600 inhabitants, including 62,900 Ukrainians (Ruthenians), 7,300 Russians, 6,900 Hungarians and 1,100 Gypsies. In its history, the town was influenced by the Holy Roman Empire (Germany) from the west and the Kievan, followed by Russian Principality from the east. The Magyars, led by Khagan Árpád, during their occupation of the Carpathian Basin, first reached and took Munkács in the narrow valley of the Latorca River after entering through the Verecke Pass (according to 12th century chronicler, Anonymus) and other passes of the Northeastern Carpathian Mountains. Under King István I of Hungary (St. Stephen, 997-1038), Munkács was already known as a town. After the 1241-1242 invasion by the Mongol-Tartars, who also used the same Carpathian passes, the town was a royal estate; later, it was ruled by Máté (Matthew) Csák (ca. 1260-1321). King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxemburg, 1387-1437) donated it to the Russian Prince, Theodor Koriatowich in 1397. From the 15th century the town changed ownership a number of times. From 1445-1493, it was Hunyadi property; from 1606, Prince István (Stephen) Bocskai (1605-1606) owned it; from 1614, it belonged to Count Miklós (Nicholas) Esterházy (1582-1645), and still later, to Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629). Its castle-fort was heroically defended by Ilona (Helen) Zrinyi (1643-1703), wife of the freedom fighter Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly (1657-1705), against the besieging Austrian forces under Caraffa, from 1686 till 1688, and it was only surrendered as a result of treachery. Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1703-1711), retook it in 1704. It became the estate of the Schönborn family in 1731. In 1834, the fortress was burned down. In the 1848-1849 War of Independence, it was an important military base. On 6 January 1939, Czech troops attempted to capture the town by surprise, but they were repulsed by the Hungarian Ragged Guard. In the 19th century, the fort was used as a jail. Munkács is the birthplace of the great painter Mihály Munkácsy (1844-1900). – B: 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 7456, T: 7456.→Anonymus; István I, King; Csák, Máté; Zsigmond I. Munkács Castle (now Mukacheve Castle or Palanok Castle, Ukraine). – Anonymus, the 11-12th century chronicler, reported that this was the place the Magyars occupied first, after entering the Carpathian Basin in 895. They named the place Munkás after the word munkás (laborer). The place was probably already a settlement from the later part of the Stone Age. Anonymus did not mention its castle. King Károly I (Charles, 1307-1342) donated it to the Russian Prince Koriatovich (1339), who settled Russians on his estate. Among its owners were: György (George) Barankovics, János (John) Hunyadi, King Mátyás (Matthias Corvinus), and his son János (John) Korvin, who owned 30 villages with the castle. After the military disaster of Mohács (1526), it is mentioned as a royal castle and its importance grew. Countess Ilona (Helen) Zrinyi, wife of Prince Imre (Emeric) Thököly defended the Castle of Munkács for three years (1686-1689) against the Austrian Imperial Army and, with it, her husband's cause. She had to give it up due to treason. Reigning Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II modernized the castle with the help of French military engineers. After the Szatmár Peace Treaty (1711) the Munkács Castle

continued its resistance for two more months, with its leader István (Stephen) Szennyei. The Austrians turned the castle into a prison. The castle burned down in 1834. The Hungarian Army captured it from the Austrians; but its commander, Pál (Paul) Mezőssy, had to surrender it on 26 August 1849. It was ceded to Czechoslovakia, together with Sub-Carpathia, in the Dictated Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty, after World War I (1920); Hungary regained it as the result of the First Vienna Award (1938), lost it again at the end of 1944, this time to the Soviet Union. During the Soviet era, the castle was used as a school for tractor drivers. In 1991, after the collapse of the Soviet Union, it became part of the Ukraine by virtue of inheritance. Now there is a museum in the castle and there is an ongoing renovation of its buildings. – B: 0942, 1030, 1078, T: 7103.→Anonymus; Zrinyi, Countess Ilona; Thököly, Prince Imre; Rákóczi, II. Munkács Catholic Diocese (now Mukacheve, Ukraine) – A short historical overview from its inception to the present divides it into four periods: the period preceding the founding of the Szatmár Bishopric; the period of the Szatmár Bishopric; the period after the First World War, and the events during and after the Soviet Union.

1) When the Magyars settled in the Carpathian Basin in the last quarter of the 9th century, they followed a Turkic religious cult. By the middle of the 10th century however, the Hungarian rulers were ready to adopt Christianity. The question as to which one to join, the Eastern (Greek) or Western (Roman) rite, was decided by the political circumstances of the period. The Pope and King St István I (St Stephen, 997-1038) charged Anastasius-Astrik, first Bishop of Kalocsa, later Bishop of Esztergom, with the organization of the Hungarian Roman Catholic Church. He divided the country into seven dioceses, each encompassing huge territories that included the Transylvanian Bishopric, founded in 1009. The Sub-Carpathian area belonged to it until 1346; then it was attached to the Diocese of Eger. A contemporary document in the Vatican Archives lists more than 50 churches under its jurisdiction.

2) The independent Catholic Bishopric of Szatmár was established on 23 March 1804, and given legal status by the Pope on 8 August of the same year. The new Bishopric, besides the County of Szatmár, included the counties of Máramaros, Ugocsa and Ung. Until the end of the First World War, the Diocese was under the subsequent governance of nine bishops.

3) During the governance of the 9th bishop, Dr. Tibor (Tibor) Boromissza (1906-1928), the diocese abounded in new religious establishments. However, to this period fell the short-lived 1919 Communist Dictatorship, followed by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate of 1920 that resulted in the break-up of the country and of the diocese. The re-drawing of the political borders of Hungary made the governing of the diocese problematic, for Transylvania was ceded to Romania, Upper Hungary and the Sub-Carpathian region went to the newly created Czechoslovakia, while Southern Hungary went to the newly-created Yugoslavia, and a slice on Hungary's western border went to Austria. In this new situation, the Bishop was eager to normalize relations with Romania. As his jurisdiction extended to the parishes now situated in Czechoslovakia, he established an Apostolic Governorship (Apostoli Kormányzás) at Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine). During his governorship, the new Canon Law Codex of 1917 came into force. In 1926, Bishop Boromissza compiled a new Constitution for the Szatmár

Diocese. Upon his death on 9 July 1928, István (Stephen) Szabó succeeded him as Capitular of the local Chapter. On 7 July 1929 the Holy See concluded a Concord with Romania containing many disadvantageous provisions for the Hungarian Catholic Church in Transylvania. With it, the Szatmár Diocese lost its jurisdiction over the parishes situated in the Sub-Carpathian region of Czechoslovakia. In 1930, an Apostolic Governorship was created for the Sub-Carpathian region, with its seat at Ungvár. When the First Vienna Award of 2 November 1938 re-attached parts of Slovakia and also Sub-Carpathia to Hungary, the Apostolic Holy See unified the parishes of the re-attached territories with the Apostolic Governorship of Mérék in Hungary, and a Special Bull placed it under the jurisdiction of István (Stephen) Madarász, Bishop of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). The provisions of the Second Vienna Award of 30 August 1940, re-attached from Romania to Hungary a large part of northwestern Transylvania (Erdély). Consequently the two dioceses were integrated into the Hungarian Church hegemony. Sub-Carpathia once again became part of the Szatmár Diocese. After the winds of World War II swept over the territory, the new bishop Dr. János (John) Scheffler, following instructions received from Rome, gave special 'assignments' to the parishes: who should be the next local vicar in the event the vicar should be arrested, or who should keep in contact with the bishop would prove to be difficult.

4) After the Soviet forces occupied the Sub-Carpathian region in World War II, on 27 September 1944, the situation became virtually impossible. At the Paris Peace Conference on 10 February 1947, the Szatmár Diocese was broken up into four parts: 13 parishes went to Czechoslovakia, 40 to Sub-Carpathia (then part of the Soviet Union), 55 to Romania, while 27 remained in Hungary. The Soviet terror reached the Catholic Church as well. Many of the priests were accused of treason or subversive activities. The keeping of Church registers was officially forbidden, but the priests managed to keep records nonetheless. Only the celebration of Mass and funerals were allowed. Religious instructions were also forbidden. After the terror eased somewhat and several of the priests returned from the concentration camps, the newly created Communist-run Bureau for Church Administration attempted to take over the running of the churches. They succeeded in winning over a few priests, who tried to exercise their newly acquired authority and run the Sub-Carpathian Diocese. The appointment of new priests was not allowed without the consent of the Bureau. The most severely punishable activity was the religious instruction of children. The decisive change in the life of the Sub-Carpathian Diocese began in the spring of 1989, when Cardinal László (Ladislav) Paskai, Archbishop of Esztergom, visited the region. Soon after that, the Soviet Union consented to allow Hungarian priests to serve there. In 1991, following the dissolution of the Soviet Union, Ukraine inherited the Sub-Carpathian region. Now it is called Carpatho-Ukraine. In 1992 the Holy See appointed Archbishop Antonio Franco, Apostolic Nuncio of Ukraine, as the Ordinarius of the Sub-Carpathian region. There was great rejoicing when, after 46 years, they ordained the first Hungarian priest in the person of Sándor (Alexander) Pap. On 14 August 1993, a resolution of the Holy See established the Apostolic Governorship of Sub-Carpathia. On 20 August 2000, on the occasion of the Hungarian millennial celebrations in the town of Aknaszlatina, (now Solotvina), the pontiff blessed a group statues of Hungarian saints.

An important event in the life of the Church took place on Ash Wednesday, 27 March 2002, when Pope John Paul II announced in the Vatican that he had elevated the Apostolic Governorship of Sub-Carpathia to the level of a Diocese. With this act, he founded the Munkács Diocese for the Roman Catholic adherents and named as first bishop of the Diocese, Antal (Anthony) Majek. – B: 1027, 1078, T: 7456.→Atrocities against Hungarians; Catholic Church in Hungary.

Munkácsi, Bernát (Bernard) (Munk until 1881) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 12 March 1860 - Budapest, 21 September 1937) – Linguist and ethnologist. He studied at the University of Budapest and obtained a Degree in Education. In 1880 he traversed the Hungarian Csángó villages on the eastern slopes of the Carpathian Mountains, in order to investigate their language and customs. In 1885, with the assistance of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, he took a study trip abroad, working among the Votyaks (Udmurts) in the Kama River area, and among the Chuvash in Simbirsk. During 1888 and 1889 he studied the Voguls (Mansi) in Western Siberia. In 1890 he was appointed School Inspector of the Jewish parish of Pest. Munkácsi was Editor of the journal Ethnographia for a long time and, in 1900 with Ignac Kunos, he launched the journal Eastern Review (Keleti Szemle) (Revue Orientale). In 1904 he organized the Hungarian Committee of the International Central and Eastern Asian Society. During World War I (1915-1918) he collected linguistic and ethnographic material amongst Votyak and Ossetian prisoners in the prisoner-of-war camps. In 1919, during the months of the Soviet Council Republic, he became Professor of Comparative Linguistics. He succeeded in explaining the Vogul (Mansi) texts left behind in the bequest of Antal Reguly. He published numerous linguistic and ethnographic studies. He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1890, ordinary 1910). His works include The Dialect of the Csángós of Moldova (A moldvai csángók nyelvjárása) (1881); Chuvash Linguistic Notes (Csuvas nyelvészeti jegyzetek) (1887-1890); More Recent Additions to the Turkic Elements of the Hungarian Language (Újabb adalékok a magyar nyelv török elemeihez)(1887); Linguistic Studies in the Land of the Voguls (Nyelvészeti tanulmányok a vogulok földjén) (1889); Dictionary of the Votyak Language (A votják nyelv szótára)(1896); Addenda to the old Turkic and Mongolian Elements in the Hungarian Language (Adalékok a magyar nyelv régi török és mongol elemeihez)(1902); Aryan and Caucasian Elements in the Finn-Hungarian Languages (Árja és kaukázusi elemek a finn-magyar nyelvekben) (1901), and Collection of Vogul Folk-poetry (Vogul népköltési gyűjtemény) (1893-1921). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.

Munkácsy, Mihály (Michael; Lieb, Mihály Leó) (Munkács, now Mukacheve, Ukraine, 20 February 1844 - Endenich, Germany, 1 May 1900) – Painter. His artistic talent developed early. After the premature death of his parents in 1850, he moved in with his uncle in modest circumstances, due to his uncle's involvement in the War of Independence. He became a carpentry apprentice at the age of 11. The physical and psychological abuse from his carpentry master greatly influenced his entire life. After his certification, he returned to his uncle in ill health and started to study drawing. The Letter Reader (Levélovasó) (1863) was his first painting, made in the town of Gerendás (northeast of Szeged), then he left for Budapest. His patrons sent him to Vienna to study at the Academy of Fine Arts. The famous Easter Sprinkling (Húsvéti locsolás), reflecting some Rubenesque influence was the result. Following his return to Hungary, he painted another famous canvas, The Gloomy Shepherd (Búsuló juhász), which illustrates a return to Hungarian traditions. The following year he was accepted at the Munich Academy.

Among his many works of this period, Storm in the Puszta (Vihar a pusztán) was acknowledged by the Hungarian artistic upper crust. On a state sponsorship he went to the World Exhibition in Paris in 1867, and gathered life-long experiences. Following his return to Munich, he studied genre painting and did another famous piece, The Yawning Servant (Ásító inas). In 1869 he created his first internationally well-known work, Condemned Cell (Siralomház), which reflects the outlaw period following the War of Independence (1848-1849). Subsequently he went to France and settled in Paris. The following well-known works emerged from his studio: Drifters of the Night (Éjjeli csavargók); The Churning Woman (Köprülő asszony) (1873), and In the Pawnshop (Zálogházban) (1874). He married in Paris, and the years there influenced and guided his interest into a different direction. During those years he painted Milton (1878). He received the Grand Golden Prize at the international exhibition in Paris for this painting, and success followed it in Europe and America. He painted a fresco, The Magyars Settling in Hungary (Honfoglalás) (1893), for the Hungarian Parliament's Presidential Reception Hall for the millennium celebration of 1896. His style, especially in the Great Hungarian Plain (Alföld), has greatly influenced the works of Hungarian and international painters alike. His most famous work is the almost life-size Christ Trilogy: Christ Before Pilate (1881), now owned by the Hamilton Art Gallery, Canada; Ecce Homo (1896), now owned by the Déry Museum of Debrecen; and Golgota (1884), now owned by Imre Pákh, an American-Hungarian art collector. However, the Trilogy is on permanent display at the Déry Museum of Debrecen since 1995. Munkácsy started to write his own biography in the 1880s, but only reached the age of 19. Hundreds of his letters are preserved and they are interesting additions to his biography. Munkácsy was a highly talented, brilliant romantic painter, with deep and sensitive knowledge of man and his society. He is the first Hungarian painter to receive world fame, recognition and acclaim. – B: 0934, 0883, 1136, T: 7653. → Lyka, Károly.

Murádin, Jenő (Eugene) (Harasztos, now Calarai, Romania, 23 November 1937 - ) – Art historian. He completed his higher studies, majoring in History and Philosophy, at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1963. He was Art Editor for the daily newspaper, Truth (Igazság) of Kolozsvár (1966-1988), and was Editor-in-Chief of the children's literary paper, Sunshine (Napsugár) (1988-1990). Since 1990 he has been an associate of the paper. As a reader, starting from 1991, he lectures at the Ion Andreescu Academy of Fine Arts, Kolozsvár. His books and monographs include The Miklós (Nicholas) Barabás Guild (A Barabás Miklós Céh) (1978); The Ferenczy Family of Artists in Transylvania (A Ferenczy művészcsalád Erdélyben) (1981); István (Stephen) Nagy (1984); Nagybánya: Artists of the Painters' Colony (Nagybánya, a festőtelep művészei) (1994) (Nagybánya now Baia Mare, Romania); Hundred Years of Nagybánya (Nagybánya 100 éve), co-author (1996), and the Schools of Fine Art in Transylvania (Erdélyi festőiskolák), (1997). – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Muraköz (now Medimrje, Croatia) – A triangular area of 730 km<sup>2</sup> between the Rivers Mura and Dráva. In the west, it is on the slopes of Alpine foothills, while on the east, it touches the Pannonian plains. The area has been inhabited since the Stone and Bronze Ages, but its original inhabitants are still uncertain. Subsequently, the Celts, Serets and Pannons inhabited it in the Iron Age. It became part of the Roman Empire; Strabo called it Insula intra Dravam et Muram (island between the Dráva and Mura Rivers). Various peoples owned this territory for a while, including the Huns, Visigoths and Ostrogoths. King István I (St Stephen) (997-1038) donated it to the Bishop of Veszprém; King Béla IV (1235-1270) gave the region to Dömötör (Demetrius) Csák, who built the Castle of Csáktornya (now Cakovec). The area belonged to Hungary with intermittent brief foreign control. From the time of Hungarian King László I (St Ladislav, 1077-1095), after decades of inner struggles, it was Hungarian territory for 800 years by “personal union” under the name “Land of the Holy Crown of St. Stephen”. Croatian statehood was preserved through a number of institutions, notably the Sabor, the assembly of Croatian nobles, and the “Ban” or viceroy. Furthermore, the Croatian nobles retained their lands and titles. Most of the land belonged to the Zrinyi family. Miklós (Nicholas) Zrinyi (1620-1664), distinguished himself in fighting against the Turks. Muraköz was later sold to the Festetics family.

At the end of 1918 – the last year of World War I – irregular Serbian units unsuccessfully invaded Muraköz. During the last days of 1918, a larger, 4000-man “volunteer” army crossed the Dráva and accomplished the occupation of Muraköz; however, in 1919, the citizens drove the Serb occupying forces out, although the presence of the French army secured Serbian rule. On 3 March of that year, protest demonstrations took place in every village, demanding the return of the region to Hungary. The Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty (1920) ceded it to the newly created Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes (later Yugoslavia). After breaching the Treaty with the Third Reich, signed on 25 March 1941, the German military forces overran Yugoslavia. As a result, Croatia was recreated and Muraköz returned to Hungary only on 9 July 1941, on the forceful demand of its people, and was under Hungarian rule between 1941 and 1945. After World War II, Muraköz became part of the restored Yugoslavia again. With it the oppression of Hungarians started. Eleven prominent Hungarians were executed, many imprisoned, and many more dispersed to other parts of Yugoslavia. Since Croatia regained its independence on 24 June 1991, Muraköz became part of it. Today, Muraköz has three major cities: Csáktornya, Murszerdahely (now Murska Sredisčée) and Perlak (now Prelog), and 21 villages. A part of the traditional Muraköz today belongs to Slovenia (now Perkmurje). There are altogether 20 Hungarian settlements, among them towns and villages. Its center is Lendva (Lendava). In 1991, 7,696 Hungarians lived in the area, out of 8,493 Hungarians in Slovenia. Approximately the same number of Hungarians live in the Croatian side of Muraköz. – B: 0942, 1031, 1078, 1230, 1689, 7456, T: 7103, 7456.

Muraközi Horse (Muraközi ló) – A heavy draft-horse, native to Hungary. Its breeding was centered in Muraköz along the River Mura in Southern Hungary, at the end of the 19th, the beginning of the 20th century. The foundation stock was native Hungarian mares (known as Mur-Insulan), Ardennais, Percherons (from Belgium), Norikers (from Austria), and some Hungarian half-bred stallions, and this produced a quick-moving and alert horse. The Muraközi horse was very popular with farmers and was used extensively by the army in both world wars. Today, it is still used on the land, although its numbers have dwindled. This breed is classified as cold-blooded. There are two types of the Muraközi. One is a heavy horse that stands 16 hands high or more. The second is a lighter, more active, general type of horse. The color of this breed is usually a chesnut coat with a flaxen mane and tail. Muraközi horses have a compact and very powerful physical structure. The horse's tail is set low, and the hind quarters are very round and muscled. These horses usually mature early on in life. Their temperament is calm and even. Muraközi horses are bred in Hungary, in Poland, and in the former countries of Yugoslavia. – B: 0942, 2043, T: 7103.

Muraközy, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 13 May 1892 - Budapest 31 August 1961) – Minister of the Reformed Church, poet and writer. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest (1910-1914), and at the University of Montauban, France (1910-1911). He was in France again in 1919, in 1923 at Montpellier, as well as in the USA in 1928. He served as Assistant Minister in the Calvin Square Church, Budapest (1915-1918), Minister in Kecskemét, (1918-1932), and at the Calvin Square Church, Budapest (1932-1955, 1957-1961). He retired due to political pressure in 1955, but resumed his ministry in the Calvin Square Church after the 1956 Revolution, from 1957 until his death. he also served as General Secretary of the Ecumenical Council of the Hungarian Churches (1957-1961). He was Editor of the Reformeds' Paper (Reformátusok Lapja), Kecskemét; Editor of Reformeds' Life (Református Élet) from 1933 to 1944; the Reformed Observer (Református Figyelő), and from 1945 that of the Life and Future (Élet és Jövő). He edited the periodical Theological Review (Theológiai Szemle). He was Editor-in-Chief of the bilingual lithographed ecumenical periodical, Church Press, from 1957. Muraközy was an excellent orator and a prolific writer. His most notable works are: Life and Death (Élet és halál), meditations (1915) Human Life (Emberélet) (1917); Evening in the Forest (Este az erdőn) poems (1921); Socialism, the Jewish Question, Catholicism, and the Hungarian Future (Szocializmus, zsidókérdés, katholicizmus és a magyar jövő) studies, lectures, sermons (1922); The Book of the Preacher (A prédikátor könyve) (1929); The Problems of the Reformed [Presbyterian] Hungarians (A magyar reformátusság problémái) (1929); Midnight Talks (Éjféle beszélgetések) poems (1932); The Triumphant Life (A diadalmas élet) (1933); The Invisible Church (A láthatatlan templom) (1933); The Awakening Earth (Az ébredő föld) novel (1933); On Mount Zion (A Sionnak hegyén) prayers and meditations (1935), numerous editions; Shouting Word (Kiáltó Szó) studies, lectures, sermons (1936); Solution of the Crisis (A válság megoldása) sermons (1938); When Angels Arrive (Ha megérkeznek az angyalok) (1939); the Secret (Titok) short novels (1940); and a Prayer Book (with several editions), and Tragedy and Predestination (Tragikum és predestináció) (1941). He edited the Radio Sermon series. Muraközy was one of the well known and prolific ministers of his Church in the mid 20th century.– B: 0883, 0910, T: 7103. →Ravasz, László.

Muranyi, Joe (Martin's Ferry, OH, USA, 14 January 1928 - ) – Jazz musician. His parents emigrated from Hungary to America. He first played in a Balalaika Ensemble and in various Dixieland groups. He studied classical music at Columbia University, New York. For 17 years he played clarinet and saxophone in the Roy Aldridge Orchestra. From 1967 to 1971 he played in Louis Armstrong's All Stars Orchestra; he was its only white member. He is a globetrotter musician and returning guest to many festivals all over the world. He is one of the flag-bearers of classical jazz. He is Music Editor for some leading recording companies. In Hungary, he recorded with the Benkő Dixieland Band and visited the country several times. He is the last surviving member of the Louis Armstrong All Stars. – B: 1037, T: 7103.

Muráti, Lili (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 22 July 1912 - Madrid, 17 April 2003) – Actress. She studied at the Szidi Rákosi Dramatic Art School, Budapest. Artúr (Arthur) Bárdos discovered her acting talent. In 1932 she was with the Artist Theater (Művész Színház), with the Inner City Theater, (Belvárosi Színház) (1932-1934), at the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) (1934), with the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház) (1934-1941), with the Pest Theater (Pesti Színház), and with the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrassy úti Színház), Budapest (1943-1944). She left Hungary with her husband, János (John) Vaszary in 1945. In 1947 they settled in Spain. Lili Muráti soon became a prominent actress in Spain as well. She was announcer for the Spanish Radio's Hungarian broadcast (1948-1950). Between 1950 and 1963 she appeared in various Spanish towns with her own Theater Company. In 1966 she was guest artist in Argentina. Lili Murati gave the modern, boyish, sporty, independent-minded woman type to the Hungarian stage. She played the young female roles of modern dramas with great ability, also individual humor and charm. In Spain, she also scored success in character roles and comic lines. She played in a number of Hungarian and Spanish films. Her roles include Mariet in L. Zilahy's Firebird (Tűzmadár); Irene in Th. Tagger, F. Bruckner's Fatal Youth (Halálos ifjúság – Krankheit der Jugend); Cili in F. Molnár's Miracle in the Mountains (Csoda a hegyek között); Elisa in G.B. Shaw's: Pygmalion, and Mária in J. Vaszary's The World Is Only One Day (Egy nap a világ). She has 40 feature films to her credit, among them are Heathens (Pogányok) (1937), Yes or No? (Igen vagy nem?) (1940)é Late (Késő) (1943)é La Momia Nationale (1981), and Tres palabras (1993). – B: 1445, 1178, 1031, T: 7456.→Vaszary, János (2).

Murmelius Lexicon – Originally Lexicon Joannis Murmelii seu Latina rerum vocabula cum Germanica et Hungarica interpretatione. It is a Latin glossary; Joannes Murmelius, a Dutch scholar published it in Krakow (1533). The German as well as the Hungarian meanings are listed next to the Latin words. This is the earliest foreign language glossary with Hungarian interpretation. The only extant copy is in the Library of the Franciscan Monastery in Schwaz, Austria. – B: 1136, T: 7617.→Codex Literature.

Museums in Hungary – Count Ferenc (Francis) Széchenyi established the first Museum in Hungary (1802), when he set up the National Széchenyi Library. Széchenyi's wife donated a mineral collection to it the next year, and other public donations led to the establishment of the Hungarian National Museum. In 1843, the Museum moved to its permanent place. It played an important role at the outbreak of the 1848 Revolution. At present there are 50 museums in Budapest, including the Natural, Ethnographic, Technical and Music Museums, as well as the Jewish Museum, the Terror House Museum, the Aquincum Museum, and the National Gallery. There are 127 museums in the counties' major towns, and even villages, including such important ones as the Déry Museum (Debrecen), the Ferenc Móra Museum (Szeged), the István Dobó Museum (Eger), the Ottó Herman Museum (Miskolc), and the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Museum (Sopron). The historical Churches also have their own museums. Almost every town and village has one. – B: 1154, 1031, T: 7103.→National Museum.

Music of the Hungarians – Systematic folk music collecting in Hungary began relatively late, only at the end of the 19th century. However, Béla Bartók initiated the recording of melodies on wax-cylinders, with the support of the Department of Ethnography of the Hungarian National Museum in Budapest in the early years of the 20th century. Together with Kodály, they took on the arduous task of collecting music in the villages from the peasantry.

As research into the roots of Hungarian folk music gathered momentum, it became more and more evident that its pentatonic (five-note) structure and other elements pointed more to the music of the Turkic, rather than that of the Finn and other Finno-Ugric peoples, such as the Siberian Obi-Ugors, whose music is based, with very few exceptions, on the 7-note scale. However, closer relationship can be demonstrated with the music of the Chuvash and Cheremiss people living along a narrow strip on the Chuvash-Cheremiss border in the Volga-Kama region of Russia, where the so-called transposed fifth type melodies have survived. This is the neighborhood where the Hungarian Dominican monk Julianus found a Hungarian-speaking settlement in the 13th century. Although the Mongol invasion wiped out most of these people, some must have survived, who then passed on these melodies to the Turkic Chuvash and the Finno-Ugric Cheremiss folk.

In the old days Hungarian folk songs had so-called dialects according to regions and regional settlements. Ethnomusicologists identify four, or rather five different musical dialects, namely those of Trans-Danubia (Dunántúl), Northern Hungary (Upland, Felvidék, now Slovakia), the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld) and Transylvania (Erdély now in Romania); and also those of the Transylvanian and Moldavian Csángó people, Hungarian minority groups living in what is now Romania, and in Moldavia.

Hungarian folk songs can be classified into the following eight groups: (1) working songs (harvest, spinning, etc.); (2) dance songs; (3) “pairing” or wedding songs; (4) dirges; (5) “regős” or epic songs; (6) children's play songs; (7) popular church hymns for feast days sung in the vernacular (such as Christmas, New Year, Easter, Pentecost, etc., of which there is a rich collection); and (8) other songs, such as ballads, cradle-songs, mocking and jesting songs. These melodies are based on the pentatonic (five-note) scale system.

The Hungarian pentatonic scale is a melodic minor scale without half tones, from which the second and sixth notes are missing. It is important to note however that it is not the pentatonic scale that is significant, but rather the style, the melodic and rhythmic structure, the phrasing, and the proportions and forms of the music built on it. There are three basic types of Hungarian pentatonic songs.

The first type is a simple melody based on whole tone intervals, characteristic of the most ancient songs.

The second type is a pure whole-tone melody with a line transposed by a fifth, i.e. in the second line the melody is repeated note-to-note a perfect fifth lower. In fact, the transposed fifth-type melody forms such an integral part of Hungarian folk music that it held its own against foreign influence:

The third type, the most characteristic of Hungarian folk songs is a broad, sweeping, descending four-line melody, usually with the 3rd or 4th line transposed by a fifth.

Little over a hundred years after the settlement in the Carpathian Basin, the first Christian king, Stephen I (997-1038, later St. Stephen) made Western, i.e. Roman Christianity the state religion. The youthful Hungarian church did not simply adapt Gregorian church music, but absorbed it organically into itself, as is most clearly proved by the fact that even an individual Hungarian idiom developed. Also, it should be remembered -- as Kodály too has pointed out -- that the Hungarians, before settling in the Carpathian Basin, lived in the vicinity of the very region where the first Eastern Christian states were established early in the 4th century A.D., namely Armenia, Georgia and Byzantium; so it is highly probable that they were exposed to Christian liturgical music long before their conversion to Christianity.

When the Hungarian Christian kingdom was established, Western Europe had already been forged into a powerful spiritual Christian unity. Within this well-organized religious life the system of Monastery schools in Hungary became firmly established and proceeded to flourish. By the 11th century the Royal Basilica of Fehérvár (Alba Regia, now Székesfehérvár) -- then the Royal seat -- had a reputable school and choir. A 12th century Antiphonal, or plainsong collection, the Codex Albensis, compiled for the Basilica of Székesfehérvár, contains the first reference to Hungarian saints, among them a hymn to King St. Stephen. This is one of the oldest surviving Hungarian -- indeed Central European -- hymnbooks.

Some church hymns had folk song versions as well. An interesting example of this is the Transylvanian folk song set in the Doric church mode: Szivárvány havasán (On a snowy peak under the rainbow). This song not only has a Hungarian, a Cheremis, a Chuvash, a Mordvin and an Uygur folk song variant, but also a Latin Gregorian chant version: Beata vir..., as well as a Jewish (Hebrew) hymn version. Who gave it to whom, where and when is now impossible to tell. But it could have been an itinerant song that originated with one of the above-mentioned early Christian communities, which inherited some of the melodies of the Jewish psalmody; from there it found its way into the folk music of the various regions.

Archaic Hungarian epic songs are called regös, for they tell a story, or rege. The regös singers accompanied their songs with pipes and the koboz, a plucked string instrument similar to the lute. When Christianity became state religion, the Church made every effort to suppress the regös songs and vigorously persecuted the regös singers. Many of these songs survived however; some of them were even endowed with Christian symbolisms.

The 16th century was the age when independent Hungarian music composed and written down came into existence. The regös songs metamorphosed into the most representative art form of the age, the verse-chronicle, or chanson de geste (históriás ének), the stylistic features of which influenced Hungarian music of the period. Their art consisted of the lyric poetry current at that time and which was created by the stormy historical and political events of 16th century Hungary. Verse-chronicles had a publicizing feature as well, for they immortalized and made the names of the military heroes well known throughout the country; they were in fact vocalized history. They flowered again during Prince Rákóczi's insurrection against Austrian oppression at the beginning of the 18th century in Kuruc lyric poesy and songs. A Hungarian woodwind instrument called tárogató became the favorite instrument of the Kuruc forces – as the Hungarian rebels were called. (The sound of the tárogató is similar to that of the oboe.) The post-Second World War communist regime wanted to destroy them as “reactionary, fascist instruments”; but Kodály managed to prevent it.

Two publications of great importance have preserved the majority of verse-chronicles. One of them is the Hofgreff Collection of Songs, which appeared in 1553 in the Transylvanian town of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and contains 17 songs, the works of several composers. The other is the publication of Sebestyén Tinódi (ca.1510-1556, also called Lantos, i.e., lutenist), the greatest figure of the verse-chronicle. The volume, entitled Cronica, appeared in 1554, also in Kolozsvár. It contains 24 songs.

Another notable document is the 15th century Szalkai-Codex, a compilation by Bishop László Szalkai (1475-1526). The manuscript dates to 1489-1490 and contains the rudiments of the relative solmisation system. This system was ultimately revived and utilized in the 20th century by Zoltán Kodály.

Sacred music played an important part in the life of the nation in the post-Mohács period. With the advent of book printing, as well as the wider use of the Hungarian language – the direct result of the Reformation – church music became richer and more colourful. This type of music culture can be characterized as vocalized theology.

The establishment of the Calvinist colleges from the middle of the 16th century on was a turning point in the history of Hungarian music, because the teaching carried on in them created a demand for the cultivation of secular music and song among the general public. These colleges became famous for their choirs, called Kántus.

One of the masters of polyphonic music of the period was Bálint (Valentinus) Bakfark (1507-1576), the Transylvanian-born composer and lute virtuoso. Bakfark traveled throughout Europe and became known as the Orpheus Pannoniae (Hungarian Orpheus). In 1565, Bakfark published his work Harmonium Musicarum.

The Age of Chivalry produced an art song form, the love song, sung by the troubadours of France, the trovatori of Italy and the Minnesänger of Germany. In Hungary it produced a specifically Hungarian idiom, the flower-song (virágének), akin to pairing-songs or wedding songs. Later this art song form developed into love songs based on lyric poetry. One of the finest exponents of the love song was Bálint Balassi (1554-1594), the first world-class lyricist in the Hungarian language. These, in turn, can be termed vocalized literature.

Hungarian musicians – trumpet players, lutenists, drummers and percussionists – were in great demand at European courts. Especially the Hungarian kettledrums (üstdobok or tabourins) attracted a lot of attention. They were played on horseback and were suspended on either side of the saddle in front of the rider. Henry the VIII of England ordered several “Hungarian drums” for his court. Another Hungarian instrument, the cimbalom – similar to the dulcimer but larger – is first mentioned in the 16th century. It is a wooden box strung with metal strings and struck with two wooden hammers. Later it was made popular by Hungarian Gypsy bands.

During the Turkish wars a specifically Hungarian dance was developed by restless, wandering Hajdú (Heyduck) soldiers: the Hajdú-dance (Heyducker Tanz). The Baroque period produced a variety of dance movements of a more or less national character, such as the French courant, the German allemande and the Italian padovana (pavane). Later the lure of the exotic led Europe to take an interest in its eastern neighbors and created Polish and Hungarian dance forms, the polacca and the ungaresca. Around the middle of the 18th century the ungaresca and Hajdú-dance developed into a new, romantic dance music known as the verbunkos, which was originally a recruiting dance. This in turn evolved into the now internationally known Hungarian dance, the csárdás.

Prince Pál (Paul) Esterházy (1635-1713) was a cultured patron of the arts and a noted amateur musician. The Prince founded a musical ensemble in 1674 at his stately residence in Kismarton (now Eisenstadt, Austria). He composed a cantata cycle called Harmonia Caelestis, which was published in 1711 in Vienna, and contains 55 short cantatas.

The name of the Franciscan monk János Kájon (1629-1687), an excellent organist and organ builder, is associated with an important manuscript written in Transylvania between 1634 and 1671. This collection, known as the Kájon-Codex, contains not only Hungarian, Italian and German church music but also a number of Hungarian secular songs and dances in a simple two-part arrangement for virginal, with organ tablature notation.

A characteristic product of the 19th century was the huge collection of 450 songs compiled in 1813 by the poet Ádám Pálóczy Horváth (1760-1820). It contains his own verses as well as folk songs, and goes by the title Ötödfélszáz énekek (Four-and-a-half hundred songs).

Western European-style musical life began to develop in Hungary in the 1830s. The period also ushered in national romanticism both in music and in literature. One of the greatest musicians of the century was the Hungarian pianist and composer Ferenc (Franz) Liszt (1811-1886). Many of his compositions are based on Hungarian themes, among them the 19 Hungarian Rhapsodies.

The two outstanding Hungarian composers of the 20th century were Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. Bartók is held to be one of the most original and forceful musical figures of the last century.

Kodály devised a system for the musical training of young children, which is basically very simple. It is a solfège, or ear training method that teaches first to recognize, and then to sing the intervals between the notes. The Kodály-school also devised hand signals for each of the notes, based on the solfège names: doh-re-me-fah-soh-lah-te-(doh). This is an excellent way to train young children, for by the time they learn to read and write music they have mastered the ability to sight-read. Nowadays the Kodály-method is used all over the world in schools and music conservatories.

The other noteworthy pianist and composer was Ernő (Ernst von) Dohnányi who, after World War II emigrated to the United States and became a celebrated teacher and performer in Florida. – B:&T: 7617.→Bakfark, Bálint; Tinódi Lantos, Sebestyén; Hoffgreff, György; Csángó; Kuruc; Koboz; Cimbalom; Regós; Csárdás; Verbunkos; Tárogató; Pentatonic Music; Esterházy, Prince Pál; Pálóczy Horváth, György; Liszt, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Kodály Method; Dohnányi, Ernő; Vikár, Béla; Lajtha, László; Balla, Péter; Kálmán, Lajos; Codex Literature.

Musica Antiqua Hungarica Ensemble – The Ensemble was founded in 1967 – first such one in the country. Their aim is to make known the music of the Medieval and Renaissance, and to popularize it by performing with contemporary musical instruments. The founder and leader of the Ensemble is György (George) Késmárki-Krisch, conductor and composer of the Bach Orchestre of Budapest. He not only researches this types of music but also makes music scores for them. The Ensemble has six members, occasionally completing it with soloists. The members are musicians of noted orchestras and music teachers. The place of their first performances was at the National Museum (Nemzeti Múzeum) in Budapest. They performed at the Spring Festival of Budapest, The Festival Weeks of Sopron, and the Renaissance Festival of Eger, etc. The Ensemble is a regular guest of the nation' castles and museums. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Musica Historica Ensemble; Schola Hungarica Ensemble; Muzsikás Hungarian Folkmusic Ensemble.

Musica Historica Ensemble (Musica Historica Együttes) – The Ensemble was founded by István (Stephen) Csörsz Rumen in 1988 in Budapest. Beside classical music and antique instruments its members used folk music instruments as well from Hungary and East-Europe, which decisively formed their performing style. Their repertoire includes primarily Hungarian and Central-European music (11th-12th centuries), and Western European Medieval, Renaissance, Baroque and Turkish music (16th-18th centuries). They also perform both secular and ecclesiastic music. They are more than 1000 performances to their credit nationwide in concert halls, castles, museums, churches, schools, and at Renaissance-style weddings, as well as festivals. The Musica Historica is one of the most frequently performing antique music ensembles. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Musica Historica; Schola Hungarica; Muzsikás Hungarian Folkmusic Ensemble.

Music Notation Writing Machine – A rotating drum and writing gear fastened to the piano keys. When a key is pressed, it leaves a mark on the rotating drum. The length of the mark is proportional to the time for which the key is pressed. József (Joseph) Kliegl (1795-1870) invented the apparatus and it was tested by musicians like F. Liszt, F. Erkel, E. Ábrányi and M. Székely. The Hungarian National Museum bought the apparatus but later it was lost. – B: 1197, T: 7662.

Musnai György (George) (Second half of the 17th century) – Painter, carpenter. He worked at the Unitarian Church of Udvarhelyszék (now Scaunul Odorhei, Transylvania, Romania). In 1668 he painted the ceiling of the church in Énlaka (now Inlacem in Romania) with old Hungarian runic writing. Together with András (Andrew) Szász they painted the gallery (the gods triforium) of the church in Homoródszentmárton (now Martinis, Romania) in 1664. – B: 1144, T: 7653.→Hungarian Runic Script.

Mussolini, Benito Amilcare Andrea (Predappio, Forli, Italy, 29, July 1883 - Giulino di Mezzegera, Italy, 28 April, 1945) – Italian politician, party leader, statesman. Mussolini was one of the founders of Fascism, and leader of the National Fascist Party. He became Prime Minister of Italy in 1922, and began using the title Il Duce by 1925. Mussolini also created and held the supreme military rank of First Marshal of the Empire, along with King Victor Emmanuel III of Italy. Mussolini remained in power until he was replaced in 1943. Between 1924 and 1939, his program helped Italy. Among others: he improved job opportunities and made the Lateran Treaty between Italy and the Holy See. He is also credited with securing economic success in Italy's colonies. Mussolini influenced, or achieved admiration from, a wide variety of political figures. Although he initially favored siding with France against Germany, in the early 1930s Mussolini became one of the main figures of the Axis powers. He was one of the key participants of the fateful Munich Agreement, corroborated and signed on 29-30 September 1938 by Chamberlain and Daladier, the English and French Prime Ministers respectively, as well as Hitler and Mussolini, Heads of State of Germany and Italy, which obliged Czechoslovakia to concede the Sudetenland with its three million ethnic Germans, to Germany. Mussolini was supportive of the amelioration of Hungary's harsh Peace Dictate of Trianon, and supported the realization of the Vienna Awards I and II. Mussolini led Italy into World War II, on the side of Axis, on 10 June 1940. In 1943, Mussolini was deposed at the Grand Council of Fascism, prompted by the Allied Invasion. Soon after his incarceration began in the Hotel of Gran Sasso, Mussolini was rescued in the daring raid by a German commando. Thereafter, Mussolini headed the Italian Social Republic in the northern parts of Italy. In late April 1945, when Mussolini attempted to escape to Switzerland with a German military convoy, he was captured and executed by Communist Italian partisans near Lake Como. His body was taken to Milan for public viewing. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Hitler, Adolf; Munich Agreement; Ciano, Count Galeazzo; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II.

Müteferrika, Ibrahim (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1674 - ? 1753) – Interpreter, publisher, printer, courtier, diplomat, man of letters, astronomer, historian, historiographer, Islamic scholar and theologian and sociologist. He was an impecunious student in Kolozsvár in Transylvania and, while studying to become a priest, he also gained experience in the printing trade. He was still a student in 1692, when the Turks captured him, took him to Turkey and sold him on the slave market. His original Hungarian name is unknown. During 23 years of slavery, he learned the Turkish language and became acquainted with the Turkish people. In 1715 he converted to the Mohammedan faith, while he completed his book: Discourse on Islam (Értekezés az Izlámról), in which, anonymously, he gives a florid account of his life. Through this publication, he came to the attention of Pasha Ibrahim, Grand Vizier, with a Western education, who appointed him “Müteferrika” (interpreter, diplomatic liaison-officer) in Belgrade where, at that time, the refugee forces of Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, Prince of Transylvania were assembling. The Sultan sent Müteferrika to serve Rákóczi for a while. Then Müteferrika, with the support of Pasha Said, submitted a plan for a printing press to the Grand Vizier. The idea was favored and Müteferrika received the necessary financial support. They imported letter cutters, type casters and printers from Vienna. He was the first Muslim to run a printing press with movable Arabic type, also called the “Turkish incunabula”. In the beginning the printing press was operated from Müteferrika's house in Istanbul. Then, in 1727, the plant was moved to the residence of the Grand Vizier, where it operated until the Grand Vizier's murder in 1732. Müteferrika's press published its first book in 1729, and by 1743, issued 17 works in 23 volumes (each having between 500 and 1,000 copies). Müteferrika also taught at the Galip Dede monastery of the “whirling dervishes”. He is buried in the monastery garden. He is still remembered in Turkey with pride, honor and respect. A statue of Müteferrika can be found just outside the Grand Bazaar in Istanbul. In 1918, Károly (Charles) Kós found 20 books in Istanbul that were printed in Müteferrika’s printing shop. – B: 1020, T: 7617.→Kós, Károly.

Mutilated (Truncated) Hungary – The one-thousand-year-old Hungarian Kingdom was drastically dismembered by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty in 1920. Two thirds of its historical territory was ceded to the neighboring states. Transylvania (Erdély) was passed to Romania, the Upper Hungary (Felvidék) to the newly formed Czechoslovakia and the Southern part (Southern Hungary, Délvidék) was added to Serbia-Yugoslavia; even Austria received a part, the western strip along the common border. With these territories, 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians fell under foreign rule, without a plebiscite (with the exception of Sopron). This was tantamount to Collective Punishment of the whole Hungarian nation.

Between the two World Wars, the Hungarian nation fought, by political means, for the peaceful reinstatement of the historic borders, but to no avail. Finally after nearly twenty years the so-called “Vienna Awards” settled the Hungarian border question with the interested parties in a peaceful way.

The First Vienna Award, signed on 2 November 1938, returned to Hungary those border territories of the Felvidék (Upper Hungary, then Czechoslovakia) that were populated by the largest number of Hungarians. At the disintegration of the Czechoslovak Republic in 1939, the Hungarians retook Kárpátalja (Sub-Carpathia, or Ruthenia).

The Second Vienna Award on 30 August 1940 gave back to Hungary the mostly Hungarian populated northern part of the Partium (the easternmost strip of the Great Hungarian Plains) and the northern part of Transylvania (Erdély) from Romania.

In 1941, after Germany occupied Yugoslavia, Hungarian troops regained the mostly Hungarian populated part of the lost territories in the former South Hungary (Bácska region, between the rivers Danube and Tisza, and the Baranya triangle) especially since the Hungarian population was ravaged by Yugoslav partisans.

At the time of these agreements, Hungary was not involved in World War II. However, the Peace Treaty of Paris on 10 February 1947 annulled the Vienna Awards and some other agreements by reinstating the 1 January 1938 borders of Hungary with the addition of three villages on the right side of the Danube to be annexed to the re-vitalized Czechoslovak Republic, while Ruthenia or Sub-Carpathia was ceded to the Soviet Union. It is now part of the Ukraine by “inheritance”, after the dissolution of the Soviet Union. – B: 1020, T: 7668.→Hungary, History of; Modern Hungary; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Muzsikás Hungarian Folkmusic Ensemble – A music ensemble formed more than three decades ago, in order to combine traditional music with the classical compositions of Béla Bartók, Zoltán Kodály, György (George) Kurtág and György Ligeti. Its current members are: Mihály (Michael) Sipos, violin, zither, voice; László (Ladislav) Pénteki, violin, lute, tambourine, voice; Péter Éri, violin, mandolin, flute, voice; and Dániel Hamar double base, cello, drum, voice. Their associates include Mária Petrás, singer; Zoltán Farkas and Ildikó Tóth, choreographers and earlier, Márta Sebestyén, singer, and many other soloists and orchestras. The ensemble also participated in folk, folkmusic and world-music events, and they are not averse to performing alternate music, including jazz, Celtic or Jewish (Klezmer) music. They have toured all over the world, including nearly every European country, in addition to North-America, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Hong Kong, Singapore and Taiwan. They have appeared at the most prestigious concert halls of the world, such as the Royal Festival Hall, Royal Albert Hall, Barbican Center and Queen Elisabeth Hall in London; Théâtre de la Ville, and Cité de la Musique in Paris, Santa Cecilia Academy in Rome, Concertgebouw in Amsterdam, and Carnegie Hall in New York. Their released records include Living Hungarian Folk Music I. MUZSIKÁS; Márta Sebestyén and Muzsikás; Blues for Transylvania; Maramaros, the lost Jewish music; The Bartók Album and Live at Liszt Academy. The Ensemble received the following distinctions: Pro Hungarian Art Prize, Ferenc Liszt Prize, Kossuth Prize, Hungarian Heritage Prize, Prima Primissima Prize, and the prestigious WOMEX Prize in 2008. Muzsikás is the most renowned and popular Hungarian folk-music ensemble worldwide and in their home country. – B: 1031, 2053, T: 7103.→Kaláka Ensemble; Kecskés Ensemble; Sebó Ensemble; Kormoran Ensemble; Musica Antiqua Hungarica Ensemble; Musica Historica Ensemble; Schola Hungarica; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Kurtág, György; Ligeti, György; Sebestyén, Márta; Muzslay István S.J. (Stephan Muselay) (Bajót, 9 January 1923 - Leuven-Heverlee Belgium, 14 May 2007) – Jesuit friar, economist, sociologist. He entered the Jesuit Order in 1942, and left Hungary in 1948, after his religious order was dissolved. . He was ordained in Holland, in 1951. He did his Economy and Sociology studies at the University of Tilburg in the Netherlands. In 1955 he moved to Leuven, where he established the Mindszenty House and the Collegium Hungaricum Lovaniense for expatriate Hungarian youth. In 1961 he became Professor of Economy and of Hungarian Literature at the Catholic University of Leuven and, in 1962, he organized the Central European Research Institute within the University. In 1963 he started the periodical, Documentation sur l'Europe Centrale, and he was its Editor for 20 years. The Research Institute was merged with the Leuven Institute for Central and East European Studies. Following his retirement in 1983, he became Principal of the Collegium Hungaricum. From 1990 on he lectured at different Hungarian universities. His works appeared in French and Flemish, mostly in the periodical he edited. His main works are Menselijke verhoudingen II (F. J. Th. Ruttunnel, Bussum 1957), and Economie en welvaart van Hongarije (Antwerp 1967). He was one of the outstanding members of the Hungarian emigrant society, and one of the main patrons of Hungarian youth abroad. He had an important role that the Leuven Codex returned to Hungary in 1982, which contains the Ancient Hungarian Maria Lament. The King of Belgium made him a baron and decorated him with the Leopold Order of Merit. Pope John Paul II appointed him Member of the Papal Academy of Sociology. He received the Hungarian Heritage Prize, and the Officer's Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2005). – B: 1672, 1728, 1030, T: 7103.→Maria's Lament, Old Hungarian.

Muzsnai, László (Ladislas) (Maroskeresztúr, now Cristești, Romania, 31 October 1897 - Budapest, 10 September 1983) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, philosopher, philosopher of religion. He went to school in Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Romania), studied Theology at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1916-1920), in Montpellier (1922), in Geneva (1923), at Princeton (1926), and in Montreal (1927). He obtained the Degree of Sacrae Theologiae Magister from Princeton University (1926), his Doctorate in Theology from the University of Montreal (1927), and became an honorary lecturer in Theology (1933) at the University of Kolozsvár. He worked as an Assistant Minister teaching Religion in Kolozsvár (1920-1927), in Budapest (1927-1936), then in Budapest again (1937-1953), and worked in various congregations in Budapest as an assistant minister until his retirement in 1971. Between 1934 and 1937 he lectured on Philosophy at the Reformed Church's Training Seminar for Ministers in Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia). He dealt mainly with the Psychology of Religion, and published many papers, although some remained in manuscript, like his book, The Logic of the Bible (A Biblia logikája). His works include The Mental Evolution (1925); The Doctrine of Sin (1926); The Psychology of Religious Consciousness (1927); The Mysterious World of the Soul (A lélek rejtelmes világa) (1928); Spiritual Problems (Lelki problémák) (1933), and Hungarian Metaphysics and Logic (Magyar metafizika és logika) (1943). – B: 0883, 1031, 1908, T: 7456.

Muzsnay, Jenő (Eugene) (Musnai) (Medgyes, now Mediaș, Romania, 1911 - ?) – Writer. He received his basic education in Csíkszereda (now Mercurea Ciuc, Romania). His family was forced to escape from Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in 1920, and he continued his secondary education and university studies in Budapest, where he received a Degree in Law in 1935. In 1956 he left for Switzerland and settled in the town of Aarau. He began his literary activities in the 1950s. Ancient history and the great migration period were the topics of his articles. They appeared in German and Hungarian periodicals in Switzerland. In 1957 he began to research Swiss relics of Hun origins. He published two books (1978, 1980) on the inhabitants of Hun origin of the Val d'Anniviers region of Switzerland. A recent French language Swiss book refers to his assertions and confirms them. – B: 1020, T: 7617. → Eifischtahl, Hun Runic Writing at; Hungarian Runic Script.

Nádai, Árpád L. (Árpád Louis Nadai) (Budapest, 3 April 1883 - Pittsburgh, PA, USA, 18 July 1963) – Mechanical engineer. His higher studies were in Zurich, where he obtained his qualifications as a Mechanical Engineer (1906). After working briefly in Hungary, he was employed as a mechanical design engineer in Munich (1907-1908). From 1908 to 1912 he was an assistant to Eugen Meyer at the Polytechnic of Berlin, where he acquired his Ph.D. in Applied Mechanics (1912). He worked as a lecturer in Berlin and published scientific papers till the outbreak of World War I. During the War, he served as an engineering officer in the Austro-Hungarian Army (1915-1918). After the War, he returned to Germany and was a lecturer and researcher at the University of Göttingen, where he became Professor of Applied Mechanics (1923-1927). Here, he researched the flow of metals and the Theory of Plasticity. In 1927 he emigrated to the USA and settled in Pittsburgh. He joined the staff of Westinghouse Electric Corporation's Research Laboratories as a consulting mechanical engineer and advisor until his retirement in 1949. From 1934, he was also a research professor at the University of Pittsburgh. During and after World War II, Nádai was a consultant to the US Navy and was an advisor for the National Research Council and the National Academy of Sciences. His works include Die Formänderung und die Spannungen von rechteckigen elastischen Platten (The change in shape and the stresses of rectangular elastic plates) (Berlin, 1915), Theorie der Plattenbiegung und ihre experimentelle Bestätigung (Theory of plate bending and its experimental confirmation) (Berlin, 1922), Der bildsame Zustand der Werkstoffe (The condition of ductile materials) (Berlin, 1927), Theory of Flow and Fracture of Solids, vols. i, ii (New York, Toronto, London, 1950, 1963). Some of his works were translated into Russian. His research into the Theory of Plasticity and the flow and fracture of solids was significant. He was a recipient of many awards and distinctions, among them the Bingham Medal of the Society of Rheology, and the Timoshenko Medal of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers – ASME (1958). In 1975, the Nadai Medal was established for distinguished contributors to the area of plasticity. – B: 1160, 1031, 1695, T: 7103.

Nadányi Chronicle – Florus Hungaricus. Its subtitle is: History of Hungary and Transylvania. It is the work of János (John) Nadányi, written in Latin in 1663, and published in Amsterdam. In his chronicle, Nadányi also discusses at length the history of the Huns. He talks about “a second Hun settlement in Pannonia, known as the Avar conquest ca. A.D. 568”, whereby he considered a Hun-Avar-Hungarian continuity. He insisted that the date 744 signifies the “second arrival of Hungarians”. In 1978, a report appeared in Hungary about the existence of an English edition of the work. Microfilm copies at the libraries of the University of British Columbia in Vancouver and at the University of Victoria preserve this source material unknown in Hungary. – B: 1853, 1020, T: 7617. → Nadányi, János; László, Gyula; Huns.

Nadányi, János (John) (Körösladány, 1643 - Nagybjom, 8 July 1707) – Minister of the Reformed Church, historian. He studied at the University of Leiden and, in 1658, at Utrecht, in Holland. After returning home in 1666, he became a professor at the Reformed College in Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania), where, owing to his nervous temperament, he was unable to stay. From 1671, he was a professor at Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) and, later, became a minister in Nagybjom. He was active in literature. His literary works are: Disputatio Juridica De Jura Belli; Disputatio Juridica De Justitia et Jura Nona, and Florus Hungaricus (Nadányi Chronicle). He translated the work of the French physician, Antonnius Mizaldus into Hungarian: Kerteknek gondviselésekről, ékítésekről, oltásokról, a Fűveknek orvos hasznaikról, Gyümölcsök tartásokról (1669). Presumably he was the author of chapters 41-44 on János Csere de Apácza, concerning flowers, in the Hungarian Encyclopedia. – B: 0942, 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7682.→Nadányi Chronicle; Nagyenyed; Apáczai Csere, János.

Nadányi, Zoltán (Feketegyőrös, now Birişu Negru, Romania, 9 October 1892 - Budapest, 2 February 1955) – Poet and literary translator. He was born into a property-owning family. He finished his studies at the Law School of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). From 1917, he was a journalist in Nagyvárad, and Editor of the paper, Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó). In 1920 Nadányi moved to Budapest and became an employee at the Pest Journal (Pesti Napló). Between 1926 and 1944 he was the Principal Archivist for County Bihar in Berettyóújfalu and Nagyvárad, and edited the county paper, Bihar. Many of his poems appeared in the literary review West (Nyugat). In the 1930s Nadányi was an external employee for the Budapest News (Budapesti Hírlap). From 1944 until his death, he lived in Budapest and occupied himself with translation work including the poems of Heine, Miczkiewicz, Burns, Lermontov, and others, and Willi Bredel's novel, Fathers (Apák). He was a member of the Petőfi (1929) and Kisfaludy (1936) Societies. Zoltán Nadányi's poetic works include Round Forest (Kerekerdő) poems (1917); Unusual Guest (Furcsa vendég) poems (1921); Diary of an Impoverished Man (Szegényember naplója) short stories (1935), and Come, Let's Sing (Gyertek énekeljünk), poems (1944). – B: 1257, 0883, T: 7688.→Nagyvárad.

Nádas, Péter (Budapest 14 October 1942 - ) – Writer. His grandfather, Moritz Grünfeld, changed his name to a Hungarian. His youth was shadowed by the loss of his parents. He attended the Lajos Petrik Chemistry Technical School, Budapest (1956-1961). At the age of 16, his uncle gave him a camera. After dropping out of school, he turned to photo-journalism. He studied Journalism and Philosophy at evening classes of the University of Budapest. He also studied at the Humboldt University, Berlin. During the late 1960s and early 1970s, he worked as an editor, reader and drama consultant at various periodicals, such as Women's Paper (Nők Lapja) and Pest County Paper (Pest Megyei Hírlap). As a writer, he started with short stories, such as The Bible (A Biblia) (1967) and Key-finding Play (Kulcskereső játék) (1969). His other works include The End of a Family Novel (Egy családregény vége) novel (1977), which is about the conflict of generations in Stalinist Hungary, leading to the Hungarian Revolution of 1956; Love (Szerelem) novel (1979), which is about drug-problem; Stage (Színtér) dramas (1982); A Book of Memories (Emlékiratok könyve) novel (1986), an autobiography of a young writer; The Bible and Other Old Stories (A Biblia, és más régi történetek) short stories (1986); Yearbook (Évkönyv) (1989); Essays (Esszék) (1995); Dramas (Drámák) (1996), Every Light (Valamennyi fény) (1999) and Parallel Histories (Párhuzamos történetek) (2005), appeared in English, French and German translations (2011-2012). Nádas is an eminent Hungarian, as well as an internationally recognized writer. He had a photographic exhibition in Budapest in 1999. He received several literary prizes, including the Prize for Hungarian Art (1989), the Austrian State Prize for European Literature (1991), the Vilenica International Prize for Literature (1998), and the Kossuth Prize (1992). – B: 0874, 1031, 1257, T: 7103.

Nádasdy, Baron Tamás (Thomas) (1498 - Egervár, 2 June 1562) – Aristocratic owner of a large estate, father of the military commander Count Ferenc Nádasdy. He completed his studies in Bologna and Rome; later he served in the Royal Chancery of King Lajos II (Louis, 1516-1526) in the 1520s, charged with diplomatic missions. After the disastrous battle of Mohács in 1526 against the invading Turks, he joined King Ferdinand I (1526-1564). In 1527 he was Captain of Buda Castle. In 1529 he was taken prisoner by Sultan Suleiman, who handed him over to King János Szapolyai (1526-1540), the rival king of Hungary (opposed to the Habsburg king, Ferdinand I). Nádasdy succeeded in winning King János Szapolyai's confidence and, charged with important tasks, he was also given large land grants. In 1530, against the forces of Ferdinand, it was Nádasdy who defended the Castle of Buda. Since he did not agree with the Venetian Louis Gritti, in 1533, he again went to Ferdinand's camp and, in the same year, he married Orsolya Kanizsai, through whom he acquired large estates in Transdanubia. Thus, he consolidated the power of the family that later acquired the title of Count. In 1534 he became Lord Lieutenant of County Vas; in 1537, Bán of Croatia; in 1540 he became Lord Chief Justice and, in 1554, Palatine of Hungary (the western, Habsburg side). In 1553 he received the title of baron. He was a patron of the Reformation; on his estate in Újsziget he set up a printing shop in 1537, and founded a school as well. He published the New Testament of János Sylvester at his own expense. – B: 0883, 0907, 0931, T: 7456.→Sylvester, János.

Nádasdy, Count Ferenc (Francis) (Csejte, now Čachtice, Slovakia, 14 January 1623 - Vienna, Austria, 30 April 1671) – Patron of arts, publisher, writer, chief justice. He was a well-educated supporter of the sciences and a generous patron of the arts. Among other works, he published a collection of laws in 1658 at his own expense. His work, Oratio, written against the absolutism of King Lipót I (Leopold, 1654-1705) in 1668, was widely read in manuscript form. He built the church and the monastery at Léka (now Lockenhaus in Burgenland, Austria), which became a place of pilgrimage. He was one of the richest landowners of Western Hungary. His extensive collection of art objects held in his castle was famous in his time. In 1633 he was Chief Administrative Officer of County Vas. In 1645 he was appointed Chief Master of the Royal Court and, in 1664, Chief Justice. Due to the death of Count Ferenc Wesselényi, he was Royal Governor between 1667 and 1670. After the nationwide anger and resentment following the unfavorable Peace of Vasvár in 1664 with the Turks, he became one of the leading members of Wesselényi's secret movement directed against the policies of the Viennese Court. For his participation in the movement he was sentenced to death and, despite the Pope's intercession, he was beheaded. His body rests in the church at Léka. His enormous wealth was confiscated and added to the Austrian Treasury. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7665.→Wesselényi Conspiracy; Wesselényi, Count Ferenc; Zrinyi, Count Péter; Frangepán, Ferenc Kristóf; Rákóczi I, Prince Ferenc.

Nádasdy Castle – Situated in the center of the town of Nádasdladány, in western Hungary, the ancient home of the Nádasdy family. It was designed after 16th century English and Scottish castles and is a real architectural curiosity in Hungary. Although its exterior has an air of antiquity, it was in fact built between 1873 and 1876, and almost all the technological innovations of the age were included in it. The rooms were equipped with talking tubes (the forerunners of the telephone) and were heated with an air heating system, while gas lamps lit the halls. The park of the castle was built at the beginning of the 20th century upon János Kálmán's plans. Present renovations to the castle were at the instigation of a member of the family, Ferenc Nádasdy, who returned from Canada in 1991 with the purpose of renovating the building and turning it into a cultural and educational center. 90% of the expenses were covered by a Norwegian Fund; the sum of 20 million forint was provided by the National Cultural Fund, and 5 million by the Nádasdy Foundation. The work was carried out by the State Office of Listed Monuments. There is busy life in the building due to the Nádasdy Academy. There are symposiums, evening programs and concerts on an international level, organized by the present occupant of the castle, grandson of Count Ferenc Nádasdy, whom the school was named after. – B: 1031, 1440, T: 7617.

Nádasdy Family (Nádasdy of Fogaraszöld) – It is an ancient noble family, which had an important role in the history of Hungary since the 13th century. During the Mongol-Tartar invasion (1241-1242) they hid King Béla IV (1235-1270); supported King Károly Róbert (Charles Robert, 1307-1232) against the powerful oligarch Máté Csák (Matthew Csák). The family received the titles of Baron and Count. The family exists today under the name Nádasdi and Fogaraszöldi, the noble praenomen of nobility of the family (Nádasdy of Fogaraszöld). They are scattered in the Transdanubian area of Western Hungary. – B: 1078, T: 7676. → Nádasdy, Baron Tamás; Nádasdy, Count Ferenc.

Nádasdy, Kálmán (Charles) (Graff) (Budapest, 25 November 1904 - Budapest, 17 April 1980) – Director, stage manager, pedagogue, translator of literary works.

In 1923, the Opera House contracted him as Assistant Director. From 1925, he studied Composition at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he was a student of Zoltán Kodály for four years. From 1933, he was again Director of the Opera House and, later, Chief Director, appointed in 1959. He retired in 1966. His main work was directing operas, but his prose, operetta, film and radio arrangements are also significant. His translations of literary works are numerous. His directorial work was characterized by the clarification of the work and its meaningfulness to his public; he placed the drama, defined in either the music or text, in the center of the performance. His directorial method caught the acting objective of the individual actor, as well as the chorus, very effectively and successfully. His strength was the monumental quality of the spectacular movement of crowds. He was an outstanding representative of realistic opera playing. Nádasdy's more important opera directing roles include Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága), Rossini's William Tell, Verdi's Don Carlo, Otello, Puccini's Madama Butterfly (Pillangó kisasszony), La Bohème, Tosca, Manon Lescaut, Beethoven's Fidelio, Erkel's László Hunyadi, Kodály's Székelyfőnök, and Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú herceg vára). He successfully directed in Milan, Venice, Florence and Vienna. From 1945 he also directed stage plays. His operetta directing roles are among the best of that genre, including Strauss's Gypsy Baron (Cigánybáró). His translations are Verdi's Simon Boccanegra, Borodin's Prince Igor, Puccini's Manon Lescaut, and Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov. Among his feature films what he directed were: Armchair (Karosszék) (1939), Gül Baba (1940), and Ludas Matyi (Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd) (1949). He also composed music pieces, wrote film-scripts, and translated operatic works. His educational work for acting was at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, from 1950, and he was its main Director from 1964. He was one of the great stage managers of the 20th century in Hungary. He was a Life Member of the Opera House in Budapest. He was three times recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1950, 1954, 1965), the title of Outstanding Artist (1952), the Order of Banner with Laurel of the People's Republic of Hungary. A prize and a School of Arts in Budapest bear his name. – B: 0870, 0883, 1105, 1445, T: 7684. → Kodály, Zoltán.

Nádass, József (Joseph) (Budapest, 22 May 1897 - Budapest, 30 July 1975) – Poet, writer, journalist. He studied at the Business College of Budapest; then worked as a clerk. While serving in World War I, he lost one leg. During the four months of the 1919 Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, he was a member of the Workers' Council and Head of the Propaganda Section of the Red Guard. Because of this, after the fall of the proletarian dictatorship in 1920, he emigrated to Vienna, where he became a correspondent for the paper, Today (Ma), edited by the expressionist-futurist writer, Lajos Kassák. He also lived in Prague, Paris, Berlin and Bucharest for a number of years, returning to Hungary in 1926. He worked in the Social Democratic Party, as a correspondent for the avant-garde journals: Dokumentum and, later the Work (Munka). From 1928 to 1930 he was Editor for the journal, Our Age (Korunk) of Gábor (Gabriel) Gaál (lived in Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, since 1926). In 1931 his volume, You and All of You (Te és ti), was seized and, because of subversive activity, he was convicted. In 1938 Nádass was again forced to leave Hungary and lived in Denmark, Sweden, then in Norway, working for leftist newspapers; he returned to Hungary again, when German forces occupied Norway in 1940. From Hungary, he reported in leftist Scandinavian papers. As a result, he got himself on the black list of the Gestapo. On 19 March 1944, he was arrested by the Germans, who occupied Hungary on the same day, and was dragged off to the concentration camp of Mauthausen. After 1945 he became Head of the Information Division of the Foreign Ministry. Between 1945 and 1948 he was a columnist for the paper, People's Word (Népszava), and one of the editors of the periodical, Contemporary (Kortárs). After 1956 he played an active role in the improvement of cultural life and, in 1957, he joined the journal, Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom), becoming its correspondent until 1959. His career as a poet started to unfold during his years in exile in Vienna. In two early volumes, he followed the style of the constructivist Kassák but, from the 1930s, his poems assumed a contemplative quality, his style becoming more traditional. In the post-1945 era, he also wrote short stories and realistic fictional-autobiographical and contemporary novels. He translated literary works from Czech, German and Norwegian. His works include Burst Out, Word! (Szakadj ki, szó), poems (1923); The Norwegian Girl (A norvég leány) novel (1946); Human Word (Emberi szó) poems (1957) and Private Man (Magánember) novel (1966). He received the Attila József Prize in 1959. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic; Kassák, Lajos.

Nádai, Ferenc (Francis) (Navratil) (Pest, 13 March 1840 - Budapest, 14 April 1909) – Actor, theater director. He completed High School in Budapest, where he soon appeared on stage under the pseudonym, Ferenc Navratil, at the Folk-Theater of Buda (Budai Népszínház), as a singer in the role of Leporello in Mozart's Don Giovanni. As a young and talented artist, he was soon engaged by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Pest on 14 June 1863, where he stayed for the length of his career. At first he acted in youth and young adult roles. Later, he gradually took over Márton Lendvay Jr.'s roles and specialized in playing the roles of lover and gentleman. Náday had a charismatic personality both on- and off-stage. His figure, voice and upbringing helped him not only in theatrical circles, but in private life as well. Soon he was entrusted with directing and, from 1866 until 1893, he was professor at the Academy of Dramatic Art. Even in his old age, he retained his love of life and his youthful freshness. He played his roles simply using innate naturalism. In 1893 he became a life-member of the National Theater. His wife was the singer Katalin Vidmár. Náday's main roles included Count Prach in Meilhac's L'attaché d'ambassade (The Embassy Attaché); Armand in Dumas Jr.'s: The Lady of the Camellias (A kaméliás hölgy); Marquis Champrosé in Sardou's La famille Benoiton (The Benoiton Family – A Benoiton család); Demetrius in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (Szentivén éji álom); Krisztyán Tódor in Jókai's The Golden Man (Az aranyember); Benedick in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hűhó semmiért), and Márki in Molière's Le Misanthrope (A mizantróp). He played in all the stage works of the dramatist, Gergely Csiky, creating some enduring interpretations. His articles and sketches appeared in magazines, such as the Actors' Journal (Színészek Lapja); Budapest Diary (Budapesti Napló). He also wrote a play entitled The New Firm (Az új cég) (1876). – B: 0907, 1445, 0883, T: 7688, 7456. → Csiki, Gergely.

Nádor Codex – A Hungarian-language manuscript, consisting of 352 leaves, compiled for the use of the Clarissa Nuns of Óbuda. It contains meditations, lamentations of the Virgin Mary, the Visio Philberti, and legends of Ursula, Hedviga, Sophia, Apalin, Adorján and Elek. In this Codex appears the first musically notated Hungarian folk-hymn: Hail, Holy Mother of God (Idvozleg istennek zenanna...). The Codex is in the Library of the University Budapest. – B: 1194, 1257, T: 7617. → Codex Literature.

Nádory, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Budapest, 18 October 1835 - Budapest ?, 1905) – Technical counselor. He completed junior high school in 1854. He learned the bricklayer trade and, in the winter season, he learned drawing and mathematics from private tutors. He studied technical subjects at the Joseph Polytechnic of Buda from 1854 to 1860. In 1861 he went to Póla (now Pula, Croatia), where he secured a job with building contractor Antal Hauser, building eight dwellings for the Austro-Hungarian Navy. In 1863 he worked on the construction of the Saint Peter-Fiume highway, opened on the 25th June 1873 (Fiume: now Rijeka, Croatia). In 1864 he returned to Póla, where, as an engineer, he constructed the first dry-dock until 1870. In the spring of 1871, the Department of Public-Works and Transport sent him to Fiume and commissioned him to draw up a plan for the new harbor. On completing this task, he was made a senior engineer and he was in charge of the construction of the harbor. As a result of the 1873 financial crash, he lost his position; he worked for the Ministry of Education for two years, and as a private contractor for another three years. After the 1879 flood catastrophe in Szeged, the Department of PublicWorks and Transport appointed him as 1st Class Royal Engineer for the Royal Szolnok River-Engineering Office in 1880. In April 1882 he was charged with the direction of the State Board of Works; then, in 1883, he was transferred back to Szolnok. After 1888, for a year, he worked at Szentes, supervising the development of the flood plain of the Kőrös-Tisza-Maros confluence section. By 1890, he became Ministerial Senior Engineer, working until January 1891; then was employed as Head of the River Engineering Office in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). After 1891 he served in the National Water Engineering Directorate in Budapest. Ignác (Ignatius) Darányi, Minister of Agriculture, sent him on a study trip on 20 December 1898, to study the embankment work in the Po River plains and to compare it with the valley of the Tisza River. In 1900 he became 2nd Class Technical Counselor. He was the author of a number of articles in journals, on water engineering topics, and on the construction of the Fiume harbor: The Harbor of Fiume – A Counter-Criticism (A fiumei kikötő, ellenbíráló) (1875) published in the Central Railway and Transport Gazette (Központi Vasúti és Közlekedési Közlöny). – B: 0907, T: 7456.

Nádudvari, Péter (about 1670 - Szászváros, now Orastie, Romania, 1726) – Minister of the Reformed Church, preacher, ecclesiastical writer. He studied Theology at the Reformed College of Debrecen then, at the Reformed College of Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania); and, in 1696, went to Franeker in the Neatherlands for further studies. On his return to Hungary, he became the Court Minister of Count Sámuel Bethlen of Transylvania and, later on, a preacher in Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Romania), and Szászváros. He was well known as a church orator. His works include Little Mount of Hermon (Hermon kis hegye) (1717); The Way of Salvation (Idvesség uttya) (1741), and Eighty-four Sermons (1741). – B: 0883, 1257, 0907, T: 7456.

Nagel, Emil (Makó, 30 June 1817 - Budapest, 2 December 1892) – Physician, ophthalmologist. He obtained his Medical Degree in Vienna in 1841, and became an army physician. In 1849 he worked as a surgeon at the Military Hospital of Temesvár (now Timisoara, Romania) and, from 1849, after the defeat of the War of Independence from Habsburg rule in 1849, he worked in Hungary as a medic for a while, and soon became Head of the Ophthalmic and Surgical Department of the Ludovika Hungarian Royal Military Academy in Budapest. From 1852 he was a professor at the Medical School, then Chair of the Institute of Ophthalmology in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He retired in 1868 and, from 1880 he was a contributor to the monthly, Wiener statistische Monatschrift. He pioneered some new but controversial surgical methods. Among his works are Popular Talks about Eye-care (Népszerű értekezés a szem gondviseletéről) (1850); Bone Fractures (A csonttörések) (1862); Methode oder Schablone? (1871); Der Schalf (1874), and Die Seekrankheit (1876) – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7103.→Ludovika Hungarian Royal Military Academy.

Nagy, Adorján (Adrian) (Budapest, 24 November 1888 - Budapest, 1 August 1956) – Actor and director. After completing his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, he moved to Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1910 to work as an actor. In 1918 he became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. At the beginning of 1925, he started a thirty-one-year career as a teacher at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. From 1930, Nagy was a professor at the University of Budapest. In 1935 he became General Director of the National Theater and, ten years later, its Chief Artistic Director. In 1949 he retired but, in 1955, he appeared on stage for the Hungarian People's Army Theater. (Néphadsereg Színháza). He was a character actor with a wide acting range, known as an “intellectual actor”. Nagy played every male role in Imre Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). He also appeared in films. His articles on theater appeared in periodicals, such as the Hungarian Review (Magyar Szemle); Theatrical Studies (Színháztudomány), and Theatrical and Film Artistry (Színház-és Filmművészet). Nagy's most memorable roles include Lucifer in Imre Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Dr. Relling in Ibsen's The Wild Duck (A vadkacsa); Antonio in Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár), and Iago in Shakespeare's Othello. His significant directorial works include Gerhart Hauptmann's And Pippa Dances (És Pippa táncol); Gabriele D'Annunzio's The Daughter of Jorio (Jorio leánya), and János Kodolányi's Country Story (Vidéki történet). Nagy wrote the books: The Tragedy of Man and the Actor (Az ember tragédiája és a színész) (1936), and Stage and Speech (Színpad és beszéd) (1964). He translated Béatrix Dussane's A Democratic Theater. La Comédie Française (Egy demokratikus színház. A Comédie Française) (1948). In 1956 Nagy received the title of Merited Artist. – B: 1445, 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Nagy, András (1) (Andrew) (? - Gyulafehérvár, now Alba Iulia, Romania, 13 August 1612) – Hajdú general. According to an agreement with Prince Gábor Báthori (1608-1613), in 1607, Báthori made Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629) the Reigning Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Thereafter, the Prince made him his counselor and Chief Captain of the Infantry. In 1611, the Hajdús sided with the Emperor of Austria and András Nagy was handed over to the Captain of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). Nagy then pledged allegiance to the Emperor and participated in the military campaign against Prince Gábor Báthori. In the midst of the campaign, he suddenly changed sides with his Hajdús and sided again with Báthori. On 15 August he defeated a part of the Imperial army and occupied Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1612, he again turned against Báthori and, when found out, Báthori had him arrested and executed. – B: 1160, 0883, T: 7103. → Hajdús; Báthori, Prince Gábor.

Nagy, András (2) (Andrew) (Budapest, 8 June 1956 - ) – Writer. He obtained a Degree in Hungarian Literature and Adult Education from the University of Budapest. In 1979-1980 he was assistant professor of History of 20th Century Hungarian Literature at the University of Budapest. Between 1982 and 1990 he was Editor for the Publisher Magvető. In 1983 he was awarded the Zsigmond Móricz scholarship. He started his career by writing short stories. Later on, he became attracted to larger, epic forms and stage works. His dramatic works, written with a feeling for the stage, searched for the "secret" of controversial historical and literary figures in books, such as: Elizabeth Báthori (Báthori Erzsébet) (1985); Anna Karenina Station (Anna Karenina pályaudvar) (1990), and Three Hungarian Sisters (Három magyar nővér) (1991). He also wrote script for the television film, Kreutzer Sonata (A Kreutzer szonáta) (1988). His other works include Savonarola, novel (1980); The Last Summer of Europe (Europa utolsó nyara) novel (1992); Kierkegaard in Budapest (Kierkegaard Budapesten), drama (1994), and Biberach and the Others... (Biberach és a többiek...) (1997). He also participated in the editorial work for the World Hungarian Encyclopedia, vols. i,ii,iii. He received the Drama Competition Prize of the Hungarian Radio (1995), and the Ernő Szép Award (1996). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456. → Móricz, Zsigmond.

Nagy, Anna (Budapest, 6 June 1940 - ) – Actress. After completing her course of study at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, she was contracted to the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen. Though she was a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest, she did not appear on stage from 1975 to 1983. She became widely known by her acting in the film of 1963, Lark (Pacsirta). She has been particularly successful as a character actress. Her roles include Nina in Chekhov's The Seagull (Sirály); Elisa in Lerner-Loewe's My Fair Lady; Tamara in Volodin's Five Evenings (Öt este); Dorothy of Kanizsa in Gy. Hay's Mohács; and Little Mouse (Egérke) in I. Örkény's Cat's Play (Macskajáték). There are more than 55 feature and TV films to her credit, including Gold Dragon (Aranysárkány) (1966); Sinbad (1971); Tomorrow a Pheasant (Holnap fácán) English (TV, 1974); Barbarians (Barbárok) (TV, 1989); Gentlemen and Ladies (Urak és hölgyek) (TV, 1991); Memories of the House (A ház emlékei) (2002), and Mansfeld (2006). She is recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize (1987). – B: 1445, 1719, T: 7456.

Nagy, Árpád (Tata, 8 November 1901 - Budapest, 20 December 1974) – Mining engineer. He obtained his qualifications from the Mining and Forestry Academy of Sopron in 1925, where he started his career and was in charge of the municipal waterworks. From 1941 he worked as a mining counselor for the firm directing the mining investment to solve the technical tasks of the Liassic bituminous coal of Komló in the Mecsek Mountain, north of Pécs, and the lignite mining. In 1948 he was Section Head in the National Wages Commission, then Chief Engineer of the Mineral Mining Section in the Ministry of Mining and Energy. From 1957 to 1967 he was Senior Engineer of the mining investment section of the Ministry of Heavy Industry. He did outstanding work in directing and supervising the coal-mining investment in Transdanubia. He took part in the development of uniform regulation of the construction industry. He also dealt with the problems of mining machinery. In 1947 he planned a special pneumatic hammer, which was used for three decades. In the 1960s, he was dealing with the problems of domestic manufacture of wedges working with iron support. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456.

Nagy, Attila (Pácin, 12 February 1933 - Budapest, 13 May 1992) – Actor and stage director. After completing his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, he joined the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc in 1955. In 1956 he assumed the post of President of the Workers' Council of County Borsod-Abaúj-Zemplén, for which he was sentenced to imprisonment. Freed in 1961, Nagy became an actor and Director at the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) of Veszprém from 1962 on. From 1964 to 1969 he was a member of the Thália Theater (Thália Színház), Budapest; from 1969 to 1971 he was with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged and, between 1971 and 1986, he was again member of the Thália Theater. Beginning in 1986, Nagy worked as an actor and director at the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház) of Kecskemét. Between 1988 and 1990 he was Artistic Director for the same theater. In 1990 he was elected Member of Parliament. His memorable performances include title role in József Katona's Bánk bán; Stanley in Williams' A Streetcar Named Desire (A vágy villamosa); Iago in Shakespeare's Othello; Estragon in Beckett's Waiting for Godot (Godotra várva); Ádám in Imre Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája), and Gyulafy in Frigyes Karinthy's House Dedication (Házszentelő). Nagy's best received directorial achievements were: Shakespeare's Othello; Imre Madách's The Tragedy of Man, and László Németh's Monster, The Devil of Writing (Szörnyeteg, Az írás ördöge). He had many roles on television and in radio, and his voice was well-suited to reciting poetry. There are 38 feature films to his credit including Foto Háber (1963); The Black

City (A fekete város) (1971); The Siege of Beszterce (Beszterce ostroma) (1976); Wiener Walzer (1979); Kojak in Budapest (Kojak Budapesten) (1980), and the Night (Éjszaka) (1989). Attila Nagy was twice-winner of the Mari Jászai Prize (1966 and 1975) and was named a Merited Artist in 1983. – B: 1445, 1719, T: 7688.

Nagy, Balázs Dezső (Blaise Desider) (Vajszló, 16 November 1912 - Calgary, Alberta, Canada, 23 October 1985) – Minister of the Reformed Church, missionary. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Debrecen, completing it in 1934. He also acquired a teacher's qualification in Religion and worked in Nádudvar. In 1944 he and his family fled before the approaching Soviet army. They ended up in Austria, then in Germany, where he served the Hungarian refugees. In 1950 he moved first to Brazil, then in 1953 to Buenos Aires, Argentina. Here he organized the Hungarian Reformed Congregation and bought a three-story building for the church, a Manse and offices. He also rendered Pastoral care for the Hungarian Reformed co-religionists living in Diaspora in Uruguay. In 1964 he moved to Calgary, Canada, and was Minister of the Calvin Hungarian Presbyterian (Reformed) Church until his retirement in 1974. Wherever he served in the West, he organized Hungarian Schools and put emphasis on youth works. – B: 0906, T: 7103.→Argentina, Hungarians in.

Nagy Balogh, János (John) (Budapest, 2 August 1874 - Budapest, 22 November 1919) – Painter. He came from a working-class family. At first worked as a house painter, later studied for two years in the School of Industrial Design. From 1898 to 1899 he attended the evening course at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest. For half a year in 1899 he studied under Johann Herterich in the Academy of Arts of Munich; but because of his straitened financial situation, he had to return to Hungary, where he did casual house-painting jobs and was able to return to his developing talent as an artist only during the summer seasons. In 1915 he was enlisted in the army. After a serious injury on the Front, his right arm became paralyzed and, as a result, he continued painting with his left hand. His early works show the influence of Munich genre painting, and the symbolism of the Art Nouveau, gaining strength at the turn of the century. Later he developed his own style characterized by dramatic power with touchingly simple style, based on a natural feeling for composition. His representations are rather limited; but he shows an ability to vary the same theme considerably and shows clear-cut development in his artistic creativity over the years. His oeuvre consists of two distinct phases: those works he painted before 1908, and those painted between 1908 and 1915. After his injury on the Front he painted very few works and very rarely. His paintings of simple home interiors reveal astonishing realism, as do his paintings of kitchen maids, dramatic self-portraits, and a series of touching portraits of his mother. His works include The Artist's Mother (A művész Anyja) (several pictures); Navvies (Kubikosok) (several pictures); Atelier (Műterem), and several Self-Portraits (Önarckép), mostly from the 1910s. His drawings and paintings in the cubist style, reminiscent of Millet's paintings, are simple, yet monumental portrayals. He shows traces of influences by Rembrandt, Frans Hals and even Cezanne with his spatial problems. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Nagy Bandó, András (Andrew) (Deszk, 12 November 1947 - ) – Humorist, caricaturist, performing artist. He completed the István Vedres Building Industry Technical School in 1966. Later he even took a Master of Masonry exam. Nagy Bandó worked as a draftsman at a Szeged Designing Firm as a building foreman at the Csengele Unity Collective Farm, and as an assistant worker and mason with a smaller tradesman's firm. After these experiences, he tried his luck as a small proprietor, gardener, and newspaper deliverer. By this time, his writings and drawings were published in the paper Southern Hungary (Délmagyarország), the Szeged paper University (Egyetem), and later in the periodical New Mirror (Új Tükör). Between 1963 and 1975, he was caricaturist for Southern Hungary, and the Szeged paper University Pages (Egyetemi Lapok). From 1975 on he also made a living as a performing artist. In 1982 he won his first award at the Second Humor Festival. Between 1982 and 1984 he appeared on the Microscope Stage (Mikorszóp Színpad), and, since then, he has been a freelance artist. From 1989, has worked for the satirical paper Snowshoe (Hócipő). He is a unique, innovative and well-liked humorist and performance artist. Nagy Bandó writes his own material. He has several albums of his performances, which have sold well. They include Laying One's Cards on the Table (Nyílt kártyákkal) (1986); I Love Hungary (I Love Magyarország) (1987), and The Forint Turns Forty (40 éves a forint) (1988). Nagy Bandó wrote the books: On the Road – Off the Road (Úton-útfélen) (1987), and On the Road - At the End of the Road (Úton-útvégen) (1990). He had twenty exhibitions of his caricatures between the years 1964 and 1998; four photo exhibitions from 1994 to 1998, three of them featuring wood carvings. András Nagy Bandó received the Karinthy Ring in 1998, and a Golden Piece of Straw for his dedication to end homelessness in 1996. – B: 1445, 1178, T: 7688.

Nagy-Bánkai, Mátyás (Matthew) (Nagybánkai) (16th century) – Protestant versifier. In 1540 he lived at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia), where he was either preacher or teacher. It appears that he too experienced a lot of suffering and misery similarly to other Protestant preachers and teachers, which he often recounted in his poems. Only four works of his are known after his creative period of 35 years. His poem, About Solace in Miseries (A nyomorúságokban való vigasztalásról) (1540), as well as other works, reflects a deep religiosity and strong patriotism. His last extant work is Supplication (Könyörgés) (1575), a moving farewell of an old man faithful to his beliefs. – B: 0942, 1701, T: 7617.

Nagy, Barna D. (Sárospatak, 15 May 1909 - Budapest, 17 September 1969) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, researcher, writer. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak, Montpellier (1929-1930), Zürich (1932), and Bonn (1933-1934). He obtained a Doctoral Degree in Systematic Theology from the University of Debrecen in 1936. After having served congregations in County Zemplén, he was Professor of Systematic Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Sárospatak (1937-1951). After the Academy was closed down by state pressure in 1952, he worked as a scientific researcher at the Reformed General Convent, Budapest. He became Professor of Systematic Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest, (1954-1958). After the crushed Revolution and Freedom Fight in 1956, he was briefly detained in 1957. From 1958 until his death he was Researcher at the Reformed College Library, Sárospatak, then at the General Synod Office, Budapest. His topics of research include history of Dogma, research on Calvin, Church and literary histories of the 16th century. He spoke nine languages, modern and ancient, and utilized them in his research work in libraries and archives in Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Poland. His works include The Question of Method in the So-called Dialectic Theology (A teológiai módszer problémája az úgynevezett Dialektika Theológiában) (1936); W. Niesel: The Theology of Calvin (W. Niesel: Kálvin theológiája), translation (1943); John Calvin: Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans (Kálvin János: A Római levél magyarázata), translation (1954); Epoch of Historical Calvinism (A történelmi Kálvinizmus kora), in History of the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, (1955); John Calvin: Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews (Kálvin János: A Zsidókhöz írt levél magyarázata), translation (1965), and The Catechism of Heidelberg (A Heidelbergi Káté) (1965). He was an internationally acknowledged John Calvin and Karl Barth researcher. He received an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Zürich. – B: 0876, 0910, 0883, 1257, T: 7103.

Nagy, Endre (Andrew) (Grósz) (Nagyszöllős, now Vinogradov, Carpatho-Ukraine, 5 February 1877 - Budapest, 5 May 1938) – Writer, theater manager. He finished his Law studies in Budapest and Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), after which he became a journalist. From 1895 to 1897 he was a correspondent for the paper, Freedom (Szabadság), of Nagyvárad, where the great lyric poet, Endre Ady, was another correspondent, with whom he was on friendly terms. From 1900 he was a correspondent for the Budapest paper, Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó), and, from 1901 to 1910 he was with the Pester Journal (Pesti Napló) as a correspondent. His short stories appeared in the Pesti Napló, while his sketches appeared in the paper Country-World (Ország-Világ). In 1908 he founded the first modern Hungarian cabaret by the name of Modern Stage (Modern Színpad), which he headed until 1913. In his witty, audacious appearances as M.C., he severely criticized the absurdities of public life, putting it on the pillory – by doing this, the influence he exercised on, and the guidance he gave to contemporary society is considerable. He was an outstanding connoisseur of the genre of Master of Ceremonies. The works of Endre Ady, Frigyes Karinthy, Andor Gábor, Ernő Szép etc. appeared on his stage. After spending a year in Paris, he became a correspondent for the paper, The Evening (Az Est) and, later for the Budapest Herald (Budapesti Hírlap). From 1921, he was Director of Gresham, from 1923 that of Pester Cabaret. From 1924 to 1929 he was co-director (with Béla Salamon) of the Teréz Boulevard Stage (Terézkörúti Színpad). In the 1930s he was Associate Editor for the Mail (Újság). In his last years, he conducted the lecture evenings of the Friendly Circle of the journal, West (Nyugat). He is the author of a number of novels, volumes of short stories and humorous works. Several of his plays were staged. His works include The Prime Minister (A miniszterelnök) stage play, Budapest (1903); The Beautiful Age of Chivalry (Gyönyörű lovagkor) short story (Nagyvárad, 1905); Story of the Court (Udvari történet) novel (Budapest, 1926); The Cabaret Singer (A kupléénekes) novel (Budapest, 1930), and his main work, The Novel of the Cabaret (A kabaré regénye) (Budapest, 1935). – B: 0883, 1079, 1257, T: 7456. → Nagyvárad; Ady, Endre; Karinthy, Frigyes; Gábor, Andor; Szép, Ernő; Salamon, Béla.

Nagy, Ferenc (Francis) (Bisse, 8 October 1903 - Fairfax, Virginia, USA, 12 June 1979) – Prime Minister, politician, farmer. He was one of the founders of the Smallholders' Party in 1930, and was its General Secretary from 1930 to 1950. He was Editor of the weekly, Independent Smallholder (Független Kisgazda) (1933-1935). He moved to Budapest and was elected MP in 1939. In 1941 he founded the Hungarian Peasant Alliance (Nemzeti Paraszt Szövetség.) and was its President in 1942-1943. He was a member of the Hungarian Historical Memorial Committee (Magyar Történelmi Emlékbizottság) in 1942. He was against World War II, and was arrested in March 1944, after the German occupation of Hungary; later he went underground. He became a member of the Provisional National Assembly (Ideiglenes Nemzetgyűlés) in 1945. He became President of the Smallholders' Party and, after its election victory, he was Prime Minister from February 1946 to June 1947. He led Government delegations to Moscow, Washington and London, expecting some help for Hungary at the Peace Conference, especially with regard to the large Hungarian minorities in neighboring successor states, but to no avail. When he was in Switzerland, the Communists accused him of treason; he did not return to Hungary, but moved to the USA and worked as a farmer, although he was one of the leading figures of the Hungarian émigré world. His memoirs, Struggle Behind the Iron Curtain (Küzdelem a vasfüggöny mögött) appeared in Hungarian as well as in English. – B: 0883, 0921, T: 7103.

Nagy, Feró (Ferenc Nagy) (Letenye, 14 January 1946 - ) – Singer, actor, writer of lyrics, “Cockroach of the nation”. Nagy obtained a diploma in production engineering from the Polytechnic of Budapest. He has been appearing as a singer and player in rock and punk bands since the 1960s. He worked with the following bands: Richmond Heads, Angiosperms (1963-1970); Beatrice (1970-1976), (front-man 1976-1981); Ancient Bikini (front-man 1982-1984); Backing group (1981?), and Little Snail (Csigabiga) (1982?). His popularity was increased with the radio program Garage, and he was in charge of the program from 1987. He was also an associate and organizer of the Musica Hungarica Festival, and, in the early 1990s, he was leader of the TV program: Rock-hammer (Rokkalapács). From 1998 to 2002, he was a co-leader of Radio Pannon and later, of Radio Rock-Source of Tatabánya. He published more than 17 albums, including Bikini's Hova lett... (1983); Vidám Magyarok (1992); Beatrice's Ki viszi át (1996) and Antológia (2004). Feró Nagy participated in the preparation of numerous albums, e.g.: Stephen the King (István a Király) (1983), Aki magyar – 1956 (Who is Hungarian – 1956) (2001), and Argó, film-music (2004). He also appeared as an actor, e.g. as Laborc in Stephen the King, Hamlet in a rock opera, and in the films Valley of Slaps (Pofonok völgye) (1980); Stephen the King (1983), and The Price of Survival (A túlélés ára) (1990). Feró Nagy is regarded as one of the leading figures of the Hungarian light-musical trend. His work was rewarded with the State Prize. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Nagy, Gáspár (Gasper) (Bérbaltavár, 4 May 1949 - Budapest 4 January 2007) - Dissident poet. He was born into a family of peasant farmers in southwestern Hungary. He studied at the Teachers' Training College of Szombathely from 1968 to 1971 and, for a while, he worked as a librarian. After a stint with the Ferenc Móra Publishers (Móra Ferenc Kiadó) of Budapest, in 1981 he became Secretary to the Hungarian Writers Union, a post he held until 1985. For the following three years, he was Secretary for the Gábor Bethlen Foundation and, from 1988 he edited the cultural review, Credit (Hitel) in Budapest. Hitel, in the first few years of its existence, was regarded as the mouthpiece of the Hungarian Democratic Forum, the Party, which won the majority of seats in the 1990 elections. On the editorial board, the Catholic Gáspár Nagy acted as a moderating influence against the mostly Protestant populist radicals. When, in 1985 a little-read provincial literary magazine published a strange poem, where the last three lines ended with the letters "NI" (in Hungarian “-ni” forms the infinitive suffix of a verb). The Communist authorities immediately retaliated, dismissing the poem's young author from his post as Secretary to the Hungarian Writers Union. They realized that this was, indeed, a coded reference to Imre Nagy (in Hungarian “Nagy Imre: NI”), Prime Minister during the Hungarian Revolution of 1956 executed for “treason” in 1958. This was the first time that many people took notice of Gáspár Nagy, a namesake, but no relation, of Imre Nagy. He was, however, not intimidated by the wrath of Communist officialdom and continued to publish, causing the withdrawal from circulation of the June 1986 issue of the Szeged literary magazine, Tiszatáj, where, in a poem, he made a fairly open allusion to the “miserable compromises” on which János Kádár's “Goulash Communism” was based. Once again, Nagy was fortunate: he escaped arrest with his popularity enhanced.

His poetry is the meeting-point of diverse influences: In it, Biblical tradition mingles with historical commentary and ironic observations on the state of the world and Hungary. While there are traces of Surrealism in his verse, more traditional Hungarian poet, such as Attila József and László Nagy - as well as certain East European authors (Zbigniew Herbert, Danilo Kis) - also left an impact on his largely accessible, erudite poetry. Among his dozen collections of poems, the most interesting ones were probably Our Future is Passing (Múlik a jövőnk) (1989), and Free Captives (Szabadrabok) (1999). In 2006 he wrote a cycle of poems celebrating the memory of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight and its victims.

His poems in English translations, mostly by Len Roberts, are in the second volume of the anthology, In Quest of the “Wondrous Stag” (2003), a representative collection of 20th-century Hungarian poetry. Gáspár Nagy won most recognition after the change of regime in Hungary in 1990. He was awarded, among others, the Attila József Prize in 1990, the Greve Prize (1992), the award of the Getz Corporation (1995), and the Kossuth Prize (2000); he also won the Hungarian Heritage Prize (2006). – B: 1257, 0874, 1702, T: 1702.→Nagy, Imre; Kádár, János; József, Attila; Nagy, László.

Nagy, Géza (Székelyszenterzsébet, now Eliseni, Romania, 1 September 1914 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 24 January 1981) – Literary historian, teacher. He started his high school education at the Reformed College of Székelyudvarhely (now Odorhei, in Transylvania, Romania) in 1924 then, moving to County Kolozs, he continued his studies at the Reformed College of Kolozsvár, where he passed the maturity examination in 1931. Between 1931 and 1936 he studied Hungarian Language and Literature as the main subjects at the Faculty of Linguistics, and Philosophy at the University of Kolozsvár. He was President of the Collegiate Christian Association. He went on a 5-month study trip to Switzerland; then spent six months at the University of Budapest. From the fall of 1936 he was a teacher at the Reformed College of Zilah (now Zalău, Romania) and, between 1937 and 1948 he taught in the Reformed College of Kolozsvár, where, in addition to Hungarian, he also taught Romanian and German. After World War II, from 1945 to 1949, he took part in the organization of the Hungarian School and University Education under Romanian rule and, in 1945 he obtained a Ph.D. and joined the Social Democratic Party. He edited textbooks for the Hungarian high schools. In 1949 he was accused of being a rightwing social democrat, and he was expelled from the amalgamated Workers Party. From 1948 to 1952, after the schools had been nationalized, he was a high-school teacher at the Reformed College of Kolozsvár. In 1952, without a reason given, he was carried off to the construction site of the Danube Canal Project, where he served 11 months as a virtual slave worker, without knowing the reason. In 1953, for allegedly participating in a political movement years earlier, he was sentenced to a one-year imprisonment. He was freed as the result of an amnesty. From 1954 he could only find work as an unskilled laborer in a timber co-operative, where he worked as a furniture polisher. In the meantime, he published some translations from German and Romanian literature, using pseudonyms (Bálint Nagy, Bálint Tar). From 1956 to 1971, at the invitation of the Bishop János Vásárhelyi of the Reformed Church, he accepted employment as Archivist at the Reformed Diocese of Transylvania, also directed the repair of historic monuments and worked as technical editor of the official paper, Reformed Review (Református Szemle). During these years, the Court of Kolozsvár granted him rehabilitation. As a result, the University of Kolozsvár invited him to give lectures on the Methodology of Hungarian Language and Literature and to conduct the practical sessions in these subjects. He retired in 1979. His works include Gábor Bethlen in the Service of Culture (Bethlen Gábor a művelődés szolgálatában) (1980), and Compilation and Introductory Study (Összeállítás és bevezető tanulmány) in Dezső Kovács: The Tempter (A kísértő), short stories (1970). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Vásárhelyi, János.

Nagy, Gyula (Julius) (Pelsőc, now Plesivec, Slovakia, 22 September 1918 - ) – Lutheran Bishop, theologian. His secondary education was at the Benedictine High School, Győr. He studied Theology at the Lutheran Theological Faculty of the University of Pécs (1936-1940). He was ordained in 1940 and was on scholarship at the Collegium Hungaricum, Berlin (1940-1942). He studied Philosophy at Friedrich Wilhelm University, Berlin (1940-1942), where he obtained his Ph.D. in Philosophy in 1943, and a Doctoral Degree in Theology from the Lutheran Theological Faculty, Sopron in 1946. He was a lecturer at the Luther University of Halle-Wittenberg (1942-1943), and Director of the Hungarian and East European Church-Research Institute (1943-1945). After being Assistant Pastor and Teacher of Religion in Sopron, Győr and Pécs, he became Professor of Systematic Theology, Ethics, Philosophy and Ecumenicalism at the Lutheran Theological Academy, Budapest (1950-1971). After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he participated in the work of Committees of the Lutheran World Federation, Geneva and, consequently, he was invited to work there as Leader of the Theological Education Secretariat (1971-1976). The Conference of European Churches (CEC) elected him as its first Theological Secretary (1976-1980). After his return to Hungary, Nagy resumed teaching at the Lutheran Theological Academy, from 1980 to 1982. In 1982 he was elected Bishop of the North Church District of the Lutheran Church. He resigned in 1990. In the 1980s, he was a member of the leading bodies of the World Council of Churches (1983-1991), the Lutheran World Federation (1987-1990), and the Conference of European Churches (1980-1986). He received an Honorary Doctorate from the Reformed Theological Academy, Debrecen, in 1988. He authored some 500 articles, studies, essays and books, including Der Doppelleffect der Seele bei Platon (The double effect of the soul in Plato) (1943); The Biblical Foundation of Justification (A megigazulás bibliai alapjai) (1946); Dogmatics (Dogmatika) (1965); The Church in Today's World – Theological Socioethics (Az egyház a világban – Teológiai szociáletika) (1968); Man as a Responsible Co-worker of God (Az ember mint Isten felelős munkatársa) (1971), Treasure of the Church – Sermons and Studies (Az egyház kincse – Igehirdetések és teológiai tanulmányok) (1988), and Today's Teaching of the Church – Lutheran Dogmatics, vol. i (Az egyház mai tanítása – Evangélikus dogmatika I) (2000). – B: 0874, 1050, T: 7103.

Nagy, Gyula D. (Julius) (Csomakőrös, now Chiuruş, Romania, 29 September 1909 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1992) – Bishop of the Reformed Church in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). His secondary studies were at the Bethlen Reformed College of Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania), where he graduated in 1929. His higher studies were at the Protestant Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár, where he obtained his Ministerial qualification and he was ordained in 1933. He was Assistant Minister in Petrozsény (now Petroşani, Romania). After one year he served there as Parish Minister for 18 years. Thereafter, he was called by the Congregation of Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania). In 1951, he became Dean of the Hunyad Deanery. After the death of Bishop János Vásárhelyi on 28 June 1962, he was elected Bishop of the Transylvanian Reformed Church District. He resigned in December 1989. He and Bishop László Pap of Nagyvárad were the leaders of the Reformed Church in Transylvania and in the Partium during the greater part of the Communist and the Ceausescu rule in Romania. – B: 1703, T: 7103. → Nagyenyedi; Vásárhelyi, János.

Nagy, Ignác (Ignatius) (Keszthely, 7 October 1810 - Pest, 19 March 1854) – Writer. From 1829 he studied Law at the University of Pest. Though he had a German upbringing, on the encouragement of Károly Kisfaludy and his wife, Kornelia Halmy, he started to write in Hungarian and became a Hungarian writer. He became a member of the Kisfaludy Society. He was a correspondent of several papers and, in 1835 and 1836 he was Assistant Editor for the papers Outlines (Rajzolatok) and Present Age (Jelenkor). In the latter he started a new column in 1840, in which in Hungarian literary life was the first to report on new happenings in the Capital City. Later on, he continued this column in the Budapest Courier (Budapesti Híradó), in the Athenaeum, the Pest Fashion Magazine (Pesti Divatlap) and Life Scenes (Életképek). In 1840 he became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He edited the series, Foreign Collection of Novels (Külföldi Regénytár) (1843-1844), and New Foreign Collection of Novels (Új Külföldi Regénytár) (1844-1846). In the years from 1831 to 1848 he was an official of the Royal Treasury and, in the spring of 1848, became Financial Clerk. However, early in 1849, during the 1848-1849 War of Independence, he did not follow the Ministry to Debrecen, but stayed in Pest and, under Count Windischgrätz, he wrote articles in the Pester News (Pesti Hírlap). Nagy had to hide away from the returning Hungarian Honvéds at Soroksár, and could only return to Pest in October 1849. It was then, after the War of Independence, that he started the first literary paper, the daily Ladies' Messenger (Hölgyfutár). He also wrote literary works: poems, novels and stage works. Among his novels is Hungarian Secret (Magyar titkok) (1844-1845), written under the influence of Eugène Sue (the creator of the serialized novel). He enjoyed great popularity; with one of his plays, Re-election of Officials (Tisztújítás) (1842), for which he won a prize. His music critiques appeared in the Budapest Courier (Budapesti Híradó) in 1844. He published the serial, Collection of Dramatic Works (Szinműtár) (1839-1843). His works include Speeches, vols. i-iii (Beszélyek I-III) (1843), In Days Gone by and at Present, vols. i-iv (Hajdan és most I-IV), short stories (1845) and Comedies of Ignác Nagy (Nagy Ignác vígjátékai) (1852). – B: 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7456.

Nagy, Imre (1) (Emeric) (Sárrétudvari, 23 October 1896 - Sárrétudvari, 6 December 1942) – Poet. He came from a poor peasant family and eked out a wretched existence, though the famous novelist Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz and his young writer friends tried everything to help him. Because of an article he wrote, he was imprisoned for two years, but was unable to complete his term in prison, because he died of the illness he contracted during his life of privation. His works include Whipping Post of the Dead (Holtak derese), poems (1940); Collected Poems (Összegyűjtött versei), foreword by Péter Veres (1943), Sleepless Night (Álmatlan éj), selected poems, with foreword by József Pinter, (1958). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Móricz, Zsigmond; Veres, Péter.

Nagy, Imre (2) (Emeric) (Kaposvár, 7 June 1896 - Budapest, 16 June 1958) – Politician.

After completing Commercial College, he apprenticed as a locksmith. He worked as a journeyman at Diósgyőr and Kaposvár. In 1914 he was drafted into the army and became a prisoner of war in Russia. In 1918 he joined the Hungarian section of the Russian Communist (Bolshevik) Party and, as a member of the Red Army, he fought in the Russian Civil War. In 1921 he returned to Hungary and was involved in Communist organizing activities. In 1928 he moved to Vienna and, and in 1929 he returned to the Soviet Union. He lived in Moscow, and first worked at the Agricultural Institution, then in the Office of Statistics. During World War II, as a radio reporter and Editor he produced propaganda programs in support of the Soviet Union. At the end of 1944, he again returned to Hungary and worked in various executive positions in the Hungarian Communist Party. Between 22 December 1944 and 14 November 1952, he was appointed to Ministerial positions in the areas of agriculture, internal affairs, food distribution and collection, and served as President of Parliament in 1948. From 1948 Nagy was Deputy Prime Minister, then between 4 July 1953 and 4 March 1955 he became Prime Minister. On numerous occasions, he was severely criticized for his factional opinions (4 March 1955, 18 April 1955), then, in April of 1955, he lost all his party positions and was expelled from the Communist Party. Due to his popularity among the people of Hungary, he was again Prime Minister between 24 October 1956 and 4 November 1956, during the Revolution and Freedom Fight. In his short tenure, he attempted to bring events under control. He offered amnesty to the freedom fighters, abolished the one-party system and tried to negotiate the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary, stationed there as an occupying force since 1945. When he realized that he was deceived by the Soviets, he withdrew Hungary from the Warsaw Pact Communist Military Bloc and declared Hungary's neutrality. When fresh Soviet troops invaded Budapest on 4 November 1956, he and his close associates were granted asylum in the Yugoslav Embassy in Budapest. Under promise of safe passage, they left the Embassy in a bus, but the Yugoslav bus was seized by the Soviet military on 23 November 1956. Five days later, he and his group were flown to Romania. The Soviet leaders tried to persuade him to endorse the new Kádár Government, but he refused. After approximately two years, when the Kádár Government felt itself strong enough to act, he was taken to Budapest. After a secret trial, he was executed on 16 June 1958, aged 62. He was buried in an unmarked grave, then rehabilitated 31 years later and given a ceremonial state funeral on 16 June 1989. Imre Nagy, the reformer, wanted to be loyal to both his nation and the Communist Party, which – due to the nature of Communism – proved impossible. The conflict deriving from his incompatible philosophical position often resulted in his vacillation and/or indecision. Using the right of the last word of the convicted, when he suspected his fate, he defended and espoused the ideas of 1956, but also bore witness to his deep belief in and loyalty to Communism. He was a Communist idealist, a martyr of Communism, a victim of unexpected and sweeping historic events. – B: 1230, 0883, 1031, 1138, 1153, T: 7665.→Kádár, János.

Nagy, Imre (3) (Emeric) (zsögödi) (Zsögöd, now Jigodin, Romania, 25 July 1893 – Csikszereda, now Mercurea Ciuc, Transylvania, Romania, 22 August 1976) – Painter, sculptor, and teacher. In 1914 he obtained a diploma from the Teachers' College of Csikszereda. Following World War I, he was engaged in sculptural work and settled in Budapest, since Transylvania had come under Romanian rule as a result of the Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920). In 1918 he studied Painting at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest, under Viktor Olgyay. From 1920 to 1922 he pursued further studies on a scholarship from the artist colony of Kecskemét. His paintings first appeared in public at this colony in 1922. In 1924 he moved back to Zsögöd for good. He created his works in the scenery of the Csik Alps of the Eastern Carpathians, under the influence of his Szekler countrymen. In the 1920s he had numerous one-man shows, mainly in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and Brassó (now Braşov, Romania). In 1928 he was on a study-tour in Italy, followed by one in Austria and Germany. Imre Nagy was one of the founding members of the Miklós (Nicholas) Barabás Guild, and appeared with his works in the Guild's Exhibition. In 1929 and 1933 he had exhibitions at the Salonul Oficial of Bucharest, while his one-man show was organized in Budapest. In 1938 he appeared with some of his works in a one-man show, held in London. He also had one-man shows in Kolozsvár, Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureş, Romania) and Bucharest. In 1949 he became a teacher of water colour at the School of Arts of Kolozsvár. On his eightieth birthday in 1973, the Imre Nagy Picture Gallery was opened in his birthplace, Zsögöd; while in 1974 his retrospective exhibition opened in the Castle of Mikóvár of Csikszereda. In 1976, a one-man show was organized at the National Gallery of Budapest. The works of Imre Nagy are held in museums all over Transylvania. Nagy donated forty-four of his canvases to the Teleki Téka (Collection) of Marosvásárhely, which established the Imre Nagy Gallery in 1959. Two hundred of his drawings, selected by the famous artist and archeologist Gyula (Julius) László, with his foreword, were published by Kriterion Publishers of Bucharest in 1973. He was awarded the 23rd August Order, 1st Grade, in 1973. – B: 0883; T: 7456.→László, Gyula; Kecskemét Artist Colony.

Nagy, István (Stephen) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 22 February 1904 – Kolozsvár, 24 April 1977) – Writer. He was born into a laborer family. Leaving school in the second-last year of primary school, he learned the carpentry trade. From 1919 he took part in the labor movement; in 1920 he organized an apprentice strike in the Match Factory of Kolozsvár; in 1922 he was elected Chief Trade Union Steward in the city's furniture factory. From 1922 to 1927, as a wandering laborer, he traversed Romania far and wide; worked in the Danube harbors of Galati and Braila, and completed his military service in Giurgiu. On returning to Kolozsvár, he worked for the organization of the Romanian Laborer Assistance. In 1933 he published the novel, There is No Stopping (Nincs megállás), featuring the life of workers; but after the railway strike he was imprisoned. Upon his release, he became District Secretary for the illegal Red Assistance, working at the same time as a cabinet-maker. He was in prison again in Jilava and Doftana during 1935-1936. His first works appeared in the literary journal, Our Age (Korunk) and, with his drama, Before the Flood (Özönviz előtt) of 1936, he was awarded a prize by the Transylvanian Helikon Society (Erdélyi Helikon). In the 1930s, he was a correspondent for the papers, Hungarian Stars (Magyar Csillagok); People of the East (Kelet Népe), and Word of the People (Népszava). In 1940 he was enlisted for forced labor, and interned in Caracal. When freed, he moved to Kolozsvár to carry out illegal work in a Communist movement group of Northern Transylvania (at the time returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award). His sociological novels, Suburb (Külváros) (1940), and Laborers (Bérmunkások) (1945), appeared during these years. From 1944 to 1946 he was Editor for the papers Bright Light (Világosság), and Justice (Igazság). He played a leading role in the national minority life of Transylvanian Hungarians under Romanian rule, in the capacity of representative in public meetings, and Editor of the journal, Linguistic and Literary Proceedings (Nyelv-és Irodalomtudományi Közlemények). His literary activity increasingly developed with the appearance of a series of novels and short stories, such as The Ács Family Sets Up Camp (Ácsék tábort vernek) (1961) and Against the Current (Szemben az árral) (1974). He received the Romanian State Prize, 1st Class (1955). – B: 0883, 0878, 1257, T: 7456.

Nagy, Iván (1) (Balassagyarmat, 18 June 1824 - Horpács, 26 October 1898) – Historian, genealogist. He obtained his Law Degree in the City of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and fought as a soldier in the 1848-1849 War of Independence from Habsburg rule. From 1853 he practiced law in Balassagyarmat; then was an official in Budapest; and from 1870 to 1878, Editor of the journal, Parliamentary Diary (Képviselőházi Napló). From 1883 he was one of the Vice-Presidents of the Heraldry and Genealogy Society. His main work was Hungarian Dynasties with Coat-of-Arms and Generation Tables, vols. i-xii (Magyarország családai címerekkel és nemzedékrendi táblákkal, I-XII) (1857-1865). His many published works include János (John) Komáromi's Diary, (Diárium) (he was the secretary of Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly) (1861), and The Diary of Imre (Emeric) Thököly of Késmárk from 1693-1694 (1863). He provided numerous short articles about reference sources that were published in the Historical Magazine. He was one of the greatest Hungarian genealogists, heraldists and historians; his work, Hungarian Dynasties, is an important sourcebook for researchers. – B: 0883, 1257, 1031, T: 7676. → Thököly, Count Imre; Nyáry, Baron Albert.

Nagy, Iván (2) (Debrecen, 28 March 1943 - ) – Ballet dancer. At the age of seven, he won a scholarship from the Budapest State Opera House, and learned dancing at the Ballet Institute. Under the direction of Irén Nartos and Russian ballerina Olga Lepesinskaya in Moscow, he received an academic and professional training (1951-1960). From 1960 to 1966 he was a dancer at the Opera House. He won a bronze medal at the Varna Competition, and was invited as guest dancer by the National Ballet of Washington. In 1968 he was invited to join the New York City Ballet for their spring season. Following this, he joined the American Ballet. He stayed with this company until the end of 1978, when he retired. He, together with his wife Marilyn Burr (ex-festival ballerina), restaged many of the classics all over the world. She also assisted him both in Chile and in Cincinnati as ballet mistress. In February 1996, he took over the Artistic Direction of the Ballet de Santiago, Chile. He excelled, among others, in Giselle, La Sylphide, Romeo and Juliet and the Nutcracker (Diótörő). – B: 0874, 1727, T: 7103.

Nagy, Izabella (Isabella) (Győr, 17 July 1896 - Budapest, 31 January 1960) – Singer (mezzo-soprano). She first appeared on stage in 1921, in the Theaterette of Buda (Budai Színkör), where she played the role of Finum Rózsi in Ede Tóth's The Rouge of the Village (A falu rossza) (1874). Later, she joined the Comedy Theater (Vigszínház), Budapest and, in 1922 she became a member of the Opera House, where she appeared in the title role of Bizet's Carmen. From 1925 she was also a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), where she made guest appearances, and also at the Comedy Theater. She played, with considerable success, the female leading roles in musical folk-plays like Silly Istók (Bolond Istók); A Fairy-place in Hungary (Tündérlak Magyarhonban); The Horse Herder (A csikós), and Matyó Wedding (Matyólakodalom). As concert singer she appeared in the works of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály, in Hungarian folksongs, and in the Lieder repertoire of Schubert, Brahms and Grieg. At the end of the 1930s, she went abroad on a concert tour (Amsterdam, Berlin, Rome). Her main roles were: Örzse in Kodály's Háry János; Gazdaasszony in Kodály's Szekler Spinning-house (Székelyfonó); Iluska in Kacsóh's Hero John (János vitéz); Ganymed in Suppé's The Beautiful Galathea (A szép Galathea); Izabella in Suppé's Boccaccio, and Közvélemény (Public opinion) in Offenbach's Orpheus in the Underworld (Orfeusz az alvilágban). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Nagy, József S.D.B. (1) (Joseph) (Nagyvarsány, 20 October 1908 - Miyazaki, Japan, 16 February 1990) – Monk, missionary associate. He worked as an electrical engineer in Budapest. He entered the Order of Salesian Don Bosco in 1933, and spent his novitiate years in Budapest. He taught electronics at the Salesian School of Budapest. He learned the printing trade in Rákospalota. Due to his knowledge of printing, his Order sent him to Japan in 1936. From 1937 to 1957 he was posted to the Tokyo Suginam School to teach printing. In the meantime, he obtained three diplomas. In 1937 he was appointed university professor in Japan. In 1952 he wrote, in Japanese, the first technical printing book and participated in developing the Latin typography. He assisted in developing the Panasonic radio receiver. In 1968 he was transferred to Miyazaki where he was a school librarian. – B: 0945, T: 7103.

Nagy, József (2) (Joseph) (Tiszasüly, 1908 - Budapest, 24 June 1979) – Building engineer. Prior to 1945, he worked as a private designer and contractor. From 1948 he was a designer in the Industrial Building Designing Company. He became an outstanding figure in industrial structural design. Considered unique are his plans of the way the girders span a large distance in the canning works of Nyíregyháza. His important works on design are: The Bracing and Rolling Mill of the Foundry Works of Ózd (1977) and the Cold-storage Plant at Tuzsér (south of the Slovakian-Ukrainian border, with Ipoly Farkas, 1970). His more important structural designs include the Power Station of Ajka, and the Garbage-burning Plant there, the Cannery of Nyíregyháza and Debrecen, the Chemolimpex Head Office, Budapest, and a residential building on József Nádor Square, Budapest. Nagy, Károly (1) (Charles) (Rév-Komárom, now Komarno, Slovakia, 6 December 1797 - Paris, 2 March 1858) – Mathematician, astronomer, economist and political writer. In 1819 he enrolled at the Department of Chemistry of the University of Vienna, later he studied Arabic language, Economics and Mathematics. For two years, he was a trainee under Littrow in the observatory of Vienna. On returning to Hungary, he was the financial manager of Count Lajos Károlyi and, from 1838 of Count Kázmér Batthyány. He went on study leaves to Paris and Brussels, getting acquainted with utopian-socialistic doctrines, and he became an adherent of these doctrines. In 1834 he visited England and, from there, he traveled to the USA, studying its educational conditions and visiting its more important scientific institutions. During his stay in America, he became a follower of bourgeois democracy, his views becoming increasingly leftist, and his radical ideas had many utopistic elements as well. Numerous of his economic and political articles appeared in the journals, Conversation (Társalkodó), Scientific Collection (Tudományos Gyűjtemény), Monitor (Figyelmező) and Athenaeum. In 1834, in London, financed by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, he published the logarithmic table (the logarithms of the natural numbers) of Charles Babbage (the inventor of the first mechanical computing machine in 1821). During the years 1837 to 1842, he edited the astronomic tables of the Hungarian Scientific Society's Volume of Names and Astronomic Diary. In support of the introduction of the metric system, he was the first to bring to Hungary the units of meter and kilogram from Paris. Returning to Hungary, he settled on Kázmér Batthyány's property at Bicske (west of Budapest), where he made plans for building an astronomical observatory for training Hungarian mathematicians and astronomers; for this purpose Batthyány endowed 100,000 Ft. Although he did not take part in the 1848-1849 War of Independence against Habsburg Rule; but after the war he was imprisoned; when he was freed, he went to live in Paris in 1853, where he died. His works include Elementary Algebra (Elemi algebra) (1837); Measurements of Hungary (Magyarországi mértékek) (1839), and Die Sonne und die Astronomie (Leipzig, 1866). – B: 0883, 1079, T: 7456.

Nagy, Károly (2) (Charles) (Nyíregyháza, 24 May 1934 - ) – Sociologist, writer, social organizer. In 1953 he obtained a Diploma of Education at his birthplace; then, he taught in a primary school for several years. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to the West, settling in the USA. In 1960 he founded the Hungarian Weekend School (and became its teacher) of the Hungarian Alumni Association. In 1962 he earned a Degree in Psychology at Rutgers University. In 1970 he received a Ph.D. and worked for six years as a social counselor. From 1965 he was a lecturer in Sociology at Rutgers University, then at Middlesex County College. Since 1977 he has been editing the Free University lecture notes and publication series, Witnesses About Their Age (Tanúk korukról). His chief center of interest and activity was maintaining the Hungarian Language and Culture abroad, and the business of interaction among Hungarians scattered throughout the world. His studies, essays and articles appeared mainly in the New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); Literary News (Irodalmi Újság); Here-and-There (Itt-Ott); Rainbow (Szivárvány); Hungarians in the West (Nyugati Magyarorság), as well as in American journals. He was Editor of the 1991 English-language edition of the selected studies of István Bibó. His works include Literature as an Instrument of Social Change in Hungary During the 1960s (1969) and Insular Hungarians and Solidarity (Szigetmagyarság és szolidaritás) (1988). He was awarded the Kassák Prize in 1976 and the Géza Bárczi Prize in 1981. – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7456.

Nagy, Lajos (1) (Louis) (Apostag-Tabányitelek, 5 February 1883 - Budapest, 28 October 1954) – Author, political writer. He was born out of wedlock; his mother, Julia Nagy, was a servant girl in Budapest. This was a source of much bitterness and humiliation for him throughout his life. He went to school in Budapest, where he also studied Law, but he did not obtain a Degree. During his study years, he lived from casual work; he assisted in a Law office and taught and reared the children of wealthy and aristocratic families. In 1906, during the term in office of the Fejérváry Government, he accepted the position of Magistrate at Abaujszántó. In 1907 he joined the army but, after a short service, he was discharged. It was then, in December 1907 that his first work appeared and, from then on, he devoted all his life to literary work. From 1915 to 1917 he served in the army again, but not on the Front. From 1918 he was Editor for the satirical paper, Silly Istók (Bolond Istók). During the 131 days of the Soviet (Council) Republic's rule (1919), he accepted refereeing work. From 1922 to 1929 he was a leading correspondent for the literary review, West (Nyugat), but he worked at several other places as well. In the 1930s he was awarded the Baumgarten Prize three times (1932, 1935, 1938). He wrote short stories and sketches, later also some novels; among them, the one entitled Kiskunhalom (1934), a descriptive sociological work, caused a sensation and earned him some recognition. In 1934 he traveled with Gyula Illyés to Moscow to attend the Congress of Soviet Writers. In 1935 he married the writer, Boris Szegedi (they had to hide in the countryside in 1944, because of his wife's Jewish descent). In 1940 he opened a bookshop because he still could not earn a living from the books he wrote. In 1945 he joined the Communist Party and became a correspondent for the paper, Free People (Szabad Nép). In 1947 he had to go to Switzerland for special medical treatment of his neurasthenia, which later led to his death. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1948. In realistically describing society, he was among the best in the 20th century; he was a master of socialist satire. The central tenets of his writings are the rejection of the morals of the exploiting businessmen and the exposure of bourgeois life-style. He exerted considerable influence on other writers in his description of sociological village life. His works include the collection of short stories in one volume: The Woman, her Lover, and her Husband (Az asszony, a szeretője, meg a férje) (1911); The Andrassy Boulevard (Az Andrassy-út) short stories (1918); Three Hungarian Towns (Három magyar város) (1935); Budapest Grand Café (Budapest nagykávéház) (1936); The Mask of the Village (A falu álarca) (1937); The Student (A tanítvány) (1945), and Selected Sketches (Válogatott karcolatok) (1957). – B: 0883, 1079, 1257, 0883, T: 7456.→Illyés, Gyula; Móricz, Zsigmond; Németh, László; Zilahy, Lajos; Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic in Hungary.

Nagy, Lajos (2) (Louis) (Donor, Pa, 1911 - McKeesport, Pa, USA, 27 December 1984) – Bishop of the Hungarian Reformed Church in the USA. He was born in the United States; as a small child his parents took him to Hungary. The first phase of his life was spent there, where he attended the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak. The second phase of his life began in 1949 when, as a US citizen, he was able to return to America. He soon became Minister of the Hungarian Reformed Church in McKeesport, Pa. Due to his tireless efforts and his fruitful endeavors the congregation was able to begin the building of a new church. In 1956 he was elected first Dean, then Bishop of the Church

Diocese. He was also elected President of the National Association of Reformed Ministers. At the same time, he was busy establishing a connection between the Reformed Churches in Hungary and the United States. The third phase of his life was spent in Ligonier, PA, where he took over the running of the Bethlen Home, a benevolent institution for orphans and the aged. He was recognized throughout the USA by most Hungarian congregations, where he acquired many friends for and supporters of the benevolent societies. The last phase of his life was spent in Bethlehem, PA, where, although in retirement, he tended to the spiritual needs of the small local Hungarian congregation. He celebrated the 50th anniversary of his ministry in September of 1984. In October he was about to move to New Port Richey, FL, but he died. His works include Occasions Bought at a Price (Áron vett alkalmak) sermons (1956); In Defense of the Golden Shield (Az aranypaizs védelmében), sermons (1969); From the Angels' Food (Az angyalok eledeléből), sermons (1970), and Sunday Afternoon (Vasárnap délután), short stories (1970). – B: 0906, T: 7617.

Nagy, László (1) (Ladislás) (Felsőiszkáz, west of Veszprém, 17 July 1925 - Budapest, 30 January 1978) – Poet, writer, translator of literary works; brother of the poet István Ágh. His parents were peasants. At the age of ten, he contracted poliomyelitis and his left leg became paralyzed. His secondary and higher studies were at the Reformed College of Pápa. From 1946 he studied at the People's College in Budapest. He also studied at the College of Applied Art and at the School of Arts. Later on he read Hungarian Literature and Philosophy in the Faculty of Arts of the University of Budapest. His first poems appeared in the journal, Reality (Valóság) in 1947, revealing strong folk poetry influence; the critics particularly praised the musicality of his poems and his determination to reform the rhythm of the verse. His first volume of poems, entitled Go away, Pain (Tűnj el, fájdalom) appeared at the 1949 Book Day. It is on that occasion that he became acquainted with Mihály Károlyi, György Lukács, Tibor Déry, István Vas and Milán Füst. In the fall of 1949 he received a scholarship to study the Bulgarian language in Sophia, and he spent longer periods in Bulgaria till the summer of 1952. After permanently returning to Hungary, he married the poetess Margit Szécsi. His book of translations contained a selection of Bulgarian folk poetry (1953). During the following decades, his translations embraced the folk poetry of the South-Slavic, Albanian and eastern Finno-Ugrian peoples, as well the poems of Spanish (García Lorca), English, French, German and Polish literary figures. He edited the children's paper, Little Drummer (Kisdobos) from 1957, and he became a correspondent for the journal, Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom) from 1959. In his 1956 work, Anthem for all Occasions (Himnusz minden időben), he sets the idealized world against the contradictory world of reality. Also in the 1950s, he started to develop the so-called long song: the fusion of lyric and epic poetry. In this field, his best works are: Pearl Skirt (Gyöngyszoknya) (1953); The Pleasure of Sunday (A vasárnap gyönyöre) (1955), and the one dedicated to his wife, The Adoration of the Hot Wind (A forró szél imádata) (1963). An important work of the 1960s is the Wedding (Menyegző) (1964). From about 1970 on, he withdrew into constant work, escaping from the real world, which started to appear to him discordant; he “buried himself in his poems”. In his late works, his lyric poems are permeated with the idea of preservation and guarding of moral values. In the middle of feverish work, he died tragically at the early age of 53. His works also include Sabers and Zithers (Szablyák és citerák) Bulgarian folksongs and folk-ballads (1953); Laurel Trees, (Babérfák) South-Slavic folk poetry (1969); Poems and Poem Translations, vols. i–iii (Versek és versfordítások I–III) (1975); The Bells are Coming to Get me (Jönnek a harangok értem), poems (1978); Collected Poems (Összegyűjtött versek), (1988), and Selected Poems (Válogatott versek) (1997). In the 1950s he received the Attila József Prize three times (1950, 1953, 1955). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1966. For his translations, he received the Bulgarian Cyril and Methodius Order. – B: 0883, 0878, 0879, 0877, T: 7103.→Károlyi, Mihály; Lukács, György; Déry, Tibor; Vas, István; Füst, Milán.

Nagy, László (2) (Ladislav) (Budapest, 2 September 1921 - ) – Journalist, historian. In 1943 he received a Doctorate in Law and Political Science from the University of Budapest. From 1945 to 1947 he was Public Relations Officer for the Smallholders' Party; then he moved to Geneva, where he studied Political Science at the University. He did not return to Hungary. In 1949 he became a correspondent for the Journal de Genève. From 1951 to 1954 he worked in the editorial office of Radio Free Europe in Munich, under the name, László Nyáry. Between 1954 and 1968 he was a correspondent for the Gazette de Lausanne, later its Foreign Affairs Editor. Concurrently, he was a lecturer at the University of Geneva and the Institut Universitaire de Hautes Études Internationales, in charge of its documentation department. From 1969 and 1989 he was also the Head of the International Scout Office in Geneva. His publishing activity embraced the more recent history of Hungary, the Communist systems of East-Central Europe, African problems, and scouting. His writings appeared in the periodicals, Horizon (Látóhatár); New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); Literary News (Irodalmi Újság), as well as in French and Swiss journals. His works include Imre Nagy, réformateur ou révolutionnaire?, with Miklós Molnár (1959); Katanga, study (1965); Lénine et sa révolution (1967); Sturm über Russland, (1967), and Démocraties populaires (1968). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Nagy, Miklós (1) (Nicholas) (Ūrögdi) (Torda, now Turda, Romania, 30 May 1840 - Budapest, 10 July 1907) – Journalist. He completed high school in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and his legal studies at the University of Pest in 1864. Already from 1863 he was Associate Editor of the paper Sunday News (Vasárnapi Újság); from 1867 to 1905 he was its Editor-in-Chief. It proved to be a paper of great success for the family and a source for Hungarian topics; its success was entirely to his credit. From 1873 he started a new paper, called, Peoples' Illustrated Paper (Képes Néplap). He edited, together with the eminent writer, Mór Jókai, the volumes (those dealing with Hungary) entitled Austro-Hungarian Empire in Writing and Pictures, vols. i–vii (Osztrák-Magyar Monarchia írásban és képen I–VII), with ca. 1500 illustrations, initiated by Crown Prince Rudolf in 1885. He also edited with Jókai the album Assistance (Segítség), the income from which (50,000 forints) was to help the three burned down towns, Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia), Nagykároly (now Carei, Romania) and Torockó (now Rimetea, Romania); the project was an unparalleled success. He also edited the 2-volume work Hungary in Pictures (Magyarország Képekben) (1867–1868). – B: 0883, 0907, 1068, T: 7456.→Jókai, Mór; Pákh, Albert.

Nagy, Miklós (2) (Nicholas) (Szombathely, 27 June 1924 - Budapest, 13 April 2002) – Literary historian. He completed his high school studies in Szombathely in 1942; majoring in Hungarian and Latin. He obtained a Degree in Education from the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest in 1947. From 1947 he was Librarian at the National Széchényi Library, Budapest. From 1949 he lectured on 19th Century Hungarian Literature at the University of Debrecen, where, from 1984, he was Assistant Professor, and from 1987 Professor and Head of Department. He obtained his Masters Degree in 1964. His main field of study was the literary works of the late 19th century. In 1962 he began preparing the new, revised edition of the works of the great novelist, Mór (Maurice) Jókai. Nagy's works include Zsigmond Kemény, little monograph (1972); Mór Jókai in the Mirror of his Works and Confessions (Jókai Mór alkotásai és vallomásai tükrében) little monograph (1975); Vigilantes (Virrasztók) studies, articles (1987); The History of Hungarian Literature 1849-1905, vol. iv (A magyar irodalom története 1849-1905-ig, IV) (1995), and Clio and other Muses (Klió és más múzsák) (1997). He was awarded the Ferenc Toldy Memorial Medal (1984), the László Wessely Prize (1992), the Small Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1994), the Aladár Komlós Prize (1994), and the Forintos Prize (1998). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7456. → Kemény, Baron Zsigmond; Jókai, Mór.

Nagy, Olga (Nagyernye, now Erneu, Romania, 2 January 1921 - ) – Writer, ethnographer. She did her studies in the Faculty of Philology at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), completing them in 1950; later on obtained a Ph.D. in Philology. She worked as a schoolteacher (1940-1944). Then, from 1945 to 1951 she was an acting teacher in the Junior High School of Szék (now Sic, Romania). From 1952 she was an associate on the editorial board of the weekly, Our Road (Útunk); then, from 1953 that of Working Woman (Dolgozó Nő). During the years between 1958 and 1973 until her retirement, she did ethnographic research at the Institute of Ethnography and Folklore in Kolozsvár. She is a member of The Folklore Fellows, Helsinki, and also a member of the Hungarian Ethnographical Society, Budapest. Her works include Fairy Tales (Mesék), e.g. The Bird of Gaiety (A vidámság madara) (1954); The Bald King (A kopasz király) (1963); The Wolf with Iron Teeth (A vasfogú farkas) (1987), and Tales of János Cifra (Cifra János meséi) (1991). Nagy, Pál (Paul) (Sentyepuszta, 8 September 1864 - Budapest, 10 February 1927) – Military officer. After completing the Cadet School of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), he joined the 11th Fighter Battalion of Győr. In 1890-1891 he completed the senior officers' course in Budapest and, from 1891 to 1893, he attended the Military School of Vienna. In 1895, as a captain, he became a lecturer at the Ludovika Military Academy in Budapest. From 1907 to 1911 he was a section-head in the Ministry of Defense, becoming a Staff Colonel in 1910. At the outbreak of World War I, he was Commander of the Honvéd Division of Pozsony, and served as a Brigadier-General on the Russian and Italian fronts. In 1917 he was made a Lieutenant General and, in 1918, he was pensioned off. After the fall of the Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary (1919), he was reactivated, becoming Commander of the Miskolc Military District and, in 1921, of the Budapest District; he became a General of the infantry and a Captain of the Vitéz Chair, retiring in the same year. However, when King Károly IV (Charles) marched into Hungary the second time, it was Pál Nagy who led the Governmental Forces and, at Budaörs, prevented the King from reaching Budapest. In 1922, he was Head of the Honvéd Forces of Hungary; he finally retired in 1925. He wrote some military studies. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Károly IV, Emperor and King.

Nagy, Péter (Budapest, 12 October 1920 - ) – Literary historian, critic. In 1942, he completed his studies in Education, majoring in Hungarian and French at the University of Budapest and, from 1943, he continued his studies at the University of Geneva, where he obtained a Masters Degree in 1953, and a Ph.D. in 1963. He started working in the Hungarian Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 1945, and in the Secretarial Office of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1950, then in 1952 in the Ministry of Education. Between 1952 and 1959 he was with the Writers' Association. From 1953 to 1955 he was with the Literary Publisher (Szépirodalmi Kiadó), then, in 1956, again at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. From 1957 he worked in the Institute of Literary History of the Academy. In 1963 he worked with the Corvina Publishers. From 1966 Peter Nagy was Chair of History of Literature at the University of Budapest. Between 1969 and 1971 he was a visiting professor at the University of Paris (Sorbonne). From 1971 until 1986 he was Head of the Department of World Literature at the University of Budapest, while in 1978-1979 he was also Director of the National Theater, Budapest. From 1985 he was Ambassador to UNESCO in Paris. From 1988 he resumed lecturing at the University of Budapest. From 1990 to 1997, in a retired capacity, he did research work in the Petőfi Literary Museum. His monograph on Zsigmond Móricz (1953) treats the modernity of his realistic approach and the multicolored style respecting the richness of his output. His literary-historical method was formed with consideration of the connections with world literature. His works include Dezső Szabó Monograph (Szabó Dezső monografia) (1964); Vous et nous. Essais de la littérature hongroise dans un contexte européen (1980); Adventures (Kalandozások), travel diary (1985), and Landmark (Határkő), study (1996). Nagy, Sándor (Alexander) (Németbánya, 1869 - Gödöllő, 1950) – Painter and industrial designer. He studied Art in Budapest, Rome and Paris. With Aladár Kőrösfői-Kriesch, he co-founded the School of Art in Gödöllő and was also the manager of a carpet-weaving firm in the same town. Besides painting, he created symbolic frescoes on religious subjects; he painted landscapes, did copper engravings, painted on glass, designed tapestries, and illustrated books; his illustrations of the great lyric poet Ady's volumes of poems are considered outstanding. In design, he applied folk art ornamentation, especially those of Kalotaszeg in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). His paintings include Our Garden (Kertünk) (1902); Blessed Condition (Áldott állapot) (1903); Ave Myriam (1904), and Lake Saint Jacob (Szentjakab tó) (1908). Graphic art: The Cemetery of Magyarvalkó (Magyarvalkói temető) (1908); Longing (Vágyódás) (1910). Painted glass: Head of Christ (Krisztusfej) (1910). – B: 0883, 0934, T: 7103.

Nagy, Sándor Béla (Alexander) (Nagykapos, now Vel'ké Kapušany in Slovakia, 15 July 1902 - Püspökladány, 26 February 1983) – Minister of the Reformed Church. He did his high school studies partly in the Greek Catholic School of Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine) (1912-1918), partly in the Reformed College of Sárospatak (1918-1920). He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak (1920-1924), then at Strassburg (1925-1926) and Geneva (1927-1928). In 1937 he earned a PhD in Practical Theology at the Theological Faculty of the University of Debrecen. After serving as Assistant Minister in Sárospatak, he was Parish Minister in Vámosújfalú (1928-1932), Bodrogkeresztúr (1932-1938) and Sátoraljaújhely (1938-1976). He retired in 1976 and moved to Püspökladány. During his study trip to Geneva he treated the history of the Hungarian students who studied there, and his essay on this topic was included in the serial Livre du Recteur, published on the occasion of the University's 400 years jubilee (1959). Other papers by him appeared in church papers. He translated John Calvin's works: Who are the Blessed? (Kik a boldogok?) (1982), and Be Glad at all Times! (Mindenkor örüljete!) (1986). He took part in the editing of the Bible-Reading Guide. The Reformed Scholarly Collection of Sárospatak holds his spiritual legacy. His works include The Reformed Divine Service According to Calvin (A református istentisztelet Kálvin felfogása szerint) (1937) and "The Hungarian Students of the Geneva Academy (1566-1772)" (A genfi Akadémia magyar diákjai 1566-1772) in: Irodalomtörténeti Közlemények, 1983. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456.

Nagysándor, József (Joseph) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 17 October 1804 - Arad, now in Romania, 10 October 1849) – Hungarian (Honvéd) military officer, martyr. He began to serve in the Imperial Austrian Army in 1823. He went into retirement as a Hussar captain in 1844. In 1848 he joined the independent Hungarian Army. He was appointed Major in charge of the Cavalry National Guard of County Pest. Later he fought with success against the Imperial forces near the southern border area of County Torontál (at the time in Hungary). He also excelled as Commander of a cavalry brigade during the Spring Campaign, especially in the battles of Szolnok, Tápióbicske, Isaszeg and Vác. In recognition of his achievements, he was made a General. He also fought prominently at the head of his cavalry in the Battle of Nagysalló (now Tekovské Lužany in Slovakia) and in the Battle of Komárom. With General Artur Görgey, he participated in the siege of Buda as the Commander of No.1 Army Corps, which was the first army unit that burst into the besieged castle. After crossing the Tisza River at Tokaj, he covered the side of the main body of the Hungarian army moving southward. On 2 August 1849 it was near Debrecen that he encountered the Russian army six times the size of the Hungarian army, and lost the battle. On 9 August, he went to Arad with the remnants of his army and intended to give battle to the Austrian General Schlick; but Görgey's command prevented him from doing so. He was preparing to join General Bem at Lugos, when Görgey's proclamation came out; therefore he followed Görgey to Világos. In the Castle of Arad, the Imperial Austrian military tribunal sentenced him to death by hanging. He was the fifth to be executed. – B: 1230, 0883, 1138, T: 7456. → Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Görgey, Artur; Bem, József; Nagysalló, Battle of; Arad, Martyrs of.

Nagy, Tamás (Thomas) (kövendi) (Kövend, now Plăești, near Torda, Transylvania, Romania, 8 July 1849 - Hódmezővásárhely, 19 March 1887) – Astronomer. His early years of High School were completed in Torda, the later years in the Unitarian High School of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He was inclined towards forestry and mining in his young years; for this reason, he completed two years on a scholarship at the Mining and Forestry Academy of Selmecebánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). Thereafter he moved to Budapest, where he studied for two years at the Faculty of Arts at the University of Budapest. In 1871 two of his professors (Petzval and Schenzl), recommended him to the founder and owner of the Ógyalla (now Hurbanovo, Slovakia) observatory, Miklós (Nicholas) Konkoly-Thege, and he soon became an assistant, studying the stars. He made interesting observations about the protuberances of the Sun. At that time, he was enlisted in the army; he served one year as a volunteer in Vienna. While there, he attended lectures at the University of Vienna and continued making observations at the Imperial Observatory of Hohewarte. During his military service, he contracted severe rheumatism, caused by sentry duty in snowstorms; as a result, he was discharged. He returned to Ógyalla, continuing his investigations in Astronomy. In 1875 he was appointed teacher of Mathematics and Natural Science at the High School of Hódmezővásárhely. Besides his teaching work, he edited a local paper and took part in social activities. He was President of the General Teachers' Federation, and was appointed first Director and a teacher of the newly established technical school. He edited the papers, Vásárhely News (Vásárhelyi Hiradó) (1878-1879), and the Vásárhely Gazette (Vásárhelyi Közlöny) (1879-1883). He wrote articles in the journal Nature (Természet) (1872), e.g.: New Asteroids; The End of the World; Bolides in Ital.; The Comet Biela; Protuberances and Sunspots; The Nature of Sunspots, and The Twin Stars. He published also in the Natural Science Bulletin (Természettudományi Közlöny) (1877). He published articles on shooting stars in the Viennese journal Annalen der Wiener k. k. Sternwarte. – B: 0907, T: 7456. → Konkoly-Thege, Miklós.

Nagy, Tibor (Budapest, 25 December 1945 - ) – Composer. He read Law at the University of Budapest and earned a Doctoral Degree in 1970. He soon became a successful composer of musicals, film music and songs. His first record was made by the Hungarian Radio in 1973. Since then, some 200 radio recordings, golden records and CDs of his works have been made and performed by stars and actors of Hungarian light music. The debut of his first musical, the Kid (Kölyök) was held at the Arizona Theater of Budapest in 1992; it reached 200 performances and earned him the “Composer of the Year Prize”. The Kid was performed by the Petőfi Theater of Sopron, the Attila József Theater of Budapest, with more than 100 performances; at the Jókai Theater of Komarno, Slovakia, more than 50 performances, and it is on the repertoire of the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház), Veszprém. His records also include From Mail Coach to Porsche (Postakocsitól a Porsche-ig) (1994), and 20 Daydream Road (Ábrándozás út 20). In 2002, EMI Record issued an orchestral piece of his unpublished melodies under the title MAGNUS – Symphonic Hits. In addition to his success at home, he participated in 13 international festivals between 1974 and 1990, such as the Maltese International Song Festival; International Song Festival, Paris, V and VI; International Song Competition, Castlebar, Ireland; OIRT – Song Competition of the European Radio Stations; Gmunden Festival, Austria; International Song Competition, Cavan, Ireland; and the Lyra Festival, Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). He has received several acknowledgements, among them two Grand Prizes; the Best Continental European Composer Distinct Prize, and the 'For Peace' Golden Prize, and other prizes. – B: 1049, T: 7103.

Nagy, Timea (Budapest, 22 August 1970 - ) – Swordsman. She completed her studies at the College for Handicapped Children, and obtained a diploma from the Department of Specialist Physiotherapy of the School of Physical Education. In 1980, at the age of ten, she began to fence, first in the Hall of Vasas, later, in that of the Honvéd-LNX. In 2006 she became World Champion in the individual session. In team events, she won a Gold Medal in 1992, 1993, 1995, 1997 and 1999; in 2001 and 2003 she won a Bronze Medal. She closed the 1995 European Championship with a Gold Medal. In the individual session she became Olympic Champion in 2000 and 2004, and she reached 5th place in 1996, 4th in 1996 and 2004. She was the champion who earned Hungary's 150th gold medal. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Nagy, Zoltán (Érmihályfalva, now Valea lui Mihai, Romania, 15 May 1884 - Budapest, 4 July 1945) – Poet and critic. He studied in Debrecen, where he obtained a Law Degree. From 1911 until 1921 he practiced law in Debrecen. During the time of the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic in 1919, Nagy was a member and editor for the Writers' Council of Debrecen. In 1921 he moved to Budapest and continued as a lawyer, and was correspondent of the leading literary journal of the 20th century, West (Nyugat), founded in 1908. Nagy became a member of the West (Nyugat) circle. Among his friends were such renowned poets as Mihály Babits and Árpád Tóth. His primary poetic motifs include quiet, solitude, romantic melancholy and bitter satire. He also wrote novels and a novella. His important writings include Hush! Golden Bird! (Csend! Aranymadár), poems (1913); The Legend of the Laughing Man (Die Legende vom lachenden Mann) novel (1922); Elegies (Elégiák) poems (1923); Music in My Dreams (Álmomban zene) poems (1947), and Song Up in the High (Ének a magasban), collected poems (1962). He became an unfortunate robbery victim. – B: 0883, 1091, 1257, T: 7688.→Babits, Mihály; Tóth, Árpád.

Nagyagite [Pb<sub>5</sub>Au (Te,Sb)<sub>4</sub>S<sub>4-5</sub>] – Rhombohedral gold ore. Crystals are lead gray, foliating and cleave easily unidirectionally. Originally found in Nagyág, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania); later, also found in telluric ore deposits of New Zealand, of Colorado (USA.) and Korea. – B: 1138, T: 7674.

Nagyajtay, Teréz (Teresa) (Pauspertl) (Zalatna, now Zlatna in Transylvania, Romania, 10 August 1897 - Budapest, 12 January 1978) – Costume designer. In 1918 she completed the Textile Section of the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, after which she went for further studies to Berlin and to the Paris Opera House. On the invitation of Gusztáv Oláh, she was engaged at the Opera House (Operaház) in Budapest in 1926, from where Sándor Hevesi invited her to join the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) Budapest, as its costume designer, a position she held until 1964. From 1965 on she designed for the Kisfaludy Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) of Győr. From 1953 to 1956, she taught costume designing in the Academy of Applied Art. She also worked for films, e.g. Strange Marriage (Különös házasság) (1951). In 1968, an exhibition of a collection of her work was organized in Győr. Her costume designing was used for such stage works as O'Neill's Morning Becomes Electra (Amerikai Elektra); Shakespeare's Othello, A Midsummer Night's Dream (Szeniványéji álom) and Julius Caesar; Katona's Bánk bán; Herczeg's Byzantium; Móricz's The Adventure of Murány (A murányi kaland); Molière's School for Wives (Nők iskolája); Németh's The Trip (Az utazás); Áron Tamási's Singing Bird (Énekes madár,) and Euripides' The Trojan Women (Trójai nők). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Oláh, Gusztáv.

Nagyatádi Szabó, István (Stephen) (Erdősokonya, 17 September 1863 - Erdősokonya, 1 November 1924) – Politician. From 1908, Nagyatádi Szabó was a Member of Parliament; from 1920 he fulfilled this same post as a Member of the National Assembly. Between 1918 and 1919 he was President of the National Smallholders' Party (Nemzeti Kisgazda Párt). In the Hadik Government, formed at the end of October 1918, he accepted the post of Minister of Agriculture. After the Civic Revolution in 1918, Nagyatádi Szabó became a Minister without Portfolio, responsible for agricultural reform in the Berinkey Government. Later, he became People's Welfare Minister, starting 11 January 1919. After the collapse of the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic, he served as Agricultural Minister in the Friedrich Government from 15 August 1919 until 27 August 1919. Between September and November 1919 he publicly played with the idea of crossing the floor to join the opposition Liberal bloc, before he joined Sokorópátkai Szabó's Smallholders' Party and, at Horthy's insistence, became a part of the Christian Bloc. From 25 November 1919 until 15 August 1920, he was People's Provision Minister and Minister for Agricultural Affairs for two sessions, from 15 August 1920 until 3 December 1921, and from 16 June 1922 until 14 October 1924. Between 16 December 1920 and 29 June 1921, he was again Minister without Portfolio, responsible for Lesser Financial Affairs in the Huszár, Simonyi, Semadam, Teleki and Bethlen Governments. He systematically distanced the Party from its 1909 and November 1918 press releases about its democratic agrarian program. His initiative produced Law XXXVI of 1920, which sets as its goal the "more proper" redistribution of large agricultural estates. However, Nagyatádi Szabó did not work out the details of this redistribution, making the law something of a dead letter. Nagyatádi Szabó was forced to resign after suspicion was cast on his secretary in October 1924, and later for improperly handling state funds. Not long after these events, he suddenly died. His bronze statue stands in the Kossuth Square, Budapest. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7688.→Political Parties in Hungary; Huszár, Károly; Teleki, Count Pál; Bethlen, Count István.

Nagybaczoni Nagy, Lajos (Louis) (1914 - 1997) – Diplomat, politician. He was born in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and was educated in Hungary and in Scotland. During World War II, because of his fluent English, he became leader of the Scott Presbyterian Mission in Budapest. After the War, he was a member of the Hungarian Diplomatic Service and was sent to represent Hungary in London. Years later, he emigrated to Canada and then to the USA, and became Parish Minister in the Cliffside Congregation in New Jersey. After an early retirement, he went to work at Kean College, in Union, N.J., where he was a Professor and Director of the Library. He died as a result of a hit-and-run accident. He left his library to the American Hungarian Foundation, Hungarian Heritage Center, New Brunswick, N. J. – B: 0906, T: 7103.

Nagybanczoni Nagy, Vilmos (William) (Parajd, now Praid, Romania, 30 May 1884 - Piliscsaba, 21 June 1976) – Army officer. He was born into a Szekler family (Transylvanian Hungarian), completed the Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy and, in 1905, was made Second-Lieutenant. He was a friend of Endre Bajcsy-Zsilinszky. From 1914 he was Officer in the General Staff. In 1934 he was made Brigadier-General, in 1937 Lieutenant General and, in 1938-1939 Commander of the 1st. Army Corps. Then, in 1939-1940, he became Inspector General of the Infantry. In 1940 and 1941 he was Commander of the 1st Army and, from 1941 General. In 1942 and 1943 he was Minister of Defense. During the right-wing Arrow Cross (Nyilas) regime, he was held in captivity near the end of World War II. From 1945 he lived in retirement. His works include The Campaign Against Romania (A Románia elleni hadjárat) (1923); The Occupation of Serbia (Szerbia meghódítása) (1929); Disastrous Years 1938-1945 (Végzetes esztendők 1938-1945), and his Memoirs (1947, 1986). He was granted an honorary citizenship by Piliscsaba. There are memorial plaques for him in Budapest and Nagybacon (now Batanii Mari, Romania) and the Yad Vasem Institute of Jerusalem recognized him as “True of the World”. – B: 1257, 1710, T: 7456. → Szeklers; Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Bajcsy Zsilinszky, Endre.

Nagybánya (Latin: Rivulus Dominarum; Romanian: Baia Mare; in the Middle Ages it was called Frauenstadt or Asszonypataka) – Mining town in County (Județ) Szatmár in Transylvania (since 1920 in Romania), 61 km from Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania), in the picturesque valley of the Fernezely Creek, at the foot of the extinct volcano Mount Avas. There are ores of gold, silver, copper and lead, mined in Tertiary volcanic rocks (trachyte) and worked in state smelting works. The neighboring Felsőbánya and Kapnikbánya belong to the same gold-mining area, and have been worked since the 14th century. In 1490 the Fugger family owned the Kreuzberg Mine. At the beginning of the 20th century, the entire mining area employed about 2000 workers, with an annual production of ca. 540 kg gold, 11,000 kg silver, 20,000 kg lead and 800 metric cwt copper. Nagybánya is a corporate town, attractively laid out with fine plazas; it has a College of Mining, a Greek Orthodox Episcopal See, and a Minorite monastery. There are the remains of a 16th century fortress, and there is an old wooden church. The population of the town was 12,877 in 1910, including 9,992 Hungarians, 2,677 Romanians and 175 Germans. In 1992 there were 149,205 inhabitants, including 119,718 Romanians, 25,944 Hungarians, 1,969 Gypsies and 1,008 Germans. The inhabitants of the town work mainly as miners, but also in fruit cultivation, manufacturing of linen and cotton, and are also engaged in pottery and distillery. They also carry out lively trade. There is a state High School, a Directory of Mines, and a District Court of Law. The King of Hungary, Géza II (1141-1162) settled Saxon colonists in the area in 1142; later, they were granted some privileges by King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382). The St. István (Saint Stephen) Tower dates from the 14th century. In 1459, Elizabeth Szilágyi, mother of Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus), King of Hungary, had a castle built there for her own use. Later, some of the Princes of Transylvania lived in it. Nagybánya is famous for its Artist Colony, founded in 1896 by Simon Hollósy and his artist friends: István (Stephen) Réti, Károly (Charles) Ferenczy, János (John) Thorma and Béla Iványi-Grünwald. After the Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), the town with all of Transylvania was annexed to Romania; most of the artists moved to Budapest and the artist colony of the town lost its significance. It is now a mountain resort. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 7456; T: 7456. → Géza II, King; Lajos I, King; Mátyás I, King; Hollósy, Simon; Thorma, János, Iványi-Grünwald, Béla; Nagybánya Artist Colony.

Nagybánya Artist Colony – An artist colony formed in the summer of 1896 (Hungary’s year of millennium) by about 40 artists, who arrived at the mining-town of Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania) in picturesque northern Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), and thereby started the famous artist colony. During the first (millennial) year, the artists formed two groups: one was formed by the young student artists of the private school of Simon Hollósy, working in Munich; the other group consisted of mainly Hungarian artists. The works of these artists regularly appeared in the conservative exhibitions of the Art Gallery (Műcsarnok) of Budapest; but the appearance in groups by a reform-spirited circle of artists led to open confrontation with the conservative group at the end of 1897. This sensational event started the break in the monopolistic position of the Art Gallery, and the beginnings of the recognition in Hungary of modern stylistic aspirations. The first one-man show of Károly (Charles) Ferenczy, held in the National Salon in 1903, brought the complete breakthrough and success for the artist colony. In 1901, Hollósy left the Nagybánya colony; some of his students remained in Nagybánya, others left it with their master. The four most important painters of Nagybánya: Károly (Charles) Ferenczy, Béla Iványi-Grünwald, István (Stephen) Réti and János (John) Thorma decided that they would teach the student artists in the form of a free school and, in 1902, they founded the Free Artist School of Nagybánya. Later, Hollósy took his pupils to another northern Transylvanian township, Técső (now Tyacsiv, Ukraine), which formed the first branching-off from the colony. In the course of its subsequent history, besides the original aspirations, like naturalism, plein air, secession, some more recent trends appeared as well. The Art Nouveau movement and the members of the “MIÉNK” (“Ours”) consisted mostly of Nagybánya artists. The artist colony of Kecskemét was also formed by artists who moved from Nagybánya after the Romanian occupation in 1919. The Nagybánya School represents a separation from the Munich school, anchoring it to Hungarian soil; it also achieved individual freedom for art (l’art pour l’art). The work of Artist Colony of Nagybánya greatly influenced Hungarian painters during the first half of the 20th century. – B: 1487, 1068, 1031, T: 7456.→Nagybánya; Hollósy, Simon; Ferenczy, Károly; Iványi-Grünwald, Béla; Réti, István; Thorma, János; Szentendre Artist Colony; Kecskemét Artist Colony.

Nagybecskerek (now Zrenjanin in Serbian) – Town in the southern part of Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin, now in the Voivodina district of Serbia. It was the cultural and material center of the former County Torontál, on both banks of the Béga Creek. The area was already inhabited in Roman times. In 1331 it is mentioned as Becke. It was under Ottoman Turkish rule from 1551 to 1698. Thereafter, many Germans and French settled there, in addition to Serbs. In 1769, Empress Maria Theresa declared it a market town. During the Hungarian War of Independence from Habsburg rule, on 22 September 1848, the town was occupied by uprising Serbians; but on 30 April 1849, the forces of Honvéd General Mór Perczel recaptured it. The ethnic history of the town shows that it was 100% Magyar-inhabited in the 11th century, according to I. Kniezsa (1938), and it was still in a Magyar area, bordering a Serbian ethnic strip in 1910, according to Count Paul Teleki’s ethnographic map of 1910 (in C. A. Macartney: Hungary - A Short History). Its population was 26,407 in 1901, including 9,000 Hungarians and 8,000 each of Germans and Serbs. In 1921 the town’s population was 27,520. After the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920), and the dismemberment of the Historic Kingdom of Hungary, the ethnic situation began to change. Between 1941 and 1944 it was under German occupation and the Germans had the highest percentage of the population; then came the Serbs; the lowest figure was that of the Hungarians. However, in the 1970s, 48,956 Serbians lived there, constituting a large majority, and very few Germans and Hungarians were left after the ethnic persecution following World War II. The town is in a fertile agricultural land. Its industry is well developed, with agricultural machinery, sugar factory, brewery and important flourmills, also textiles, silk and food production with wineries. Among its famous buildings are the Cathedral, built around the middle of the 19th century; the Town Hall, enlarged in the same period by the design of Ödön Lechner and Béla Pártos; the Museum, and the Little Bridge dating from 1904. There is a railway junction, as well as a river port, since it is in the vicinity of the Béga's confluence with the Danube, at 83 m. above sea level. Nagybecskerek still plays a part in the cultural life of the present-day Hungarian ethnic minority. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 1810, 1819, 7456, T: 7456.→Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen; Teleki, Count Pál; Lechner, Ödön; Atrocities against Hungarians; Macartney, Carlile Aylmer.

Nagybobsza Gradual – A manuscript copy of a Protestant liturgical hymnbook from the turn of the 16th-17th centuries. It contains an Appendix of canzone verses, some contemporary, some of a later date. There are notes missing from many of its notation systems. – B: 1197, T: 7617.

Nagyenyed (or Enyed, Latin: Egidionopolis, Romanian: Aiud, German: Strassburg am Mieresch) – Transylvanian town, now in Romania, with the famous Bethlen Reformed College, which was developed from the higher-level College of Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) by the Transylvanian Reigning Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen, in 1622; he also endowed it with rich grants in 1629. In this town there is a center of the Romanian Hangya Cooperative since the 1920 annexation of Transylvania (Erdély) to Romania; and there is also a large prison. Besides the Minorite Church, there is a fine County Hall, built by Ignác Alpár. In the spacious, irregularly pentagonal castle fortress with eight bastions, there is a hall church of three naves, several times rebuilt during the 17th and 18th centuries with an enormous, Gothic style rectangular tower. It was Mihály (Michael) Apafi I., (1662-1690), Prince of Transylvania, who transferred the College to Nagyenyed in 1662. During the War of Independence against the Habsburg rule led by Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1703-1711), the College went through some vicissitudes; but, toward the end of the 1700s, it started to prosper again, with a complete set of faculties. Its library and rich collections were destroyed in 1849 by ransacking Wallachians (now Romanians), during the War of Independence from Habsburg rule. Since the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920), it has been a teachers' college. Previously a Roman castrum (town) occupied the site. Its present foundation began with German settlers from Elsass-Lothringen, who built their village, Strassburg, on the site of the town. From the outset it proved to be a well-known wine-producing area. During the 1437 peasant revolt, the troops of the nobility destroyed a section of the town. Its cultural-educational upward climb started in the era of the Transylvanian Principality. It was here, in 1564, that a church council declared the separation of the Reformed faithful from the Lutheran faithful. In the mid-1600s, Prince György (George) Rákóczi II granted nobility status to the town's original settlers. A large part of the town was destroyed in the fights of 1704, and again during the Hungarian War of Independence against the Habsburg rule in 1849. In 1910, Nagyenyed had 8,663 inhabitants, including 6,497 Hungarians, 1,940 Romanians and 163 Germans. In 2002, its population (with attached villages) was 28,934 including 22,596 Romanians, 4,787 Hungarians, 1,464 Gypsies and 44 Germans. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 7456, T: 7456.→Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Apafi, Mihály; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Atrocities against Hungarians; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Nagykároly (Romanian: Carei, German: Grosscarol) – Town with a municipal council, seat of County (now Judec) Szatmár, in the historic Partium (the eastern bordering strip of the Great Hungarian Plain). After the 1920 Trianon Peace Treaty, it was annexed to Romania, except during World War II (1940-1945), when it was returned to Hungary with the northern part of Transylvania, by the Second Vienna Award (1940). Since 1945, it has been again in Romania. Its population was 16,078 in 1910, including 15,772 Hungarians and 216 Romanians; in 2002: 23,182, including 12,596 Hungarians, 9,634 Romanians, 524 Germans and 383 Gypsies. The town is well known for the Károlyi family's castle with a park; also, for a fine Baroque style Minorite church, and a Piarist High School and Monastery. The statue of poet Ferenc Kölcsey in the town center is the work of Ede Kallós. The inhabitants are engaged in small-scale industries: in flax- and wool-weaving, especially to make guba (peasant cloaks); manufacturing of leather goods, making cabinets and locks. There are also brickworks and electric installations. In the town environs, rye, maize and tobacco, are grown, and viticulture and wine production are practiced. The town's history is closely connected with the Count Károlyi family; the town was their ancient property since the 14th century. In 1335, the town became a market town under King Charles Robert; later it traded throughout the realm. In the 17th century, the manor house of the Károlyi family was reconstructed as a fortified castle. In 1795, a new castle was built, based on the plans of József Bittheuser; its present form was designed by architects Fellner and Hellmer. After the Peace of Szatmár in 1711, Count Sándor Károlyi launched a large-scale settlement of the environs of the town, mainly with Swabian Germans. The town was destroyed by fire in 1887. Soon after, Count Imre (Emeric) Károlyi had a castle built in place of the earlier one. In recent times the town has developed into a lively market town. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Partium; Kölcsey, Ferenc.

Nagymajtény Surrender (now Moftinu Marfe, Romania) – On 1 May 1711, the Kuruc Army of about 12,000 men lined up to surrender to Count János Pálffy (1663-1751) and Karl Locher von Lindenheim, representing Habsburg Joseph I, Holy Roman Emperor, King of Hungary and Bohemia (1705-1711). Here, in the absence of Reigning Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II, (1676-1735), Count Sándor (Alexander) Károlyi (1668-1743) the chief commander of Rákóczi's Freedom Fight, directed the surrender of the Hungarian Army, after the signing of the Peace of Szatmár in 1711, which ended the war. After having inspected the fully armed Kuruc regiments, he asked all the officers to swear an oath of loyalty to General Pálffy. He was the first to take the oath, followed by the officers and the representatives of the Estates from Hungary and Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Then General Pálffy called on the troops to enlist in the Royal Army, but most of them declined the offer. The Kuruc soldiers, retaining their weapons, left the plain of Nagymajtény. In 1870, a memorial was erected there to mark the historic event. – B: 0942, 1288, T: 7665.→Kuruc; Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Nagysalló, Battle of (Nagysalló, now Tekovské Lužany in Slovakia) – One of the most remarkable battles of the War of Independence of 1848-1849. The Hungarian (Honvéd) army, led by Generals János Damjanich and György Klapka, defeated the army of the Austrian General Wohlgemut. This victory of the Spring Campaign made it possible for the Hungarian forces to relieve the fort of Komárom, besieged by the Imperial Army. The site of the battle is not far south of Nagysalló, which is 15 km south of Léva (now Levice, Slovakia). A Hussar charge turned the battle into a victory. However, it is also ominously significant, because on the third day after the battle, it was decided in the council of Ministers in Vienna to ask for the help of the Russian Czar to crush the War of Independence of the Hungarians. To commemorate the battle, a memorial was erected on the site of the battle. – B: 1138, 1091, T: 7456.→Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Damjanich, János; Klapka, György.

Nagyszeben (Latin: Cibinum; German: Hermannstadt; Romanian: Sibiu) – Third largest Transylvanian town on both banks of the Szeben (Zibin) River, at the foot of the Transylvanian Alps (southeastern part of the Carpathian Mountain Range); since 1920 it has been under Romanian rule. The upper level of the town is 431m above sea level. It is an industrial and commercial center, producing agricultural machinery, chemicals, leather goods and textiles. There are a number of teaching institutions, including high schools; and the town is also an important railway junction. It is the main cultural and social center of the Transylvanian Saxons. There is the Cathedral of the See of the Transylvania Orthodox Metropolitan, as well as that of the Lutheran Bishop of the Saxons. The town's population was 29,577 in 1901 (16,141 Saxons, 7106 Romanians and 5747 Hungarians); in the 1970s, it was 97,211, and in 1997, 168,949. The old southern bastions (1551) of the town wall still stand. The town still preserves some of its medieval character. There are three Roman Catholic monasteries, a theater and a law court. The Lutheran church, in Gothic style, with three naves is situated on Huet Plaza; it was built in the 14th and 15th centuries and rebuilt and extended, with a new tower, in the 16th century. The Dominican church was built in 1472, during the reign of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), and was rebuilt near the end of the 18th century. There are many Gothic houses and cobbled alleys in the town; the Town Hall was also built in Gothic style and houses valuable Saxon national archives and the municipal archives. The large Catholic parish church was built in 1725. The Lutheran Episcopal Palace from the end of the 18th century is called the "Saxon Vatican." A monumental Baroque building is the Brukenthal Palace, built by the Transylvanian Regent, Baron Samuel Brukenthal around 1760. It houses the most valuable collection of the Transylvanian Saxons: the Brukenthal Museum, which holds important collections of paintings, coins, archeology and ethnography, as well as a library of 120,000 volumes, 270 incunabula, and a natural-historical collection. The Astra Central Library of the Romanians is notable: in it is the first scientific society of the Saxons: Verein für Siebenbürgische Landeskunde; its journal is the Siebenbürgische Vierteljahresschrift. The history of the town can be traced back to the 12th century, when King Géza II (1141-1161) invited and settled German colonists from the Rhineland and Luxembourg, and their industrial occupations soon rendered the town rich; at first the town was called Villa Hermannii. The Tartar invasion destroyed the developing town in 1241, but it was rebuilt soon after. Its first period of success was during the reign of King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) and the first guild was formed in 1376. By 1442, its Castle Fortress was the leading base of defense against the Turks. From the 16th century, the town served as the economical, spiritual and political center of the Transylvanian Saxons. From 1703 until 1791, under Habsburg rule, it was the seat of the Government (Gubernium) of Transylvania; but this was transferred again to Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca). From 1876 to 1918 it was the seat of County Szeben. During World War I, Hungarian, Austrian and German forces contained the intruding Romanian army at Nagyszeben. From 1918 until 1920, a Romanian Government Council (Consiliul Dirigent) resided there. Since then, the town has been under Romanian rule, as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920). In 1910, the town had 33,489 inhabitants, including 16,832 Germans, 8,824 Romanians, 7,152 Hungarians, 134 Czechs and 116 Gypsies; in 2002 the population of the town was 154,892, including 148,269 Romanians, 3,135 Hungarians, 2,508 Germans and 980 others (Csángós, Jews and Gypsies). – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 7456, T: 7456.→ Géza II, King; Lajos I, King; Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty.

Nagyszéksós, Princely Tomb Findings – Before World War I, in the vicinity of Szeged-Nagyszéksós, at the confluence of the Tisza and Maros Rivers on the land belonging to farmer Bálint Mátyás, several gold objects were found. Nothing remained of these gold objects because all were melted down. In 1926, in the same place, a big gold piece was unearthed. Originally, the pieces were scattered everywhere, then a great part was recovered by the Museum in Szeged, and 6 pieces went to a private collection. Ferenc Móra, the noted writer, who at the time worked for the Museum in Szeged, started the diggings and found 93 gold objects. In 1934, in the same land, the owner found a big, gold drinking vessel, as well as other smaller gold objects. The diggings were started once more on the entire area, increasing the number of finds to 166 pieces. Lajos Pál, who at the time was a professor at the National Industrial Art School, restored the largest gold cup. The restored cauldron-shaped cup, which was badly damaged by fire, is the most beautiful piece of the find. The height of the piece is 95 mm; the opening of the cup has a diameter of 111 mm. and the weight is 305 grams, the material used being electrum. The side of the cup has round openings in three rows, which originally contained transparent precious stones, anchored with a metal band, which melted at a lower firing temperature than the electrum. On the base of the cup, there is runic writing. The deciphering of this inscription puzzled historian Lajos (Louis) Barta, as well as other historians for a long time. According to some, it is Hunnic-Szekler runic writing. The cup and the other findings, based on all comparisons and on the opinion of many historians, are the objects of a Hun princely tomb, dating back to 430-453, when Ruga and Attila were the rulers of the Huns. The findings are held in the Hungarian National Museum in Budapest. – B: 1705, 1020, T: 7673.→Móra, Ferenc; Hungarian Runic Script.

Nagyszentmiklós Gold Treasure (Nagyszentmiklós, in County Torontál of Historic Hungary, since 1920, Sânnicolau Mare, Romania,) – On 3 July 1799, a farmer in Nagyszentmiklós, repairing his fences discovered the 23-piece gold treasure. The owners hid the treasure on a swamp-surrounded island. It is the greatest early medieval archeological find in the region. Its weight is approximately 10 kilograms. More than one hundred archeological, art history, linguistic and historical works have discussed it. In the 19th century, it was even mentioned as Attila's treasure. The first important essay on the find was written by József (Joseph) Hempel, and it first appeared in the Archaeological News in 1884. The Hempel-table lists the inscriptions and the numbers of the pieces found. According to Professor Gyula (Julius) László, the gold-find can be divided into two table settings. One, on which the runic writings appear, belonged to the ruler; the other, with fine representations of people and animals, is presumed to have belonged to the wife of the ruler. The ornaments and runic writing on jug number 34 and plate number 8 are related to the first coins of the Hungarian Kingdom, and their origin is placed in the second half of the 10th century. The decorations on the gold vessels, also seen on late Avar-Onogur belts, can be traced back to the Caucasian Mountain and Aral Sea regions. Anatomical, zoological and botanical research supports László's assumptions. The runic writing on the golden vessels has 134 symbols, which can be grouped into 24 basic shapes or letters. Vessel number 8 has the fullest inscription. The inscriptions are in 3 different alphabets: on vessels numbers 9 and 10 they are considered to be of Greek origin. Many have tried to decode the inscriptions, but with varying results. Jugs number 2 and 7 are the most discussed pieces. The huge bird representation is a mythological figure of Hungarian folk tales and traditions. The huge bird represents the giant ancestor that impregnated the ancient mother, thus originated the seven ruling tribes. The princely crest on drinking vessel number 17 is thought to represent the high rank of the Avars, as well as of the Magyars. Greek merchants bought these objects, and a goldsmith started to melt down the pieces; but the authorities stepped in and the objects were transported to Buda. On 18 September 1799, the Director of Antiquities from Vienna turned to the Head of the Cabinet to acquire these pieces for the Department of Antiquities in Vienna. According to a stamped acknowledgement based on Imperial Order, dated 2 October 1799, the gold findings from Nagyszentmiklós were sent to the Imperial Collection in Vienna. They are now the most treasured exhibition pieces of the Kunsthistorisches Museum, exhibited as an ancient "Bulgarian" (?) treasure. As to the question of which age the rich find originated, opinions vary from Attila the Hun to the Hungarian Csanád Clan in the 13th century, including a number of other peoples and regions. According to Bálint Csanád, an archeologist and member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, only 3 centuries and 3 peoples can realistically be considered as either the crafters or the owners of the find: (1) the Avars in the 8th century, (2) the Danubian Bulgarians in the 9th century (3), and the Hungarians of the 10th century. – B: 1174, 1706, 1020, T: 7673.→Rácz, István; László, Gyula; Hungarian Runic Script.

Nagyszombat (Latin: Tyrnavia; Slovakian: Trnava; German: Tirnau or Tyrnau) – Town in the southwestern part of Northern Hungary (County Pozsony) of Historic Hungary, now in Slovakia, on the banks of the Trnava Creek at 146 m above sea level. It was an inhabited place before the Celts and Romans. The town has a municipal council, and a historic university founded by Cardinal Péter Pázmány in 1554, and named after him. Pázmány was born in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) of a Calvinist family, converted to Catholicism, became a Jesuit, and a legendary figure in the Counter-Reformation; he was also the founder of the Hungarian prose. The town also has a famous old Gothic cathedral dating from 1389, with archiepiscopal see and palace, several monasteries and a Catholic Seminary. The population of Nagyszombat was 15,163 in 1910, including 8,032 Slovaks, 4,593 Hungarians and 2,280 Germans. In 2001 its population was 70,283 with 97% Slovaks. The town is called the "Slovakian Rome". There are two high schools and a teachers college; it has steelworks and it manufactures agricultural machinery and railway cars; it has a hydroelectric station, a town market, and the first Catholic Printery in Hungary, later becoming the University Press of the town. There is a District Law Court, a hospital, a theater, as well as a promenade. In the town center is a memorial monument for the fallen Hungarian and Slovakian Honvéds in the battle of 14 December 1848, when the Austrian army defeated the English-born General Count Guyon's Hungarian voluntary battalion. On the site of a 7th century Cathedral there was already a town named Tirana. In 1152, King Géza II (1141-1162) of Hungary had a wall built around it. King Béla IV (1235-1270) and King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) of Hungary granted the town some municipal privileges. In 1543, when Esztergom was taken by the Ottoman Turks, its archbishopric and chapter were forced to move to Nagyszombat; the town became the seat of the chapter of the Esztergom Cathedral from 1543 to 1820 and, temporarily, the seat of the Primate of Hungary. Now the Cathedral of Nagyszombat is the seat of an apostolic administrator. On 6 May 1615, Reigning Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629), and Emperor Mátyás II (1608-1619) signed a Peace Treaty securing independence for Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1777, Empress Maria Theresa transferred the University of Cardinal Pázmány (in Nagyszombat 1635-1773) to Buda, and her son Emperor József II (Joseph), moved it to Pest in 1783. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Pázmány, Péter; Nagyszombat Agreement; Nagyszombat Binding; Nagyszombat Codex; Nagyszombat Cup.

Nagyszombat Agreement (Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia since 1920) – An agreement was made on May 1615 between Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629) and King Mátyás II (Matthias, 1608-1619), in which the King recognized Bethlen as the Reigning Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), while the Transylvanian Estates undertook to defend the King against all enemies with the exception of the Turks. The King also conceded to the Principality the castles of Huszt, Kővár, Nagybánya, Nagyvárad and Tasnád. – B: 1078, T: 7665.→Nagyszombat; Nagyszombat Binding; Nagyszombat Codex; Nagyszombat Cup.

Nagyszombat Binding (Nagyszombat is now Trnava, Slovakia since 1920) – A style of bookbinding, typical of the town of Nagyszombat from 1730 on. It was originally an Austrian Baroque-style binding. The gilded cover usually had a foliated scroll border on which, in the center and corners, thickly layered oval or circular tendrils were stamped. In the middle of the mirror, the monogram of Christ (I.H.S.) and the name Maria can usually be found. The Nagyszombat-style of binding was copied by other Hungarian cities, such as Győr, Kőszeg, Kassa, Pozsony, and others. – B: 1144, T: 7617.→Nagyszombat; Nagyszombat Agreement; Nagyszombat Codex; Nagyszombat Cup.

Nagyszombat Codex (Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia since 1920) – A 397-leaf Franciscan manuscript, compiled in 1512 and 1513 for the use of the Clarissa Abbey of Óbuda. It is a valuable Hungarian language relic, written by an unknown hand. The first part is a meditation on absolute wisdom, in dialogue form. The rest includes diverse writings and discussions on saintly life, the Ascension of Mary, etc. Some of its instructions reflect the medieval outlook on natural science. The Codex was transferred from the Library of Nagyszombat to the Library of the Catholic Diocese in Esztergom. – B: 0293, T: 7617.→Nagyszombat; Nagyszombat Agreement; Nagyszombat Binding; Nagyszombat Cup; Codex Literature.

Nagyszombat Cup (Nagyszombat is now Trnava, Slovakia, since 1920) – Dating back to the 16th century, a gold-plated, 160 mm-tall silver cup. It is a smooth, short, round-based vessel with incisions of stylized vines and leaves and three wing-headed angels. The nodule is in the shape of a decorative vase. The artist's name is incised as "Kőszeghy 1507". It is kept in the Pannonhalma Abbey's Treasury. – B: 4821, T: 7673.→Nagyszombat; Nagyszombat Agreement; Nagyszombat Binding.

Nagyszombati, Márton (Martin) (Thyrnavirus Martinus) (Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, ? - Nagyszombat, 1524) – Humanist, poet, known by his Latin name as Martinus Tyrnavius and Martinus de Tyrnavia. He was a Benedictine monk from Pannonhalma, who became Prior in 1507 and, in the same year, Archabbot. In 1508 he was elected Abbot of Szerencs. In 1514 he enrolled at the University of Krakow (Poland) and, after his return, he became Abbot at Tata. During 1516 he studied Law in Vienna. In 1518 he was named Abbot of Kolozsmonostor, but it seems that he never actually filled that post. Around 1520 he returned to Pannonhalma. In September of 1523 he published in Vienna a Latin poem of close to 900 distiches, consisting of three cantos, entitled Oposculum ad regni Hungariae proceres (A Small Work for the Nobles of Hungary). In it he urges the nobles to unite against the Turks, citing Kings St István (St. Stephen) (907-1038) and Mátyás I (Mathias Corvinus) (458-1490) as examples. He is one of the most significant Hungarian humanist poets among the Jagiellon Era humanists. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7617.

Nagyrev Culture – The Nagyrev culture was an early Bronze Age culture in the Balkan region of Bulgaria and Romania; the Culture is named after a small town in Hungary. The Culture of the peoples with the bell-shaped dishes, which originated and spread from the Iberian Peninsula, reached the mid-Danube River Basin during the 19th century B.C. After its brief yet distinct existence, it was absorbed into one of the most characteristic Bronze Age people of the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagy Alföld), the Culture of Nagyrev. Its finds in Hungary were unearthed at Szentes and Tököl. The "bell"-type settlement, in use over a long period, developed from the bell-shaped culture. – B: 1230, 1020, T: 7103.

Nagyvárad (in past centuries: Várad; Latin: Magnovaradinum, Romanian: Oradea, German: Grosswardein) – Town on both banks of the Rapid Körös River (Sebeskörös), with 4 bridges and 2 railway bridges, at 126 m above sea level. It is one of the oldest towns of Historic Hungary, situated in the eastern bordering strip (Partium) of the Great Plain. There was an earth fortification in the 11th century where the town now stands. The center of the town's life in medieval times was the castle fortress, one of the strongest in Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin; it played a particularly important role in the 16th to 17th centuries. It was here that King László I (St. Ladislav, 1077-1095) had the Cathedral with four towers built; it became the burial place of five Hungarian kings and one queen, and was also a place of pilgrimage; it developed into the richest mine of Medieval Hungarian Art and, in its courtyard, once stood the equestrian statue of King St. László I, and statues of St. Stephen, and St. Emeric. In 1241, the invading Tartar forces destroyed the town. On 24 February 1538, a peace agreement was concluded between Ferdinand I of Habsburg (1526-1564) of Austria and King John I (Zápolya) (1526-1540). In 1557 the town became part of the Principality of Transylvania. In 1598 the town was besieged in vain by the Ottoman Turks; they only succeeded in taking it in 1660; it was fully abandoned by Emperor Lipót I (Leopold) (1654-1705), on behalf of Hungary, in the Peace of Vasvár (1664), and it was only recovered by Hungary in 1692. During the 1848-1849 War of Independence, when the Hungarian Government had to move to Debrecen, the archives, banknote printery, etc. were taken to Nagyvárad. After the town was annexed to Romania by the 1920 Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon-Versailles, the town suffered badly economically, by losing most of its market-sphere. In 1940, when Hungary was not yet in the War, and northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award (1940), Nagyvárad again became a Hungarian town (1940-1944), but it was once more ceded to Romania after the War. Nagyvárad is an important industrial center with agricultural machinery and non-ferrous metallurgy, leather goods, textiles, printing, glass, a flourmill, brick-works, petroleum production, and a brewery. There is also a lively commercial life, accompanied with viticulture. Nearby there are health resorts: Püspökfürdő, Félixfürdő with sulphurous springs (34°-40°). It is an important railway junction of six lines to Budapest, Szeged, Kolozsvár-Predeal, Gyoma, Vaskóh, Érmihályfalva. The population of the town was 47,018 in 1901, including 44,750 Hungarians, 3,335 Romanians and 1,414 Germans; in 1910: 64,169, including 58,421 Hungarians, 3,614 Romanians, 1,416 Germans, 279 Slovaks and 159 Poles; in 1992: 222,741 including 144,244 Romanians, 74,225 Hungarians, 2,137 Gypsies, 959 Germans and 1,176 other nationalities; In 2002: 206,527 including 145,295 Romanians, 56,830 Hungarians (with the nearby villages) and other nationalities. Nagyvárad is referred to as the “Gate of Transylvania” and Capital of former County Bihar. For a long time it was noted for its lively Hungarian cultural life, with high-standard theatrical life, and equally high-level newspaper publishing and journalism. The literary circle, Tomorrow (Holnap) was founded here by local writers and, from the newspapers’ editorial board of this town, such writers and poets as Endre Ady, Gyula Juhász and others started their careers. The Szigligeti Society supports literature; the Catholic Circle fosters religious life. There is a Roman Catholic bishopric founded by King St. László in 1080; a Greek-Catholic bishopric; the Királyhágómellék Reformed Church District, and also a seminary, several religious orders and convents; there is a Roman Catholic Theological Academy, an Academy of Jurisprudence, the Courts of Law, and the Partium Christian University (Partiumi Keresztény Egyetem), the first Hungarian University in Romania after 1959, founded in 1990 as István (Stephen) Sulyok Academy, by Reformed Bishop László (Ladislav) Tőkés. Historical research is fostered by the Historical-Archeological Association. In the educational field, there are a number of high schools, commercial and other special schools. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1647, 1816, 1789, 7456, T: 7456.→ László I (St. Ladislav), King; Ady, Endre; Juhász, Gyula; Tőkés, László.

Nagyváthy, János (John) (Miskolc, 19 January 1755 - Csurgó, 13 February 1819) – Agricultural writer, estate manager. He studied Law and Theology at the Reformed College of Sárospatak, then, for two years he was a tutor in the home of Count István (Stephen) Szapáry. Afterwards, he taught Poetics in the High School of Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia). He was forced to give up this position because of his diseased eyes. He joined the army and, after seven years of service he attained the rank of Captain and traveled in Austria, Italy and Belgium, everywhere closely observing the economic conditions. In the Masonic Lodge of Vienna he became acquainted with Count Ferenc (Francis) Széchényi and Count György (George) Festetics. He was discharged from the army in 1786. At first he was a trainee on an estate near Vienna; then, after a study trip to Belgium, he settled in Pest and became a member of the Masonic Lodge “Magnanimity” and befriended Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy and János (John) Batsányi. In 1791, Count Festetics invited him to Keszthely to become his estate manager. Nagyváthy organized the estate as a model and introduced the use of double-entry bookkeeping for the first time. On his encouragement, the Count had a High School built at Csurgó in 1792. For unknown reasons, early in 1797, Count Festetics removed him from Keszthely and gave him a small house in Csurgó and two tracts of feudal land to cultivate to the end of his life. He also published some enlightened, utopian pamphlets. His works include Hungarian Farm Manager (Magyar gazdatisz) (1821) and Practical Hungarian Cultivator (Magyar practicus tenyésztető) (1822). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Kazinczy, Ferenc; Batsányi, János; Széchényi, Count Ferenc; Festetics, Count György.

Naksol – Medicinal ointment that cures burn injuries very rapidly. It was developed by Lajos (Louis) Szeles and was patented in 1978. Naksol is an alcoholic solution containing plant extracts. It offers a new and efficient therapeutic alternative within the limited possibilities available in the therapy of superficial burns. Compared to other substances used for wound-surface treatment, Naksol reduces the number of hospitalization days. Naksol is used in almost all countries of the world. The treatment is inexpensive, effective and simple. – B: 1707, T: 7103.

Nánássy, Lajos (Louis) (Debrecen, 1881-1963) – Minister of the Reformed Church. He was a graduate of the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen. In 1902 he went to England, France and Switzerland to pursue his studies in Theology. He was ordained in 1903. In that same year, he was called to serve the Chicago Hungarian Reformed Church, where he stayed until 1907. From 1908 to 1929 he served for a short time in Youngstown and Alpha, Ohio, then in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. In 1924, the University of Debrecen bestowed upon him an honorary degree of doctor sacrosanctae theologiae. In 1930 he became Assistant Superintendent, then Superintendent for the Bethlen Home in Ligonier, Pennsylvania, a position he held until his retirement in 1944. He was a prolific writer. He wrote several books, including School ABC (Iskolai ABC), Handbook for Hungarian Summer Schools (Kézikönyv amerikai magyar nyári iskolák használatára) (Washington, 1941); God is Our Hope (Isten a mi reménységünk); At the Feet of the Master (A Mester lábainál), as well as other books for the children's summer schools, which were published by the Hungarian Reformed Federation of America. – B: 0906, T: 7103.

Nándorfehérvár Defeat (Nándorfehérvár, now Belgrade, Serbia) – On 3 July 1521, Huszrev, the Turkish Bey of Szendrő, surrounded Nándorfehérvár with an army of 15,000. In the absence of the Bans, Ferenc (Francis) Hédervári and Bálint (Valentine) Török, the 700-man garrison was led by the Vice-Báns: Balázs (Blaise) Oláh and Mihály (Michael) Moré. By the beginning of August, the besieging Turkish army reached 170,000, among them 70,000 regular soldiers. During the month-long siege, the number of defending soldiers decreased to 70. Mihály Moré departed from the fortress to go to the Turkish camp to turn traitor, leaving Balázs Oláh to negotiate the surrender of the fortress, in exchange for the guarantee of life and freedom for the defenders. The loss of this important fortress greatly contributed to the decline of the Hungarian Kingdom in the following years. – B: 1230, 1031, T: 7665.→Török, Bálint.

Nándorfehérvár Victory (Nándorfehérvár, now Belgrade, Serbia) – One of the most significant battles of the century-long Turkish wars took place on 21-22 July 1456. In the few years after the capture of Constantinople in 1453, Sultan Mohammed II also conquered all the Principalities of the Balkans and, with his armies, was ready to conquer

Europe. First, he took on the Hungarian Fortress of Nándorfehérvár, on the southern border of Hungary. The Pope called for a crusade; but the Western European powers left the defense of Christianity to Hungary alone. The army of inexperienced volunteers, whose fighting spirits were raised by the enthusiastic speeches of the monk János (John) Kapisztrán, was made into a fighting force by the leadership of János (John)

Hunyadi. With his army, he attacked the Turks besieging Nándorfehérvár, both on land and on the River Danube. After a battle lasting for two days, the Hungarians gained a great victory, repelling the Turks, who gave up the plan of conquering Hungary and Europe for a long time to come. – B: 1230, 1138, 1288, 1031, T: 7665.→Hunyadi, János; Kapisztrán, Saint János.

Naples, Campaigns of – The Italian campaigns of 1347-1348 and 1349-1350, are known in Hungarian history by this term. They were waged by King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382), who came to the aid of his relatives and to revenge the murder of Prince András (Andrew) the designated heir to the throne. These campaigns resulted in the temporary occupation of the Kingdom of Naples. – B: 1078, 1138, T: 7665.

Napoleon, Hungarian Hussar Escort – Emperor Napoleon I was defeated at the Battle of Leipzig by the sixth coalition of European monarchies in October 1813. After his abdication from the throne, his long column of official carriages departed from Fontainebleau on 20 April 1814 to transport him to the Island of Elba. High-ranking officers of the victorious powers escorted him and, for a while, the guardsmen were riding on horseback beside their coaches and the people were cheering. Gradually, the atmosphere grew hostile; on the side of the road, a man of straw was swaying in the wind, on its belly the inscription: Napoleon. The Emperor changed his carriage and uniform for a Prussian one. The tense situation was alleviated when, at Luc, a Hungarian Hussar group appeared beside the defeated Emperor of France and provided an escort to the son-in-law of the Austrian emperor. The Hussars accompanied Napoleon to Frejus, where he embarked on a ship heading to the Island of Elba, his first place of exile. – B: 1020, T: 7456.

Náprági, Demeter (Dömötör Napragy) (County Gömör, 1556 - Győr, 25 March 1619) – Archbishop of the Catholic Church. He was raised in the Court of Mihály (Michael) Telegdi; with his help Náprági studied Catholic Theology in Vienna. After ordination, he became Principal of the School of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). In 1586 he was first a Canon in Esztergom, then Archprepost at Eger and Prepost in Arad (now in Romania) and, later, Titular Bishop of Szerém. During the rule of Zsigmond Báthori (1581-1598) in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), he became the Bishop of Transylvania. Besides being a Bishop, he was appointed Chancellor of Voivode Mihály (Michael). Due to his support of Báthori, the National Assembly of Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) expelled him from Transylvania in 1601, and he escaped to Hungary with his library of 200-300 volumes, and took with him the Herma of King St. László (Ladislav, 1077-1095) from Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), which was placed in the Cathedral of Győr in 1607. He became Prepost of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and Bishop of Veszprém, then of Győr in 1606; from 1608 he was Archbishop of Kalocsa. As envoy, he was an emissary of Emperor Rudolf I (1576-1608) in Poland (1598-1599 and 1609). In 1614 he was a member of the Delegation to the Congress of Linz. Fifty volumes of his library are in the Episcopal Library of Győr. – B: 0945, 1160, T: 7103.

Náray-Szabó, István (Stephen) (Szombathely, 20 July 1899 - Budapest, 16 September 1972) – Physicist and chemist. From the Chemical Engineering Department of the Budapest Polytechnic, he received a Degree in Chemical Engineering in 1922. Thereafter, from 1923 to 1926, he was a demonstrator in the Department of Electro-Chemistry there. In 1926 he obtained a technical Ph.D. and worked in the Institute of Physics of the University of Manchester from 1928 to 1930. From 1930 he worked as an assistant lecturer. In 1930 he was appointed Director of the Loránd Eötvös College of Szeged, also carrying out research work, assisted by the Rockefeller Foundation, and he gained an honorary lecturer (instructor) qualification. From 1938 until 1947 he was a professor in the Department of Chemistry and Physics of the Budapest Polytechnic. In 1947, as a member of the Hungarian Community (Magyar Közösség), he was arrested with the trumped-up charge of conspiracy against the Republic and sentenced to 4 years' imprisonment, and later interned for another two years. When freed in 1953, he became Section Head of the Institute of Architecture and organized the Department of Architectural Physics. From 1956 he acted as a scientific counselor for the Central Chemical Research Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He retired in 1969. Náray-Szabó was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1945-1948). In England, under Professor Bragg, he began to work out the structure of silicates, and took part in the development of their systematics. On his return to Hungary he continued his research into the structure of crystals. He was engaged in the investigation of the optimal setting conditions of concrete. He invented a type of acid-resistant concrete, and a procedure for a cemented tiled floor. His works include Physical Chemistry (Fizikai kémia), with other authors (1939); Atoms, Molecules, Crystals (Atomok, molekulák, kristályok) (1942); Inorganic Chemistry vols.i-iii (Szervetlen kémia, I-III) (1956-1958), also in German and Russian; and Chemistry (Kémia) (1967), revised edition edited by Herbert Fischer, 1973. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

National Anthem, Hungarian (Himnusz) – It is a quiet, but stirring prayer, majestically slow and an infinitely serious contemplation of the past and future existence of a small nation. The text is based on a poem of Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey (1823), while Ferenc (Francis) Erkel (1844) composed its music. The choir of the National Theater of Pest first sang the Anthem on 2 July 1844. Its first public performance took place in the Óbuda shipyard, celebrating the launching of a new steamer (named after Count István Széchenyi) on 10 August 1844. Its first religious performance was at the blessing ceremony of the citizens' defense forces of Pest, on the Rákos Meadow on 15 August 1844. The anthem was played at an official state ceremony in the Mátyás Cathedral of Buda on 20 August 1848. It was sung throughout the country during the days of the 1848-1849 War of Independence, but was banned after its defeat. In its early years it was sung in churches during special occasions, such as national holidays and thanksgiving. Its singing became more frequent in churches from the time of German occupation in 1944, and church services regularly ended with the singing of the anthem even during the Russian occupation (1945-1991). However, during the communist regime, General Secretary of the Communist Party, Mátyás Rákosi approached poet Gyula Illyés and composer Zoltán Kodály to produce another, more “Socialist” national anthem. Kodály’s response was: “Why have a new one? We are satisfied with the old.”

The singing of the anthem generally terminates every national commemorative celebration in the emigré Hungarian population. This is the only one of the national anthems, which was not recognized officially for 100 years but the people of Hungary elevated this Hymn to the National Anthem status. The 1990 Act XLIV, § 75 states that the National Anthem of the Hungarian Republic is the “Himnusz”. The other Hungarian national song is the “Szózat”, for which Béni Egressy wrote the music in 1843 to Mihály Vörösmarty’s poem.

The first verse of the National Anthem in Hungarian: Isten áldd meg a magyart / Jó kedvvel, bőséggel / Nyújts feléje védő kart / Ha küzd ellenséggel / Balsors akit régen tép / Hozz reá vig esztendő / Megbűnhötte már e nép / A multat s jövődőt.

In English translation: O Lord, bless the nation of Hungary / With your grace and bounty / Extend over it your guarding arm / During strife with its enemies / Long torn by ill fate / Bring upon it a time of relief / This nation has already suffered for all sins / Of the past and of the future! – B: 1078, 1153, 1020, 1031, T: 7662. → Kölcsey, Ferenc; Erkel Ferenc; Vörösmarty, Mihály; Egressy, Béni; Illyés, Gyula; Kodály, Zoltán

National Assembly – Diet, Parliament – In Hungary the institution of the National Assembly goes back to the time when Hungarians settled in the Carpathian Basin in the 9th century AD. The first National Assembly was held at Pusztaszer on the Great Plain (today Ópusztaszer, with monuments). The Szer (equivalent to the Diet) enacted the first constitution and laws. Later, at the creation of the monarchy, all those institutions serving the kingdom came to the forefront. The nation was not shut out of the executive power; its influence was not only felt at the National Assembly but also on the election of a monarch. At first, every free Hungarian had the right of participation. Later, the nobility had the privilege of representation by an emissary that became customary from the time of King Béla IV (1235-1270). The National Assembly (Diet) was divided into two Houses following the Battle of Mohács, 1526; the transformation process of the Table of Magnates ended in 1608. After the Compromise with Austria in 1867, the two Houses (Lower and Upper) worked separately and independently.

The Hungarian Parliament, convoked on 21 June 1910, was dismissed on 16 November 1918, and it was not recalled following the Revolution of 1919, due to a popular belief that it was an outmoded form of legislature. After the fall of the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic after 133 days in 1919 (Tanácsköztársaság), it was problematic to re-establish legal continuity not only for the old Hungarian institution of the Kingdom, but for the National Parliament as well. Therefore, to manage the affairs of the nation, and to concede to the request of the Entente Powers, the provisional Government of the period set up various national assemblies. These national assemblies did not replace either Houses of the National Parliament; instead they exercised power as the sole embodiment and representative of the independence of the Hungarian State. For this reason, Bill I of 1920 declared that the convocation of the National Assembly was solely the consequence of external forces affecting Hungary's political life and therefore it did not, in any way, diminish or alter the powers of the Hungarian Constitution. Instead of the constitutional Parliament, a new entity, the National Assembly, was re-created in 1920. By legislative power, it implemented all the necessary reforms. The Table of Magnates became the newly regulated Upper House (Felsőház) and, with the newly elected Lower House (Alsóház), the Hungarian Parliament began working again on 25 January 1927.

Based on the special provision No. XIX of 1938, the parliamentary session convoked in 1939 was officially lengthened during World War II, and the constitutional clause of 1944 was continued following the Peace Treaty's ratification. The session was not only prolonged for another half a year, but it permitted Parliament to work abroad in case of need.

At the time of World War II, on 21 December 1944, the Provisional National Assembly was established in Debrecen with 230 representatives, voted in by 45 communities from the Soviet-occupied part of Hungary, and it authorized itself to act as Head of State. At this time, most of Hungary, including its Capital, did not fall under the direction of the provisional National Assembly. It was set up in the Soviet controlled area of the country, under Soviet supervision, and it possessed no legal connection to the country's established institutions or its constitution.

Though the western part of the country was still under German occupation, Hungary at this time still had a legally constituted Parliament, which was never disbanded but moved to the West. The Parliament in exile came into session in Schloss Guttenburg of Altötting, Bavaria, West Germany, on 20 August 1947. It refused to recognize either the Parliament of Debrecen, or the temporary National Assembly of Budapest as lawful or constitutional. It considered them unconstitutional because the constitutionally elected House of 1938 was never officially dismissed. It did not acknowledge them as lawful as there were no free elections in the country during the foreign occupation of Hungary.

The Provisional National Assembly of Debrecen was the governing authority of the country under foreign occupation and – with the approval of the Soviet Union – it brought resolutions, passed laws and appointed Governments. It functioned in this provisional capacity until 1946, when, with Bill I of 1946, it abolished the institution of the Kingdom in Hungary, declaring Hungary a Republic.

A new Parliament, based on a countrywide election came into session on 16 September 1947 and, on 18 August 1949, changed the form of state from “Republic” to a “People's Republic”. This was changed back to “Republic” again by Parliamentary order in 1989. Between 1946 and 1949 it operated as a National Assembly, then, between 1949 and 1991, as the National Parliament, but it was always under Soviet supervision until the departure of the Soviet occupying forces, when it regained its independence. – B: 1078, 1230, 1020, 1703, T: 7665, 3240.

National Colors – Colors representing a nation, mainly on flags or in the past on shields; in most cases they were the colors of the ruling families. Red and white were the original colors of Hungary, representing the colors of the House of Árpád. Green was added later, most probably at the time of King Lajos I (Louis the Great) (1342-1382). A seal of a letter written in 1222 by King András II (Endre, Andrew) (1205-1235), is hanging on a red, white and green silk cord. The seals on letters of privileges and grants of the Transylvanian Reigning Prince Gábor Bethlen (1613-1629) are also on red-white-green strings. In 1611, the Chamber of Szepes ordered 40 different red, white and green flags for their cavalry. During the reign of Empress Maria Theresa (1740-1780), the flag of the Hungarian military units were green with red and white flame design on their border. Some had a white background with red and green flame design. In 1806, Ferenc I (Francis) (1792-1838), Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, appointed the official colors of the Austrian Empire as black and yellow, the colors of the Habsburg House, and he confirmed red, white and green as the official colors of Hungary. Later, Habsburg rulers forbade the use of these colors. Article XXI of 1848 re-established the original Hungarian national colors and coat of arms, the red, white and green rosette as a civilian symbol and ordered that “... the national flag and coat of arms be displayed on all Government buildings and offices on national holidays and on every Hungarian ship at all times”. The colors of the Hungarian coat of arms and national flag are the same as prescribed by the laws of heraldry. Hence the right side of the official Hungarian state coat of arms is red and white while the left field with a white cross on top of the three green mounds has a red background. – B: 0942, 1078, 1230, 1321, 1020, T: 3240.

National Defense Banners from 1848 – The Hungarian army capitulated to Russian General Rudiger at Világos on 13 August 1849, and the banners of the Hungarian War of Independence ended up in Russian hands. Ninety two years later, the Soviet Union was ready to return these banners to Hungary for the following two reasons: (1) Due to Hungary’s key position at the beginning of the Second World War, the Soviets wanted to demonstrate goodwill and friendship. (2) They wanted in exchange two jailed Communist leaders, Mátyás Rákosi and Zoltán Vass from Hungary. A guard of honor of Russian soldiers escorted the 56 banners, officially returned by Moscow, to the Hungarian border on board the first Moscow-Budapest train. The banners were received by a platoon of Hungarian Guards of Honor in the flag-decorated railroad station of Lavorcsne, on 20 March 1941.

In 1945, when the Soviet forces occupied Budapest, these 56 banners, once already returned by the Soviets, were again transported to Moscow along with all the banners of the Military Museum, totaling 203 military flags.

All these banners were returned to the Hungarian Government on 4 April 1948 at the time of the celebration of the “liberation” of Hungary in Budapest by a delegation of Soviet army officers. – B: 1230, 1020, T: 7662.

National Defense Forces – (1) The name of the Hungarian defenses during the War of Independence of 1848-1849. The establishment of the first battalions was a direct result of Lajos Kossuth’s speech to the National Assembly on 11 July 1848, in which he requested a 200,000-strong defense force. The Assembly approved his request unanimously. (2) In the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, between 1868 and 1916, it was the name of the Hungarian Army, an auxiliary contingent of the Imperial Army. Officially, it was known as the Royal Hungarian Defense Army. Its strength was 60,000 men, formally under the command of the Hungarian Government. (3) Between 1920 and 1945, it was the legal successor of the National Army, the Royal Hungarian National Defense. (4) Between 1945 and 1948, under Soviet occupation, the Hungarian Armed Forces became the Democratic Defense Army and, between 1948 and 1990, its name was Hungarian People's Army. (5) Following the Soviet withdrawal from Hungary, in March of 1990, a new defense force was organized and the name reverted to the National Defense Forces. – B: 1153, 1285, T: 3323.→Had; Kossuth, Lajos.

Nationality – According to archives, already during the reign of the Árpád dynasty (10th to the beginning of the 14th century), whole foreign or related tribes and clans received permission to settle in Hungary in the Carpathian Basin. There was only one condition: they were to accept the laws of the country. During the 15th century, 80% of the population of the Hungarian Kingdom was Hungarian. The country's 20% minority – all different nationalities – had exactly the same civil rights as the Hungarians. During the 16th century, the advance of the Turks, the decimation of the Hungarian people, the division of the Hungarian Kingdom and, following that, the politics of the Austrian ruling house in Hungary changed the ethnic situation dramatically. Nationalities that were allowed to immigrate to Hungary on a large scale had more advantages and privileges than the native Hungarians.

According to the census held in Historic Hungary (excepting Croatia) in 1910, of the total population of 18,246,533, Hungarians made up 54.5%. The distribution of the major nationalities were: Germans 10.5%, Slovaks 10.5%, Romanians 16.0%, Ruthenians 2.5%, Croatians 1%, Serbians 2.5% and others 2%.

As a result of the border changes of Hungary in 1920 and 1947, a large number of original Hungarian nationals now live in Romania (Transylvania), Yugoslavia/Serbia (Southern Hungary), Slovakia (Upper Hungary, Felvidék), the Ukraine (Sub Carpathia), and Austria (Western Hungary), as well as, due to emigration to the United States, Canada, Western Europe, Australia, and other countries. In the Carpathian Basin, there are 12.5 million Hungarians; only 10 million live in the recent, truncated country, and 2.5 million in the successor states (Slovakia, Serbia, Ukraine, Romania, Croatia, Slovenia and Austria). In the USA 1.5 million, in Canada 0.75 million, in Western Europe and other areas some 1 million Hungarians live in diaspora. At the beginning of the 21st century, 15-16 million Hungarians live in the world. On the territory of present-day Hungary only a small number of ethnic groups exist in linguistic, national and territorial fragments. – B: 1230, 1153, T: 7684.→Hungarians (Magyars), Ethnogenesis of; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Nationalization – Assuming state control or ownership, without compensation, by appropriation of privately owned properties and goods, especially all facets of production. In Hungary, the first nationalizations on a grand scale without compensation were ordered in 1919 during the 133-day rule of the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic. At its collapse, the nationalizations lapsed. The almost total nationalization of the economy occurred between 1945 and 1952, when nearly all instruments of production, agriculture and other private ownerships became state owned, again by appropriation. After 1989, the Government proclaimed a new program, the reduction of state ownership, partly through privatization and partly by compensation to the affected parties. – B: 1231, T: 7668.→Exploitation of Hungary; Hungary, History of.

National Museum – The Hungarian National Museum was the first Museum of Hungary, founded by Count Ferenc (Francis) Széchenyi in 1802. He also offered his collection of manuscripts, maps, coins and prints to form a National Library. This was followed with the donation of a mineral collection to the Museum by Széchenyi's wife, a year later. In 1807, the Hungarian National Parliament passed legislation on the new Institution, and asked the nation to help by donations to the Museum. The Hungarian Parliament of 1832-1834 also helped with the growth of the Museum, by voting in favor of giving half a million forints for the construction of a new building. During this time, the Hungarian National History Museum was officially set up under the auspices of the Hungarian National Museum. Later in 1846, the Museum moved to its current location at 14-16 Múzeum Boulevard in the 8th District.

The Museum's neo-classical style building was designed and built by Mihály (Michael) Polláck, a well-known architect of his time, between 1837 and 1847. The monumental building was opened in 1847 as the fourth largest Museum in Europe. Surrounded by trees and bushes, the most impressive part of the two-story building is its portico in the middle. Eight Corinthian columns support a frieze with an ornamental cornice and a large pediment on the top. The pediment hosts a high relief, which was fashioned after the miniature sculpture of Raffaello Monti of Milan, Italy. In the center, the allegorical figure of Pannonia (name of Western Hungary in the Roman Empire) sits with the Hungarian coat of arms on her shield, flanked by Science and Art on either side.

Major donations and purchases played important roles in expanding its collection, including large donations by the Kubinyi, Pyrker, Marczibányi, and from the Jankovich families, which further extended the collection to archeology and fine and applied arts. Later in the 19th century, large collections were separated from the Museum to form new specialized museums in the country, such as the Museum of Fine Arts, Applied Arts, Natural Science and National Culture. The most recent addition was the Castle Museum in Esztergom that was established in 1985.

The main exhibitions of the National Museum focus on the history of Hungary, its geography and ethnography, from the Paleolithic Age to the present. In addition to its five major divisions (Archeology, Middle Ages, Modern History, Numismatics, Historic Paintings), it houses two permanent exhibitions and an archeological library with over 100,000 volumes. Its two permanent exhibitions cover the history of the peoples of Hungary from prehistoric times till the arrival of the Magyars in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) during the Carpathian occupation (896 – 900 A.D.) right up to 1848.

In 1848, the National Museum was the place of a historical moment of Hungary: On 15 March 1848, Sándor Petőfi, the great patriotic poet, stood up by the left pillar of the stairway of the National Museum and recited to the crowd his newly composed, fiery poem called "National Song" (Nemzeti Dal). This poem appealed to the nation to such an extent that it strongly contributed to launching a revolution to liberate Hungary from Habsburg oppression. Between 1870 and 1902, the Upper House of the Hungarian Parliament held its sessions in the National Museum. It was the home of the Hungarian Holy Crown and the coronation regalia between 1977, when it was returned from the care of the USA (where it was kept after World War II), and 2000, when it was placed in the Parliament Building.

The National Museum contains the most significant collections of Hungary, and is also a historical site. Today, the remembrance festivities on 15 March, for the National Commemoration Day of 1848, are held in front of the Museum. The National Museum is one of the richest museums in Central Europe. – B 1031, 1415, T: 1415, 7103.→Petőfi, Sándor.

National Pantheon (Cemetery of Kerepes – Kerepesi Temető – Budapest) – Already in 1841, Count István Széchenyi (1791-1860) “the Greatest Hungarian” raised the need for establishing a “National Pantheon”, though he imagined it to be located somewhere in the Buda Hills. By the 1840s, the cemeteries in use were not only filled up, but they actually hindered the expansion of the Capital; therefore, in 1847, the town of Pest decided to establish a large public cemetery of 56 hectares in an outlying area, the so-called “Kerepes lands”.

In 1855 the first eminent personage laid to eternal rest there was the poet Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty. Other famous ones followed: Károly (Charles) Kisfaludy, also the “remains of the Hungarian Jacobins”, and the ashes of the parents of Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi. It was between 1867 and 1910 that the great mausoleums were built, e.g. for Batthyány, Deák, Kossuth, as well as the lines of arcades and the mortuary. The “Artists’ Plot” was established in 1928, and developed in the 1930s.

After World War II, the cemetery experienced considerable changes. The central area was turned into a park and its appearance as a public cemetery became overshadowed. In 1959, the “Pantheon of the Working Class Movement” was completed and several plots for this purpose were also opened. The 1990s period again brought further changes: the plot of the 1956 freedom fighters was organized and turned into a park, and a memorial was erected. By 1999, the Kossuth Mausoleum was restored and, by 2001, the Batthyány Mausoleum reached completion. In 2002, the reconstruction of the Deák Mausoleum was begun. At present, the cemetery serves a double purpose: on the one hand, it is an exclusive public cemetery that is functioning again in an esthetically set-out park-land style surroundings; on the other hand, it treasures the memory of the outstanding figures of the Hungarian past.

Apart from the National Pantheon, there are two other cemeteries in the Budapest area. The one is the Public Cemetery of Rákoskeresztúr (an outer east-suburb of the Capital): in Parcels 298, 300 and 301, keeping the remains of the victims and martyrs of the 1956 Revolution. Initially their resting places were not identified but, after the 1989 rehabilitation, hundreds of head posts (“kopjafa”-s, Transylvanian-style carved wooden poles) were installed to commemorate the martyrs.

In the center of the 300th parcel there is a bell tower with the following inscription at its base: “I call the living, mourn the dead, and chase the thunder”. Opposite the bell tower, there are two graves: the one is for all the nameless martyrs; the other is the grave of Imre Nagy, the Prime Minister executed during the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956; in front of it, there is a carved kopjafa. The adjacent mass graves hold the martyrs of the first ten blood-soaked years of the Communist dictatorship, beginning in 1945.

The other cemetery is the Farkasrét Cemetery on the Buda side, where the remains of most of the eminent artists are buried. There are several other smaller cemeteries in Budapest. – B: 1708, 1020, T: 7456.→Most of the persons have their own entry.

National Philharmonic Orchestra (Nemzeti Filharmonikus Zenekar) – Formerly the Hungarian State Symphony Orchestra (Magyar Állami Filharmónikus Zenekar) was founded in 1923, with the formation of the Metropolitan Orchestra (Fővárosi Zenekar). It rapidly became one of the pillars of Hungarian musical life. After World War II, Ferenc (Francis) Fricssay and László Somogyi were its principal conductors. During this era, Otto Klemperer also conducted forty concerts, while another regular guest was Antal Doráti. In 1952 János (John) Ferencsik was appointed as principal conductor. With him, the orchestra began a series of highly successful foreign appearances, whereby he elevated the orchestra to world level. In the 1960s, a number of guest conductors accepted invitations to conduct the orchestra, including Ernest Ansermet, Zubin Mehta, Lorin Maazel, Sir John Barbirolli, Leopold Stokowski, Claudio Abbado and Christoph von Dohnányi. Among the guest soloists who performed with the orchestra were Sviatoslav Richter, Yehudi Menuhin, Anja Silja, János Starker and Ruggiero Ricci, to name only a few. After János Ferencsik's death in 1984, a Japanese conductor, Kobayashi Ken-ichiro headed the orchestra (1987-1997). During his ten years tenure Kobayashi enjoyed great popularity in Hungary. In 1998, the orchestra was renamed Hungarian National Philharmonic Orchestra, and together with the Hungarian National Choir (Nemzeti Énekkar), became national basic institutions. Since the fall of 1997, the general music director has been Zoltán Kocsis, piano virtuoso, composer, and Zsolt Hamar, as resident conductor until 2004. Kálmán (Coloman) Berkes has been the ensemble's permanent guest conductor. In the past couple of years the orchestra has received a number of invitations to perform abroad, including the New York Avery Fisher Hall, the Tokyo Suntory Hall, the Birmingham Symphony Hall, the Athenean Megaron Musicos, the Colmar Festival, and a concert tour in Germany. The orchestra, together with the National Choir and the National Music Library, moved into its new home, the Budapest Palace of Arts, in early 2005. In 2006, the Hungarian National Philharmonic was appointed Hungarian Goodwill Ambassador of UNICEF. The ensemble released several acclaimed CDs. The Orchestra and Choir received a number of acknowledgements, praises and prizes, among them the Lully Prize. – B: 1714, 1031, 2117, T: 7103.→Fricssay, Ferenc; Klemperer, Otto; Doráti, Antal; Ferencsik, János; Dohnányi, Kristóf von; Kocsis, Zoltán.

National Széchényi Library – (Országos Széchényi Könyvtár, Nemzeti Könyvtár) – It was founded in 1802, by the patriotic aristocrat Count Ferenc (Francis) Széchényi (1754 - 1820). He sought out Hungarian books nationwide and abroad, assembled them in a single collection and donated it to the nation in that year. In the following year, the public library, open to all, was opened in Pest. Ferenc Széchényi's patriotic deed aroused a nationwide response. The public offered personal contributions to build up the fullest possible national library. The Diet of 1808 established the Hungarian National Museum to collect the historical, archeological and natural relics of Hungary and incorporated the Library founded earlier by Ferenc Széchényi. This Institution is the common depository of written, printed and figurative art relics of the Hungarian past. In the meantime, the building of the Hungarian National Museum was completed, and the Library and other departments of the Museum moved into it in 1846-1847. In 1949, the Library was separated from the Museum and once again became an independent institution under the name of National Széchényi Library. In 1985 it moved into its new quarters in one of the palace buildings of the restored Royal Palace of Buda. The Library has the task of collecting all the works published in Hungary within the Carpathian Basin in whatever language they may be written; all works published in Hungarian language; all works written by Hungarian authors, or with the collaboration of Hungarians; works not in Hungarian and written outside Hungary; finally, all works of a Hungarian nature published abroad in foreign languages. It is mandatory for authors and publishing houses to deposit free copies in the National Library. Aiming at comprehensive coverage, the National Széchényi Library collects publications and prints of any kind produced in Hungary, receiving two deposit copies of each: non-book materials (sound recordings, video materials, documents in electronic forms, etc.), works published abroad in the Hungarian language, written by Hungarian authors, translated from Hungarian, or relating to Hungary, as well as manuscripts in Hungarian or pertaining to Hungary. In addition to the material listed above - which is termed "Hungarica" material, the Library also collects literature connected with the Finno-Ugric peoples (Hungarian supposedly belongs to this family of languages, although there is no satisfactory proof of this) and also literature relative to the neighboring peoples and countries. The library has holdings of about 7 million items, of which more than 2 million are books, 330,000 volumes of serial publications (newspapers and periodicals), 176,000 printed music, and nearly 1 million manuscript items. The number of maps amounts to 200,000, and if we include pictures and engravings, to 310,000; it holds a music-score collection, theater-historical collection, also placards and obituary-notice and there are 24,000 sound recordings. There are almost 3 million posters and small prints. The library has microfilm copies of more than 270,000 documents (as of December 1997). The book collection of some two million items (in 1940 it was past 1 million) includes such rarities as the Chronica Hungarorum, also called Budai Krónika (Buda Chronicles), the first book printed in Hungary, issued from the press of András Hess in Buda, now Budapest, on June 5, 1473. With its 8500 copies of works published prior to 1711, the Collection of Ancient Books is the richest collection of old Hungarian books in the country. It has 1700 incunabula (books printed before 1501). The most complete collection of editions of Hungarian writers can be found here: close to 600 editions of the works of Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, and more than 3000 editions of the works by Mór (Maurice) Jókai. The personal libraries of famous historical and literary figures, such as Lajos (Louis) Kossuth and Imre (Emeric) Madách form a valuable part of the collection. Great acquirers for the library include Miklós (Nicholas) Jankovich, Count Sándor (Alexander) Apponyi and Gyula (Julius) Todoreszku. The library preserves the oldest existing text in Hungarian, the Funeral Oration and Prayer (Halotti beszéd és könyörgés), written about 1200; 32 Corvina volumes from the famous library of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490); the manuscript of the lyrics of the National Anthem in the handwriting of its author Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey, and countless manuscripts of Kossuth, Petőfi and Ady. – B: 1091, 1031, T: 1090, 7103.→National Museum; Széchényi, Count Ferenc; Kossuth, Lajos; Petőfi, Sándor; Jókai, Mór; Madách, Imre; Chronica Hungarorum; Funeral Oration and Prayer; Corvina; National Anthem; Kölcsey, Ferenc; Ady, Endre.

National Theater – The history of this renowned theatrical company is inseparable from Hungarian theater art itself. László (Ladislav) Kelemen, the promoter of the art began his activities in 1790 in Buda and Pest; but in 1796 his enterprise failed. Meanwhile, in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1792, and between 1828 and 1833 in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), and also in Buda from 1833 on, performing on the stage began and, from these early companies, the body of the National Theater developed. Every actor in the country participated in the theater's intellectual and practical development.

The opening day took place on 22 August 1837, in the Rondella Building on János Apáczai Csere Street. Today it houses the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház). The reform period notables include M. Lendvay, B. Egressy, Zs. Szentpétery and L. Fánicsy, who rose to the peak of their careers before 1848.

Before the War of Independence of 1848-1849, the theater was a significant instrument to maintain and nourish national consciousness, especially during the period of Absolutism; and ever since, it has remained the sentinel of patriotic sentiment.

Rapid development followed during the Directorships of Ede Szigligeti (1870-1878) and Ede Paulay (1878-1894). At that time, the expanded programs included world literature, from the Greek tragedies to the plays of H. Ibsen, such as the The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) by Imre (Emeric) Madách, and Csongor and Tünde by Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty – beside Bánk bán by József (Joseph) Katona –, which became the basic classical Hungarian theatrical works. It was at that time that the Hungarian drama entered the realm of world literature under the guidance of Gergely (Gregory) Csiky. Famous artists, who have performed on the stage include Mari (Mary) Jászai, Emilia Márkus, Ede Újházy.

In 1908 the Theater moved from the old building to a new one, and functioned under the name of National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) until its demolition in 1965.

Many other famous actors followed, such as: Árpád Ódry and Kálmán (Coloman) Rózsahegyi. After World War II, many of them still played and offered outstanding performances, such as: Gizi (Gisela) Bajor, Lajos (Louis) Básti, Ferenc (Francis) Bessenyei, József (Joseph) Bihari, Hilda Gobbi, Gyula (Julius) Gózon, Pál (Paul) Jávör, Ferenc (Francis) Kiss, Ferenc (Francis) Ladányi, Margit (Margaret) Lukács, Tamás (Thomas) Major, Zoltán Maklár, Ági (Agnes) Mészáros, Magda Olty, Antal (Antony) Páger, Imre (Emeric) Pethes, János (John) Rajz, Artur (Arthur) Somlay, Éva Szörényi, Anna Tökés, László (Ladislav) Ungváry – to mention a few.

The National Theater was located on Nagymező Street (1965-1966), and from 1966 to 2000 in the rebuilt Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) on Sándor Hevesi Street, Budapest.

After a long delay, the construction of the new National Theater started under the Orbán Government, on 14 September 2000. The plan was designed by architect Mária Siklós and, after a construction process of record time, it was completed in just over 15 months. On 2 January 2002, the rehearsals began for the inaugural performance of Imre Madách's The Tragedy of Man, which took place on 15 March.

The theater is divided into three parts. The central part comprises the auditorium with an almost circular ground plan; the Studio Theater, which is surrounded by the auditorium, and the U-shaped technical wing, bordering the main stage. Together with an open-air stage, the area of the Theater is 20,844 square meters. The refreshment facilities are on the first floor, while the auditoria on the second and third floors serve as a gallery overlooking the Danube and the Buda Hills.

The main auditorium has a capacity of 619, the boxes are on the second floor, with three royal boxes in the center; the gallery is on the third floor, housing technical rooms between the entrances. The auditorium is topped by an oval cupola.

The main stage measures 24 by 17.9 meters and is 28 meters in height. The visible part is 12 x 7 meters. The stage is complemented by a rounded apron stage, and connected to it are a rear-stage of 15 x 15 meters, and a side-stage of 18 x 15 meters. The performance space of the main theater is a revolving stage: with 72 points it can be raised or lowered; it is unique in Europe. The 1x2-meter platforms represent a total area of 144m<sup>2</sup>. These elements can be moved, lowered or tilted, separately or together. Almost all the area directly in front of the auditorium is also movable: the guardrail, the platforms in the orchestra pit, and the section between the pit and the stage. In total, there are 12 guardrails and 12 platforms in the pit, which can be moved. The studio stage is a black space, and it can be changed flexibly according to requirements. Its capacity is 120-180 persons. It is located on the floor underneath the ground floor lobby and the main auditorium, and its own stage and seating space can be varied, depending on the needs of the play being performed. The preparation of plays is served by three rehearsal rooms that accompany the stages, to be found on the second, fourth and fifth floors. The rehearsal room on the fourth floor is also home of a recording studio. The building also provides for a library and an archive, and boasts the panoramic actors' club on the top floor.

Apart from Budapest, there are National Theaters in some major countr towns, such as Debrecen, Szeged, Miskolc, Pécs and Győr. – B: 0293, 1709, T: 7685, 1709, 7103.→Most of the persons have their own entry.

Nativity Play – A widely known folk mummery performed at Christmas and, in certain regions, even before Christmas. The players are mostly teenage boys, who go from house to house carrying a prop called a Bethlehem. It is illuminated by a single candle and serves as a stage setting. The most important player is an angel in white, who announces the birth of Jesus to the two or three shepherds in the meadow wearing masks and carrying large sticks. Hearing the news, they begin to sing Christmas songs, dance, joke and wait for their small reward. The staging of the play differs from area to area. In Transdanubia (Dunántúl) the singing of the songs has a primary importance; while, on the Great Plain (Nagyalföld), the jesting and bantering take precedence, with the principal character being a deaf old man. The most elaborate mummery is staged in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), where the adult players perform a half-hour mystery play in the form of poetry. They also act out the story of the Holy Family's search for shelter. Some of the songs originate from the 18th century, but their text is more recent. The oldest among them is the Song of the Cattle Shepherds found in the Cantus Catholici of 1651. This is most probably the oldest Hungarian mummery lyric. – B: 1136, 1134, T: 3240.→Cantus Catholici.

Nature Protection Areas – These are smaller regions rich in characteristic and unique natural values, worthy of protection and preservation. Law No. LIII of 1996 provides protection of these areas, determines their qualifications, and controls human activities and interference. The natural protection areas are divided into four categories: (1) National Parks; (2) Nature Parks; (3) Area protection districts, and (4) Protected natural areas. National Parks: Hortobágy; Kiskunság; Bükk; Aggtelek; Fertő-Hanság; Duna-Dráva; Balaton-felvidék; Körös-Maros; Órség and Szatmár-Bereg. Nature-parks: Ipolymente-Börzsöny; Írottktő; Kerkamente; Körös Völgye; Nagy Milic; Sopron-hegység and Vértes. There are 36 area protection districts and 147 protected natural areas. – B: 1031, 1153, T: 7103.

Navracsics, Tibor (Veszprém, 13 June 1966 - ) – Lawyer and politician. He read Law at the Department of Jurisprudence and Political Science at the University of Budapest, receiving his Degree in 1990. Thereafter, he worked in the City Courthouse of Veszprém and, after passing the judge's special examination, he worked for the Autonomous County Council of Veszprém. In 1993 he became a demonstrator at the University of Economics, Budapest, and in the 1996-1997 seasons, with the help of a scholarship, he taught at the University of Brighton, England. From 1997 he was an assistant lecturer, and from 1999 he worked as an assistant professor at the Department of Jurisprudence and Political Science of the University of Budapest. In 1999 he obtained his Ph.D. in Political Science. From 1997 to 2000, Navracsics was Secretary of the Hungarian Political Science Society. Since May 2006 he has been a member of the Presidium of the Fidesz Party. In the 2006 national elections, he received a seat, representing County Veszprém in Parliament. From 16 May 2006, he was a fraction leader of the Fidesz Party. From 2006 to 2010, he was a member of the Committee of Constitutional matters, Jurisprudence and Administration. In 2010 he was again elected Member of Parliament for the 7th Electorate of County Veszprém. In 2010, in the second Orbán Government, he was appointed Deputy Prime Minister, as well as Minister of Public Administration and Minister of Justice. His works include European Domestic Policies: a Political Science Analysis of the European Union (Európai belpolitika: Az Európai Unió politikatudományi elemzése) (1998); Political Communication 2004 (Politikai kommunikáció 2004) with others (2004); A Missing Debate? Hungary and the European Union (Brighton)(2005), and The Birth of a European People's Party: The Fidesz – Hungarian Civic Alliance in 2004 (Egy európai néppárt születése: A Fidesz – Magyar Polgári Szövetség 2004-ben), a book chapter (2005). – B: 1031, 2072, T: 7456.→Fidesz Hungarian Civic Union Party.

Navratil, Imre (Emeric) (szalóki) (Pest, 1833 - Budapest, 3 April 1919) – Physician, surgeon, laryngologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical School of the University of Pest in 1858. He organized the Laryngology Department at the Rókus Hospital in Pest. In 1872 he was an honorary lecturer at the University and, in 1878 he became Chief Surgeon in the Rókus Hospital. In 1892 he was awarded Titular Professorship. He retired in 1911. He invented and applied a number of medical tools in laryngeal procedures, and introduced endolaryngeal operations. He was the first brain surgeon in Hungary. His field of research also included neck and head surgery. Among his works are Larynx Diseases (Gégebajok) (1866); Textbook of Surgical Operations (Sebészeti műtétan) (1967), and Beitrag zur Hirnchirurgie (1889). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7103.

Nazarene Congregation (Christ-believer Nazarene Congregation – Krisztusban Hívő Nazarénus Gyülekezet) – A religious community founded by Heinrich S. Fröhlich, a Minister of Thurgau, Switzerland, in the 1830s. He preached strict ethics and the Anabaptist doctrine. In 1839, János (John) Denkl and János Kropcsek brought this kind of teaching to Hungary. They baptized Lajos (Louis) Hencsey, a blacksmith, who wrote a summary of the Nazarenes' doctrines. He is regarded as the founder of Nazarenism in Hungary in 1844. The first congregation was organized in Pacsér (now Pacias, Serbia), in 1848, where it met with some difficulties with state authorities because its members refused military service. Their situation eased by 1894. They gained official recognition in 1977. Their way of thinking and religious practice is characterized by the strong observation of traditions. Church servants govern the congregations. They live an isolated way of life. They do not seek contacts with other Christian communities. The way of life of their members is strict and puritan. Adultery and exogamous marriage are equated with murder, and those who are guilty of these sins are excommunicated. Divorce is not permissible. In the earlier years they refused military service, but now they refuse to carry arms. Communion is served only to members. In Hungary, they number about 3,200. – B: 1042, T: 7390.

Neapolis, Scythia – An ancient Scythian settlement that existed near today's Simferopol on the Crimean Peninsula. The archeological excavations that began in 1946 revealed the ruins of a great city built in the Greek pattern and surrounded by huge walls. The city was the center of Scythian civilization from the 3rd century BC. The most significant find is the mausoleum, which contained the burial place of a king Palakos' stone casket and that of a queen in an ornamental, gold-painted, wooden sarcophagus. The artifacts, the gold leaf dress, the horse harnesses, the mirrors, pearls and weapons reflect a strong Greek and Sarmatian influence; the features of the old Scythian decorative art are hardly present. – B: 1144, T: 7665. → Scythians.

Nedao, Battle of – The Gepid King Adarik exploited the conflict that arose among the sons of Attila after his death, and he rebelled against the Huns' rule with the help of the Goths, the Alans, the Herules and the Suaves. The great battle took place in southern Pannonia, north of today's Pécs, near the Nedao River. The Huns were defeated, losing tens of thousands, among them Ellak, the chief Reigning Prince. After this defeat, the Huns withdrew to the banks of the Pontus, today's Black Sea. – B: 0942, 1230, T: 7665.

Nedeczky, István (Stephen) (Balatonederics, 1831 - Ugra, 3 September 1908) – Politician, landowner. He was a Hussar Captain during the War of Independence of 1848-1849. In 1864 he started an organization with Pál (Paul) Almásy and Lajos (Louis) Beniczky for the restoration of the independence of Hungary. He was arrested, prosecuted and sentenced to death, which was commuted for life imprisonment. In 1867 he received amnesty. Between 1869 and 1878 he was a parliamentary representative. He was nephew of Ferenc (Francis) Deák, and a strong supporter of his policy of compromise. For a year he was President of the Veterans' Association. He was the author of a book entitled The Foundation of a Representative Constitution (A képviselői alkotmány megalapítása) (1876). – B: 1883, T: 7103. → Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Almásy-Nedeczky Plot; Almásy, Pál; Beniczky, Lajos; Compromise of 1867; Deák, Ferenc.

Negol Family – The family had estates in Baranya, Gömör and Szepes counties (now the two latter ones are in Slovakia). Already in 1247, Lőrinc and Bereve were elected judges. Gala Szepesi was the ancestor of the clan's Gömöri and Máriássy branches. Gala's two eldest sons left the country in 1270, but Mark stayed and his sons made the nation flourish. Batiz was the ancestor of the Gömöry family; his name is remembered in Batizfalva in the Szepesség. Mark, who lived between 1270 and 1282, was the ancestor of the Márkusfalvi Máriássy family. – B: 1078, T: 7676.

Négyesy, László (Ladislav) (Szentes, 6 March 1861 - Budapest, 7 January 1933) – Literary historian, esthetician and educator. His university studies were completed at the Universities of Budapest and Vienna. In 1885 he obtained a Ph.D. in Arts and a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest. He was a high school teacher in Eger from 1885, in Szolnok from 1887, and in Budapest from 1891 to 1911. In 1893 he became an honorary lecturer. At the University of Budapest, he became Professor of History of Hungarian Literature from 1911, and taught Esthetics from 1923 to 1932. He was a member of the Kisfaludy Society from 1904, and a Member of Parliament from 1920 to 1922, representing his town, Szentes, with a program for the Smallholders' Party. He was author of a number of model high school textbooks on the History of Literature, Stylistics and Poesy. He pioneered the introduction of the concept of literary consciousness (irodalmi tudat), although he was an adherent of the conservative esthetic school. A number of his students became pioneers of the modern trend, publishing in the literary journal West (Nyugat). In his university style practicals, Mihály (Michael) Babits, Gyula (Julius) Juhász, Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi, Árpád Tóth and others formed a life-long friendship with him. His works include Hungarian Metrics (Magyar verstan) (1886); History of the Metrical Hungarian Versification (A mértékes magyar verselés története) (1892); Arany (1917); Critique and History of Literature (Kritika és irodalomtörténet) (1923), and Career of Kazinczy (1931). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1896, ordinary 1918). – B: 1078, 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Babits, Mihály; Juhász, Gyula; Kosztolányi, Dezső; Tóth, Árpád.

Nehéz, Ferenc (Francis) (Dunamocs, or Mocs, now Moča, Slovakia, 16 October 1912 - Los Angeles, 29 January 1978) – Writer, journalist. He completed his high school studies in Budapest; thereafter he took part in the literary life of the Upland (Felvidék, now Slovakia). Nehéz was secretary of the Hungarian Cultural Association of Slovensko (Szlovákiai Magyar Kultúr Egyesület – SZMKE) and research worker, then editor of the Komárom Papers (Komáromi Lapok), and reporter of Hungarian News of Prague and Hungarian Minerva in Pozsony (now Bratislava). Since the return of the southern (Hungarian inhabited) strip of Slovakia in 1938, he lived in Hungary. Several of his novels, books of short stories and plays were published. During the two World Wars he was one of the significant Hungarian writers in Slovakia. After 1945, he was editor of the Catholic paper Heart (Szív). In 1949 he escaped to the West, and in 1951 he settled in the US. He lived in Los Angeles as a laborer in an ironworks. He was author of novels, novelettes and literary sociology. These were published in the Catholic Hungarians' Sunday (Katolikus Magyarok Vasárnapja), in the National Guard (Nemzetőr), Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap) in Buenos Aires, also in the New World Új Világ, Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet), and other western Hungarian papers. A number of his novels and short story volumes have been published. His better known works include Don't Cry Little Rozi (Ne sírjál Rozika), novel (1962); Love Each Other (Szeressétek egymást), novel (1966); Homeless Rosemary (Hazátlan rozmaring), novelette (1968, 1971); Csaba's Pearl (Csabagyöngye), short story (1970); Golden Nut (Aranydió), short story (1975); Silver Tears (Ezüstkönny), novel (1977), and Little Hungary (Kis Magyarország), a sociological treatise (1977). – B: 1031, 1257, 1672, T: 7456.

Nékám, Lajos Sándor (Louis Alexander) (Pest, 4 June 1868 - Budapest, 29 January 1957) – Physician, dermatologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical School of the University of Budapest in 1888. From 1890 he was an assistant professor at the Institute of Pathology. From 1896 to 1906 he was Director of the National Bacteriology Institute, Budapest. In 1898 he became an honorary lecturer of Dermatology. From 1906 he was Professor and Director of the Clinic of Dermatology, Budapest. From 1937 he was a member of the Upper Chamber of Parliament. He was an outstanding dermatologist, national organizer of the fight against syphilis; publisher, patron of art, art-collector and medical historian. His works include Neurofibroma multiplex (1893); Über die leukaemischen Erkrankungen der Haut (Hamburg, 1899); Modern Principles in Healing Syphilis (Modern elvek a syphilis kezelésében) (1911); Dramas in Medical Science (Drámák az orvostudományban) (1933), and Corpus Iconum Morborum Cutaneorum (1938). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7103.

Nekcsei Bible – A Bible in two volumes. Its cover is the work of the royal painter, Master Hewrtul. The style of its decoration is similar to that of the Hungarian Anjou Book of Legends (Anjou Legendárium) and the Illuminated Chronicle (Képes Krónika). Its text is a version of the Vulgata used in the University of Paris. It is held in the Library of Congress (Pre Accession I.) in Washington D.C. A part of it was published in a facsimile version by Helikon Publishers, Budapest in 1988. It is decorated with 156 initials: 116 figural, 40 ornamental. Its title page has Nekcsei's coat-of-arms and the history of Creation; the person who ordered the Bible, together with his wife is shown on the left side of the folio. Christ is sitting on a rich, architecturally dissected throne, around him the twelve Apostles. The attribution is missing, but all of them are recognizable by the miniatures of the Legendary. At the foot of Christ is the model of the turreted-type church with side-chapels; in front of it, kneeling with an offering gesture is old Nekcsei molded with individual features, together with his wife, Katalin (Catherine) Garai, and a kneeling angel. Behind the donating pair, the Virgin Mary is standing with an angel of the Siena type. There is the bust of a saint in the quadrangular niche of the stool at the throne structure. Demeter (Demetrius) Nekcsei († 1338) belonged to the Aba clan and he was Lord Chief Treasurer of King Károly I (Charles Robert) from 1315 to 1338. The framing of the King's successful economic policy is ascribed to him. He ordered this two-volume Bible from one of the best workshops of Bologna, probably toward the end of his life. By comparing it with the Legendary, Saint Demeter must have been the patron saint of the Lord Chief Treasurer. – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Aba Clan; Károly (Charles) I, King; Hungarian Anjou Book of Legends; Illuminated Chronicle.

Nellmapiusz, Lajos Hugo (Louis Hugh) (Budapest, 5 May 1847 - Pretoria, South Africa, 21 June 1893) – Entrepreneur. He completed his education in Hungary and emigrated to South Africa with an Engineering Degree. Around 1870 he worked in Kimberley, then moved to the Transvaal. He became involved in gold mining, soon obtaining a mining monopoly. He was well-known as the best explosives expert and was widely respected.

In 1875, in his Pilgrim's Creek mine, he discovered a gold nugget weighing 3,444 grams, which he named the 'Voortrekker Nugget'. For a long time this was the largest gold nugget found in the Transvaal. This find became the foundation of his successful future.

He moved to Pretoria, where he became the representative of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, as its Vice-Consul. In the meantime, he founded the Lorenzo Marques and South African Transport Company, the largest in South Africa. In June of 1875 he built a road through jungles and rivers between Gold Field and Lorenzo Marques, constructing resting stations at 25 km. intervals. He established an agricultural experimental farm, called Hatherley Farm, which introduced intensive agriculture into the Transvaal. The residential district developed by him near Pretoria, named after his daughter, Irene, still goes by that name. His most impressive project was a group of factories, begun in 1881, which included a sugar refinery, distillery, glass factory, a copper foundry and a cannery. This huge enterprise, called Die Eerste Fabriken (The First Factories), was completed in less than 2 years and was officially opened by President Kruger. In Pretoria, he founded the English language newspaper, The Press, the Afrikaans De Pers and, later, he also published a weekly, The Weekly Press. All these newspapers were printed on his own printing press. A seemingly light illness led to his untimely death at the age of 46. Thousands of people participated in his funeral procession and President Kruger delivered the eulogy. – B: 1020, T: 7665.

Neményi, Lili (Lilian) (Igló, now Spišská Nová, Slovakia, 28 November 1902 - Budapest, 14 July 1988) – Opera singer (soprano) and actress. She completed her musical studies independently, under the direction of Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Hoór-Tempis, Hugó Kelen and Kálmán (Coloman) Hetényi. Her grandmother, Emília Szelényi, raised her. Neményi learned piano at the same time as she pursued her studies. Later, she would teach her singing roles to herself, with her own accompaniment. She earned her diploma at fifteen from the Hungarian Theater in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). Neményi went on to spend five years there, after which she performed in Szeged, Miskolc, Nagyvárad, Kassa, Debrecen, Budapest, Eger, Békéscsaba, Gyula and Hódmezővásárhely. In 1928 she won roles at the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest and the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház). From 1922 until 1931 she was again based in Kolozsvár, but traveled to various towns to perform guest roles. In 1930 she performed in Miskolc. There, she was invited to try out for the Budapest Opera House. Between 1940 and 1945 she sang songs composed for the poems of Endre Ady, János Arany, Mihály Babits, Attila József, Ernő Szép and Andor Gábor. From 1946 until 1970 she was a singer of the Budapest Opera House. Aside from this position, she sang lead roles in operettas as well. Lili Neményi gave guest appearances in Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, France, Yugoslavia, China, Poland, Mongolia, Great Britain, the Federal Republic of Germany, the German Democratic Republic, Romania, Switzerland, and in larger U.S. cities. Lili Neményi's most successful roles were as Susanna in Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Pamina in Mozart's The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Marguerite in Gounod's Faust; Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata; Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Antonia in Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann, (Hoffman meséi,) and Countess Szerény in G. Csiky's Grandma (A nagymama). She received the titles of Merited Artist in 1959, and Outstanding Artist in 1967. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7688.→Ady, Endre; Arany, János; Babits, Mihály; József, Attila; Szép, Ernő; Gábor, Andor.

Nemes, Levente (Medgyes, now Mediaş, Romania, 16 September 1939 - ) – Actor and theater director. In 1962 Nemes completed his studies at the Institute of Theatrical Art in Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureş, Romania). For fourteen years he acted at the City Theater and, in 1973, became a part of the State Hungarian Theater of Sepsiszentgyörgy (now Sfântu Gheorghe). He has a strong, masculine personality. His acting style is sparse and conveys an impression of deep introspection. His humor is satirical and very apt in its choice of target. His one-man shows, during the 1970s and 1980s became memorable artistic events. He often performed on Bucharest Radio's Hungarian-language programs. More than once, he has accepted positions as a director for award galas. Working together with Lajos (Louis) Sylvester, Nemes wrote an adaptation of the Transylvanian trilogy of Zsigmond Móricz with the title The Witch (A boszorkány). Since 1992 he has been the Artistic Director of the Sepsiszentgyörgy Theater. His roles have included Elek Dósa in László Németh's The Two Bolyais (A két Bolyai); Starkey in Heller's We Bombed in New Haven (Bombáztuk New Havenben); X in Mrože's The Emigrants, and Bán Petur in József Katona-Gyula Illyés' Bánk bán. His performances included Selections from World Literature (Válogatások a világirodalomból) (1966); Testamentum, based on Tudor Arghezi's poetry (1968); Consciousness (Eszmélet), based on Attila József's poetry (1972), and Clarity (Világosságot), recitation of Sándor Petőfi's poems (1973). – B: 1445, 0875, T: 7688.→Móricz, Zsigmond; Katona, József; Illyés, Gyula; József, Attila; Petőfi, Sándor; Sylvester, Lajos.

Nemes Literati, Sámuel (Komárom ?, 1795 - Komárom, 19 September 1842) – Transylvanian antiquarian, curio hunter. During his entire life, he collected old manuscripts, documents, medals, coins, rings, weapons, rarities of nature; in particular he kept enriching the collection of the famous Hungarian art collector and antiquary, Miklós Jankovich (1773-1846) for over nearly twenty years; furthermore, he systematized it as well. He exhibited all his antiquarian material in a number of towns in Hungary over the years. Regrettably, he was notorious for many forgeries, which even deceived some of the most renowned Hungarian scholars of the time. For example there is the case of the “father of Hungarian literary history”. Ferenc Toldy (1805-1875), unaware of the forgery, presented the supposed Hungarian Illustrated Chronicle (Magyar Képes Krónika) at a meeting of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences on 10 June 1854. In the case of the eminent linguist, János Jerney (1800-1855), the forgery was a prayer from the 11th century, which Jerney unsuspectingly “decoded” and published in volume II of Hungarian Language Treasures (Magyar Nyelvkincsek). Nemes' works include Letter of Advice (Értesítő levél) to the public about the exhibitions of his collections, Advertising Letter (Hirdető levél), about exhibiting the remains of prehistoric, “antediluvian” animals of strange appearance; it is also about armaments, idols of humans of “fairy time”, a 1000-piece collection of Chinese, Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Hungarian and German antiques, as well as the Mummy News (Mumia hírlap) concerning a special and entertaining selection of his collection of curios (all undated). He was co-founder of the National Széchényi Library. Budapest. – B: 0907, 1031, 0883, T: 7456.→Toldy, Ferenc.

Nemes, Marcell (Jánoshalma, 1866 - Budapest, 28 October 1930) – Art collector. With some fortunate finds, like the procurement of El Greco paintings, he rose to be among the best-known art collectors of the world. From 1918 he lived in Munich, but he maintained contact with Hungary. He substantially added to the holdings of the Museum of Fine Arts in Budapest with his very valuable gifts, such as El Greco's Repentant Magdalene (Bűnbánó Magdolna), and Mányoki's Portrait of Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II (II Rákóczi Ferenc arcképe). He also provided scholarships for talented Hungarian artist students. He played a significant part in the establishment of the Museum of Kecskemét. He himself did some painting. In 1933 there was an exhibition of his estate in the Ernst Museum. – B: 0883, 1712, T: 7456.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Mányoki, Ádám.

Nemes Nagy, Ágnes (Budapest, 1 March 1922 - Budapest, 23 August 1991) – Poet, translator of literary works, essayist. She was a student at the Baár-Madas Reformed Girls High School, Budapest. Its Principal was Lajos Áprily, the renowned poet, who exercised decisive influence upon her. She received a Degree in Literature, Latin and History of Arts from the University of Budapest in 1944. She was a contributor to the periodical Public Education (Köznevelés) from 1945. In 1946, with her husband Balázs (Blaise) Lengyel, established the literary periodical, New Moon (Újhold), which was banned in 1948. From 1953 she taught at the Petőfi High School, Budapest and, from 1958, she was a free-lance writer. From 1960 on, her poems appeared again. She authored, for example, the Years of Wandering (Vándorévek) (1964); Golden Brush (Aranyecset) (1962); Violet Swallow (Lila Fecske) a children's book (1965); In a Double World (Kettős világban) poems (1946); Dry Lightning (Szárazvillám), translated poems; Solstice (Napforduló) poems; In Between (Között) prose-verses; 64 Swans (64 hattyú) essays; Selected Poems (Iowa, 1980); In Between (Dublin, Berlin 1988); Collected Essays, vols. i-ii (Összegyűjtött esszék I-II) (1989-1992), and Collected Poems (Összegyűjtött versek) (1999). She translated works from Corneille, Racine, Molière, Rilke, Brecht and Dürrenmatt. Her poetry is based upon the experience of the tragedy of war, belief in God, and the insoluble conflicts expressed in visions and myths. She is an important figure of the latter part of the 20th century Hungarian literature. She received a number of prizes, including the Baumgarten Award (1948), the Attila József Prize (1969), the Kossuth Prize (1982), and the Book of the Year Award (1985). A literary prize bears her name. – B: 0878, 0879, 0877, 1257, T: 7103.→Áprily, Lajos.

Nemes, Tihamér (Budapest, 29 April 1895 - Budapest, 30 March 1960) – Mechanical engineer, inventor and a domestic innovator in the field of cybernetics. He earned his qualifications in Budapest in 1917. In 1921 he worked at the Telephone News Service and, from 1929, at the Experimental Postal Station. By 1950 he was a scientific employee at the Telecommunication Research Institute. In 1952 he was at the Beloiannisiz Communication-Technology Institute, Budapest and, in 1953 he participated in the Experimental Postal Station's first attempt to create a Hungarian television picture with sound. Nemes developed the 625-line "flying spot" film projection unit, with the double optical components that he invented. After this achievement, he worked in Hungarian Television until 1957. His work there was versatile. In the field of thermodynamics, he invented a heat vacuum, the importance of which was only later recognized. His most important developments were in the field of electronics and cybernetics. In 1930 he patented his electronic "ether" organ. He even developed a prototype of one octave of the organ. He was already experimenting with color television broadcasting in the mid 1930s. Working with the premise that humans and machines share similar traits, he invented a machine in 1935 that wrote down human speech. Nemes' "walking" machine caused a sensation in 1944. In a study that appeared in 1949, he used the principle of the electronic calculating machine to discuss the mechanical solution of two-step chess problems, and presented his sketch of such a device. He worked on building a logic machine, which could automatically recognize cause and causal relationships. His writings include Current Frequency Analysis of Light Fluctuation by Means of Rotating Disks (Über momentane Frequenzanalyse von Lichtschwankungen mittelsrotierenden Scheiben), (1932); Color Television with Electrical Color Filters (1939); The Chess Playing Machine (1951), and Cybernetic Machines (1962). – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7688.

In 1939 he obtained a Ph.D. in Anthropology with the dissertation entitled Data on the Anthropology of the Hajdús (Adatok a hajdúk antropológiájához). At the beginning of his career, he dealt with ethnic and historical anthropological research. Between 1937 and 1945 he was Correspondent for the Ethnographic Museum, Budapest; then became Curator of the Anthropological Collection of the Archeological Section in the National Historical Museum. In 1945 he established the anthropological collection of the Natural Science Museum and worked there as its head until 1965. From 1947 he gave lectures in anthropology to students of archeology in the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest. From 1965 he worked in the Demographic Research Institute of the Central Statistical Bureau and he retired from there in 1983 as a scientific advisor. From 1971 to 1983 he also headed the Zoological and Anthropological Department of the University of Debrecen, involving teaching and research work in Anthropology. He developed a new direction in paleodemographic research, leading to paleodemographic reconstruction. In 1970 he wrote, together with György Acsádi, the work: History of Human Life Span and Mortality, which became an international success and is still used as the basic work in paleodemography. From 1968 to 1976 he was Editor for Anthropological Proceedings (Antropológiai Közlemények). Other important works by him, some of monographic size, are: Anthropological Study of the Population of the Village Ivád, with co-authors (Ivád község népességének embertani vizsgálata) (1953) (Ivád is 20 km. southeast of Salgótarján), and Principles of Paleodemography (Göttingen, 1986). At the end of his life he took part in the exhumation and identification of the remains of Imre Nagy and Pál Maléter. He was a member of a number of Hungarian learned societies and foreign Anthropological Societies. He received the President's Gold Medal of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1962) and the Prize of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1977). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456. → Hajdús; Nagy, Imre; Maléter, Pál.

Nemeskürty, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 14 May 1925 - ) – Writer, historian, literary and film historian. Németh, Andor (Andrew) (Celldömölk, 28 December 1891 - Budapest, 13 November 1953) – Writer. He completed his higher studies at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Budapest. In 1914 he went to Paris but, after the outbreak of World War I, he spent four years in a French internment camp, from where he was freed in 1919. During the four-month rule of the Hungarian Council (Soviet Republic) he was press attaché at the Viennese Embassy, and he remained in Vienna as an emigrant after the fall of the Soviet Republic, taking an active part in its emigré life. He was a correspondent for the Viennese Hungarian News (Bécsi Magyar Újság). He returned to Hungary in 1926, becoming one of the founders of the paper, Nice Word (Szép Szó). From 1936 to 1939 he led the literary column of News (Újság). Numerous critical and political articles written by him appeared in the columns of West (Nyugat), The Pen (A Toll), Work (Munka), and Dokumentum.

He was on friendly terms with Attila József, the eminent 20th century lyric poet, for whose recognition by the general public he fought hard; his book on Attila József is an important contemporary document. He also wrote articles on esthetics, romantic historical portrayals, and translated from the works of Balzac, Hugo, Zola, Dreiser, Hemingway and Maugham. In 1938 he emigrated to Paris, France, and soon had to go into hiding in the environs of Marseille. From 1945 to 1947 he worked again in Paris; in 1947 he returned to Hungary. From 1947 to 1950 he was Editor of the paper, Star (Csillag). His works include The Commune of Paris (A párizsi kömmün), description of an age (1932); Metternich or the Perfect Model of Diplomacy (Metternich vagy a diplomácia magasiskolája) (1939); Attila József (József Attila) (1942), and Kafka ou le mystère juif, (study (1947). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→József, Attila.

Németh, Antal (Anthony) (Budapest, 19 May 1903 - Balatonfüred, 28 October 1968) – Stage manager, stage esthete. He completed his studies at the Universities of Budapest and Berlin, and obtained a Ph.D. with the dissertation: Outline of the Esthetics of Dramatic Art. On a scholarship from the Ministry of Culture, he studied modern stage-management in Munich, Cologne and Paris. In 1929 he became the stage-manager of the Municipal Theater (Városi Színház) in Szeged. In 1930 he was a correspondent for the Encyclopedia of Dramatic Art (Szinészeti Lexikon); and in 1935 Director of the Hungarian Radio. On 1 June 1935 he became Director of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. He secured stage presentations for the already classic works of new Hungarian dramatic literature, such as works by Áron Tamási, László Németh, János Kodolányi, Károly Kós and Lajos Zilahy. He created varied programs, spectacular presentations and a novel subscription system, whereby guaranteeing a large and permanent audience. He rearranged Shakespeare's dramas and introduced pieces by Molière and Ibsen. He staged more than 80 dramatic works, including Goethe's Faust (first time ever in Hungary), Kleist's Amphytrion, and O'Neill's Morning Becomes Electra (American Elektra). On 30 June 1944 he was relieved of his positions both at the National Theater and at the Hungarian Radio. After 1945 he was not given a position for years. Only in 1956 did he stage Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) in the Theater in the Transdanubian town of Kaposvár. This was followed by a position as stage-manager at the Theater in Kecskemét (1957-1959), and Pécs (1959-1965). One of his memorable stage managements was Shakespeare's Othello in the Theater at Veszprém in 1964, the same year that he prepared for television Madách's The Tragedy of Man. He rendered significant services in popularizing Madách's great work. He retired in 1965. His works include Outline of the Esthetics of Acting (A színjátszás esztétikájának vázлата) and The Tragedy of Man on Stage (Az ember tragédiája a színpadon). – B: 1079, 0883, T: 7456. → Tamási, Áron; Németh, László; Kodolányi, János; Kós, Károly; Zilahy, Lajos.

Németh, Endre (Andrew) (Pécs, 19 November 1891 - Budapest, 3 June 1976) – Engineer. He graduated from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1913. From 1918 to 1922 he drew plans for railways and mines in Ózd. In 1923 he worked at the National Fishery Supervising Board (Országos Halászati Felügyelőség). Between 1935 and 1937 he was an associate at the Civil Engineering Office of Budapest. He dealt with irrigation issues and studied the same issues in France and Italy. From 1937 to 1941 he worked at the National Irrigation Office. In 1940 he became professor at the Hydraulic Engineering Department of the Budapest Polytechnic and taught there until his retirement in 1962. His works include Encyclopedia of Hydraulic Engineering (Vízépítési Enciklopédia) (Hungarian and German, 1941); Hydrology and Hydrometry (Hidrológia és hidrometria) (1954); Les recherches hydrologiques en Hongrie 1957–1959 (1960), and Hydromechanics (Hidromechanika) (1963). He participated in the work of foreign societies. His work was a significant contribution to the science of Hydrology. He received a number of awards including the Fermat Medal (1975), the Schfarzic memorial Medal (1965), the Pál Vásárhelyi Prize (1974), and the Loránd Eötvös Prize (1975). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7103.

Németh, Géza (Székesfehérvár, 1 June 1933 - Budapest, 21 February 1995) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, writer. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest (1951-1956). He was Assistant Minister in Füle, Székesfehérvár and Győr (1956-1957), and was detained for political reasons (1957-1958). He served as Assistant Minister in the Central Church, Monor and Ócsa (1958-1963). He was Parish Minister in Érd, (1963-1971), but was dismissed from the ministry for illegal construction of a church at Érd (1971-1989). He was a minister in the Danubian Church District (1989-1991), and the founder and minister of the Transylvanian Congregation (Erdélyi Gyülekezet), Budapest. He was one of the writers of the Declaration of Faith, which described the real state of the Reformed Church in Hungary under Communist rule. It was handed over secretly to the prominent foreign guests of western churches at the 100-year anniversary of the Reformed Theology, Budapest in 1955, and to the leaders of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches, at the meeting at Galyetető, in Mátra Mountain, in the summer of 1956. He was active in the Renewal Movement of the Church in 1956, and one of its restorers in 1989 and 1990. He was a prolific writer. His interest encompassed sociology, politics, church-politics and poetry, published in articles and essays. Németh, Gyula (Julius) (Karcag, 2 November 1890 - Budapest, 14 December 1976) – Linguist, Turkologist. His wife was the linguist Irén Sebestyén. He obtained an Arts Degree from the University of Budapest (Eötvös College), continuing studies at the Universities of Leipzig, Berlin and Kiel. In 1915 he was an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest; from 1916, an assistant professor; from 1920 to 1965 full Professor and Head of its Arts Faculty; he was also Dean of the Arts Faculty and Vice Chancellor. He went on several study trips to China, to the Ufa district of Russia (where the Chuvash people live), to the Caucasus Mountains, and to Turkey. He was Editor for the Orientalist journal, Kőrösi Csoma Archivum. Together with Zoltán Gombocz and János Melich, he edited the monograph Handbook of Hungarian Linguistics (Magyar Nyelvtudomány Kézikönyve). He was the Editor from its inception in 1951 for the Acta Linguistica, a journal in western European languages. His main areas of research were: History of the Turkic Languages, study of Turkic Dialects, Hungarian Linguistics and Origins, and, above all, the role played by Turkic peoples and languages in the ethnic and linguistic formation of the Magyar Tribal Federation of the Carpathian settlement period (AD 896). Besides Zoltán Gombocz and Bálint Hóman, it was he whose research during the interwar years led to the currently accepted view of Hungarian origins and ancient history. It was to his credit that he developed the teaching and research of Turkic languages in the Faculty of Arts at the University of Budapest. His works include Studies on the Phonetic History of Turkish-Mongolian Languages (Adalékok a török-mongol nyelvek hangtörténetéhez) (1913); Türkische Grammatik (1916); The Evolution of the Magyars of the Settlement Period (A honfoglaló magyarság kialakulása) (1930, 1991); Die Inschriften des Schatzes von Nagyszentmiklós (The Inscriptions on the Nagyszentmiklós Treasure) (1932); The Hungarian Runic Script (A magyar rovásírás) (1934); Attila and his Huns (Attila és hunjai), editor & coauthor (1940, 1986); Die türkische Sprache in Ungarn im XVII. Jahrhundert (The Turkish Language in Seventeenth Century Hungary) (1970); New Theory About the Ethnic Evolution of the Magyars (Új elmélet a magyarság kialakulásáról) (1922); Dentümoger (1933); Probleme der türkischen Urzeit (Problems of the Ancient Turkic Past) (1947), and Is our Word "úr" = lord not of Turkic Origin? (Nem török eredetű az "úr" szavunk?) (1956). He became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1922, an ordinary member in 1935, and was its Director from 1941 to 1946. For his Turkological works, Németh was awarded a number of prizes, among them one of the Turkish state's highest honors, as well as the Corvin Wreath in 1937; he was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize in 1948, and the Order of Cyril and Method, first class (Bulgaria) in 1970. – B: 0883, 1068, 1079, 1257, 0878, T: 7456, 7688.→Gombocz, Zoltán; Hóman, Bálint; Forrai, Sándor; Fekete Lajos (2); Hungarian Runic Script.

Németh, Ica (Ilona, Nelly) (Mrs. Ferenc Škrekó) (Nagyudvarnok, now Veľké Dvorníky, Slovakia, 12 July 1944 - ) – Actress, theater director, dramaturgist. Between 1962 and 1966 she was a student at the Academy of Fine Arts in Bratislava, Slovakia (Pozsony, Hungary before 1920). From 1961, with the exception of a few years, Ica Németh was an actress at the Hungarian Regional Theater (Magyar Területi Színház – MATESZ) in Rév-Komárom (now Komarno, Slovakia). Concurrently, from 1978 until 1983 she was Dramaturgist of Pozsony Radio's Hungarian program. After, she was again actress of the successor of MATESZ, the Jókai Theater (Jókai Színház), Komarno, and she was its acting director in 1997 and 1998. She participated in radio plays and appeared in some Slovak films. In the 1960s and 1970s she specialized in playing the role of young intellectuals. Later, elder female roles were her forte. One of her best-received roles was as Éva in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). Other notable roles include Mini in Čapek's The Robber (Rabló); Emilia in Shakespeare's Othello; Ranyevskaya in Chekov's The Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyéskert); Woman in Bukovčan's Waltz in the Attic (Keringő a padláson); Lolia in Gyula Háy's The Horse (A ló); Mother in Garcia Lorca's Blood Wedding (Vérnász); Mrs. Miller in Friedrich Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem), and Madame Pernelle in Molière's Tartuffe. She is a recipient of the Life-Achievement Prize, and the Faithful Prize in 2007. – B: 1445, 1083, 1890, T: 7688.

Németh, Imre (Emeric) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 23 September 1917 - Budapest, 18 August 1989) – Athlete, hammer-thrower. He was with the Hungarian Athletic Club (Magyar Athletikai Club – MAC) from 1938 to 1945. Thereafter, he was with the Miklós Toldy Sports Society and, from 1947 to 1960, with the Vasas Sports Club. He was World Champion in 1950, with 59.88 meters. Németh won third place in the Helsinki Olympic Games in 1952. In 1960 he was Olympic Champion in hammer throwing with 56.07 meters in the Summer Olympic Games in London. He also achieved good results in European Championships. He was Hungarian champion 12 times. Between 1946 and 1948 he worked at the Ganz Electric Factory and was Manager of the People's Stadium (Népstadion) from 1953 to 1979. From 1964 to 1973 he was President of the Hungarian Athletic Society. A High School in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Németh, Miklós.

Németh, Judit (Miskolc, 11 May 1963 - ) – Opera singer (mezzo-soprano). She studied Piano and Voice in Miskolc and Voice at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under the direction of Éva Kurucz (1981-1988), where she first obtained an artist-teacher diploma (1986) and, finally, an opera singer diploma. Her career started as an oratorio singer. In 1990 she became a member of the Opera House, Budapest. Among her main roles are: Annus in Mozart's La clemenza di Tito (Titus kegyelme); Dame in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola), and Margaret in Berg's Wozzeck. In her repertoire are the main mezzosoprano roles of opera, Baroque, Classical and Romantic oratorios and songs. For four years, she was on a scholarship of the Budapest Philharmonia. This enabled her to work under the baton of Lamberto Gardelli, Helmut Rilling, Antal Doráti, Nicholas MacGegan and Kobayashi Ken-Ichiro. She received a scholarship from the Bach Academy, Stuttgart, and from the Academy of Vienna. In 2002 she was very successful in the role of Waltraute in Wagner's Götterdämmerung (The Twilight of the Gods – Az istenek alkonya), and in 2003 as Ortrud in Lohengrin. She teaches at the Music Academy of Győr. She received the Separate Prize of Barcelona in 1989. – B: 1445, 1426, T: 7103.→Doráti, Antal.

Németh, László (Ladislav) (Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Romania, 18 April 1901 - Budapest, 3 March 1975) – Writer (novelist, essayist), physician. His father was a high school teacher in Nagybánya. The family moved to Szolnok in 1904, and then to Budapest in 1905, where he completed his primary and secondary education. From February 1920 he began studies in Hungarian and French Literature at the University of Budapest, but in April he changed over to the Medical Faculty. In 1925 he received his Medical Degree and, for practical, financial reasons, he chose Dentistry, practicing in the Sisters of Mercy Hospital of Budapest. In the same year, he already appeared with a short story in the journal West (Nyugat). On Christmas Day of the same year, he married Ella Démusz. In 1926 he opened his dental surgery and, as a freelance he regularly visited the mental and neurological section of the New Saint John (Új Szt. János) Hospital of Budapest. He also took on a position as a school physician at various high schools of Budapest, between 1926 and 1943. From 1926 his articles and book reviews appeared in the literary review, West (Nyugat), the Protestant Review (Protestáns Szemle), Sociology (Társadalomtudomány), and, at a later stage, in the Transylvanian Helikon (Erdélyi Helikon), and also in the Sunrise (Napkelet). In 1929 Németh fell ill with tuberculosis, went to Italy for treatment and ceased practicing dentistry. He became a close friend of Mihály (Michael) Babits, Oszkár (Oscar) Gellért, Aladár Schöpflin and Gyula (Julius) Földvály. In 1930 he received the Baumgarten Prize and, from 1932 he sent his literary studies and portraits to the literary review, West (Nyugat). In 1932 he founded the journal Witness (Tanú), one he wrote and edited, which reached 17 volumes by 1937. In this journal, he set forth his reform ideas, dominated by his idea of “revolution of quality”, believing in the leading role of the intellectuals in society. In 1934 his first book, Man and his Role (Ember és szerep) was published. Then he published his novels in quick succession: Mourning (Gyász) (1935); Sin (Bűn) (1937, 5th edn. 1954), and the seven-part cycle, The Last Attempt (Az utolsó kísérlet) (1937-1941). In 1938, his play: By the Illumination of Lightning (Villámfénynél) was staged by the National Theater, followed by his first great historical drama, Gregory VII. His collection of earlier essays entitled: The Revolution of Quality was published in 1940. Two volumes of studies, written after Witness (Tanú), appeared in 1942, under the title In Minority Status (Kisebbségben) (1939-1942). As Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz's “adjutant”, Németh edited the journal, People of the East (Kelet Népe). In 1940 he offered his house in the hilly part of Buda for the establishment of a People's College, but its opening was not approved by the authorities. He published the syllabus for this college in the journal People of the East (Kelet Népe). He applied for the Chair of Hungarian Literature at the University of Debrecen, but his request was rejected. From 1926 to 1943, six daughters were born to him (2 of them died young); they are featured in his work, My Daughters (Lányaim) (its first version in 1943, the last version in 1962). For the 25th anniversary of the death of the great lyric poet, Endre (Andrew) Ady, he prepared a speech for the Hungarian Radio, but its reading over the air was not authorized. Its text was published in the journal, Hungarian Star (Magyar Csillag). From 19 March 1944 during the German occupation, he lived in Felsőgöd and later in Budapest. During this time he did not publish anything. After the Soviet Communist takeover in 1945, he moved with his family to the town of Békés, in the southeast part of the Great Hungarian Plain. In September 1945 (without his family) he went to Hódmezővásárhely, to take on a teaching job, paid by the hour, teaching History of Hungarian Literature and many other subjects, including Mathematics in the high school. In 1946 the Minister of Culture Dezső (Desider) Keresztury commissioned Németh to be a school inspector for the continuing education schools. He worked out the curriculum of this type of school. He published articles in the journals Answer (Válasz) and People of the Pustas (Puszták Népe). His drama, Széchenyi, also appeared in 1946. His drama, John Hus (Husz János), was published in the journal, Answer (Válasz). From 1949 he lived in Budapest and pursued translating activity; he translated works by Shakespeare, Lev and Tolstoy, (Anna Karenina proved a great success: 14 editions in 20 years), Gladkov, Groszman, Jirašek. For recognition of his translations, he received the Attila József Prize in 1950. Early in 1954 he suffered from hypertension (high blood pressure), but he continued working, finished three plays: Petőfi in Mezőberény, The Traitor (Az áruló), Joseph II, and Burning Esther (Égető Eszter), a genealogical novel. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he took the side of a renewed socialism, received the Kossuth Prize in 1957, and he visited the Soviet Union in 1959. A film was made from his novel, Dread (Izzony) (1964). He received the Herder Prize in 1965. In the same year, he wrote the play, Death of Gandhi (Gandhi halála), and the novel Mercy (Irgalom).

László Németh was one of the outstanding representatives of Hungarian prose literature; he is one of the great modern Hungarian thinkers. His works were translated into English, French, German, Italian, Russian, Bulgarian and Czech. – B: 0883, 1257, 1445, T: 7456. → Babits, Mihály; Gellért, Oszkár; Schöpflin, Aladár; Keresztury, Dezső; Hungarology.

Németh, Mária (Körmend, 13 March 1898 - Vienna, 28 December 1967) – Opera singer (dramatic soprano). She graduated from high school in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and studied singing while working as a teacher. She studied Voice at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under the direction of György (George) Anthes. Later, in Naples, she was a student of Fernando de Lucia. In 1922 she appeared in the City Theater as Amelia in Verdi's The Masked Ball (Álarcos Bál). In 1923-1924 she was a member of the Opera House in Budapest, then of the State Opera in Vienna from 1925 to 1942. In the meantime, she was frequently a guest artist at the Budapest Opera House always with great success. She was equally successful not only in Vienna, but also in the great opera houses of Europe, including Paris, London, and Scala of Milan, and often appeared with immense success at the Salzburg Festival. Her rich voice was among the best and made her a celebrity all over Europe. Her magnificent voice and remarkable technique enabled her to excel in diverse roles. Her repertoire included the operatic works of Mozart, Italian composers, particularly Bellini and Puccini, and also Wagner and R. Strauss. Among her main roles were Puccini's Turandot and Tosca, Leonora in Beethoven's Fidelio, Donna Anna in Mozart's Don Giovanni, Bellini's Norma, and Elza in Wagner's Lohengrin. – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, T: 7103.

Németh, Marika (Maria) (Pécs, 26 June 1925 - Budapest, 26 February 1996) – Actress, singer and prima donna. She completed the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1947 but, by 1946, she had already worked at the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) for one season. After this achievement, she became a company member of the Artists' Theater (Művész Színház) and, between 1949 and 1965, Németh was member of the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest. In 1965 she married a man who lived abroad, but in 1969 she was again part of the Operetta Theater Company. Her appearance, personality and her well-trained voice were exceptionally showcased in numerous prima donna roles. She alternated the routine and repetition of her operetta roles by using humor and a touch of humanity. She accepted many roles outside of Hungary, and her voice is preserved in many films and also on recordings. Her colleague and husband was the singer Péter Marik. Marika Németh's main roles were: Sylvia in I. Kálmán's The Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő); Hanna Glavári in F. Lehár's The Merry Widow (A víg özvegy); Liza in F. Lehár's The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa); Maritza in I. Kálmán's Countess Maritza (Marica grófnő); Fedóra in I. Kálmán's The Circus Princess (A cirkuszhercegnő), and title role in V. Jacobi's Sybill. Her feature films included Miska the Grandee (Mágnás Miska) (1948); Bitter Truth (Keserű igazság) (1956), and The Beggar Student (Koldusdiák) (1988). Marika Németh won the Mari Jászai Award in 1955, received the titles of Merited Artist in 1978, and Outstanding Artist in 1985. – B: 1445, 1439, T: 7688. → Marik, Péter.

Németh, Miklós (1) (Nicholas) (Budapest, 23 October 1946 - ) – Athlete, javelin-thrower. He wanted to follow in the footsteps of his father, Imre (Emeric) Németh, Olympic and World Champion in hammer throwing. He was a member of the Budapest Vasas Sports Club from 1962 and, from 1970, a member of the Sports Club of the Academy of Physical Training, Budapest (Testnevelési Főiskola Sport Egylet – TFSE). However, he performed excellently in javelin. He was a member of the National Team (1965-1983), the European Team (1967), and the World Team (1977). He was the first Hungarian athlete to reach 90 meters in javelin throwing. At the Summer Olympic Games in Montreal in 1976, he was Olympic Champion with a world record. He received the title of Sportsman of the Year in 1975, 1976 and 1977. He retired in 1984 and was the coach of the Italian National Athletic Team. Thereafter he became a representative of an Italian sports equipment manufacturing firm in Hungary. He also plans and manufactures sports-equipment. – B: 1031, 1768, T: 7103. → Németh, Imre.

Németh, Miklós (2) (Nicholas) (Monok, 24 January 1948 - ) – Economist, politician. He obtained his Degree from the University of Economics of Budapest in 1971. He was assistant professor, later adjunct professor at this University (1971-1977). He was on scholarship at Harvard University, USA, (1974-1975). He was Department Head of the Office of National Planning (1977-1981). From 1981 to 1988 he worked in various positions, finally as Department Head at the Economic Policy Department of the Hungarian Socialist Worker's Party (Magyar Szocialista Munkáspárt – MSZMP). In 1987 and 1988 he was economic policy secretary of the Central Committee of the MSZMP. He was Prime Minister between 1988 and 1990. In 1989 he was a member of the Hungarian Socialist Party (Magyar Szocialista Párt – MSZP) and, besides being Prime Minister, he became member of its Presidium; but he soon left the Party. During his tenure, decisive political change took place in Hungary: the one-party system turned into a multi-party democratic system. In the 1990 democratic election he was elected Member of Parliament. However, after a month, he resigned as MP, accepted the presidency of the European Development Bank, and moved to London, UK, where he worked between 1991 and 2000. He returned home and was, for a while, a possible candidate for Prime Ministership of the MSZP Party for the 2002 election. Since 1990, he has been a presidium member of the International Transylvania Foundation and President of the Tokay Foothill Society since 1993. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.

Németh, Zsolt (Budapest, 14 October 1963 - ) – Politician, sociologist. He was born into the family of a Minister of the Reformed Church, with ancestors in northern Hungary and Transylvania. His father was discriminated against by the Communist system. After completing his studies at the Radnóti High School in Budapest, in 1982 Zsolt Németh studied at the University of Economics of Budapest. He was a member of the Rajk College, and one of the founders of the Széchenyi College. He studied at the St. Anthony College of Oxford University on a scholarship from the Soros Foundation in 1988. He was one of the founders of the Alliance of Young Democrats (Fiatál Demokraták Szövetsége – FIDESZ) in 1989. From 1993 he was Spokesperson for Fidesz, then its Vice-President and, at present, he is the leader of his Party's Foreign Cabinet. He has been a Member of Parliament since 1990. In 1994 and 1998 he was a member of the Foreign Affairs Parliamentary Committee and, since 2002, he has been its president. Between 1988 and 2002 he was the Political Undersecretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. His main achievement was the realization of the "Status Law", whereby the "beyond the borders" unification of the Hungarian nation was greatly promoted. Hungary was torn apart by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty in 1920, as well as by the Paris Peace Treaty in 1947. Since the 2002 election, Zsolt Németh has been the Deputy Leader of the Hungarian Delegation for the Parliamentary General Meeting of the European Council. Since 2005 he has been Vice-President for the Political Committee of Europe Council. Since 2006 he had been the President of the Foreign Affairs Parliamentary Committee. After the 2010 election, he became Member of Parliament and Political Undersecretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. – B: 0989, T: 7103. → Németh, Géza; Political Parties in Hungary; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Némethy, Ella (Sátoraljaújhely, 5 April 1895 - Budapest, 14 June 1961) – Opera singer (dramatic mezzo-soprano). She was a student of Nándor Rékai and the Milan conductor, Ettore Paizza. On 23 October 1919, she made her first appearance in the Budapest Opera House in Saint-Saëns' opera, Samson and Delilah. From 1919 to 1948 she was a soloist at the Opera House and, from 1934, its life member. She also scored great success abroad: in South America and in Italy (1929 - 1944); she was the first Hungarian singer to appear in the La Scala Opera House of Milan. She was an outstanding singer in Wagner operas, and excelled in the leading roles of Italian and French operas. Her main roles were: Isolda in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, Ortrud in Lohengrin, Kundry in Parsifal, in Puccini's Tosca, in Bizet's Carmen, Santuzza in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (Parasztbecsület), and in Richard Strauss' Salome. She was a recipient of the prestigious Corvin Wreath in 1935. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Némethy, Emil (Arad, now in Romania, 17 February 1867 - Budapest, 6 November 1943) – Mechanical engineer, inventor and industrialist. He built a glider-type aeroplane in 1900. Although lacking a suitable motor to fly it, he was still ahead of his time with his theoretical observations on the dynamics of flying aerodynamics. He showed that the lifting power of an aeroplane can be increased either by flying acceleration or by enlarging the supporting surface (wing, etc.). His works include Endgültige Lösung des Flugproblems (Leipzig, 1903) and Gesammelte Aufsätze (Arad, 1911). Emil Némethy was the first in the world to use steel pipes for the construction of his plane. He is regarded as one of the pioneers of Hungarian Aviation. - B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Asbóth, Oszkár; Kármán, Tódor; Zsélyi, Aladár; Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation.

Németújvár Glossaries – A Hungarian language relic, found among a collection of Latin sermons, dating from 1470. It was discovered in the Franciscan monastery of Németújvár (now Güssing, Austria) by the historian László Fejérpataky in 1883, and published in the same year. As the collection was compiled for the use of Hungarian priests, the author found it expedient to note, after certain words and expressions, the Hungarian meanings, in order to facilitate the task of the Hungarian preachers in the preparation of sermons. One of the later users, still of the 15th century, judging from the writing, made additional notes above some words and in the margins. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 7617.

Németújvár Missale (Now Güssing, Austria) – A Codex with musical notes, probably prepared for the city of Pécs in the 13th century. Its four-staff notations are closest to the northern Italian type. On its last pages, sequences can be seen. In its calendar King St István (St. Stephen) (997-1038) and King St László (St. Ladislav) (1077-1095) have separate festive days. – B: 1197, T: 7684.→Codex Literature,

Nendtvich, Károly (Charles) (Pécs, 31 December 1811 - Budapest, 5 July 1892) – Physician and chemist. Nendtvich finished his studies at the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Pest in 1836. Between 1836 and 1840 he was an assistant teacher at the Chemistry and Botany Departments. In 1841 he took part in establishing the Natural Science Society. With support and commission from the Society, Nendtvich received the assignment to research domestic asphalt and coal. At the request of Lajos Kossuth, he gave popular chemistry and technological chemistry lectures for the Industrial Association from 1843 until 1847. From 1847 he was a teacher for the József Industrial Training School (József Ipartanoda) in its Chemistry and Technology Departments. After the failure of the War of Independence, he was removed from his department and had to appear before a military tribunal. It was in 1850 that Nendtvich resumed his former position. In 1857, when the József Industrial Training School became Polytechnic University, Nendtvich became Professor at the Department of Chemistry. Between 1873 and 1874 he was the President of the University of Pest. He retired in 1881. From 1884 until 1887 Nendtvich was a representative at the National Assembly. In addition to studying properties of coals, his work dealt with the investigation of domestic mineral waters. He excelled in writing textbooks and books that popularized science. Nendtvich was a significant figure in personifying the progressive economic and scientific movements of nineteenth century in Hungary. Concerning linguistic standardization, Nendtvich initially supported the purism of Bugát-Irinyi. It was only later that he accepted the use of Hungarian in international terminology for chemistry. He was interested in botany as well and wrote and published a study on the flora of Pécs. He wrote, among others: Basic Principles of Industrial Inorganic Chemistry (Az életműtlen műipari vegytan alapismeretei) (1844-1845); Hungary's Most Important Deposits of Coal (Magyarország legjelesebb kőszéntelepei) (1851); Central Ideas of General Technical Chemistry (Grundriss der allgemeinen technischen Chemie, Volumes I-III) (1854-1858), and Principles of Chemistry... (A vegytan alapelvei...) (1872). Nendtvich was elected a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1845, and an ordinary member in 1858. – B: 0883, 1122, 1730, T: 7688.→Kossuth, Lajos; Bugát, Pál; Irinyi, János.

Neoaquistica Commissio (Commission of New Acquisition – Újszerzeményi Bizottság) – After the retaking of the fortress of Buda, the capital of Hungary from the Turks in 1686, the liberating campaign of Hungary continued for another 13 years, with fighting in the southern parts of the country, leading to further losses, aggravating the 150-year Turkish devastation. Turkish rule over Hungary officially ended with the Peace Treaty of Karlowitz (Karlócai Béke) in 1699.

The loss of life was most severe among the Hungarian population. The population of Hungary at the end of the 15th century was between 3.5-4 million; in 1720, Hungary's population was 1,700,000 and, in addition, there were 800,000 Hungarians in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Such a drastic decrease in the Hungarian population was the result of 150 years of Turkish occupation of one third of Hungary's territory and in ceaseless fighting for and defending the rest of the country with the border fortresses against the Turkish conquerors and Habsburg colonization.

As an advisory committee, the Neoaquistica Commissio (Commission of New Acquisition – Újszerzeményi Bizottság) was set up by the Imperial Court in Vienna to deal with the revision and arrangement of the chaotic ownership rights after the end of the Turkish rule. It was led by Cardinal Count Lipót (Leopold) Kollonich (1695-1707). He promptly reinstated church-estates, but other landlords had to prove their right to recover their estates by providing documentation, that many of them could not. These estates of former Hungarian owners remained in the hands of the Emperor, who gave them mostly to foreign settlers. These areas were re-populated by Slovaks, Ruthenians, and also Wallachians (now called Romanians), who moved down from the higher mountainous regions and took over the abandoned settlements. Similarly, the Serbs moved northward from regions further south, even under Turkish rule, settling in large numbers in the Bácska (Backa) area, formerly the Southern Part of Historic Hungary (now part of Voivodina in Serbia). Furthermore, planned immigration brought a great number of German settlers into the country: the Jászság and Kiskunság regions (northern and central parts of the Great Plain) were pawned to the Order of the Teutonic Knights. In addition, the Trans-Dráva River counties: Pozsega, Verőce, Szerém and Valkó fell under separate administration. The Viennese Government guaranteed special rights to the settlers and, after 1720, even transported them in large numbers down the River Danube into the Bánát region (also part of Voivodina). Later, other nationalities were also settled in the Bánát, including Italians, Spaniards and Frenchmen. In 1763, Empress and Queen Maria Theresa (1740-1780) settled large numbers of Germans in the Bánát, a policy continued by her son, József II (Joseph, 1780-1790), who extended it to the Bácska region as well. At the same time, Hungarian peasants and farmers were banned from settling in the abandoned territories.

The main reasons why the Habsburg rulers settled foreign nationalities in the repossessed Hungarian territories were that (1) after Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly's and Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II's Kuruc insurgencies against the Habsburg rulers, they regarded Hungarians as unreliable subjects, and the foreigners more reliable; (2) they wanted to uproot the strong Hungarian Protestantism; (3) they planned to make Hungary a German-speaking colony of Austria.

The settlement of great number of foreign populations in historic Hungarian regions in the long run resulted in a drastic shift in the ethnic ratio of Hungarians to the newly settled populations in Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin, in favor of the latter. Because the number of foreign settlers increased strongly, partly due to their higher fertility rate and partly by the infiltration of kindred people outside Hungary: Wallachians from Romania, Ruthenes from Ukraine, Slovaks from the mountainous Northern Hungary, and Serbs from Serbia, crossing the lower Danube. After a time, this inevitably led to their demands of large territories, which actually did happen in the dismemberment of Historic Hungary by the Trianon-Versailles (1920) and the Paris (1947) Peace Dictates. – B: 1031, 1831, T: 7103.→Border Patrol Territories; Reconquest of Buda in 1686; Budavár, Recapturing of; Resettlements in Hungary during 17-18th Centuries; Kollonich, Count Lipót; Maria Theresia, Empress and Queen; József II, King; Kollonich, Count Lipót; Thököly, Count Imre; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Neolithic (New Stone Age) in the Carpathian Basin – The Neolithic culture lasted here from about 4000 to 2400 BC, as in other parts of Europe, in contrast to southwest Asia, where it lasted from 9000 to 6000 BC. Toward the end of the Paleolithic Age, the population of the Carpathian Basin was still backward, as fishers, hunters and gatherers, in contrast with the Near Eastern agricultural way of life. This “Neolithic Revolution” gradually spread as far north as the Carpathian Basin. The Körös Culture represented the first farmers in Europe; it developed in the southeastern part of the Great Hungarian Plain, though hunting and food gathering remained important. It is known as Starčevo, or Criș Culture in the area of Southern Hungary (now partly in Serbia, partly in Romania), and it is dated from the 6th to the 4th millennium BC. Clay was the basic raw material for various household items. The pottery is coarse and footed, only rarely painted; the bone spatula (perhaps for scooping flour) was the distinctive tool item for this culture. Flint mines and obsidian for making sharp-edged tools have been discovered at Sümeg and Tata in the Transdanubian area of Hungary. Clothes started to be used, made from plant fibers. This culture seems to have covered all Central Europe, extending as far as the Rhine and the Elbe-Oder Rivers. During the late Neolithic, the Bicske-Sopot Culture extended from Bicske west of Budapest over Transdanubia (also in the Hidas and Izmény areas) as far as Sopot in Slovenia (between the Drava and Sava Rivers). – B: 1230, 1716, T: 7456.→Körös Culture.

Netherlands, Hungarians in – Contacts between the Netherlands and Hungary had started with Maria of Hungary, widow of King Lajos II (Louis) of Hungary and Bohemia (1516-1526), fallen in the Battle of Mohács against the invading Ottoman Turks in 1526. She was a sister of Habsburg Emperor Charles V. She was Regent of the Netherlands (later Belgium and Holland) between 1531 and 1555. After the Reformation, close contacts developed between the Netherlands and Transylvania, ruled by Reigning Princes, in the second half of the 16th and in the 17th centuries. They were allies in the Thirty Years' War and both were signatories to the Peace Treaty of Westphalia in 1648. Freedom of religion in the world was proclaimed for the first time in 1568 in Torda, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1673 the “Bloody Councils”, organized by Archbishop Kollonich, sentenced to galley slavery many Hungarian Protestant Ministers, who were liberated by Admiral De Ruyter of the Netherlands from the galleys in Naples, Italy, in 1675. A great number of Protestant students from Hungary visited the universities of Holland, as well as the universities of Switzerland, Scotland and Germany. In the 17th century, one of them was Miklós Misztótfalusi Kis (Amsterdam), maker of the internationally well-known Janson typefaces. In Amsterdam, he edited the “Golden Bible”. The Hungarian Bible (first edition in 1590 in Hungary) was edited for centuries in Holland, Switzerland and Scotland. The tradition for Hungarian theologians to study at Dutch universities continued from the 17th century until today. Also nowadays, many Hungarians visit Dutch schools and universities. A number of professors and lecturers at the Dutch universities were of Hungarian origin. After World War I, a great number of Hungarian medical doctors and engineers emigrated to the Dutch East Indies (now Indonesia). The survivors of the Japanese camps went to Holland after World War II. After World War I, many “children’s-trains” went to Holland from Hungary, with undernourished children, in order to make them healthy again. Numerous personal contacts developed in this way. The ‘children’s-trains’ were re-started after World War II, until the Hungarian authorities, in 1948 on Russian orders, put an end to these humanitarian contacts. In the 1920s, Hungarian miners formed the first Hungarian association in the Netherlands, the “St. Barbara Union”. It existed until the 1970s. After the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight in 1956, some 200,000 Hungarians fled their country and 5,000 of the refugees found a new home in Holland. A Hungarian revolutionary flag was handed over to Queen Juliana in Utrecht by Hungarian refugees in 1956. At the turn of the millennium, 8,000 – 10,000 people of Hungarian origin were living in the Netherlands. Hungarians are well integrated on all levels in Dutch society. Many of them, including their children, retained their contacts with their Hungarian cultural, social and ecclesiastical background. The Churches started their activities among Hungarians in the Netherlands in 1948. As to the Hungarian Roman Catholic Church: a number of priests were active in Holland until 1999. At present, there is no Hungarian priest in Holland, and a visiting Hungarian priest from Belgium conducts Holy Masses in The Hague and in Rotterdam. The Hungarian Protestant Christian (Reformed) Pastoral Service in the Netherlands is quite active among the Hungarians. Its President is Dr. Miklós I. Tóth. Pastors are: Rev. István L. Tüski (since 1951), Rev. Márta Tüski-Szabó and Rev. Dr. Márta Tüski. The Service is in co-operation with the Dutch Reformed Church (Nederlandse Hervormde Kerk), the Reformed Churches in the Netherlands (Gereformeerde Kerken in Nederland), and with the Reformed Church of Hungary. The Pastoral Service is the owner of the Hungarian Community Center in Vianen (Nearby Utrecht), where the Protestant Church activities are concentrated. The center also serves the activities of other organizations. Church services are at Vianen, at the Kloosterkerk in The Hague and in Maastricht. There was already a Hungarian Club in Amsterdam in 1929. It is one of the oldest Hungarian organizations in Europe outside the Carpathian Basin. The Mikes Kelemen Kör (Kelemen Mikes Circle), an Association for Hungarian Art and Literature in the Netherlands, was founded in 1951 by Hungarian students at Dutch universities. It organizes conferences on scientific or literary subjects followed by a discussion – on a monthly basis at the Vianen Center. They are involved in publishing books as well. The “Days of Study” (seminars) started in 1959. Since that year they have been held in September of each year, with well-known scientists, philosophers, authors, poets, painters, composers and actors from different countries and from different continents. The Mikes' Literary Award is granted by the Association to an active Hungarian author anywhere in the world. The “Pax Romana” of Holland started its activities in the Netherlands in 1951. It organizes meetings in the spring and in the autumn. Hungarian Clubs are active in Alkmaar, in Limburg, in Utrecht and there are Hungarian Scouts, Folk-Dancers and other associations. It is important to note that the ‘Historical Calvinism Movement’ of Abaham Kuyper exercised a strong influence upon the Reformed Church in Hungary in the second quarter of 20th century, via Hungarian theologians educated in Holland, such as Jenő (Eugene) Sebestyén, Sándor (Alexander) Csekey, etc. – B&T: 1131, 7103.→ Lajos II, King; Maria, Queen (2); Mohács, Battle of; Kollonich, Count Lipót; Tóth I. Neuber, Ede (Edward) (Munkács, now Mukacheve, Carpatho-Ukraine, 3 February 1882 - Mittelberg, Austria, 3 February 1946) – Physician, dermatologist. He acquired his Medical Degree from the Medical School of the University of Budapest in 1905. From 1907 he worked at the Clinic of Dermatology. From 1908 to 1911 he was on a European study trip that included Berlin, Paris, Madrid and Rome. In 1915 he became an honorary lecturer in the pathology of Sexual Diseases and Pathology of Tissues. From 1921 he was Professor of Skin and Sexual Diseases. From 1921 to 1932 he was Rector of the University of Budapest, and from 1938 to 1944 he was Professor of Dermatology. His research includes: fungal diseases of the skin, and diseases of the larynx. His work includes: Studies in Rhinoscleroma (Vizsgálatok a rhinoscleromáról) with M. Goldzieher (1909), The Practical Value of Wassermann’s Syphilis-reaction (A Wassermann-féle syphilisreactio értéke a gyakorlatban) with J. Guszmán (1909); Über spezifische Diagnostik und Therapie einiger infektiöser Haut-und Geschlechtskrankheiten (Deutsche Med. Wochenschrift, 1941). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1938, ordinary 1943) and was awarded the Corvin Wreath in 1941. – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7103.→Neuber, Ernő.

Neuber, Ernő (Ernest) (Szonok, 4 June 1886 - Budapest, 6 December 1947) – Physician, surgeon. He was the brother of Ede Neuber. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical School of the University of Budapest in 1909. From 1912 he was a trainee at the Surgical Clinic. From 1914 he worked at the No. 3 Clinic of Surgery, and from 1916, was assistant professor at the University of Budapest. During World War I, he was a medical officer for the army, at the hospital in Margaret Island, Budapest, and in Belgrade, Serbia. From 1921 he worked at the No 1. Surgical Clinic. From 1917 he was Professor of Surgery at the University of Pécs, and Dean of its Medical School in 1937 and 1938. After World War II, he returned to Pécs and resumed his former professorship. He performed the first nailing operation of a femur-fracture in Hungary in 1932, and both heart and lung surgery in 1939. He was President of the Physicians’ Chamber of Pécs, and that of the Medical Department of the University of Pécs. Among his works are: Die Gitterfasern des Herzens (Pathologischen Anatomie...1912), A Case of Aneurysm in the Abdominal Cavity (Medencebeli aneurysma esete) (1923), Newer Handling-methods of Femur-Fracture (A combnyaktörés újabb kezelési módjai) (1927). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7103.→Neuber, Ede.

Neugebauer, László (Ladislav) (Aszódi) (Pest, 22 February 1845 - Budapest, 4 December 1919) – Translator of literary works. His father, a silk merchant, moved to Hungary from Moravia. László Neugebauer's secondary education was completed at the Piarist and Lutheran High Schools of Pest, and in a High School in Vienna. In 1870 he became a clerk in the Austro-Hungarian Bank. Early in his career he became occupied with fiction writing. Already in 1865, his first translation into German appeared in the paper, Pester Nachrichten, where he published a short story by Mór (Maurice) Jókai. He translated Sándor Petőfi's poems into German, and soon he was elected a member of the Petőfi Society (in 1881), as well as the Kisfaludy Society (in 1882). He was active in the Art-lovers' Circle (Műbarátok Köre). From 1892 to 1894 he was President of the Hungarian Association of Vienna. He was a correspondent for a number of German papers, such as the Frankfurter Zeitung; his articles also appeared in the Metropolitan Paper (Fővárosi Lapok) and in the Hungarian Intellectual Life (Magyar Szellemi Élet) of Budapest. His translations into German include Franz Deák. Eine Characterskizze von Franz Pulszky (1876); Gedichte von Petőfi (1878); Joseph Kiss, Gedichte (1887); Ungarische Dorfgeschichten von Koloman Mikszáth (1890), and also poems of János (John) Arany, Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty, Pál (Paul) Gyulai and Kálmán (Coloman) Tóth in German translations, and plays by Gergely (Gregory) Csiky, like Proletarians (Proletárok) (1880) and Sham Penury (Cifra nyomorúság) (1881). He was awarded the Gold Crown Cross of Distinction, and the Turkish Grand Cross of the Medsidje Order. In 1892, the King gave him Hungarian nobility, with the title of Aszódi. His translation of Petőfi's poems contributed to the great poet's worldwide recognition. – B: 0907, 1160, T: 7456. → Petőfi, Sándor; Jókai, Mór; Pulszky, Ferenc; Mikszáth, Kálmán; Arany, János; Vörösmarty, Mihály; Gyulai, Pál; Csiky, Gergely.

Neumann, John von (János) (Budapest, 28 December 1903 - Washington D.C., USA, 8 February 1957) – His father, Max Neumann, was a banker. He learned languages from German and French governesses. Although the family was Jewish, the household practiced both Jewish and Christian traditions. As a child, he had an incredible memory, was able to memorize columns of names in the phone book. He did his secondary studies at the Lutheran High School, Budapest (1911-1921). The school had a strong academic tradition. His mathematics teacher quickly recognized von Neumann's talent, and special tuition was arranged for him. The school had another outstanding mathematician, one year ahead of von Neumann, namely Eugene Wigner. World War I had little effect on von Neumann's education but, after the war ended, Béla Kun controlled Hungary for 133 days in 1919 with Communist Government and, as a result, the von Neumann family fled to Austria, as the affluent members of society came under attack. However, after a month, they returned. After matriculation, he was admitted to the University of Budapest to study Chemistry but he went to Berlin to study the same subject at the Polytechnic of Berlin until 1923, when he moved to Zürich to continue his studies at the Technische Hochschule, where he received a Degree in Chemical Engineering in 1926, and obtained a Ph.D. in Chemistry. At the same time, he also studied mathematics and was awarded a Ph.D. on the subject of Set Theory from the Polytechnic of Budapest – despite not attending any courses there. He lectured in Berlin from 1926 to 1929, and in Hamburg from 1929 to 1930. However, he also held a Rockefeller Fellowship to enable him to undertake post-doctoral studies at the University of Göttingen, where he studied under Hilbert from 1926 to 1927. By this time, he had become a celebrity in mathematical circles. His interest in chemistry diminished and he became more and more involved in mathematics and theoretical physics. Von Neumann was invited to Princeton University to lecture on Quantum Theory, and in 1930 he became a visiting lecturer there and was later appointed full time Professor (1931-1933). After the founding of Princeton's Institute for Advanced Studies in 1933, he was appointed Professor of the Institute, a position he kept until his death. In 1933, von Neumann became Co-Editor of the Annals of Mathematics and, two years later, became Co-Editor for Compositio Mathematica. His text, Mathematische Grundlagen der Quantenmechanik (Mathematical Foundations of Quantum Mechanics) (1932), built a solid basis for the new quantum mechanics. Later in the 1930s and the early 1940s, he laid the foundations for the study of von Neumann Algebras in a series of papers. In game theory von Neumann proved the Minimax Theorem and, with co-author Oskar Morgenstern, he wrote the classic text: Theory of Games and Economic Behaviour (1944). Von Neumann was one of the pioneers of computer science, making significant contributions to the development of logical design. He advanced the theory of cellular automata, advocated the adoption of the bit as a measurement of computer memory, and solved problems in obtaining reliable answers from unreliable computer components. During and after World War II, von Neumann served as a consultant to the armed forces. He proposed an implosion method for bringing nuclear fuel to explosion. He was a consultant to the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory from 1943 to 1955. From 1950 to 1955 he was a member of the Armed Forces Special Weapons Project in Washington, D.C. In 1955 President Eisenhower appointed him to the Atomic Energy Commission. He was elected member of many Academies, including the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and member of many societies, e.g. the American Philosophical Society. A number of honors were bestowed on von Neumann. He received the Böcher Prize in 1937, two Presidential Awards: the Medal for Merit in 1947, and the Medal for Freedom in 1956. Also in 1956, he received the Albert Einstein Commemorative Award and the Enrico Fermi Award. He is regarded as one of the greatest scientific minds of the first half of the 20th century. – B: 0883, 1031, 1713, T: 1713, 7103. → Szilárd, Leó, Polányi, Michael; Wigner, Eugen Paul; Teller, Ede.

New Buda, Iowa, USA – A small settlement in South Iowa, Decatur County, along the River Thompson, in the vicinity of Davis City. New Buda was founded by László (Ladislav) Újházy in 1850, with a few other members of the Kossuth emigration. Újházy was a government commissioner for Komárom, formerly a chief officer of Sáros County of Hungary. On the advice of United States President Taylor, they settled in Iowa State on its virgin lands, obtained as land grants for a nominal price of $1.25 per acre. Újházy envisioned a community with a public life of free American citizens, patterned on the social and family life of the Hungarian landowners. In 1852, New Buda became the first postal station in the County and the Government appointed Újházy as postmaster. Following the death of his wife, Újházy settled in Texas. After his departure, the settlement prospered for a while, new people arrived, while some left. The number of settlers was never more than 75. Among its settlers, we find Ernő (Ernest) Drahos, a lawyer; Ignác (Ignatius) Hainer, who was offered the Chair of Modern Languages at the University of Missouri; the poet Frigyes (Frederick) Kerényi, a friend of Mihály (Michael) Tompa and Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi (in Hungary); Baron László (Ladislav) Madarász, a member of the Government during the War of Independence; József (Joseph) Majthányi, former Chief Officer of County Somogy; József (Joseph) Németh, a Captain of the Hussars, later Colonel in the American Civil War (1861-1865); György (George) Pomutz, a Captain in the Hungarian War of Independence, a Brigadier-General in the American Civil War, later Chief Consul in St. Petersburg, Russia; Ferenc (Francis) Varga, formerly Chief Administrator of County Torontál in Hungary, President of the Court of Justice of Szeged during the War of Independence, who became a leading personality of Iowa political life, and lived in the nearby settlement of Új Arad; and János (John) Xantus, a zoologist, in whose correspondence many interesting facts are found about life in the settlement. While Újházy with his family (wife, three sons and two daughters) and American hired workers started farming on 10,000 acres, György Pomutz acquired 800 acres, Lajos (Louis) Farkas, a former Hussar Colonel, farmed alone on 400 acres. The majority of the settlers were not just farmers, but also statesmen and scholars, who carried out correspondence with the elite of American public life. Other settlers of the area respected them for their culture, but wondered at their methods of farming. The Hungarian settlers slowly moved to other areas. The Civil War inflicted much devastation on their estates. In the neighborhood, German settlers, who arrived later, established the flourishing settlement of Davis City. Most of the Hungarian settlers stayed for 20-50 years, replaced their log houses with typical farmhouses, and became successful farmers. They died there; and their tombstones – made of basalt or marble – remained in the cemetery adjacent to the former settlement. When Decatur County was divided into townships, the territory, where the settlement was situated, received the new name: New Buda Township. – B: 0880, 1020, T: 7680.

Newman, Paul Leonard (Shaker Heights, Ohio, USA, 26 January 1925 - Westport, Connecticut, USA, 26 September 2008) – Film actor. His mother was the Hungarian Teri Fetzler of Makó, his father a Jew from Poland and Hungary, and they ran a sporting-goods shop. At the age of seven, Paul appeared in a school play as Robin Hood. He joined the Navy and served in the South-Pacific in World War II; thereafter he studied Literature and Acting at Kenyon College in Ohio. It was there that he decided on an acting career. In 1949 he joined some summer companies, and developed his profession. After the death of his father, he had to run the family business. Nonetheless, he enrolled in Yale University's graduate acting program, but he left it for Broadway. After a successful beginning in 1954, he went to Hollywood and was in contract with Warner Bros., but also worked for 20th Century Fox. His first feature film was The Silver Chalice in 1954, which was followed by some 60 successful feature films including Somebody Up There Likes Me (1956); Cat On a Hot Tin Roof (1958); The Long Hot Summer (1958); The Hustler (1961); Sweet Bird of Youth (1962); The Outrage (1964); Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (1969); Pocket Money (1972); The Towering Inferno (1974); When Time Runs out... (1980); The Color of Money (1986); Message in a Bottle (1999), and The Road to Perdition (2001). He worked with such partners as his wife, Joanne Woodward, Elizabeth Taylor, Elke Sommer, Angela Lansbury, Jackie Gleason and Orson Welles. He was awarded two Oscar Prizes. He had his own companies, such as the La Jodell Production Co., the Newman-Forman Film Co., the First Artist Production, with co-owners, and the Salad King food-producing factories. Besides all these he was involved in motor-sports. He is one of the film legends. – B: 1037, 1719, T: 7103.

Newsletter of the Hungarian Exiles (Magyar Száműzöttek Lapja, New York, NY, USA) – The first published Hungarian language newspaper in America. The founder and editor of the paper was Károly (Charles) Kornis. Its first edition appeared on 15 October 1853 in New York, it produced only six issues, and ceased to exist in December of the same year. Its first issue resurfaced in 1942 in Baron Zsigmond Perényi's (President of the World Federation of Hungarians – Magyarok Világszövetsége) castle of Nagyszöllös (now Vinohradiv, Carpatho-Ukraine). Another known copy can be seen in New York City Library's Feleky collection. Those six publications contained the following: (1) A welcome by the Editor, a request for Newsletter prepayment, and a promise that the Newsletter would deal with the affairs of Hungary. Also, it would deal with the relevant Koszta-Ingraham Affair, and would inform about the Hungarian Caregivers' Union, established the previous year in New York. (2) Front page news: "Regarding Europe's present political situation"; International Newsletter; "Literary Interests", partly dealing with an outcast's diary; the Prayer of Damjanich; the Battle at Arad (then in Hungary, now in Romania since 1920). (3) He wrote on a sad note regarding support of the paper. The female martyrs of the Freedom Fight of 1848 were remembered. (4) Two pages were printed containing Kossuth's Proclamation to support and participate in the Crimean War. (5) He gave a briefing of the 20 November meeting of the emigrés. He mentions M. Tompa's poem, entitled To the Stork (A gólyához). (6) Kornis predicted that the Newsletter would cease to exist due to lack of supporters. The newsletter had 118 subscribers and after its termination, Hungarian-Americans had no indigenous newspaper for 25 years. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7666. → Kossuth, Lajos; Koszta Affair.

Newspaper Journalism, Beginning of – Mercurius Hungaricus (Magyar Merkúr), the first Hungarian newspaper was issued in 1705 by Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1676-1735). It was written in Latin to provide information to foreign leaders. Its news reported the authentic version of the events of war to counterbalance the untrue reports of the war-events by the Wienerisches Diarium. The idea of the newspaper came from General Count Antal Esterházy. The paper was edited by Pál (Paul) Ráday, the secretary of Rákóczi, and was printed in the Brewer Press in Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia). The Editorial work was done in the Rákóczi secretariat (1705-1708) and the Bercsényi secretariat in 1710. It only appeared seven times in printed form. From 23 August 1705, the paper appeared under the name: Mercurius Veridicus. Only 13 issues are extant in printed and manuscript forms. In 1721, Mátyás (Matthew) Bél established a Latin language newspaper in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) under the title: Nova Posoniensia. Its aim was primarily educational. Bél had to abandon the publication of the paper in 1722 under pressure. The German language Pressburger Zeitung was started in 1764 by Károly (Charles) Gottlieb Windisch and ceased in 1929. – B: 1031, 1715, T: 7103. → Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Esterházy, Count Antal; Bél, Mátyás.

New Trends in the Research of Hungarian Ancient History – The Second Conference on Hungarian Ancient History took place between August 16 and 20, 2008 in Budapest. It was organized by the World Federation of Hungarians, whose Presidium chose as a motto the words: Turning Point. It was divided into four sections: (1) Archeology, History and Written Sources, (2) Language, Literature and Culture, (3) World of Beliefs and Mythology, and (4) Genetics and Anthropology. Altogether, there were 120 lectures. Apart from Hungarian lecturers, researchers from Italy, Kazakhstan, Mongolia, Germany, Russia and Turkey gave accounts of their most recent findings.

The section on Genetics, led by Dr. Judit Béres, aroused the greatest interest. The new research into genetics reinforced the results of research into history, archeology, anthropology and linguistics, by proving that genetic markers of Hungarians show an insignificant resemblance to those of the Finns and, indeed, to those of other peoples, with whom they are compared. The Hungarians show 90% European genetic markers. (Cavalli Sforza, Paolo Menozzi and Alberto Piazza: The History and Geography of Human Genes, 1994). The Asian genes are still quite numerous, approximately 10%, and there is a similarity to some Slavic peoples such as the Ukrainian, Polish and Croatian genetic markers. This is not a result of the repeated settlements but stems from the fact that the ancestors of these peoples had connections in the past with peoples related to the ancestors of the Hungarians. For instance, the ancestors of the Poles were also Scythians and Sarmatians and the Croats mingled with the Avars.

The Conference on Ancient Hungarian History was enhanced by the publication of the Magyarságtudományi Tanulmányok and its English version Selected Studies in Hungarian History, two books, which were edited by László (Ladislav) Botos and published with the help of many supporters, including the World Federation of Hungarians. At the same time, appeared Volume I of the Hungarian World Encyclopedia, edited by Dr. Joseph (József) Pungur. All three books were widely acclaimed. Another encouraging result of the Ancient History Conference was that many young people took part as lecturers and as audience. This gives us hope that the younger generation will follow in the footsteps of such great researchers as Sándor (Alexander) Kőrösi Csoma, Bálint (Valentin) Gábor (Gabriel) Szentkatolnai and archeologist Gyula (Julius) László. Many of these young people consider the Finno-Ugric hypothesis to be outdated and untenable.

In its place, these young researchers, together with members of the Institute for Hungarian Studies (Magyarságtudományi Intézet), founded by László Botos, are convinced of the Scythian – Hun – Avar – Magyar continuity in the Carpathian Basin and are also convinced of the antiquity of the Hungarian language, tied to the Székely Magyar Runic Script, which stands alone in its logic and clarity. – B: 1920, T: 7690.→Avars; Scythians; Huns; Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor; Szentkatolnai, Bálint Gábor; László, Gyula; Forrai, Sándor; Hungarian Runic Script; Runic Writing Research.

New Zealand, Hungarians in – Until 1948 the number of emigrant Hungarians who received citizenship was 151, according to the New Zealand Ministry of the Interior's official record. These came mainly from the huge territories detached from Hungary and ceded to newly created neighboring countries ("successor states") by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty of 1920. From the annexed territories many Hungarians emigrated to western countries due to oppression, discrimination and persecution by the authorities of the successor states. After World War II, Hungarians came mainly from the newly "mutilated" Hungary by the Paris Peace Treaty in 1947, partly from sections of Hungary temporarily returned to the mother country by the two Vienna Awards of 1938 and 1940. A total of 1,117 refugees arrived in New Zealand between 1956 and 1959. Approximately 55-60% of the latest influx of Hungarians arrived after the defeated 1956

Revolution and Freedom Fight. Around 300 Hungarians arrived between the early 1960s and 1970s, some as refugees fleeing from Communism. New refugees arrived before and after the collapse of the Communist system in Hungary in the late 1980s and early 1990s. After that time, an irregular stream of migrants emigrated from Hungary to settle in New Zealand. According to an educated estimate, approximately 2,500 Hungarians lived scattered all-over New Zealand's islands, and some 100 in the Pacific islands at the beginning of the new millennium.

Hungarians have their own organizations. There is an Australian and New Zealand Hungarian Association (Ausztráliai és Újzélandi Magyar Szövetség – AZUMSZ) and there is a Hungarian Association of New Zealand, based in Auckland. There are Hungarian Clubs in Auckland and Christchurch, and a Hungarian Society in Wellington.

Their bulletin is the Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó), which, since 1991, has served the interests of Hungarians by publishing matters of interest and importance to them and by documenting the life of the Hungarian community in New Zealand. It is published in every third month. There is a Consulate-General of the Republic of Hungary in Wellington, and a Consulate in Auckland.

In 2003, Hungarian Cultural Groups existed in Auckland, Wellington, Christchurch and Dunedin. Community activities continue to be popular. They include receiving overseas visitors and celebrating Hungary's National Day. Special radio programs broadcast on Access Radio and Planet FM. There are Hungarian language classes.

In 2003, the Magyar Millennium Park was opened in Wellington. The park features plants typically found in Hungary. A decorative wooden gate, the Szekler Gate (Székely kapu), carved in Transylvania, stands at the Park's entrance. A carved wooden marker (kopjafa) symbolizes freedom.

Hungarians from time to time tried to establish themselves in New Zealand literature. Examples include Bruce Mason's play Birds in the Wilderness (1958), and Alan Duff's novel Liberated (Szabad) (2001), which is set in 1950s Budapest during the Revolution. In Janet Frame's novel, Living in the Maniototo (1979), one of the characters is a former Hungarian refugee. Immediately after their arrival, Hungarian refugees tended to marry other Hungarians, but by as early as 1959, many were marrying non-Hungarians. This contributed to their rapid integration. Retention of the original language and culture has proved difficult in mixed New Zealander–Hungarian households and this has contributed to their integration. – B: 1220, 1751, T: 7684, 7103.→Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Ney, Tibor (Budapest, 20 April 1906 - Budapest, 6 February 1981) – Violinist, educator. His advanced music education was at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music of Budapest, under the direction of József (Joseph) Bloch and Jenő (Eugen) Hubay. His career began in the Orchestra of the Opera House, Budapest, and he continued as Concertmaster of the Hungarian Radio Orchestra. Between 1948 and 1961 he played in the Hungarian String Trio (Magyar Vonóstrió) and, with it, they presented a number of Hungarian and French chamber works. Between 1960 and 1974 he taught at the Academy of Music, partly violin, partly orchestral playing. He published a Paganini Album, as well as the Violin Concertos of Tartini and Nardini. He presented Rezső Kókai's Violin-Concerto with the Radio Orchestra in 1953. He received the title of Merited Artist in 1967. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7103.→Hubay, Jenő.

Nibelungs' Song – A medieval German epic, the Nibelungenlied. German literary experts have analyzed the songs solely on the merits of ancient tradition. From an ancient viewpoint, Bálint Hóman, in his essay of 1923, had already analyzed the historical references in the second song. In the 1930s, Gyula Németh pointed out its historical origins. The Siegfried story in the song can be traced back to the 13th century. The Edda songs reached the Rhine region via Norway and Denmark. The second song, the story of Etzel (Attila) and Krimhilde reached the Rhine river region via Austria, where one or several poets combined the two stories in the 13th century. The second song originated one or two centuries earlier than the first. In all probability, a Hungarian chronicle concurrently with the so-called Attila sword legend, reached the hands of Austrian poets at the time of the reign of Hungarian King Salamon (1063-1074). According to German sources (Schröfl, etc.), the person of Attila was fashioned after the Hungarian ruler Géza-István (971-997). The second song was presumably based on Hungarian traditions. – B: 1031, 1557, T: 7617.→Hóman, Bálint; Németh, Gyula; Attila; Attila, Sword of.

Nicolsburg, Anonymus of (16th century) – Writer of songs, the unknown author of a 1586 epic poem, originating in the Castle of Nicolsburg in Moravia. The title of the work is: The Very Beautiful Story of Pál Kenézy and István Báthory Fighting the Turks on the Field of Kenyérmező. The work reflects patriotic feelings nourished by an idealistic contemplation of the past. Nicolsburg is in Moravia, Czech Republic. – B: 1126, 1257, T: 7617.

Nicolsburg Peace Treaty (Nicolsburg is in Moravia, Czech Republic) – It was made and signed by Transylvanian Prince Gábor Bethlen (1613-1629) and King Ferdinand II (1619-1637), on 31 December 1621. It was confirmed in January 1622 in Nicolsburg. In accordance with the treaty, Bethlen declined to be the Hungarian King, although he was elected King of Hungary in August 1620, at the Diet of Besztercebánya (now Banská Bystrica, Slovakia). As well, the Prince would return the Holy Crown. For it he received Oppeln and Ratibor in Silesia and seven Hungarian Counties for his lifetime: Szatmár, Szabolcs, Bereg, Ugocsa, Zemplén, Abaúj and Borsod. Ferdinand II was obliged to help the Hungarian Prince with 50,000 Forints to repair the fortresses in these counties. – B: 191, T: 7103.→Bethlen, Prince Gábor.

Nicolsburg, Runic Alphabet of – This alphabet was noticed at the auction of Prince Dietrichstein's family library at Nicolsburg (in Moravia, Czech Republic). The brief writing was on the first verso page of an incunabulum as a cover filling. After separating it from the incunabulum it was sent to Budapest to the collection of the Széchényi Library. On the top part of the sheet, written in thick, red and broken ended codex-style handwriting, the alphabet's title reads: Littere Siculorum Quas/Culpu(n)t Vel Cidum in Lignis – that is, the letters of the Szeklers, which they cut or chiseled into wood: the Szekler runic writing. Following this in third/half lines, from right to left, 46, 10/12 cm high Szekler runic symbols were etched, or rather drawn in combined (concentrated) runes. Over each of them, in smaller Latin letters, the sound value is noted. This alphabet is an important Hungarian runic relic. – B: 1079, 1717, T: 7669.→ Hungarian Runic Script; Runic Writing Research; Forrai, Sándor; Sebestyén, Gyula (2); Linear Writing; New Trends in the Research of Hungarian Ancient History; Szeklers.

Niczky Family (Niczky-család) – The Niczky family is one of the oldest families in Hungary. It is a noble family, some of whose members received the title of Count. It originated from the Ják family clan and its family tree can be traced back to the then living Eber Comes. The family extended into Transdanubia, and until 1221, this is proven in official documents. One of the members of this clan, János (John), started to use the Niczky name at the end of the 14th century, which later became a family name. The founding member of the family, Kristóf (Christopher), won the title of Count in 1765. Within twenty years, he became a national judge. His most important accomplishment was the annexation of the Temes area (Temesi bánság) to the homeland on 6 June 1778. It was then that the Counties of Krassó, Temes and Torontál began to form the re-annexed territories. – B: 1078, 0942, T: 7676.

Niedermann, Gyula (Julius) (Esztergom, 22 December 1839 - Budapest, 24 January 1910) – Physician, neurologist, psychiatrist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Pest in 1862. He was Director of the Mental Hospital of Lipótmező, Budapest. His numerous medical works include Lunatic Asylum (Tébolyda) (1868); Medical Statistics (Orvosi statisztika) with K. Tormay (1869), and Protection against Tuberculosis (Védekezés a tüdővész ellen) with K. Ghyzer (1897). – T: 1730, 1160, T: 7103.

Nikisch, Arthur (Nikitsch) (Szentmiklós, now Chynadiyev, Carpatho-Ukraine, 12 October 1855 - Leipzig, Germany, 23 January 1922) – Conductor. He was already studying music at the age of six. Between 1866 and 1873 he was a student at the Vienna Conservatory, Austria, where he obtained his diploma in 1874. Already during his student years, he received awards for playing violin, piano and also for conducting. He played under Ferenc (Franz) Liszt, Richard Wagner and Giuseppe Verdi. In 1878 he went to Leipzig as a conductor. He then traveled to America; thereafter, between 1893 and 1895, he was a leading conductor and Director of the Opera House of Budapest. Following that, he was again in Leipzig; he toured Berlin, Hamburg, London and St Petersburg regularly. Between 1904 and 1914 he was leader of the London Symphony Orchestra. He was a committed conductor of romantic opera and orchestral music. He won over his listeners around the world with his great interpretational imagination and aplomb, with the unparalleled uniformity of his orchestra and its mesmerizing colorfulness. As one of the most admired conductor-artists of his time, he further increased his reputation with new victories in his old age. – B: 1197, 0883, 1445, T: 7684. → Metzenauer, Margarete; Nyíregyházi, Ervin; Liszt, Ferenc.

Nimrod (Menrot, Nimród, Nemrod, Ménrót) – Biblical hunter; these version of his name occur in the Hungarian chronicles and ancient legends. In the Bible he was a giant and skilful hunter, who acquired power in Babylon. According to later legends, Nimrod built the tower of Babel, besieged the heavens, and persecuted the godly Abraham. In medieval chronicles, Nimrod founded Scythia. In the Hungarian chronicle literature, Simon Kézai's chronicle (Gesta Hungarorum, 1282 AD) mentions a giant Menroth, so do also the Zsámbok Codex, the Thuróczy Chronicle and the Turkish Tarhi-i Üngürüşz. St. Sigilbert, Bishop of Antioch, in his chronicle, also mentions Nimrod, who begot Magor and Hunor from his wife Enéh. Similarly, the Hungarian chronicles state that the sons of the great hunter, Hunor and Magor (Magyar), were the ancestors of the Hun and Hungarian (Magyar) people. – B: 0942, 1160, T: 7456. → Kézai Chronicle; Kézai, Simon; Gesta Hungarorum; Tarih-i Üngürüşz; Codex Literature.

Nirschy, Emilia (Budapest, 26 May 1889 - Grasse, France, 6 October 1976) – Ballet-dancer, educator. She learned dancing from her mother and, later studied with Miklós (Nicholas) Guerra. From 1901 she was a member of the Opera House, Budapest, and soon became its prima ballerina. She moved to Berlin in 1920 where, during a performance, she suffered an accident, which was fateful to her career. After her return to Budapest, she opened a ballet school, which operated until 1928. In 1937 she left Hungary with her second husband, who was a French diplomat and, until 1954, they lived in a number of countries. She settled in France in 1955. She was an outstanding ballet-dancer at the beginning of the 20th century, who became well known abroad as well. She wrote the first Hungarian ballet book entitled The Artistic Dance (A művészi tánc) (1918). She danced the Princess in the world première of Bartók's Wooden Prince (A Fából faragott királyfi), in Budapest, in 1917. Her other major roles included Swanhilda in Delibes' Coppelia, title role in Delibes' Sylvia, and Young Girl in Fokin and O. Zöbisch's Soul of the Rose (A rózsaelke). In her honor, a room was named after her in the State Ballet Institute in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7103.

Nobel Prizes – Alfred Nobel (1833-1896), a Swedish engineer and inventor, bequeathed approximately 50 million Crowns and his estate to form a foundation. The interest accrued was to be divided into five portions to be awarded annually to those prominent individuals whose work was considered to be most beneficial for mankind in that year. The subjects specified in his Will are: (1) Physics, (2) Chemistry, (3) Medical science or biology, (4) Literature, and (5) Peace for Mankind. According to Alfred Nobel's stipulation, the Physics and Chemistry Prizes must be awarded by the Swedish Academy of Sciences, the Medical Prize by the Karolinska Institute of Stockholm, the Literature prize by the Academy of Arts, also of Stockholm and, finally, the Peace Prize has to be bestowed by a five-member jury, selected by the Norwegian Parliament (Stortinget). There was a special condition, expressed by Nobel, that the awarding must honor those persons, who were most deserving, without any regard to their nationality. Twelve Hungarian scientists and eight Hungarian related persons received Nobel Prizes until 2006: Philip (Fülöp) E.A. Lénárd, Physics, 1905; Robert Bárány, Medical Science, 1914; Richárd A. Zsigmondy, Chemistry 1925; Albert Szent-Györgyi von Nagyrápolt, Medical Science, 1937; George (György) de Hevesy, Chemistry, 1943; George (György) von Békésy, Medical Science, 1961; Eugen (Jenő) P. Wigner, Physics, 1963; Dennis (Dénes) Gábor, Physics, 1971; John (János) C. Polányi, Chemistry; 1986; George (György) Oláh, Chemistry, 1994; John (János) C. Nobility – In Hungary the idea of peerage was based on “the older, the better” bloodline that even reached back to the service people and border guards of the Árpád era. In the early Middle Ages, it was fashionable to occupy religious positions, or be defenders of religious offices (praedialist). From the 13th century, the members of the lay governing class made up the lesser nobility. Until the 15th century, land was the most important criteria of nobility, which was either received as a royal gift or inherited through the rights of inheritance of a son, by adopting a male child, or adopting one's illegitimate children. Until the establishment of the regular army in 1715, the nobility was the most important contributing element in case of war. Ennoblement without land became possible only from the 16th century on. The Tripartitum (the book of Hungarian laws from 1514) registered their privileges, although, by the 18th century, their ranks became many-layered, depending on their financial situation and lifestyle. During the 18th and 19th centuries, they played important political roles, most prominently in the provinces. In 1848, and especially following the Compromise with Austria in 1867, the nobility lost their privileges, although the ruler granted noble status until 1919. – B: 1134, 1153, 1231, T: 3240. → Tripartitum.

Nógrády, György (George S. Nogrady) (Budapest, 2 May 1919 - Montreal, ca 10 August, 2003) – Physician, microbiologist. He pursued his medical studies at the Universities of Budapest and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and obtained his qualification in laboratory sciences in Pécs. He started his research and instructing activities in the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest, and continued them in Kolozsvár, Pécs and Montreal, PQ, Canada. After the fall of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight in Hungary, Nógrády emigrated to the West and lived in Canada from 1957. As a member of the Canadian Medical Expedition, he spent several months on Easter Island. Nógrády retired as Adjunct Professor from the Montreal Microbiology Institute in 1984. He gave more than a hundred scientific lectures all over the world. He developed a safety procedure, since adopted all over the world, for the examination of contagious laboratory samples. Nógrády's scientific activities were very many-sided, including several studies, one professional film for educational purposes, and 22 articles, which appeared in English, French, Hungarian and German. He published a book in 1974, entitled: The Microbiology of Easter Island. One of the caves in Easter Island was named Kori Cave, after the name the natives gave him. He received the Sámuel Teleki Memorial Medal in 2001. – B: 3240, T: 7660.

Nónay, Tibor (Budapest, 13 October 1899 - Budapest, 19 September 1985) – Physician, optometrist. Nónay earned his Medical Degree from Budapest University in 1923. Between the years 1923 and 1929 he worked at József (Joseph) Imre's Eye Clinic in Pécs. From 1929 until 1939, he was an assistant ophthalmologist at the State Optometric Hospital in Budapest and, from 1939, Assistant Professor at the Eye Clinic. In the 1940s, Nónay replaced József Imre, who was repeatedly ill. He ran the clinic in an exemplary manner during the most difficult times of World War II. In 1943 he earned his credentials as an honorary lecturer of eye surgery before he became Professor. From 1945 until his retirement in 1970, Nónay was the Director of No.1 Eye Clinic. He was a very experienced optometrist and surgeon, and was an excellent lecturer. He was prolific in scholarly writing as well, and produced fifty-five scientific works. From 1941 until 1945 Nónay was the Secretary of the Hungarian Optometry Society and, between 1966 and 1969, its President. Later, he became an honorary member. Between 1958 and 1962 he edited the periodical Optometry (Szemészet); earlier, from 1941 on, he had been an assistant editor for the same publication. In 1943 he wrote a book called: Optometric Surgery (Szemészeti műtét). Tibor Nónay received the Schulek Medal in 1984. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7688.

Non-Euclidean Geometry – The Theory of Geometry in which the parallel axiom (straight line) is not realized. Already Gauss surmised that such a geometrical system was possible, in which the parallel axiom was not realizable. The first published investigation in 1823 of the Non-Euclidean Geometry is the work of the Hungarian mathematician János (John) Bolyai (1802-1860). The Russian mathematician N.I. Lobachevsky obtained similar results in 1826. The study of Non-Euclidean Geometry led to an increasingly general conception of space and, through this, it led to a number of new results in modern Physics. – B: 1153, T: 7456.→Bolyai, János.

Nopcsa, Baron Ferenc (Francis) (Déva, now Deva, Romania, 3 May 1877 - Vienna, 23 April 1933) – Paleontologist, geologist and landowner of a large estate,. He completed his higher studies at the Theresianum of Vienna. His interest in paleontology began when he found the remains of a fossil lizard on his property at Szentpéterfalva (now Sânpetru in Romania). He traveled almost everywhere in Europe. In 1902 he visited Italy; in 1903 he was on the island of Crete; later he traveled in France and England, where he studied the prehistoric reptile collection of the British Museum. Also in 1903, he became interested in Albania, where he carried out systematic geological research from 1905 to 1907. In 1910 he traversed Albania several times, where, besides geological and paleontological research, he also compiled a valuable ethnographic collection, including data about songs, superstitions, folk traditions, legal customs, and a great variety of historic costumes, appliances, etc. In 1912 he became a corresponding member of the Geological Society of London. From 1925 to 1930, Baron Nopcsa was Director of the Royal Hungarian Geological Institute (Földtani Intézet), Budapest, and it was about this time that he became engaged in tectonic research, for which purpose he traversed the coastline of the Adriatic Sea and Italy. He was the initiator of research into geothermic gradients. In 1930 he retired and moved to Vienna. He was a gifted scholar with a wide intellectual horizon. He committed suicide. His most important field of research was the solution of some problems about dinosaurs. Recognized all over the world, he was an expert on prehistoric reptiles. He founded a new approach in paleontology, paleophysiology. His other field of research, occupying all his life, was the geology of Albania. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1917, ordinary 1928). His works include Dinosaurierreste aus Siebenbürgen (1899); Die Familien der Reptilien (1923); Albanien, Bauten und Trachten (1925); Geographie und Geologie Nordalbaniens (1929), and *Zur Gecshichte der Adria. North American Civil War, Hungarian Soldiers in the (1861-1865) – At the beginning of the conflict, the United States was already a multi-ethnic country. Proportionate to their total numbers, the Hungarian participation was one of the most numerous on the Union's side; they were battle-hardened from the 1848-1849 War of Independence against the Habsburgs. In the Confederate Army, under the command of General Lee, only 11 Hungarians fought, including one officer, who soon defected over to the Union to join the following list of officers: M. Adler, Colonel; Albert Anzelm, Colonel; György Arnsberg, Brigadier-General, Commander of the "Black Hunter" unit; Sándor Asbóth, Marshal, Brigade Commander, hero of the United States, who first received the title "First Marshal of the Union" and became a representative of the United States to Argentina; Zoltán Baróthy, Lieutenant-Colonel; F. Bauer, Lieutenant; N. Baumann, Second-Lieutenant; Győző Chandory, Captain; S. Csornay, Second-Lieutenant; Gy. Csermely, Major; I. Debrecenyi, Second-Lieutenant; E. Decsi, Major;

Péter Dobozy, Colonel; K. Dolezich, Second-Lieutenant; W. Esti, Second-Lieutenant; J. Farkas, Second-Lieutenant; Sándor Fekete dr., Major; János Fiala, Colonel, Chief of the Engineering Corps; Fülöp Figyelmessy, Colonel, Inspector of the Union Army, who, with 15 hussars forced the famous Confederate General Artsby's troops to flee; Kornél Fornet, Major; Sándor Gaál, Captain; András Gállfy, Major; O. Gerster, Captain, G. Grossinger, Captain, N. György, Second-Lieutenant, Géza Haraszthy, captain, F. Hauser, captain, K.Hochleitner, Captain; S. Jekkelfalussy, Captain; J. Kamper, Captain; W. Kapus, Second-Lieutenant; A. Kelemen, Second-Lieutenant; G. Keménfy, Captain; Frigyes Knefler, Brigadier-General, Hero of the Missionary Ridge engagement; Gábor Korponay, Colonel; I. Kovács Major; G. Kováts, Captain; Alajos Kozlay, Colonel; Ede Kozlay, Brigadier-General; Gy. Kunc, Major; F. Langenfield, Second-Lieutenant; H. Láng, Lieutenant; L. Lecsy, Second-Lieutenant; Mano Lullay, Major; T. Majthényi, Second-Lieutenant; Károly Mándy, Brigadier-General, the victor of the decisive battle at Petersburg; Gy. Menyhárt, Captain; Imre Mészáros, Major; Géza Mihaloczký, Colonel; A. Molier, Second-Lieutenant; József Muzsik, Colonel; József Németh, Colonel; Móric Percel, Colonel; Károly Petri, Major; Antal Pokorny, Lieutenant-Colonel; György Pomutz, Brigadier-General, Commander of his heroic regiment; E. Radics Captain; István Radics, Captain; G. Rombauer, Major; Gyula Rombauer, Lieutenant-Colonel; and Lóránd Rombauer, Captain. In all, there were: 2 marshals, 5 brigadier-generals, 16 colonels, 3 lieutenant-colonels, 14 majors, 23 captains, 14 second-lieutenants, 6 lieutenants in the Union Forces. Many of the Hungarian officers were killed in action and the predominantly Hungarian units (for example the 39th. Volunteer Infantry Regiment of New York, or the Iowa Regiments of the Perczel Brigade) suffered great losses, especially during the first and second Bull Run fighting and at the Cross-Key engagement of Sherman's offensive action. Several hundred of the Hungarian volunteer troops disappeared and were officially never accounted for. – B: 1143, 1020, T: 3233.

North American War of Independence, Hungarian Soldiers in the (1775-1783) – The conflict between England and her thirteen colonies in North America started in April of 1775 with the battle near Lexington. Soon after that, the second Continental Congress convened and ordered the formation of an army under the command of George Washington and issued the Declaration of Independence, declaring the independent statehood of all the colonies. The untrained and poorly equipped American Army suffered many defeats and was forced to abandon cities of key importance to the British. The independence movement of the colonies was openly supported by France, where many experienced soldiers congregated, forming many small groups, offering their help to the colonies in their fight for independence. In the Legion of Prince Lauzun, 140 Hungarian Hussars and two officers, János L. Polereczky and Ferenc Benyovszky, the younger brother of Count Móric (Maurice) Benyovszki, joined the North American War of Independence. The Lauzun Legion was organized in France and consisted of two infantry companies, and two companies each of Lancers and Hussars. One Hussar company was led by Captain Polereczky, who – between 1778 and 1783 – distinguished himself in many battles and was promoted to Major. He made himself especially noted with his personal bravery in 1779 at Wilmington, and in 1781 at Yorktown. The best-known Hungarian officer of the War of Independence was Mihály (Michael) Fabriczy Kováts, who reported for duty in 1777, and served in the Congressional Army. He waited a long time before being promoted to Colonel, since in the American Army the contemporary leadership – and also during the Civil War – was prejudiced against promoting foreign soldiers. The Commander of the Cavalry, Kázmér (Kazimir) Pulaski entrusted Fabriczy Kovács with the training and drill of the cavalry. In March of 1779, when the Pulaski Legion was formed, Fabriczy Kovács became second in command and leader of the cavalry contingent. First, he fought in the northern sector of New Jersey against the British and the rebellious native tribes. Later, he was transferred to South Carolina, where he distinguished himself in many battles. After that the legion was ordered to break the English siege of Charleston. In the ensuing battle on 11 May 1779, under the walls of the fort, against overwhelming forces, he was fatally wounded, – B: 1138, 1020, T: 3233.

North Pole, Austro-Hungarian Expedition – During post-Compromise times (after 1867), geographic research again started to take up the question of the North-Eastern Corridor more actively. It was during this period that the proposal of an expedition had been raised. The Austro-Hungarian Government provided the financial backing through the Navy, and also through public subscription. For Hungary, Count Jenő (Eugene) Zichy excelled with his generous support for this endeavor, by providing the 220-ton steam-sailing ship, the Admiral Tegethoff, specially built for this purpose. Karl Weiprecht, Imperial and Royal Lieutenant-Commander, was appointed as its Captain (and leader of the whole expedition); Dr Gyula (Julius) Képes was assigned as physician of the ship and the expedition. The crew was composed of the various nationalities from within the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, and the official language of the expedition was Italian, understood by all of those taking part. The expedition departed from Bremerhaven, Germany on 13 June 1872. North of the Island of Novaya Zemlya, they encountered serious ice-conditions with unexpected suddenness and, on 21st August, the ship was completely ice-locked and drifted northward. During their many long months of drifting, they carried out all their observations without interruption. On 30 March 1873, beyond the northern latitude 80°, they caught sight of mountains and realized that they discovered a new land, promptly naming it Franz Joseph Land, in honor of their ruler. However, because of the ice conditions, they could only lay true claim of it on 1 November by hoisting the Austro-Hungarian flag. During the winter of 1873-1874, they made three sled-trips to explore most of the islands and claimed discoverer's rights to assign names to the geographical places and points. The Hungarian appellations include Cape Budapest, Deák Island, Cape Fiume, Simonyi Glacier, Cape Zichy, Zichy Land, and Mount Zichy. Adverse conditions forced the expedition to abandon their ship. Using four boats and a number of sleds they set out on 20 May 1874 and, on 18 August they reached the land of Novaya Zemlya, where a Russian sailing ship took them aboard. The value of the scientific collection taken back by the expedition was priceless. Dr. Képes who, during the three arctic winters, carried out his task with unparalleled medical and scientific devotion, and assembled the collection, consisting of 112 flasks. The meteorological observations provided a great deal of information for science. The Austrian observation station on Jan Mayen Island was established, and its continued operation forms the basis of the present day study of modern meteorology. – B: 0942, 1020, 1153, T: 7456.→Képes, Gyula; Zichy, Jenő.

Northern Hungary – (It is the upper part of Historic Hungary, now the Slovak Republic) (Hungarian: Észak-Magyarország or Felvidék, i.e. Upper Hungary, German: Slowakei, now Slovensko, officially Slovenska Republika since 1 January 1993) – A mountainous country (the entire Western Carpathian area) in the heart of Europe, formerly northern part of the Kingdom of Hungary; between 1920 and 1993, part of Czechoslovakia. An area of 49,035 km<sup>2</sup>, with a population of (1998 est.) 5,387,650. Capital: Pozsony (now Bratislava, German: Pressburg), population (1931) 140,000, (1957) 246,523, (1974) 328,765.

Geography. In the area of Northern or Upper Hungary, the Carpathian Mountain Arc consists of two parallel-running belts, an outer flysch (mainly sandstone) belt made up of the Western, Northern and Eastern Beskids; and an inner crystalline belt of igneous and metamorphic rocks. Further in (toward the Carpathian Basin), there is also a series of volcanic ranges, side by side with a complex of limestone and sandstone ranges (the so-called Gemerids, including the Gömör-Szepes Ore Mtn.). Geologically, the area is unusually composite with a staggeringly complicated structure: the morphological and geological units often do not correspond with each other. The tectonic units, such as the Pienids, Tatrids, Veporids and Gemerids, are over and above these complexities.

The rivers in the west include the Vág (Vah), Nyitra (Nitra), Garam (Hron) and Ipoly (Ipel) Rivers, all flowing southward as tributaries of the Danube, whereas the Sajó, Bodrog, Hernád and Ondava Rivers, with all their tributaries, flow into the Tisza River on the Great Hungarian Plain.

The Western (Northern) Carpathians appear near the Austrian border, north of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) in the form of the Little Carpathians (Male Karpaty), a relatively low range (highest point being Zaruby, 768 m) with a crystalline core overlain by a Mesozoic mantle and belonging not to the outer belt, but to the inner one. So the complexities of the Western Carpathians begin right at the start, with the Little Carpathians. The Western Carpathians extend eastward, as far as the volcanic Vihorlat Range near Carpatho-Ukraine.

I. The outer flysch belt in fact begins with the White Carpathians (Bile Karpaty), situated northwest of the Vág River, between the Vág and the Morava Rivers, extending as far northeast as the Fehérhalom (Lysky) Pass (529 m), the highest point being Velka Javorina (968 m). This range is made up of Mesozoic and Cainozoic sedimentary strata, mainly dolomites and limestones, of which the Upper Cretaceous sequence amounts to 1100 m thickness of shales, marls and calcareous sandstones. The northeastern continuation is the Javornik (Javorniky) Range, northwest of which is the Vizovice Range, both of which are made up of Palaeocene-Eocene flysch of sandstone, shale and marl.

The Western Beskids (partly in Slovakia, partly in Poland) consist of (a) the Silesian Beskids (Beskid Slaski), (b) the Little Beskids (Beskid Maly), (c) the Slovakian (Zywieckian) Beskids with the highest point, Babia Gora, 1725 m, and (d) the Middle Beskids (Beskid Sradni), all made up mainly of flysch sandstone, shale and marl beds. (2) The Northern Beskids extend eastward as far as the Dunajec River and northward to the Raba River in Poland, including also the hilly area of the Wieliczka Foothills. Here, in Polish territory, the outer belt (the flysch belt) is widest, 80 km, and positioned directly north of the High Tatra Range. It is composed of diverse elements of flysch, of Oligocene, or Paleocene-Eocene or even Late Cretaceous age. (3) The Eastern Beskids (Vychodny Beskydy) comprise the Low Beskids and the Bieszczady Range. Only the southern part of the Low Beskids is in Slovakia, the rest of the Eastern Beskids (including the Sadeckian Beskids) is in Poland. The Sadeckian Beskids are wedged between the Dunajec and Poprad Rivers, the highest point being Radziejowa (1265 m). The Low Beskids form a huge range some 150 km long and 50 km wide, with the highest point being Bosov (1002 m), with an important north-south connecting link: the Dukla (Dukelsky) Pass, 502 m. The name "Wooded Carpathians" in Hungarian terminology refers to the western portion of the Eastern Beskids. From west to east this part of the flysch belt begins with Paleogene beds, passing eastward into an alternating mixture of flysch beds of Paleogene and Cretaceous age, finally to end in the Oligocene flysch sequences. In the south, the Slovakian portion of the Low Beskids comes right down to the inner Carpathian volcanic belt.

II. The inner crystalline belt continues from the Little Carpathians in the form of:

(1) The Little Fatra (Mala Fatra), situated between the Vág (Vah), Turóc (Turiec) and Nyitra (Nitra) Rivers. It is a complex of five ranges: (a) Inóc (Inovec) Range, (b) Terebes (Tribeč) Range, (c) Little Fatra proper (highest point Velka Luka, 1476 m), (d) Sztrázsó (Stražov) Range and (e) Zsjár (Žiar) Range. The Little Fatra is mainly composed of granitic rocks, forming the crystalline cores of the five ranges. On its outer (western) flank it is overlain by a cover of Mesozoic and Cainozoic sedimentary sequence, made up of limestone, dolomite and marl.

(2) The Great Fatra (Velka Fatra), a 50 km long and 30 km wide mountain range, bounded by the Turoc, Vag, Revuka, Nyitra and Garam (Hron) Rivers, the highest point being the peak Great Fatra (1586 m) and possessing also a crystalline core of granitic rocks, overlain by a "mantle" of folded sedimentary sequences.

Between the Little Fatra and the Great Fatra there is the 40 km long and 10 km wide Turóc Basin, with its industrial and cultural center, Turócszentmárton (Martin). It is a tectonic basin between fault planes, composed of Neogene and Quaternary sediments and Holocene alluvium. The Nyitra Basin is a sedimentary basin filled with Quaternary deposits, surrounded by volcanic ranges. The Liptó Basin (60 km long) is now used for a large dam with hydroelectric works. The Nowy Targ Basin and the Árva Basin (Oravska Kotlina) together form one continuous depression north of the High Tatra on Polish territory. The Poprád-Hernád Basin is near Igló; the bulk of the basin surface consists of flysch of Pleocene-Eocene age (not Quaternary alluvium and talus slopes, as is usually the case).

(3) The Low Tatra (Nizke Tatry) Range is 70 km long and 25 km wide, with an E-W axial ridge; the highest point is Gyömbér (Ďumbier) 2045 m. The highest regions are alpine pastures and traces of Pleistocene glaciation. The Királyhegy (Kralova Hola), 1948 m. is the most important watershed of the Carpathians, the source of five rivers. Geologically it is the greatest crystalline mass<sup>2</sup> of the Western Carpathians, with a granitic core, flanked by metamorphics on the southern side and Permian to Cretaceous sedimentary beds overlying the northern slopes and the western half of the southern slopes.

(4) Árva (Orava) Magura is situated north of the Árva River; the limestone belt of this range provides some rugged cliffs for picturesque castles, like Árvaváralja (Oravsky Podzamok) on a 111 m. high cliff. The highest point is Mincol (1396 m.), largely made up of flysch sandstones with some shale and marl horizons.

(5) Lipto Magura is composed of the Csocs Range of Triassic limestones and the Skorušina Range of flysch beds; crystalline rocks are absent.

(6) The Lipto Alps are between the Lipto Magura and the High Tatra; the highest point is Bistra (2250 m), above the forest line of extensive alpine pastures; they are made up of diverse types of granitic and metamorphic rocks, with an enormous northern sequence of Mesozoic strata, strongly folded, faulted and overthrust.

(7) The High Tatra (Vysoke Tatry) has many evidences of Pleistocene glaciation, like the small but deep lakes; the Vag River issues from here; the highest peak is the Gerlachovsky Peak, 2655 m. and the highest point in the entire Carpathian Mountains; other important peaks include Lomnic (Lomnitz), 2634 m., Jégvölgy (Eisthal, 2630 m.) and Tatra (2555 m.). It is composed of diverse rock types: the crystalline core is all granitoids and metamorphics; added to these are the Mesozoic sedimentary sequences and Paleogene and Quaternary deposits.

(8) The Lőcse (Levoča) Range is part of the Carpathian flysch belt, far removed southward, a large, 110 km<sup>2</sup> of sandstone beds of Oligocene age, delineated by fracture zones.

(9) Szepes (Spis) Magura, between the High Tatra and the Pieniny Range, is composed of flysch sandstones of Paleocene-Eocene age.

(10) The Lubló Range is a 33 km. long range of limestone cliffs and sandstone, bounded on three sides by the Poprad River.

(11) The Csergő (Čerchov) Range is composed of Paleocene-Eocene flysch deposits.

(12) The Sáros (Šariš) Range, north of Kassa (Košice), is composed of sandstone and is the southernmost member of the crystalline belt, enclosing in its center the Murány (Muránska) Plateau of Triassic limestones. This range is largely crystalline (schists, gneisses, migmatites and granitoid rocks of Variscan origin), with a Paleozoic mantle.

(13) The Branyiszko (Branisko) Range, west of Eperjes (Prešov), contains a crystalline core of metamorphic rocks, overlain by gently folded Triassic limestone beds.

(14) The Gömör-Szepes Ore Mountain (Spišské-Gemerske Rudohorie) is a massive range of 70 km. in length in a west-east direction, stretching from Dobsina to Kassa. In the south it joins onto the Gömör-Torna Karst (Slovakian Karst with the famous Aggtelek Caves, second longest in Europe); the highest point is Kakashegy (1480 m.). Near its western end is the famous Ice Cave of Dobsina (463 m. above sea level.). The Ore Mountain is composed of metamorphic rocks, with Paleozoic to Mesozoic sedimentary deposits on their northern and southern slopes. Important (though declining) iron-ore mines are at Ötösbánya (Koterbachy/Rudnany) and Alsósajó (Nizná Slaná); there are also a number of formerly working mines. Copper-ore mining used to take place at Gölncibánya (Gelnica), Szomolnok (Smolnik/Schmölnitz), Úrvölgy (Herrengrund/Spania Dolina) and at Igló (Spišska Nová Ves).

(15) The Cserna Range (Čierna Hora), northwest of Kassa, has a crystalline core with a superimposed Mesozoic cover. (16) The Homonna Range (Humenské Pohorie) is situated directly northwest of the volcanic Vihorlát Range, about 40 km. northeast of Kassa; it is composed entirely of a Mesozoic sedimentary sequence, rich in fossils.

History. The area of present-day Slovakia, formerly Northern or Upper Hungary, prior to the migration period, was settled first by Celtic, then by Germanic tribes, the Markomans and Quads. They were followed by the Huns, who entered the Carpathian Basin about 375 AD, defeated the Ostrogoths, and formed an empire which lasted until the death of their great king, Attila, in 453. Then, in the first half of the 6th century, the Longobards moved into the Western Carpathian region, and the Gepids into the northeast; but, in 568, they were pushed further south by the Avars, a Turkic people who, from 600 until 803, formed the Avar Khanate in Central and Eastern Europe. Concurrently with the Avar rule, some Slavic tribes began moving into the area. After Charlemagne defeated the Avars, the Slovak area became part of the Frankish Empire in the early part of the 9th century. However, later on in the century, the Slovak tribes living in the western part of present-time Slovakia combined with the eastern Moravians, another Slavic tribe, and established the Kingdom of Great Moravia (the Moravian Empire), extending eastward as far as the Garam (Hron) River, which incorporated part of Transdanubia, Bohemia and Silesia. Christianity was introduced by Bishops Cyril and Method.

About 907-908, the Moravian Realm collapsed when the Magyars moved into the Carpathian Basin after 896. The present area of Slovakia (Northern or Upper Hungary of the Carpathian Basin) became part of the Hungarian Crown, except for a northwestern strip of land beyond the Vág River, which was held by the Polish Kingdom for a time. The Mongol invasion under Batu Khan, during 1241 and 1242 caused devastation, as it did in other parts of the kingdom. Under King Matthias Corvinus' reign in the 15th century, the invading Czech Hussites had to be fought by detachments of the King's army, to flush them out from a number of castles. During the Reformation in the 16th century, part of the Slovak population became converted to Lutheranism, and even to Calvinism, and large numbers of additional Hungarian settlers moved into area, fleeing from the Ottoman-Turkish occupied central portion of the kingdom, after the defeat of the Hungarian army by the formidable forces of Sultan Suleiman the Magnificent at Mohács in 1526. Many Hungarian nobles, forced to move north, gradually became landowners in Northern Hungary. During the Counter-Reformation period, the majority of the Slovak and Hungarian population reverted back to Roman Catholicism, under the influence of the Habsburgs, and the enormous efforts of Cardinal Péter Pázmány (1570-1637), who founded the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava), with faculties of Theology and Art. During Prince Rákóczi's War of Liberation from the Habsburg rule (1703-1711), almost all the territory of Northern Hungary became freed from the Habsburgs; Slovaks were fighting alongside Hungarians against the Austrian army. The Austrian forces were pushed out as far as Pozsony by 1704; the gold-mining towns of Northern Hungary, all Transdanubia and Transylvania were in Hungarian hands under Prince Rákóczi. There were also places of defeat in the area, such as the defeat at Nagyszombat (Trnava) (1704) and that of Trencsén (Trenčín) (1708). During Lajos (Louis) Kossuth's 1848-1849 War of Independence against the Habsburgs, the Slovak population of Northern Hungary already became divided in their sentiments: many were still fighting under the Hungarian flag, but the majority of the Slovaks rose against the Hungarian magnates in their awakening nationalism, especially the small Slovakian intelligentsia, under the influence of Stur, Hodza and Hurban. This Pan-Slav movement in turn elicited counter-measures from the Hungarian Government (labelled as Magyarization policy), such as the banning of the cultural association Matica Slovenská and the closure of three high schools with Slovakian as the language of instruction (Nagyőrce (Revúca), Túrócszentmárton (Martin) and Znióvárálja (Kláštor pod Znievom)). During the pre-war years after 1900, a Slovak autonomy movement started to emerge, led by the parliamentarians, Andrew Hlinka and Juriga, later on joined by Milan Hodza.

On 30 October 1918, it was at Túrócszentmárton (Martin), that the Slovak National Council declared that the Slovaks would unite with the Czechs (the “Declaration of Martin”) to form the new state of Czechoslovakia, thereby seceding from the Kingdom of Hungary. By the Treaty of Trianon (1920), more than one million ethnic Hungarians (who had been living there for one thousand years as original settlers) were annexed to Czechoslovakia. Following the Munich Pact (29 September 1938), on 6 October 1938, faced with Hitler’s threat to dismember Czechoslovakia, the Slovaks declared themselves to be an autonomous part of a federal Czech-Slovak state, with Father Tiso becoming the Premier. The Hungarian-populated southern strip of Slovakia was ceded to Hungary as a result of the First Vienna Award (2 November 1938), and a small area north of the High Tatra was taken by Poland. When, on 14 March 1939, the German army occupied the Czech State with the capital Prague, Slovakia became nominally independent under German protection, and the President, Rev. Jozef Tiso enjoyed a one-party rule. Tiso let German troops occupy Slovakia in August 1939, when Germany, the Soviet Union and Slovakia attacked Poland, thereby Slovakia entered World War II as an ally of Germany. Later on, an anti-German, pro-Allied Slovak underground movement started to emerge and this proved to be of considerable help to the advancing Soviet forces, which relatively quickly drove the Germans out of Slovakia late in 1944.

In 1945, under Soviet Russian occupation, the Slovaks joined a reconstituted Czechoslovakia. When the Communists took over, Slovakia became centralized and Czech-dominated, nationalizing industry and collectivizing agriculture. After the Communists fell from power in 1990, a Slovakian independence movement started to emerge, resulting finally in complete separation of the two federal republics and an independent Slovakia emerged on 1 January 1993.

It has been a controversial question, whether the Slovaks were direct descendants of the Slavic people living east of the Morva River, within the framework of the Moravian-Slavic Empire, or were later settlers in the Slovakian area. It is beyond doubt that the Slovaks are the descendants of the Moravian-Slavs of the period of the Hungarian settlement in the Carpathian Basin (though there is no historic documentation for this), but, at that time, the Moravian-Slavs were not settled in the same area as at present: the eastern frontier of the Moravian Empire reached only the Garam (Hron) River. In the area between the Morva and Garam Rivers, the main mass of the Slavic population even in the 11th century settled the area north of the Nagyszombat–Galgóc–Nyitra–Aranyosmarót line, while south of this line has been wholly Hungarian populated ever since their settlement of the Carpathian Basin, at the end of the 9th century. Further east, the counties of Árva, Liptó, Zólyom and Gömör, now well populated, at that time were only sparsely populated by mostly Slovak people in a forest-covered mountainous terrain. The central and eastern part of Slovakia has only been settled in more recent centuries by a Slovakian population, which has absorbed the Hungarian and other populations settling there almost concurrently; only the later Saxon settlers remained separate from the other peoples. All these population-developments, lacking historic documentation, had to rely on the study of locality names. Until 1918 the Slovaks did not have a state of their own, but lived within the framework of the Kingdom of Hungary, as established by the first King, István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038). Up to World War II, the Slovaks were engaged in agriculture, livestock farming and forestry industry in their mountainous terrain, also with a lively domestic industry. – B: 0942, 1068, 1153, 1919, T: 7456. → Carpathian Basin; Hungary, History of.

Northern Hungary's Hungarian Literature – From the 1920s, following the Treaty of Versailles-Trianon, evolved an independent literary movement in Northern or Upper Hungary (now Slovakia). The local literary organizations were resurrected in the larger towns, such as the Kazinczy Association of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). That is when the humanist Zoltán Fábry became active. At first, his literary activities did not offend the chauvinist Czech state interests. Fábry was followed by Imre Forbáth, whose poetry transcended the modernist movements of the 1920s; by Gyula (Julius) Morvay, whose works reflected all the misery of the peasantry; as well as by the peasant writer József (Joseph) Sellyei. The well-known Upper Hungarian youth program, the “Sickle Movement”, was at first a folkloric gathering under literary auspices. The Hungarian Scientific, Literary and Artistic Association of Czechoslovakia, founded with the help of President Masaryk's financial aid, worked with such constraints that it was unable to fulfill even its basic mandate. The Circle of Hungarian Democratic Writers, founded by Dezső (Desider) Győry had similar fate. Finally, the literary center grouped around the official newspapers and periodicals. A few well-known Hungarian writers of Slovakia are Miklós (Nicholas) Duray; László (Ladislav) Dobos; the novelist, Victor Egri; the realist critic, József (Joseph) Jarnó; István (Stephen) Darkó and Mihály (Michael) Tamás, novelists; Dezső (Desider) Vozári; László (Ladislav) Sáfári; Ernő (Ernest) Sebesi and Vilmos (William) Csontos, poets. There is a Who's Who from Kassa to Prague? (Ki kicsoda Kassától-Prágáig?) (1993), and A (Cseh)slovakian Hungarian Lexicon from 1918 (A (Cseh)szlovákiai magyarok lexikona 1918-tól) (2008). – B: 1138, 1020, T: 3240. → Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Norway, Hungarians in – Probably Lila Bulyosvszky, actress and writer, was the first known Hungarian, who was in Norway in 1865 and wrote her experiences in a book. Until the end of World War I, and World War II, not many Hungarians settled in Norway. Nonetheless, they established the Hungarian Association of Norway (Norvégiai Magyar Egyesület) in Oslo in 1930, which was active for seven years. In 1961 a Hungarian Home (Magyar Otthon) was founded in Oslo, and it is still active. The first emigration wave came after World War II, followed by the great wave after the crushed 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight in 1956. The last wave arrived in the 1970s and 1980s, mostly from Transylvania (Romania) and Voivodina-Vajdaság (Serbia). Some of the emigrants moved on to other countries. According to an educated estimate some 3,000 Hungarians lived in Norway at the turn of the millennium. The Circle of Hungarian Friends in Norway (Ungarsk Venneforening v/Werni – Magyarok Baráti Köre) was founded on 15 March 1990 in Oslo. Its goal is to preserve the Hungarian culture, traditions, native language and heritage. The association has had a journal since 2002, the quarterly, MBK Newsletter (MBK Híradó), published in 250 copies. In 2000, the association published a book entitled: Hungarians in Norway (Magyarok Norvégiában). Hungarian subjects are taught from kindergarten level (Csincsele Gyermecksoport). Hungarians in Norway commemorate the Hungarian national holidays as well as religious festivals (Santa Claus, Christmas, Easter, etc), and regularly organize theatrical performances, film showings, other cultural events, as well as social gatherings. The organization does not have its own “Hungarian House”; they come together in rented premises. – B: 1454, 1835, T: 7103.

Noszlopy, Gáspár (Gasper) (Vrácsik, since 1919, it united with Újvárfalva, Transdanubia, 17 August 1820 - Pest, 3 March 1853) – Lawyer, military officer. He fought as a Colonel in the 1848-1849 War of Independence. In September 1848 he was District Magistrate for County Somogy. Gáspár Noszlopy was one of the organizers of the uprising in his district. In February 1849, along with his elder brother Antal (Anthony), he worked out plans for the liberation of the Southern Transdanubian (Dunántúl) area. The plans were accepted, and the two brothers worked on executing them in April 1849. For three months they were able to liberate County Somogy; but the news that the Imperial troops were advancing caused them to retreat, while fighting toward Komárom at the end of July 1849. After the surrender, Noszlopy remained in hiding until April 1850. He was then captured and taken before a military tribunal in Pest. However, he escaped before the court delivered its verdict. Noszlopy made contact with the illegal organization of József (Joseph) Mack, a former Colonel in the National Guard. When the authorities began to round up members of the Mack organization, Noszlopy and his friends started to recruit people in Kecskemét to capture the Emperor. After his plans were discovered, Gáspár Noszlopy fled to Transdanubia and organized paramilitary units in Bakony. Imperial forces captured him on 16 November 1852. Noszlopy escaped a second time, but was recaptured and then executed in Pest. Schools bear his name. – B: 0883, 1122, 1031, T: 7688.

Nóti, Károly (Charles) (Tasnád, now Tășnad, Romania, 1 February 1892 - Budapest, 28 May 1954) – Writer journalist, dramaturge. He studied Law at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1918 he was a correspondent for the paper Eastern News (Keleti Újság) in Kolozsvár. He lived in Budapest and Berlin between 1930 and 1933. He started his literary activity by writing cabaret pieces, first for the Teréz-Ring Stage (Terézkörúti Színpad) in (1923-1930), then for the Podium Cabaret (Pódium Kabaré) in Budapest and, in the course of time, he became an outstanding representative of the literary genre. From 1947 to 1949 he worked as a dramaturge as well. Many of his jokes appeared in the magazine, Theatrical Life (Színházi Élet). He was an author of operettas, comedies and film scripts in German and French, which yielded him success. His best vaudevilles were published by Adorján (Hadrian) Stella in a selection entitled: She Was Still There at Lepsény (Lepsénynél még megvolt) (1958). His works include The Lion-tamer (Az oroszslánszelidítő), (1923); The Friend of the Family (A házibarát), comedy, with Béla Szenes (1928); Open Window (Nyitott ablak), operetta (1932); The Black Lily (A fekete liliom) (1948), and the The Motor (A motor) (1954). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Stella, Adorján.

“Notitia Hungariae” – With its complete title: Notitia Hungariae novae historico-geographia, it is the work of two decades of collection of geographical, historical, ethnographic and linguistic data from the counties of Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin. The first five volumes of this monumental work, containing the history of ten counties, were published between 1735 and 1742. The work, presenting an all-inclusive picture of the Carpathian Basin, and demonstrating a many-sided political knowledge of Hungary, was compiled by Mátyás Bél, with the assistance of his sons and students. He illustrated the work with the maps of Sámuel Mikoviny. The rest of the work remained in manuscript form; nevertheless, even today, it is a valuable source material. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7617. → Bél, Mátyás; Mikovinyi, Sámuel.

Novák, Ilona (Helen) (Budapest, 16 May 1925 - ) – Swimmer, and Olympic champion. She competed at the 1948 Summer Olympic Games in London, where she finished 4th in 100 m backstroke, and 5th in 4 × 100 m freestyle relay. At the 1952 Summer Olympic Games in Helsinki, she received a gold medal in 4 × 100 m freestyle relay as captain of the Hungarian team. She was inducted into the International Swimming Hall of Fame in Fort Lauderdale, Florida in 1973, together with her sister, Éva Novák-Gerard. – B: & T: 1031.

Novák, István (Stephen) (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 4 October 1906 - Szeged, 28 November 1978) – Pharmacist, physician. He acquired Pharmacology and Medical Degrees from the University of Szeged in 1928. From 1928 he worked as a pharmacist at Szeged University. Between 1931 and 1937 he worked as Department Head at the G. Richter Chemical and Pharmaceutical Works. From 1937 to 1953 he was Chief Chemist at the Pharmaceutical Institute and Pharmacy of Szeged. In 1944, he became an honorary lecturer. From 1945 he was appointed Professor of Pharmacy at the Medical School of the University of Szeged. Later, he became its Rector and Dean. He was a member of scientific societies at home and abroad, and was a member of the Editorial Board for Acta Pharmaceutica. He was also the author of the books On Morphine Determining Methods in General (Morphin meghatározó módszerekről általában) (1933) and Pharmacognosis (Farmakognózia), with J. Halmai (1963). There is a Prize named after him at the University of Szeged. – B: 1730, 1471, T: 7103.

Novák, Lajos (Louis) (Baja, 7 February 1927 - Dömös, 9 January 1989) – Painter, graphic artist. His childhood was spent in Felsőszentiván, south of Lake Velence in Transdanubia (Dunántúl), while his High School was completed in Baja, where he later studied painting in the free school of Gyula (Julius) Rudnay. From 1949 to 1954 he was a student of Bertalan Pór in the Academy of Applied Arts. Shortly after, he settled in Hódmezővásárhely, where he contributed to the establishment of an artist colony. In 1957, his painting called Ditch-diggers (Kubikusok) earned him the Munkácsy Prize. From 1960 until his death, he lived in Dömös (north of Visegrád in the Danube Bend). Apart from panel paintings, he prepared a long series of copper engravings. In 1967, at the International Exhibition held in Ravenna, he won a Silver Medal with his paintings. In 1968, also in Ravenna, he had a one-man show. In 1975 he exhibited his paintings in Felsőszentiván, Tataháza and Esztergom. In 1980 he held a one-man show in Dusnok. In his paintings he presents everyday life, the end of a day's work, the relationship between man and nature with realistic force, as in the following paintings Fruit-pickers (Gyümölcszedők); At a Bus-stop (Buszmegállónál); Waiting Girls (Várakozó lányok); Dispute (Disputa); Under the Gate (Kapuban); Solitude (Magány); Gossip (Pletyka), and Danube Bend (Dunakanyar). He produced drawings, such as Alone (Egyedül) and Watering (Itatás). – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7456. → Rudnay, Gyula; Pór, Bertalan.

Novobáczky, Sándor (Alexander) (Szentés, 29 March 1924 - Budapest, 8 June 1989) – Journalist, humorist. In 1946 he earned a Law Degree at the University of Budapest, following which he worked as a clerk in the National Bank and later in the Ministry of Finances. He began his journalistic career with the daily paper, Free People (Szabad Nép) in 1953, working as a foreign affairs column editor and a member of the editorial board. In 1955 he joined the circle of insurgent Communists; therefore, he had to be removed from the paper. In 1955-1956 he worked for the paper, Cogwheel (Fogaskerék).

In the summer of 1956 he received a position with the paper, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). On 6 October 1956 he published an article entitled: Peculiar people? (Különös emberek?), in the paper, Literary News (Irodalmi Újság) and, as a result, he was arrested. On 19 January 1957, the Metropolitan Court of Law sentenced him to ten months' imprisonment. After his release, he was barred from the journalistic career for a number of years, so he worked as the advertising manager for the Corvin Department Store (Corvin Áruház). It was only in 1959 that he became a member of the editorial board of the paper, Popular Sport (Népsport). In 1963 he became a founding member of the weekly, Hungary (Magyarország) and, from 1968, its column editor until his death. His articles appeared in World of Books (Könyvvilág), and Budapester Rundschau. With his excellent satirical talent, he earned a name for himself in both the humorous paper, Ludas Matyi (Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd) and at the Hungarian Radio. His works include On the Methods of Foreign Affairs Agitation (A külpolitikai agitáció módszereiről) (1956), and Serious Offences in Pest (Súlyos pesti sértések), cabaret program, 1971). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Novobátzky, Károly (Charles) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 3 March 1884 - Budapest, 20 December 1967) – Physicist, mathematician. His secondary schooling was completed in Temesvár, and his higher education at the University of Budapest. During World War I, he served as an artillery officer. In the interwar years he taught in secondary schools in the countryside, later in Budapest. After 1945 until his retirement he was Professor of Theoretical Physics and Head of Department at the University of Budapest. He regarded the teaching of the young as his life's main task, having taught thousands during his more than fifty years of teaching career. Many of his former students came to be in leading, professional positions, and professors at universities. His textbooks ran into several new editions. At the University of Budapest, it was to his credit that the teaching of modern Theoretical Physics reached world standard. His main research field was the Theory of Relativity and the study of the Electromagnetic Field; at the same time, he was in personal contact with the greatest minds of his age. His experiments dealt with the Geometric Figures (affins) of Space Theory, where he successfully employed the variance principles in Differential Geometry and the projective Non-Euclidean Geometry, where properties are unaltered by projection. He also worked out a theory that rendered the interpretation of Electromagnetic Geometry possible, by introducing non-linear vector transformation; he used electrodynamic principles for insulation materials as well. He succeeded in further developing Kirchhoff's theory on the Deflection of Light. In Relativistic Quantum Mechanics, he managed to complete statistical progression. He reached a deeper understanding of the characteristics of the Electromagnetic Field, by studying the possible connections between classical electrodynamics and optics and also between the Theory of Relativity and Quantum Mechanics. The study of the foundations of Quantum Theory occupied him to the end of his life. His works include Theory of Relativity (A relativitás elmélete) (1947); Thermodynamics (Termodinamika) (1951), and Electrodynamics and Optics (Elektrodinamika és optika) (1951). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding, 1947, ordinary, 1949). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize twice, in 1949 and 1953. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7456, 7688.

Nuclear Power Plant of Paks – After World War II, nuclear scientists made a relentless effort to render nuclear energy available for the benefit of mankind. One of its peaceful employments was to build nuclear power plants. The oil crisis in 1973 hastened the search for alternate energy sources and, like many countries, Hungary also opted for building a nuclear power plant, 5 km from Paks in southern Hungary, on the banks of the Danube. The Hungarian Government decided on the construction of a Soviet-type plant, used in the so-called COMECON countries, which belonged to the then Soviet sphere of influence in Eastern Europe until the 1990s. Hungary bought four reactors, each of them a VVER-440 Model V 213 pressurized water reactor, where the number 440 indicates the power output. This model includes added emergency core cooling and auxiliary water-feeding systems, as well as upgraded accident localization systems. Each reactor contains 42 tons of slightly enriched uranium oxide fuel. After it has been used for four years per reactor, the fuel rods are stored for five years in a cooling pond, before being removed from the site for permanent disposal. The plant started working with its first reactor in 1982, the last one in 1987. The power plant – so far the only one in Hungary – supplies 47.5 percent of the country's electrical power requirement. With the expansion of the plant, its output will grow considerably. – B: 1031, 7301, T: 7301.

Number of Hungarians – At the turn of the millennia there were 15,670,000 worldwide. For details → Dispersed Hungarians.

Nyárád Region, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) – This region is on the River Nyárád and its tributaries, populated by Szeklers (Transylvanian Hungarians); it belonged formerly to Marosszék (now Scaunul Mureș, Romania). Its economic and administrative center used to be the town Nyárádszereda (now Miercurea Nirejului), center for the entire Marosszék area. Its adjacent area to the east is called Becskealja (foot of Becske), indicating that it lies below Becske-tető (Becske Peak). Its upper part is called Holyland (Szentföld), a nickname of their Catholic inhabitants. Vegetable farms dominate the area on the lower course of the river, so it is referred to as Murokország (Carrotland). – B: 1134, T: 7103.

Nyáry, Baron Albert (Bagonya, now Bogojina, Slovenia, 30 June 1828 - Budapest, 1 January 1886) – Heraldic writer. He studied Philosophy and Law at the University of Pest. He was a member of the circle of Young Hungary (Fiatal Magyarország). During the War of Independence of 1848-1849, he was aide-de-camp of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth. After the collapse of the War in 1849, he left Hungary and went abroad. In 1859 he took part in the Austro-Piedmontese War on Piedmont's side. While in Italy, he collected significant archival material related to Hungary. At the time of the Compromise (Kiegyezés) with Austria in 1867, he returned to Hungary and participated in establishing the Historical Society (Történelmi Társulat). His heraldic works and source publications are significant. He was Co-Editor of the Archeological Gazette (Archeologiai Értesítő), and the paper Turul. His books include Diplomatic Memories from the Age of King Matthias 1458-1490, vols. I-IV (Magyar diplomáciai emlékek Mátyás király korából 1458 – 1490, I-IV), edited with Iván Nagy (1875-1878), and Guidelines of Heraldry (A heraldika vezérfonala) (1886), which is the first Hungarian-language heraldic handbook. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7103. → Compromise of 1867; Kossuth, Lajos; Nagy Iván (1).

Nyáry, Pál (Paul) (Nyáregyháza, 12 December 1806 - Budapest, 21 April 1871) – Politician, lawyer. In 1836, Pál Nyáry was the Chief Notary for County Pest. By 1845 he was the Second Vice-Lord Lieutenant of the County and, in 1848, its First Vice-Lord Lieutenant. Nyáry became a dietal representative for Pest and a leader of the Liberal Party (Szabadelvűek Pártja). At the Diet, Nyáry belonged to the radical faction of this group and strongly criticized the Batthyány Government. From September 1848 he was Vice-President of the National Guard Commission and one of its most important members. In Debrecen, he joined the Peace Party, and played a role in overthrowing László (Ladislás) Madarász for improperly handling the Zichy diamonds. Pál Nyáry opposed Hungary's 1849 Declaration of Independence, but did not speak publicly against it. After the defeat of the War of Independence, Nyáry was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. Of this sentence, he served seven years in Josephstadt, Austria. In 1856 Nyáry was set free, and he went home to oversee his estates. In 1861, he again served as First Vice-Lord Lieutenant for Pest, and became a member of the Resolution Party at the National Assembly. He campaigned against taxes collected without the consent of Parliament. Between 1865 and 1868 he was a member of the Tisza-Ghyczy Party, but he played a decreasingly prominent role, though he was the leader of the liberal nobility. In the end, he committed suicide. Pál Nyáry wrote: Suggestion for the Administration of County Pest... (Javaslat Pest megye közigazgatási rendszere iránt...) (1840); Proposal for the Possibility of Improvement in Criminal Prosecutions at the County Level (Indítvány a megyei bünvádi eljárás lehető javítása iránt) (1841), and The Speeches of Pál Nyáry and György Zlinszky (Nyáry Pál és Zlinszky György beszédeik) (1861). A street in Budapest is named after him. – B: 0883, 1031, 1445, T: 7688.

Nyék Tribe – The second strongest tribe of the Magyars in the Lebedian tribal alliance, according to Byzantine Emperor Constantine VII (913-959) in his work De administrando Imperio (On the administration of the Empire). The leader of the Nyék Tribe was entitled to be the barka (military commander) of the tribal confederation until its dissolution during the rule of King István I (later St. Stephen) (997-1038) a century later. During the Hungarians' advance into the Carpathian Basin, the Nyék tribe secured the southern borders and, at first, settled in the region of the Tisza and Maros rivers. In 899, during the Lombardian campaign, the tribe played a major part in the defeat of the 15,000-strong army of King Berengar I, at the Brenta River. Around 900, the tribe settled in its final location, north of Mohács, west of the Danube, where its memory remains through the names of various villages, such as: Alsónyék and Kápolnásnyék. – B: 1078, 1230, T: 7665.→Levedia.

Nyéki Vörös, Mátyás (Matthias) (Győr, 1575 - Győr, 1 April 1654) – Priest, poet. He came from a family of serfs in County Baranya. He studied in the Seminary at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia); later, he worked in the Royal Hungarian Chancery, becoming the Canon of Győr in 1611, Provost of Pápoc in 1636, and Episcopal Vicar in 1642. His first Psalm translations were published in Péter Pázmány's Prayer book (Graz, 1606). He was one of the pioneers of Baroque poetry. A new edition of his religious poems appeared in the Collection of Hungarian Poets. His works include Dialogue (Dialogus), (Vienna, 1625), and Tintinnabulum (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia) (1636). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Pázmány, Péter.

Nyerges, Antal (Anton N.) (South Bend, IN, USA, 14 August 1917 - USA, 21 May 1989) – Diplomat, literary translator, cultural historian, printer. He was born into a family of immigrants to the USA. During World War II, he served in the US army in the Far East. Afterward, he studied Finno-Ugrian Linguistics at Indiana University and obtained a Ph.D. He did research work among the Lapps in Norway. In 1951 he entered the Diplomatic Service. His diplomatic posts were in Budapest (Press and Cultural Attaché (1955-1957), Frankfurt, Tel-Aviv and Teheran. After his activity in foreign affairs in 1969, he became a lecturer at Eastern Kentucky University of Richmond, where he became a professor and lectured on the History of European Culture and Sociology. As a translator, he interpreted in English-language versions the works of Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, János (John) Arany, Endre (Andrew) Ady, Gyula (Julius) Juhász, Árpád Tóth, Lőrinc (Lawrence) Szabó, and Attila József, introducing them to the American public. His works include Poems of Endre Ady (1969); Sándor Petőfi (1973); Poems by Attila József (1973); Epics of the Hungarian Plain from János Arany (1976), and The Poetry of Lőrinc Szabó (1986). – B: 1672, T: 7456.→Persons in the article have their own entry.

Nyergesi, János (John) (Nyergesújfalu, 9 June 1895 - Nyergesújfalu, 22 December 1982) – Painter, graphic artist. He started his studies in Art at his birthplace in the Free School, conducted by Károly (Charles) Kernstok; then from 1919, with his master's support, he continued in Kernstok's Free School in Budapest. Later, he enrolled in the School of Industrial Design, where, in 1913, in a scholarship competition, he won first prize with his stained-glass window, entitled Prophet (Proféta). In 1919 he took part in the work of Kernstok's Free School in Nyergesújfalu. In 1926 and 1927 he was a student at the Julian Academy in Paris. From the 1930s he worked as a laborer in the Cement Factory of Lábatlan, and in the Eternit and Viscosa factories in Nyergesújfalu; but regularly took part in exhibitions as well. After 1945, his artistic work became more active. His art is characterized by a kind of "expressive naturalism". Early in his career, he was strongly influenced by his master, Kernstock, and the aspirations of The Group of Eight, hence the expressiveness of his works. Later he became interested in the tiny objects of everyday life surrounding him, which he formed into simple pictorial composition. The "saying a lot with little" became his ars poetica. He painted mainly portraits, conversation pieces and scenes. The motives always came from his immediate surroundings. His well-known paintings include Portrait of a Boy (Fiúportré) (1910); My Wife Asleep (Feleségem alszik); Indian ink drawing (1958); Self-portrait (Önarckép) (1963), and Street Scene (Utcarészlet) oil (1970). His one-man exhibitions include Esztergom, Balassi Bálint Museum (1954, 1968, 1975); Székesfehérvár, István Király Museum (1957), and Nyergesújfalu, Memorial Exhibition (1983). – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7456.→Eight, The Group of; Kernstok, Károly.

Nyikó Region, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) – The valley of the Nyikó Creek, from its source on the western slopes of the Hargita Mountain plateau, extending downstream and passing by the town of Székelykeresztúr (now Odorhei Secuiesc, Romania), eventually running into the Nagyküüllő River. The small villages in the valley reflect the characteristics of the Udvarhelyszék region. Noteworthy villages are Farkaslaka (now Lupeni), Kobátfalva (now Cobatesti) and Szentlélek. The renowned writer, Áron (Aaron) Tamási, made the people and the folklore known through his writings. – B: 1134, T: 7456.→Tamási, Áron.

Nyilas Anonymus (16th century) – Versifier. Ferenc (Francis) Toldy gave this name to the unknown poet who, in 1548, wrote a lofty two-part, 72-line song for the wedding of István (Stephen) Nyilas and Anna Zsámbéki of the town of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). In the first part, the groom addresses the bride; in the second part the bride addresses the groom. It was preserved in the Lugossy Codex and the Bornemissza Songbook (1582). – B: 1136, T: 7617.→Toldy, Ferenc; Lugossy Codex.

Nyíredy, Géza (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 16 March 1924 - Budapest, 25 July 1990) – Physician, pulmonologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest in 1948. In 1949 he worked at the National Public Health Institute, Budapest; later worked at the Pulmonary Clinic of the University in various positions. From 1956 he headed a clinical department. From 1961 he was Senior Physician at the No. 4 Pulmonary Illnesses Department of St János (John) Hospital. In 1959 he was appointed Regional Supervising Chief-Physician. From 1959 on, he wrote more than 60 scientific studies. His field of research was tuberculosis, bacteriology and cancerous illnesses. His works include The Bronchiectasy Illness... (A bronchiectázia betegség...) (1963); Illnesses of the Bronchia (A hörgők betegségei), with F. Kovács (1966) and Clinical Observations in Bronchiectasy Illness (Klinikai megfigyelések bronchiectázia betegségben) (1967). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7103.

Nyíregyháza Deportees – On 2 November 1944, after the Front of World War II passed over the city, posters appeared on the streets of Nyíregyháza, calling on the citizens to resume work. As the inhabitants came out of the cellars, armed Soviet soldiers appeared, commandeering them for what they called “malenki robot” (a little work). They collected 2300 civilians; first they were taken to a country prison, then to Debrecen, where they were placed behind barbed-wire fences in the Pavilon Barracks. This was the collection point and, from here, together with others from other parts of Hungary, they were taken to the Soviet Union. In the Prisoner of War Camp at Bolc in the Arctic region, they were treated as enemy partisans and were forced to work in mines. Due to starvation, torture and lack of medical treatment, most of them died, leaving 1,620 wives and 3,880 children behind. Only 5% of them returned, years later to Hungary, and the Communist Government of Hungary forbade them to talk about their experiences. A monument was erected from public donations on 26 May 1991 on the Országzászló Square in Nyíregyháza, to preserve the memory of those, who died in World War II. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→Atrocities against Hungarians.

Nyíregyházi, Ervin (Budapest, 19 January 1903 - Los Angeles, Cal., 13 April 1987) – Hungarian-born American piano virtuoso and composer. His father was a singer in the Royal Opera Chorus in Budapest, but died when Ervin was 12. He began playing the piano at the age of two, composing music at four; he played with the Berlin Philharmonic when he was 6, under Arthur Nikisch. By the age of nine, he played Beethoven sonatas and, at eleven, J.S. Bach’s preludes and fugues. In the Budapest Academy of Music, he was a student of István Thomán and Arnold Székely; in Berlin, he studied under Ernő (Ernest) Dohnányi and Frederic Lamond. From the age of ten, he gave concerts in Hungary and abroad. In 1914 he settled in Berlin and, from 1930, he lived in the USA. In his childhood he attracted attention with his compositions for the piano, e.g. Sonate dramatique (1914), and his Wedding March (which was published). Up to 1978 he composed some 700 works. From the 1930s, he played and composed for Hollywood film studios. In 1973 he made two professional recordings. He was known for his musicality and his technique. With his exceptional performing ability, he became successful everywhere. He played mainly 19th and 20th century virtuoso pieces. He was sometimes described as Liszt incarnate. Despite his extraordinary talent, he lived a simple life. Even at an advanced age, he gave concerts in Japan during 1980 and 1982. In 2007, his biography, entitled Lost Genius was published in Canada. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Thomán, István; Nikisch, Arthur; Dohnányi, Ernő; Székely, Arnold.

Nyíró, Gyula (Julius) (Dés, now Dej, Romania, 12 March 1895 - Budapest, 4 May 1966) – Physician, neurologist and psychiatrist. In 1917 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). Until 1920 he worked with Károly (Charles) Lechner, later, as resident physician in the Mental Hospital of Lipótmező, Budapest; then, until 1927, he worked as a demonstrator and assistant lecturer in the Mental Hospital in Szeged. In 1926 he became an honorary lecturer, in 1931 a professor at the University of Szeged. From 1928, he was Head Physician at the Mental Hospital of Lipótmező. From 1939, he was employed at the Mental Hospital of Angyalföld, Budapest. From 1951 he was Professor of Psychiatry in the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest. He obtained a Masters Degree in Medicine in 1952. His main field of research work was schizophrenia. Together with László Meduna, he took part in the clinical development of cardiazol and electroshock therapy. He also succeeded in defining the “structure-theory” of schizophrenia. He studied mental illnesses of famous men, e.g. Ignác (Ignatius) Semmelweis, the “savior of mothers”: Nyíró proved that the symptoms of the nervous system of Semmelweis were the result of septicemia, because of his absorption of toxins during his clinical work. His works include Psychopathology (Elmekórtan), co-authored with József Szabó (1926); Psychiatria, textbook (1961), and Illness of Semmelweis (Semmelweis betegsége), with co-authors (1965). – B: 1030, 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Semmelweis, Ignác; Meduna, László.

Nyíró, József (Joseph) (Székelyzsombor, now Jimbor, Transylvania, Romania, 18 July 1889 - Madrid, 16 October 1953) – Writer, journalist, cleric. He completed his High School education in Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania). He studied in the seminary of Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Julia, Romania) and in the Pazmaneum of Vienna, where he became ordained in 1912. His first position took him to Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania), where he was a teacher of religion in the High School. From 1915 to 1919 he was Parish Priest of the little village of Kide (now Chidea, Romania) in County Kolozs. In 1919 he left the priesthood. At first, he worked as a miller, then, from 1920, he joined the Editorial Staff of the paper, Eastern News (Keleti Újság) in Kolozsvár. In 1931 he left the newspaper and withdrew to the village of Alsórákos (now Racoșul de Jos, Romania) to run a farm.

In 1938 he returned to journalism and assumed the editorship of the paper, Eastern News. He moved to Budapest in 1941 to become the Editor for the paper, Hungarian Strength (Magyar Erő), and, toward the end of World War II, he became a member of the right-wing Arrow-Cross Parliament, when Hungary was already under German occupation, trying to hold up the advance and occupation of Hungary by the Soviet Communist forces. In 1945 he had to flee to Germany, and later to Madrid, where he again joined the Catholic priesthood. After settling in the USA, he became the founding Director of the émigré Lajos Kossuth Book Publishing Co. in Cleveland. When he died he was buried in Spain. His last will was to be reburied in Transylvania. When Hungaian autrotities wanted to fulfill his last will, Romanian authorities denied it in 2012. As early as 1924, he showed great promise in prose writing with his volume of short stories, entitled: The Jesus-carving Man (Jézusfaragó ember). His works, dealing with the fate of the Szekler Hungarians of Transylvania (first time under Romanian rule since 1920), became bestsellers. In the post-war Transylvanian Hungarian literature he is one of the most significant and individual writers. His works include In God's Yoke (Isten igájában); Szeklers (Székelyek); Silent Struggle (Néma küzdelem); Úz Bence; Ábel in the Wilderness (Ábel a rengetegben) novel (1932); My People (Az én népem) novel (1935); Immortal Life (Halhatatlan élet), novel (1941), and Behold the Humans (Ime az emberek) (1951). – B: 1085, 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Szeklers.

Nyisztor, Zoltán (Debrecen, 8 December 1893 - Rome, 4 December 1979) – Priest, writer, journalist. He studied at the Theological College of Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania); then he read Theology in Rome and Innsbruck. He was ordained in 1917. He worked as a Bishop's Secretary, ws Chaplain of the Cave Chapel of Mount Gellért in Buda, a Publisher's Editor, and President of the Catholic Young Men's Club. As a journalist, his career started with the journal, The Heart (A Szív). In 1924 he became Editor of the weekly paper, Hungarian Culture (Magyar Kultúra); later becoming a correspondent for the National Paper (Nemzeti Újság) and New Generation (Új Nemzedék), and the Editor for the Hungarian Courier (Magyar Kurír). He translated into Hungarian the works of Giovanni Papini and Archbishop Faulhaber. With Béla Bangha, he edited the four-volume Catholic Encyclopedia, and published several other books on his travels in the Far East, South America, and the Balkans. His satirical period piece was Hungarian Góg (Magyar Góg). During 1945 and 1946 he was a prisoner of the Communist regime and the Soviet military authorities. Freed from there, he fled to Italy and worked in the Public Relations Office of the Vatican, and was later a chaplain in Madrid. In 1946 he went to South America. In Columbia he was a pastor in a hospital, a missionary, as well as a chaplain in a parish in Bogota. Then he moved to Venezuela, serving as a Hungarian priest in Caracas. In 1961 he returned to Rome, where he lived from his writings. He was a columnist for Canadian Hungarians (Kanadai Magyarország); New Europe (Új Európa), and Catholic Hungarians' Sunday (Katolikus Magyarok Vasárnapja). His works include Foreigner in a Foreign Land (Idegen az idegenben), biographical novel (1973), and The Earthly Life of Jesus (Jézus földi élete) (1975). – B: 1068, 1672, T: 7456.

Nyitra (Slovakian: Nitra, German: Neutra) – A town in Northern Hungary before 1920, now Nitra in Slovakia. It is 190-220m above sea level. It was the Seat of the former County (now Slovakian district) Nyitra, on both banks of the Nyitra (Nitra) River, a tributary of the Danube, at the foot of Mount Zobor (587m, rich vineyards on its slopes) and at the northern margin of the Little Hungarian Plain. The Tribecs Range extends from north of the town. The site of the town had a settlement on it at the time of the Carpathian Settlement by Khagan Árpád's Magyars (896-900), who defeated the Leader Zobor heading the army of the local Slavic population; Zobor fell in the battle, defending the environs of Nyitra. King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038) strengthened the Castle Fort, which was able to resist the siege of Emperor Heinrich in 1074, and the Mongol-Tartars in 1241. The town became a free borough by Royal Decree in 1248, and Seat of the Bishporic of Nyitra in 1288. In 1271, the Bohemian King Ottokar occupied Nyitra. Later, Máté (Matthew) Csák owned it and King Casimir IV of Poland (the opponent of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus of Hungary, 1458-1490) was unable to capture it. Only the troops of Prince István (Stephen) Bocskay (1605-1606) in 1605 and, later, Reigning Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629) of Transylvania, were successful in taking the Nyitra fortress. It was in the hands of the Turks from 1663 until 1701, when it was pulled down. In 1708 Count Miklós (Nicholas) Bercsényi (1665-1726), occupied it. Nyitra became a corporate town in 1876. After World War I, as a result of the 1920 Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon, it was annexed by the newly created Czechoslovakia, from Historic Northern Hungary (Felvidék). In 1938, and again in 1993, it remained in the independent Slovakia. The town is an agricultural market hub, which connects the Little Plain with Northern Hungary. It has sugar refineries, breweries, and food industries. The core of the town is Castle Hill, surrounded with walls, bastions and gates, where the the Episcopal Palace, founded in 830, and the 13th century Cathedral were built. An underground passageway connects the two prominent buildings. The crypt of the single-nave, Baroque-style Episcopal Church is considered to date back to the time of King István I (St. Stephen) of Hungary. The Episcopal Seminary is of Neo-Renaissance style. The Episcopal Library has 40,000 volumes. There are fine public buildings, high schools and churches of various religious orders in the streets hugging the castle hill slopes, whereas the outer, lower parts of the town consist of rows of garden houses. Other outstanding buildings in Nyitra are the Franciscan Church and Monastery of 1630; among the 7 altars, there is one with a relief depicting the Legend of St Francis. The St. Emmeramus Church is a small Romanesque church, situated in the oldest part of the fortress, and it presumably dates back to 1158. According to a local tradition, Queen Gizella, the wife of King István I (St Stephen), commissioned its construction. In 1933, the statue of St Emmeramus was discovered; it is considered to be the oldest statue in the Northern Hungary region of Historic Hungary. The St. István Church dates from the 11-12th century. The population of the town was 16,419 in 1910, including 9,754 Hungarians, 4,929 Slovaks and 1,636 Germans. In 2001, its population was 87,285 including 83,285 Slovaks, 1,489 Hungarians, 323 Gypsies, 55 Ukrainians, 47 Germans and 18 Ruthenians. – B: 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 7103, 7456, T: 7456.→ István I, King; Csák, Máté; Mátyás I, King ; Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Bercsényi, Count Miklós; Nyitra, Benedictine Abbey.

Nyitra, Benedictine Abbey (Nyitra now Nitra in Slovakia) – The Abbey was founded by the Benedictines of Pannonhalma in the town of Nyitra in Northern Hungary (now in Slovakia) at an unknown date. It is known from documents that King Kálmán (Coloman, 1095-1116), in his Book of Statutes of 1100 authorized the Abbey to employ the “hot iron and hot water tes” in court procedure. King Kálmán made the Abbey the seat of a bishopric in 1113, which included a part of County Nyitra and also County Trencsén (now Trenčín). After the despotic rule of oligarch Máté Csák, the Abbey had to endure great losses, but it has been functioning since then ecclesiastically, at least as a church. – B: 0946, 1304, T: 7103.→Nyitra.

Nyulas, Ferenc (Francis) (Köszvényesremete, now Eremitu, Transylvania, Romania, 25 July 1758 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 27 December 1808) – Physician, scientific writer. He began his education in Kolozsvár and he pursued Medical studies at the Universities of Vienna and Pest. He received his Medical Degree in 1788. From 1806 until his death, he was Head Physician of Transylvania in Kolozsvár. The first of his three-volume work, About the Analysis of Public Medicinal Waters of Transylvania (Az Erdély országi orvos vizeknek bontásáról közönségesen) (Kolozsvár, 1800), is the first Hungarian-language scientific, mainly chemistry book, specializing in balneology, the therapeutic use of baths. In this work, he summarizes the analytical description and chemical studies of the ferruginous acidulous waters of the Radna Mountain region of eastern Transylvania. For the analysis of these waters, he worked out a wide-ranging procedure, including gas analysis, wet and dry analyses, as well as qualitative and quantitative analyses. While determining quantitatively the materials dissolved in the water, he was the first to employ titration in Transylvania. He succeeded in demonstrating the presence of manganese in one of the waters; the fact that these waters could also contain manganese first became generally known, when the great Swedish chemist, Berzelius, in 1807, found this element while analysing the water of Adolfberg. Nyulas must have been well versed in the chemical sciences of his age. He set up a modern laboratory in Szamosújvár (now Gherla, Romania). In his book, he also presented the pictures of the instruments he used. The three-volume work may be regarded as the first significant step in creating a special chemical terminology in the Hungarian language. He created new terms and designations with relatively correct linguistic feeling for the use of new special chemical terms, which he compiled to form a dictionary. Surprisingly, many of the terms he introduced remained in general usage in modern Hungarian language, like sav (acid); tégely (crucible); folyadék (solution); lombik (test-tube) and bontás (decomposition). Other new words that he created became lost, like savalj (oxygen) and vizalja (hydrogen). His expressions accommodated well in the Hungarian speech of the period and, at the same time, they expressed their essence. Nyulas seems to have been ahead of his time by rejecting the Phlogiston Theory, which was still the commonly held theory in chemistry at that time. – B: 0883, 1068, 1136, 1730, T: 7617, 7456.

Oath, Cross of – A golden cross of smaller dimensions, used during coronations, upon which the Kings declared their oath to the Country. The cross, stored in the treasury of Esztergom, an 11/12th century creation by a Hungarian goldsmith, has upright and transverse ends finished in seven semicircles. Its base originates from the 16th century. – B: 0942, T: 7673.

Oberfrank, Géza (Budapest, 16 January 1936 - ) – Conductor, music director and literary translator. He completed his studies between 1956 and 1961 at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as a student of András (Andrew) Kórodi. From 1961 to 1979 he was a music coach, chorus master and conductor at the Opera House, Budapest. He made his debut as a conductor with Sándor (Alexander) Szokolay's work, entitled: Blood-Wedding (Vérnász). The Opera House presented Szokolay's work, Hamlet, in 1968, also under Oberfrank's direction. From 1973 to 1975 he was Music Director of the Komische Oper in Berlin. Later, he conducted Zoltán Kodály's Háry János, and Mozart's the Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága), produced by Walter Felsenstein. Between 1975 and 1982 he was First Conductor of the Hungarian State Railways' (MÁV's) Symphony Orchestra; from 1968 he was Music Director of the Metropolitan Operetta Theater (Fővárosi Operettszínház), Budapest; from 1980 to 1983 he was its Artistic Director. From 1983 to 1989 he was the Primary Musical Director of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged, and also of the Symphony Orchestra. In 1989 he was again a member of the Opera House. He performed as a guest conductor regularly in Europe and the USA. Numerous operas were performed in Hungary in his translations. He keeps himself occupied with producing mainly operettas and musicals as well. He also made a number of recordings. He is a recipient of the Liszt Ferenc Prize (1970), the Merited Artist (1982) and the Outstanding Artist titles (1988). – B: 1445, 1426, T: 7684. → Szokolay, Sándor; Kórodi, András.

Obermayer, Ernő (Ernest) (Nagyszőlős, now Vynohradiv, Carpatho-Ukraine, 13 December 1888 - Szeged, 27 May 1969) – Chemical engineer, biologist and agriculturalist. He graduated from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1910. At that time, he began examining the oil content of green peppers. He furthered his education at the National Plant Improving Research Institute (Országos Növénynevelési Intézet) in Magyaróvár. As a plant research chemist, he worked first at the National Chemical Institute (Nemzeti Kémiai Intézet) in 1918, then in Kalocsa, where he succeeded with the creation of new paprika hybrids. In Szeged, he worked at the Chemical Research Station (Kémiai Kísérleti Állomás) (1927); then at the Agricultural Cultivation and Breeding Station (Növénytermesztési és Növénynevelő Kísérleti Állomás) (1931). He achieved significant results in improving the quality and cultivation of the red pepper of Szeged. He also dealt with the question of rice production in Hungary. He was the author of several articles and books. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1953), and was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1949. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7617.

Obernyik, Károly (Charles) (Kömlőd, 22 October 1815 - Pest, 17 August 1855) – Writer and playwright. He studied at the Reformed College of Debrecen. From 1837 he acted as a tutor to a nephew of the poet Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey, in Szatmárcseke. Kölcsey kindled in him the ambition to write. The French romantics, especially Victor Hugo influenced Obernyik. He moved to Pest in 1840; in 1841 he received a Degree in Law. He made the acquaintance of writers Gergely (Gregory) Czuczor and Imre (Emeric) Vahot. He befriended the poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, and was a member of the “Group of Ten”. In 1843 he won the Academy’s First Prize with his social drama Nobleman and Peasant (Főúr és pór); however, the censors refused to let the play be performed because of its anti-aristocracy stance. As Obernyik played a part in the preparation of the 1848 Revolution, in 1849 he deemed it safer to remove himself to Szatmárcseke. In 1850 he moved back to Pest, where he became a secretary to the drama selection committee of the National Theater. From 1851 until his death, he taught at the Reformed High School in Kecskemét. His friend, Gyula (Julius) Bulyovszky, finished his last drama, György Brankovics posthumously, and the lead character of the play was Gábor Egressy. His main works are: Inheritance (Örökség) play (1845); Firstborn (Elsőszülött) (1846); Unmarried Husband (Nőtlen férj) play (1846); Speeches (Beszélyek), with a biographical study by Lajos Abafi (1875), and The Complete Belletristic Works of Károly Obernyik, vols. i-iv (Obernyik Károly szépirodalmi összes munkái I-IV), arranged for publication with a biography by József Ferenczy (1878-1879). He is regarded as a pioneer of Hungarian social drama. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7617. → Kölcsey, Ferenc; Czuczor, Gergely; Petőfi, Sándor; Egressy, Gábor.

Oberschall, Magda (Mrs. Bárány) (Budapest, 22 December 1904 - Bryn Mawr, PA, USA, 28 October 1985). – Art historian. She received her education at the University of Budapest and at the University of Paris (Sorbonne). She wrote her doctoral thesis on The National Characteristics of Dutch and Flemish Painting (A holland és flamand festészet nemzeti sajátosságai) (1930). Between 1943 and 1946 she headed the History Section of the Hungarian National Museum in Budapest. In 1946 she lectured at the University of Budapest. After she emigrated from Hungary in 1946, for a while she resided in the USA; then she moved to Munich, where she worked for Radio Free Europe. After her retirement in 1970 she returned to the USA. Her main works include The Crown of Emperor Konstantinos Monomachos (Konstantinos Monomachos császár koronája) (Budapest, 1937); Hungarian Church Vestments (Magyarországi miseruhák) (1937); The Stalls of the Nyírbátor Church (A nyírbátori stallumok) (1937); Hungarian Furniture (Magyar bútorok) (1938); Old Hungarian Ironworks (Régi magyar vasművesség) (1941); Applied Arts in Buda During the Turkish-era (Iparművesség Budán a törökkorban) (1944), and Die Sankt Stephans Krone und die Insignien des Königreiches Ungarn (St. Stephen’s Crown and the Insignia of the Kingdom of Hungary) (Vienna-Munich, 1961). – B: 0883, 1267, T: 7617.

Obersovszky, Gyula (Julius) (pen name Gyula Oby) (Pécs, 1 January 1927 - Budapest, 15 March 2001) – Writer, poet and journalist. He was born into a family of Polish origin. In 1944 he joined the illegal Communist Party. After 1945 he was a clerk at a cement factory. His higher studies were at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, from 1946 he also worked for the Alliance of National People’s Colleges (Népi Kollégiumok Nemzeti Szövetsége – NÉKOSZ). From 1950 he was an associate of the paper the People’s News of County Hajdú-Bihar (Hajdú-Bihari Néplap); Editor for the satirical paper Bumblebee (Dongó), and one of the founders of the Bumblebee Stage (Dongó Színpad). He moved to Budapest and, from 1954, he was a board member of the Cultural Department of National Alliance of Hungarian Journalists (Magyar Újságírók Országos Szövetsége – MUOSZ). In the same year, he was excluded from the Communist Party and dismissed from his work. He participated in the siege of the Radio Building, Budapest, on 23 October 1956, and founded the newspaper Truth (Igazság) and, after 4 November 1956, he founded the illegal newspaper We are Alive (Élünk). In the dying days of 1956, he was arrested, prosecuted, and sentenced to death, but saved by international protest. In 1963 he was freed by general amnesty. Between 1967 and 1989, he worked as Editor for the paper Sport-bet (Sportfogadás). His literary works appeared in Hungary and abroad under the pen name: Gyula Oby. From 1991 he was Editor-in-Chief for the above-mentioned papers Truth (Igazság), We are Alive (Élünk), and the literary review We Exist (Vagyunk). His works include My Letter to X (Levelem X-hez) (1964); If You were (Ha lennél) poems (New York, 1971); Musical Eternity (Zenés örökkévalóság) diary (1971); Letters on the Subject of Love (Levelek a szerelem tárgyköréből) (1993); Prelude after Death (Prelűd halál után) (1995, 1998), and Black Letters (Fekete levelek) (1997). He received a number of awards, including the Imre Nagy Memorial Medal (1994), the Golden Pen (1996), and the Sándor Petőfi Freedom Prize (1999). – B: 1257, 0878, 1105, 1031, T: 7103.

Obrusánszky, Borbála (Barbara) (Hungary, 1974 ? - ) – Historian, Orientalist. She completed her studies at the University of Budapest between 1992 and 1997 in History and Mongol Civilization. This was followed by a postgraduate course at the Mongol State University in Ulan Bator, where she was awarded a Ph.D. in 1999. Between 2000 and 2002 she worked as an external consultant of the Asia Center at the University of Pécs, and organized the Mongol programs of the Shambala Tibet Center. During this period she participated in several expeditions to Mongolia and China. She became an archivist at the Folklore Shaman Archive at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Later, she became a lecturer at the Kőrösi Csoma Sándor University, Budapest. Ms. Obrusánszky is a member and/or founder of several Hungarian scientific associations. She is the author of numerous books and articles, including History of Mongolia (Mongólia története); The Thirty-three Faces of the Gobi (A Góbi harminchárom arca); The Marco Polo of the East (A Kelet Marco Polója); Nestorian Christianity (Nesztoriánus kereszténység); The Cultural History of the Huns (A Hunok kultúrtörténete); Three Mongolian Fables (Három Mongol mese), translation, and The Heritage of the Huns (A hunok öröksége), with L. Marácz (2009). She has provided analyses on Central-Asia in the scientific press. In addition, she is Editor-in-Chief of an educational journal. She received a Distinction of Azerbaijan “for invaluable work in deepening the relations between Azerbaijanis and Hungarians” (2010). – T: 1440, 1752, 2113, T: 2113, 7103. → Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor; Marácz, László.

Óbuda (Old Buda, Aquincum) – In the 1st century BC, Romans occupied the Transdanubian region that became the Roman Province of Pannonia to defend the Empire from the northeast. The Romans established the town of Aquincum on the western bank of the Danube River. In 106 AD Pannonia was divided into two regions, Pannonia Superior and Pannonia Inferior. Aquincum became the capital of Pannonia Inferior. Today the northwestern side of Budapest, Óbuda stands on the site of Aquincum. Emperor Claudius (41-54 AD) sent a Roman cavalry unit of 500 men to Aquincum. From 89 AD a legion of 6000 soldiers was stationed permanently in the town. A military town was built surrounding the legionary fortress, where the families of the legionaries, craftsmen, etc. lived, about 20,000–30,000 residents. A civil town was established 2 km north of the fortress. The town was promoted to the status of municipium around 124 AD, during the reign of Emperor Hadrian; and to the status of colonia in 194 AD, under Emperor Septimius Severus. From the middle of the 1st century to the end of the 4th century almost every Roman emperor visited Aquincum. The ruins of the Roman town of Aquincum can be seen in different places in Buda, but primarily in Aquincum, where new artifacts have been found as a result of continuous excavations. There are the ruins of an amphitheater an aqueduct, Christian chapels, and houses with floor heating systems and, among other objects the famous water organ is in the Museum. Today Óbuda is District III of Budapest. – B&T: 1308.→Aquincum Organ; Brigetium; Gorsium; Savaria; Strigonium; Pannonia.

Óbuda, Council of (1309) – Church Council regulating education in Hungary, resulting in important decrees. The IV. Lateran Council of 1215 decreed that in every archiepiscopal seat, there should be a theologian, who can teach the Scripture and the Pastorate. This council already required that each jurist should teach Canon Law; and church centers should have only grammaticus level of teaching Latin. When these decrees had been carried out, then, depending on the subjects taught, the collegiate schools of Esztergom and Kalocsa must have qualified as higher educational institutions. In all likelihood, Law must have been taught at Eger only in the 14th century. During the Age of liberal Humanism, it was allowed that arts to be developed to a high degree at Pécs and Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania). This Council also decreed that teachers should provide free instruction to clerics and poor students, while moderate teaching fees should be charged only to the more well-to-do. – B: 0945, T: 7456.

Óbuda Decrees (Óbudai végzések) (ca.1 September 1290) – After the coronation at Székesfehérvár on 23 July 1290, and after the meeting of the noblemen, prelates and lower nobility in Óbuda, King András III (Andrew, Endre) (1290-1301) issued the Decrees of the Diet, in which he directed that the proprietary rights of the churches be restored; he prohibited the alienation of the counties and the selling-out of dignities and castles as endowments to foreigners, non-Christians, or commoners. He tied the jurisdiction of county Bailiffs to four noblemen's judgment; confirmed the endowments of King Béla IV (1235-1270) and King István V (Stephen, 1270-1272). He prescribed the review of the endowments handed out by King (Kun) László IV (Ladislav, 1272-1290), also withdrew his unlawful endowments; regulated the compulsory military service, juridical privileges and immunity from taxes of the nobility and of the Transylvanian Saxons; assured the redemption of the dowry (dos) and the daughter's quarter part of legacy, and the redemption of the property of the relative, whose estate had been forfeited. He regulated the provincial administration of justice on the part of the Palatine; annulled the duty taxes introduced during the reign of King (Kun) László IV; took measures regarding the method of duty payments; decreed to pull down newly built fortifications and made decisions about returning illegally seized properties. He determined the method of paying the tithe; prescribed the Chancellor's price of charters; directed that the barons and noblemen hold an annual meeting at Fehérvár (now Székesfehérvár); arranged for the reparation of arbitrary measures, for the punishment of despotic lords of large estates, and declared null and void all the purchases and sales made under duress. These decrees were issued also for Transylvania at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) on 22 February 1291, at the meeting of the nobles, Szeklers (Székelyek, Transylvanian Hungarians) and Transylvanian Saxons. – B: 0945, T: 7456.

Ocskay, László (Ladislav) (Around 1680 - Érsekújvár, now Nové Zámky, Slovakia, 3 January 1710) – Kuruc (Hungarian rebel) military officer and also military officer of the Imperial Army. He was member of an aristocratic family of Nyitra County; served with the Pálffy Regiment and, later, the Ebergényi Cavalry (Hussar) Regiment. He fought in Italy, but deserted from the Imperial Army and, on 30 June 1703, joined Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II's rebel forces at his Zvadka camp, where he was promoted to Brigadier in August 1705. He became known and feared for his daring raids. However, following the Battle of Trencsén (now Trencin, Slovakia), he changed sides, rejoined the pro-Imperial Austrian “Labanc” forces, and received the rank of Colonel. The Kuruc forces of Érsekújvár, led by Ádám Jávorka captured him on 1 January 1710, and the military tribunal sentenced him to death by beheading. Publications on L. Ocskay include Ocskay, Gusztáv: The True Biography of Brigadier Ocskay and the Characterization of the Rákóczi-era (Ocskay brigadéros igazi életrajza és a Rákóczi-kor jellemzése) (Budapest, 1902), Thaly, Kálmán: Ocskay László I-II (Budapest, 1905) and Angyal, Dávid: Ocskay László (Historical Studies, Budapest, 1937). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7617.→Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Kuruc; Labanc.

October Diploma – A document issued by Emperor Franz Joseph (Ferenc József) on 20 October 1860, containing concessions to Hungary and the Czechs. This was inspired by the critical situation of Austrian absolutism, resulting from its recent diplomatic and military debacles: (1) Russia, a close ally of Austria, lost the Crimean war. (2) The second War of Italian Independence had ended in 1859, with an Austrian defeat at the hands of Napoleon III, and the Emperor was forced to cede Lombardy to the French. (3) In addition, there was the weak state of the Austrian economy. The Diploma gave the conservative nobles more power over their own lands through aristocratic feudalism. This policy was not satisfactory, and the Emperor made further concessions in the February Patent (Pátens) of 1861. The historians more or less agree that the October Diploma was the beginning of the “constitutional” period of the Habsburg Empire. – B: 1078, 1138, 1231, 1031, T: 7103.→Ferenc József; Patens of February; Teleki, Count László (2); Tisza, Count Kálmán.

Ode – The most outstanding Hungarian ode writers were: Benedek Virág, Mihály (Michael) Csokonai Vitéz, Dániel Berzsenyi and Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey. Kölcsey was more a master of the modern, rather than the old form. János (John) Arany and Mihály Tompa also wrote masterly odes. Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi’s songs often reached the sublimity of an ode, both in their patriotic and romantic sentiments. – B: 0942, T: 7617.→Virág, Benedek; Csokonai Vitéz, Mihály; Berzsenyi, Dániel; Kölcsey, Ferenc; Arany, János; Tompa, Mihály.

Ódry, Árpád (Budapest, 25 September 1876 - 5 April 1937) – Actor, manager and pedagogue. After completing his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, for several years he performed in the country: in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), Debrecen and Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania). In 1904 the Comedy Theater (Víg Színház) gave him a contract and, a year later, so did the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház). In 1923 he became its life member. From 1928 he was Chief Manager of the Magyar Rádió, and in 1930 he became the Director of the Academy of Dramatic Art. He directed 45 plays at the National Theater. He trained himself constantly and overcame his speech impediment; read avidly and studied languages. He played both tragic and comic roles in excellent style. His delivery and facial expressions could change shades; his presence created constant tension on the stage. He could portray different types of spiritual depths, especially differences in mentality. His roles included Prospero in Shakespeare’s The Tempest (A Vihar); King Lear; Richard III; title role in J.

Katona's Bánk bán; Lucifer in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája), and Löfborg in F.R. Ibsen's Hedda Gabler. He acted the leading roles in plays by Molière, Pierre Beaumarchais, Friedrich Schiller, Gerhart Hauptmann, Pierre Wolf, Jules Romains, Hervieu-Brieux, Rudolph Besier, W. Somerset Maugham, August Strindberg, Lajos (Louis) Zilahy, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz and Sándor (Alexander) Hevesi. He trained excellent actors and stage managers, such as Endre Gellért, Tamás Major, Magda Olty, István Egri, József Szendrő and Oszkár Ascher. He was great actor and great pedagogue. In 1927 he received the Greguss Prize. The theater on Vas Street and a senior actors' home in Budapest were named after him. – B: 0871, 0883, 1445, T: 7684.→ Major, Tamás; Olty, Magda, Szendrő, József; Ascher, Oszkár.

Odry, Lehel (de Pacsér) (Audry) (Nemesmilitics, now Svetozar Miletic, Serbia, 30 November 1837 - Arad, 5 February 1920) – Opera singer (bariton). He was educated at the Military College of Pécs, and at the high school of Baja. Actually, he became an iron-trader and worked in Pest and Vienna, where he studied bookkeeping. He worked as a book-keeper in a factory in Pest. He joined a theater, where he excelled with his baritone voice. In 1858, he was employed by the Theater of Pécs (Pécsi Színház) and, in 1862, he sang in the choir of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. Soon he joined the National Theater of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he achieved success (1865-1869). Thereafter, he returned to the National Theater, Budapest, where he played leading roles. Later, he spent a year in Vienna, then returned to the theater in Budapest and excelled in Hamlet, The Flying Dutchman (A Bolygó Hollandi), and The Queen of Sheba (Sába királynője). During the 1880s, he was a frequent performer in Vienna. He retired in 1895. His works include articles in Budapest magazines; and books: About Life and the Stage, vols. i, ii (Az életről és színpadról, I,II) (1875); Panna Piros (Piros Panna) musical play (1877), and Master of Song and Play (Ének és játékmester) (1893). Some of his works remained in manuscript. He was a versatile, highly educated artist (writer, painter, chemist) whose extraordinary creative talent to portray human nature enabled him to rule the Hungarian operatic stage. Several of his plays about village life were performed. – B: 0883, 0907, 1197, T: 7103.

Oesterreicher Manes, József (Joseph) (Óbuda ? - Vienna, 1832) – Physician and balneologist. By the Edict of Tolerance (Tűrelmi Rendelet), issued by Emperor and King József II (Joseph, 1780-1790), Oesterreicher was the first Jewish person in 1782 to qualify as a physician. During 1785 and 1786, a Royal Decree appointed him Chief Medical Officer at Balatonfüred. Oesterreicher was the first to introduce the therapeutic uses of electricity. His other achievement was the chemical analysis of the medicinal springs of Buda and Balatonfüred. He also produced a laxative-salt called: Sal Mirabilis Nativus Hungaricus. His main works were: Analysis of the Water of Buda (Analysis aquarum Budensium) (Vienna, 1781); Report on the Lasting Effects of and on the Efficacy of the Sour-wells of Füred (Nachricht von den Bestandheilen und Kräften des Füreder Sauerbrunnen) (Vienna, 1792), and Useful Medical Experiences with the Use of the Wondrous Hungarian Natural Salt (Természeti csodálatos magyar sóval való hasznos orvosi tapasztalatok) (1801). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7617.→Edict of Tolerance.

Oghuz Family Clan – Originates from an ancient Turkish name. Peter's son, László, known by this national name in 1274, was an estate holder in County Zala. – B: 0942, T: 7676.

Ogotáj, (Ögödej, also known as Genghis Kan), (1185-1241) – Conqueror. He was a son of Temujin. Together with his brother, Chugataj, he headed an army of 600,000 strong against Chozem and, from that time on, dedicated his life to the conquest of the Western World. In 1226 he became Genghis Khan, and immediately proceeded on his mission. He conquered the Caliphate of Baghdad and then Russia. Brother Julianus brought the first news to Hungary of his further war preparations. He conducted raids into Poland and Hungary and carried out widespread devastation. Only his death prevented the complete conquest of Hungary and Western Europe. Batu Khan returned the armies to Asia, where fratricidal wars broke out over Ogotáj's legacy. – B: 0942, 1031, T: 7658.→Chozem; Julianus Friar; Mongol-Tartar Invasion; Muhi, Battle; Ogotáj; Batu; Béla IV, King;

Ogurs – A branch of the Turkic peoples and languages. It was the Turkic ethnic group, the Onogurs, which was gradually assimilated by the Proto-Hungarians. The Onogurs belong to the Bulgaro-Turkic language group, which could have added some words to the Hungarian vocabulary when the Magyars were still in the vicinity of the Urals. A much more extensive addition of Turkic words to Hungarian (e.g. bika, búza, bor, gyümölcs, altogether about 200 words) must have taken place, when the Magyars were already on the Steppes by Lake Maeotis (now the Sea of Azov) north of the Caucasus Mountain Range, from the 6th to the 8th centuries, with evidence for significant linguistic and cultural influence on the Magyar language. – B: 1068, 1553, T: 7456.→Maeotis; Uralic languages; Turkic languages.

Oguzians – The earliest tribe among the Turks, whose origin was from the legendary Oghuz Khan. To this tribe belong the Cumanians (Kunok), Turkmen, and the Ozmanlis. By all accounts, its ancient name does not mean one tribe, but a whole tribal alliance. Their tribal bird was the Turul, (a kind of falcon), as it was for the Magyars. Their national organizational system was the same as that of the Szeklers. In both cases it was divided into six ethnic groups (nations) and each group into four branches. In total, there were 24 branches. The Oguzian language was probably a transition between the Oguzian-Magyar and the Turkic languages. – B: 0942, T: 7684.→Cumanians; Hungarian Language; Szeklers; Turul.

Okolicsányi, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 1 January 1894 - London, October 1954) – Physicist and an important pioneer in the development of television. He studied at the Budapest Polytechnic but, at the outbreak of World War I, his studies were interrupted, as he was conscripted into the army. After the war, he attempted to realize some of his practical inventions; however, the then current domestic situation did not make it possible. In 1926 he conducted research in Berlin into the fledgling science of television with Mihály (Michael) Dénes and Gusztáv (Gustavus) Wikkerhauser at the Telekor AG firm. After Telekor merged with the TEKADE firm of Nuremberg, he continued with his research there, together with Wikkerhauser. During this time Okolicsányi obtained his Ph.D. in Physics from the University of Erlangen, Germany. In 1936 he worked on television problems with Wikkerhauser at the Scopphony Company's research laboratory in London. At the 1938 British Radio Exhibition, they were able to project large pictures with the aforementioned system. After World War II, he worked on the problems of colored television. He patented in the USA his invention for color cathode-tube-line-changing, prior to the similar Lorentz-tube. His tube was produced in a series. Until his death he worked as chief engineer. His main work was entitled: Spiegelschraube (Fernsehen) (1930). – B: 0883, 1731, 7617.→Dénes, Mihály.

Okolicsányi-Kuthy, Dezső (Desider) (Vienna, 13 July 1869 - Budapest, 26 December 1947) – Physician. He completed his studies at the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest in 1892. After 1895, he studied in Austria, Italy, Switzerland, France, Egypt and Germany; he specialized in lung diseases, especially in tuberculosis. In 1898 he became Professor of Hydrotherapy and Tuberculosis at the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest. From 1901 to 1909 he was Director of the Lung Institute of Budakeszi. After 1914 he became Head of the Lung Unit of St. János Hospital in Budapest. He retired in 1939. He is regarded as one of the pioneers in the treatment of tuberculosis. He was the author of many scientific works concerning its treatment, including Clinical Treatment of Tuberculosis... (A tüdővész szanatóriumi gyógyítása...) (in Hungarian 1897, in German 1898); The Disease of Tuberculosis (A gümőkór) (1908), and Prevention Against Tuberculosis (A tüdővész elleni védekezés) (1913). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7656.

Oláh, Gábor (Gabriel) (Tapolca, 19 August 1938 - ) – Film-director. From 1958 to 1962 he studied at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. In 1957 and 1958 he was a surgeon's assistant at the Hospital on Tétényi Street. From 1963 to 1993 he was Manager of Mafilm. He worked for the Hungarian TV, and also for the Radio. In 1990 he published a magazine and TV program for youth, called Now (Most). He is one of the most outstanding and productive film documentarians. His works include The House (A ház) diploma film (1963); Curiosity (Kíváncsiság), documentary (1963); The Mummy Interrupts (A mumia közbeszól) cartoon, (1967); The Three Wishes (Három kívánság) documentary (1968); Early Risers (Koránkelők) documentary (1970); Come With Us to the Zselic Jungle (Tartson velünk a zselici rengetegbe) documentary, TV (1972); We Catch it, You Carry it (Fogjuk meg és vigyétek) cartoon (1978); Public Enemy (Közellenség) TV documentary (1980); Hospital in the Heart of the City (Kórház a város közepén) TV documentary (1986); With Great Pleasure (Nagyon szívesen) TV program (1993); Lucky People (Szerencsés emberek) documentary (1997); Umbrellas (Ernyők) TV series (1997), and Elizabeth Bridge Is On My Lot (Telkemen az Erzsébet-híd), radio documentary play. He is a recipient of the Miskolc Festival's Grand Prize; Grand Prize of the Kőszeg Festival, and Special Prize of the Veszprém Festival. – B: 0874, T: 7684.

Olah, Georg Andrew (Oláh, György András) (Budapest, 22 May 1927 –) – Research Chemist.

He was educated at the Polytechnic in Budapest, where he became Assistant Professor of Organic Chemistry and was also an Associate Scientific Director of the Central Research Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. After the crushed Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight in 1956, he emigrated to the USA. He became a research scientist at the Dow Chemical Company, then Professor and Chairman of the Department of Chemistry at Case Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio. Later, he became the Chairman of the Combined Departments of Chemistry of the Case Institute of Technology and Case Western Reserve University, and was a C. F. Mabery Distinguished Professor of Research in Chemistry. Oláh became a distinguished Professor of

of Southern California in 1977, and is presently there. He is interested in a wide range of organic chemistry such as: electrophilic organic reactions, particularly carbonium ion reactions, Friedel-Crafts chemistry, aliphatic and aromatic substitutions and hydrocarbon chemistry. He pioneered new techniques and solvent systems of super-acid type, which allow the study of reactive intermediates, particularly carbonations, as long-lived stable species in solutions; the application of physical methods such as nuclear magnetic resonance and Raman spectroscopy to the study of these systems and extensive structural and mechanistic studies, involving large variety of organic systems and many other topics. He has published 1200 scientific papers, 15 books, and has 115 patents. His books, among others, include Introduction to Theoretical Organic Chemistry, in German; Friedel-Crafts and related Reactions, vols. i-iv; Halonium Ions; Superacids; Hydrocarbon Chemistry, and the autobiographical A Life of Magic Chemistry. In 1994 he was awarded the Nobel Prize (unshared) and he holds 34 International Awards and Medals, and Honorary Doctorates from Hungarian Universities, as well as American, English and French Universities; he was also awarded the Széchenyi Grand Prize in 2011. - B: 0872, 7718, 1122, T: 7103.

Oláh, Gusztáv (1) (Gustavus) (Lándséri and Talmácsi) (Eperjes, now Prešov in Slovakia, 10 January 1857 - Budapest, 31 January 1944) – Physician, neurologist and psychiatrist. He graduated from the Medical School of the University of Vienna in 1880, specializing in Psychiatry. He started his practice at the National Psychiatric Institute of Lipótmező (a suburb of Budapest) in 1881. In 1889 he became Director of the Psychiatric Institute of Angyalföld (another suburb of Budapest). In 1910 he returned to the Lipótmező Institute as Director. He retired from active practice in 1925, and became President of the Hungarian Society of Psychiatrists. He had been a correspondent member of the Société Médicopsychologique of France. Some of his major contributions to psychiatry were: Law-protection of Psychiatric Patients (Az elmebetegek jogvédelméről) (1898); Treatment of Psychiatric Illnesses (Elmebetegségek ápolása) (1903); Wartime Observations of a Psychiatrist (Elmeorvosi háborús megfigyelések) (1916), and Political Psychopaths (Politikai pszichopaták) (1923). He recognized the importance of no-restraint and open-door treatments in psychiatry and the protection of the law for psychiatric patients. His life and work were significant for the development of Hungarian psychiatry. – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7656. → Oláh, Gusztáv (2).

Oláh, Gusztáv (2) (Gustavus) Budapest, 20 August 1901 - Munich, Germany, 19 December 1956) – Opera director, stage designer and artist. He was the son of the psychiatrist Gusztáv Oláh. As a polytechnic student, he was appointed by the Opera House as Assistant Stage Designer. Already in his initial years, he designed more than a hundred exhibits in the Opera House and in the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In 1928 he was a scenic supervisor of the state theaters; then, in 1936, stage-designer, later Chief Stage Designer and Director in the Opera House. He scored great success at the Maggio Musicale of Florence, where the Budapest Opera House Ensemble performed Respighi's opera, The Flame (La Fiamma), of which he was director, stage- and costume designer. He was a talented painter and musician; in scholarly, esthetic and technical fields, he was a lecturer at the Academy of Applied Arts and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. He was also Director of the National Theater concurrently with his activities at the Opera. In 1943, from a novel by Lajos Zilahy, he directed a film entitled: Something is Carrying by the Water (Valamit visz a víz). He participated in directing the first few open-air plays in Szeged. A number of European theaters (Sweden, Soviet Union, East Germany) employed him on several occasions. He died unexpectedly during the performance of Mussorgsky's opera Khovanshchina in Munich. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize twice, in 1951 and 1954, and was nominated for the title of outstanding artist in 1952. A memorial plate is named after him. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 456.→Oláh, Gusztáv (1).

Oláh, Gyula (Julius) (Arad, now in Romania, 3 February 1836 - Budapest, 18 June 1917) – Physician. He graduated from the Medical School of Pest in 1863. From 1863 to 1865 he worked at the Rókus Hospital in Budapest. From 1867 to 1872 he was responsible for the medical administration of Jászladány district. From 1872 to 1875 he was elected a Member of Parliament. After 1875 he became Advisor in the Ministry of Health. From 1883 to 1885 he again became a medical administrator of the town of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). After 1885, he became Deputy Minister of the Health Services of Hungary. He devoted all his life to the improvement of the country's medical services. In all his publications, he focused on their improvements. He wrote a comprehensive book on public health entitled On the Situation of Public Health in Hungary (Magyarország közegészségügyi viszonyairól) (1899). His other works include General Medical and Health Conditions in Hungary (1889) and Physicians' Privileges and Responsibilities (Az orvosok jogai és kötelességei) (1898). In his medical research, he concentrated on the prevention of cholera infestations, e.g. Treatment of Cholera (Bp. 1909). In 1890, he launched the periodical Public Health Review (Közegészségügyi Szemle). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7656.

Oláh, Miklós (Nicholas) (Olahus, Nicolaus) (Nagyszeben, now Sibiu, Transylvania, Romania, ca. 10 January 1493 - Vienna, 15 January 1568) – Archbishop, politician and historian. On his paternal side, he came from a Wallachian (now Romanian) aristocratic family that settled in Transylvania, Hungary. He studied in Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania) and resided at the Court of the Bishop of Várad, Zsigmond Thurzó, and subsequently at the Court of King Ulászló II (1490-1516). In 1516 he became a priest and later, Canon of Esztergom. After the loss of the Battle of Mohács (1526), as the Royal Secretary, he escorted the widowed Queen Mária Habsburg to the German lowland and remained with her in Brussels until 1542. It is here that he produced two of his thoughtfully reflective and related works, as initial pieces of a historic series, Hungaria (1536) and Athila (Attila) (1537). He was a friend of Erasmus of Rotterdam, whom he also asked, among others, to review his works. Returning to Hungary, he became Vice-Chancellor to King Ferdinand (1526-1564), and later, Bishop of Zágráb (now Zagreb, Croatia). Following these positions, he became Chancellor to the King, the Archbishop of Eger, and from 1553, Archbishop of Esztergom; then Head Chancellor, and finally Prince Regent. Fleeing from the Turks, he moved his primary residence from Esztergom to Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). He became an unhindered feudal lord, and invited the Jesuits into Hungary to further the interests of the Counter-Reformation. He labored diligently in the interest of the Catholic Church and for the improvement of its schools. In 1558 he elevated the Nagyszombat Collegiate School to Academy status. In the history of Hungarian humanism, it was he, who linked together the era of King Lajos II (Louis) with the humanism of the latter half of the 16th century. His works are notable for having the Renaissance qualities of beautiful landscapes, portraying the loveliness and richness of the nation. Like the chronicler János (John) Thuróczi, he also had a certain anecdotal narrative style, which remained unique in Hungarian prose. His publications include Hungaria et Aiola, published by Mátyás (Matthias) Bél (1735); Ephemerides, published by Martinus Kovachich (1798), and Catalogus archiepiscoporum

Strigoniensium 1009-1564, published by Arnold Ipolyi (1875). – B: 1136, 1122, 0882, 0883, 0945, 1257, T: 7676, 7617. → Mohács, Battle of; Mária, Queen; Bél Mátyás; Thuróczy, János.

Old Gradual – A large, printed Reformed Liturgical Hymn Book, published in 1636, in Gyulaféhérvár (now Aiud, Transylvania, Romania), on the initiative of Reigning Prince Gábor Bethlen (1613-1629). It was compiled and edited by János (John) Keserüi Dajka and István Geleji Katona, and published by and at the expense of Reigning Prince György Rákóczi I (1630-1648). Two hundred original autographed copies were published.

The Preface is an important historical document on the musical leanings and life of the 17th Century Reformed Church in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). It contains more than 800 folios, a rich collection of annual Church Services, and an earlier work of Bishops of the Reformed Church. The work is a collection of liturgical hymns for diverse occasions, and it contains two Gregorian Passions, written on four stave lines in Gothic choral notation. The Gregorian chants were adopted, with certain modifications, from Gradual manuscripts, but several melodies – especially the general Sunday antiphons – are the work of István Geleji Katona. Besides the verse cycles and several Benedicti, there are 252 antiphons and 77 hymns, as well as psalms and prose translations. However, the rapidly spreading Puritanism movement within the Reformed Church soon swept away this type of church service. – B: 1194, 1136, T: 7607. → Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Rákóczi I, Prince György; Geleji Katona, István; Keserüi Dajka, János.

Olgyay, Miklós (Nicholas) (Letenye, 15 May 1904 - Budapest, 29 November 1958) – Plant pathologist and mycologist. In 1929, he obtained a degree in Agriculture from the University of Economics, Budapest and, in 1934, received a Ph.D. in the field of Plant Pathology. From 1927 he studied at the Budapest Polytechnic, first as a research student, then working as a demonstrator, and later as assistant lecturer. Between 1941 and 1947 he was a lecturer in experimentation at the Institute of Plant Protection. In 1944 he was an instructor; in 1947 a professor in the Economics Department of the University of Economics; from 1948, a professor in the Department of Horticulture, and from 1953, a professor at the Horticultural College. His field of research covered mainly the study of fungi-damaging cultivated plants, with numerous published works in this field. His works include Plant Pathology, the Mycological Section, textbook, (1938, 1951), and Horticultural Plant Pathology (1953). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Olmütz Constitution – A Constitution proclaimed in Olmütz by Emperor and King Franz Joseph (Ferenc József, 1830-1916) on 4 March 1849 and, at the same time, he dissolved the Imperial Council. The young Emperor and King's decision was inspired by the advisors of the Imperial Court, which fled from Vienna to Olmütz, in fear of a revolution. The drastic step was taken because the battle against the Hungarian army was won by Windischgrätz at Kápolna, on 26 February 1849, and he mistakenly reported that he had completely destroyed the Hungarian armies. Consequently, Franz Joseph, in the new Constitution, withdrew the April Laws, promulgated by his predecessor, Ferdinand V (1835-1848), and abolished Hungary's pre-1848 Constitution, separating Transylvania, the Partium, Croatia, Slovenia, the Bácska, the Temes region, and the Military Border region from Hungary. He declared these Provinces, together with the Hungarian Kingdom, part of a "united and indivisible Austrian Empire". This decision of the Camarilla caused national outrage in Hungary and the National Army, the Honvédség, expelled all Austrian troops from the country. The Habsburg Court could only defeat the Hungarian War of Independence with the aid of the 200,000-strong Russian army. – B: 1230, 1153, 1231, T: 7665.→Ferenc József; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Olmütz Peace – The Peace Treaty made in December of 1478 between Hungarian King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) and the Polish Wladislas (Ulászló), who had been crowned Czech King, was ceremonially ratified on 21 July 1479 at Olmütz (now Olomouc, Czech Republic). In this treaty, Mátyás I accepted the conditions ending the Czech War, which was started in 1468. He also recognized Wladislas' right to use the Czech royal title, which was now shared between them. After Mátyás' death, Ulászló could regain the territories then held by Mátyás – Silesia, Moravia, and Lausitz – for a payment of 400,000 golden forints. Though King Mátyás I could retain his Czech territories, the Polish Jagellos would now have the possibility of obtaining the Hungarian throne. – B: 1230, 0942, 1031, T: 7665.→Matthias I, King.

Olt, Károly (Charles) (Zágráb, now Zagreb in Croatia, 14 May 1904 - Budapest, 22 March 1985) – Politician. In 1920 he moved to Hungary (dismembered by the Treaty of Trianon in 1920) from Croatia. In 1929 he organized an East-Europe Seminar, at which university students became acquainted with Marxism. From 1930 he was a member of the Communist Party. In 1932 and 1933 he was arrested for Communist student activities and convicted. In 1933 he was placed under police supervision. From 1934, as a private clerk, he was active in the Communist section of the National Association of Private Employees. From 1939 he took part in the reorganization of the Communist Workers' Party and, until the end of 1941, he was involved in illegal press information work. In the summer of 1944, he became a member of the Intellectual Committee of the Communist Party and took part in the organization of the Resistance Movement. In 1945-1946 he was President of the Insurance Company of Private Employees; from 1946 to 1947, he was in charge of the Cadre Division of the Communist Party. From September 1947 to 1 June 1949 he was Minister of Public Welfare; in 1949 he was elected President of Parliament. In 1949-1950 he was Secretary of the Presidium. From February 1950 until 24 October 1956, he was Treasurer in the Government. Between 1956 and 1959 he was Head of the Secretariat of the Hungarian Revolutionary Workers-Peasants' Government. From 1959 until his retirement in 1961, he was President of the State Office for Church Affairs (Állami Egyházügyi Hivatal). Between 1945 and 1967 he was Member of Parliament and, from 1957 to 1961 member of the Presidium. – B: 0883, 0945, T: 7456.→State Office for Church Affairs.

Oltványi, Ambrus (Ambrose) (Budapest, 1 April 1932 - Budapest, 30 September 1983) – Literary historian. His entire life was affected by childhood paralysis. He earned teaching and doctoral qualifications from the Department of Humanities of the University of Budapest (1954). Afterwards he worked at the Institute for Literary History. On November 15th 1956, Soviet soldiers arrested him for allegedly distributing counter-revolutionary pamphlets. He was freed within a few days. From 1957 he did not take an official job; instead, his research and criticism appeared in scholarly publications. His main area of study was 19th century Hungarian Literature and Cultural History. His compilations and collected critical writings were exemplary. Between 1962 and 1975 he was involved in preparing several of Mór Jókai's novels for publication. After his death, a fund was created in his name for researchers of literary history. His publications include The Letters of Mór Jókai, 1860-1876 (Jókai Mór levelezése, 1860-1876) (1975); The Diary of István Széchenyi (Széchenyi István: Napló) (1978), and Eötvös József's The Ruling Ideas of the Nineteenth Century and their Impact upon the State (A XIX. század uralkodó eszméinek befolyása az államra), political philosophy (1981). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.→Jókai, Mór; Széchenyi, Count István; Eötvös, Baron József.

Olty, Magda (Budapest, 28 June 1912 - Budapest, 22 February 1983) – Actress. After completing her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1931, she entered into a contract with the National Repertory Theater of Nándor Alapi, appearing not only in prose roles, but also in operetta and soubrette roles. From 1933 to 1968 she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In 1943, because she took part in the Resistance Movement, she was arrested at Sopronköhida, from where she was freed in 1945. Between 1948 and 1962 she was a teacher at the Academy of Dramatic Art and, from 1957 to 1962, was its Director. She appeared in all the housemaid roles of the Molière plays; she was at home in the roles of gossip-mongering, clever, temperamental girls and young wives, but excelled also in conversational roles. Earlier in her career she completed the stage management course of Sándor Hevesi, successfully staging several plays. She worked successfully as a teacher of actors and appeared in several films as well. She retired in 1968, never to appear on the stage again; she spent the final decade and a half of her life in complete seclusion at Nagykovácsi in the Buda Mountains, west of Budapest. Her main roles included Mariska in Szigligeti's Lly-lad (Liliomfi); Beatrice in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hűhó semmiért); Jessica in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár); Emilia in Shakespeare's Othello, Dorina in Molière's Tartuffe; Toinette in Molière's The Hypochondriac (Le Malade Imaginaire; A képzelt beteg); Nicole in Molière's The Citizen Turned Gentleman (Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme; Az úrhathnám polgár); Varja in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard; Ilma in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde (Csongor és Tünde); Canina in Ben Jonson's Volpone, and in the title role of George Bernard Shaw's Candida. She was a recipient of the Jászai Prize in 1954, the Kossuth Prize in 1955, and the title of Outstanding Artist in 1968. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Hevesi, Sándor; Ódry, Árpád.

Ölvedi, János (John) (Érsekújvár, now Nové Zámky, Slovakia, 20 July 1914 - Munich, 22 April 1983) – Writer and journalist. He begun his higher studies at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), in 1934, and he continued his studies at the University of Budapest; but early in 1937, he gave them up. He took part in the work of the University Circle. From the spring of 1935 he wrote analyses in the journal Hungarian Review (Magyar Szemle) on the problems of the Hungarian minority in Slovakia. When the Hungarian-inhabited part of Northern Hungary (Slovakia) was returned to Hungary in 1938, he became Secretary in the Ministry of Minority Affairs. From there he advanced to the diplomatic service, becoming Press Attaché in the Consulate at Sofia, Bulgaria. From early 1944 he was a correspondent of the daily, Independence (Függetlenség). In the spring of 1945 he emigrated to the West and, in the post-war years, took an active part in the cultural life of the Hungarian emigrants of Germany; later, he went to the USA. In 1951, Radio Free Europe in New York engaged him as a correspondent; in March 1953 he was transferred to its Editorial Office in Munich. He worked there (under the name László Nyárhidi) until July 1979, when he retired. In the center of his interest as a writer were the nationality problem and the fate of the Hungarian minority in Slovakia. Studies and articles dealing with this subject appeared mainly in New Horizon (Új Látóhatár) and Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle), sometimes also in New Hungaria (Új Hungaria), and Viennese Diary (Bécsi Napló). His works include Letters from Exile (Levelek a száműzetésből) (1947) and Solar Eclipse, Hungarians in Slovakia (Napfogyatkozás, Magyarok Szlovákiában) (1985). – B: 1724, T: 7456.

Ölvedi, László (Ladislav) (Érsekújvár, now Nové Zámky, Slovakia, 22 May 1903 - Budapest, 21 June 1931) – Poet. He obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Budapest. Thereafter, he returned to Slovakia. He was a correspondent of the Hungarian Newspaper (Magyar Hírlap) of Prague. As a Hungarian patriot and advocate of irredentist aspirations, he opposed the leftist Sarló movement. He often traveled abroad. For a while, as the representative of the interests of the Horthy Government, he was the Secretary of the Hungarian Society of Paris; at a workers' meeting there, he was seriously wounded and died. His lyric poems are characterized by extreme nationalistic spirit. His works include We Are Waiting for Somebody (Valakit várunk), poems (1922); Song of the Miner (A bányász éneke), poems (1923), and Muses (Múzsák), poems (1928). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Omega Rock Band – Formed in September 1962, Budapest, by László (Ladislav) Benkő organist and János (John) Kóbor as singer and rhythm guitarist. Although the musicians have changed over the years, the current group has remained the same for over 30 years: János Kóbor (“Mecky”) lead vocalist; György Molnár (“Elefánt”) guitar; László Benkő (“Lac”) keyboard and singer; Tamás Mihály (“Misi”) double bass and singer, and Ferenc Debreceni (“Ciki”) drums. After a few years of inactivity, the band reunited in 1994 with former member Gábor Presser joining them at concerts and contributing several tracks. The band has achieved great international success through releases in a variety of languages, and tours in England and Germany in the late 1960s and throughout the 1970s. The 1969 song, Pearls in her hair (Gyöngyhajú lány) became an international hit. They produced more than 15 Hungarian language albums including Nightly Highway (Éjszakai országút) (1970); Omega 6: I don't know your name (Nem tudom a neved) (1975); Gammapolis (1979); Omega XIII: Babylon (1987), and Omega XVI: Heavenly Sign (Égi jel) (2006). They have some 10 English language albums including Omega Red Star from Hungary (1968); 200 Years After the Last War (1974); Sky Rover (1978); Gammapolis (1979), and Transcendent (1996). A German studio album was also released: Das Deutsche Album (1973). They also released 10 live albums including People's Stadium (Népstadion) (1994, 1999). Onczay, Csaba (Budapest, 29 December 1946 - ) – Cello virtuoso. He was a student of Antal (Anthony) Friss at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1965-1970). He participated in the master-course of André Navarra in Siena, Italy (1970). He pursued his post-graduate studies at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory of Music, Moscow (1970-1971). Since 1971 he has been teaching at the Liszt Academy of Music; since 1994, he is a university professor in Budapest. He was a visiting professor at Oberlin Conservatory of Music in Oberlin, Ohio, USA, and at Indiana University Jacobs School of Music (cello) in Bloomington, Ind., USA (2006-2007). Onczay has won first prize at the International Pablo Casals Competition in Budapest (1973), and first prize at the International Villa Lobos Competition of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil (1976). He appears as a soloist in some of the most prestigious concert halls of Europe, America, Korea, and Japan. He regularly holds master-courses in Italy, Germany, France, Austria, Switzerland, USA, Japan and Hungary. He has been invited to many international Festivals as a soloist and chamber musician. They include the Pablo Casals Festival in Prades, France, and Kronberg, Germany, the Spring Festival in Budapest, the Beaumaris Festival in Bergamo, Italy, and the Spring Festival in Prague, Czech Republic; and also in Gifu and Ishikawa in Japan. In addition to numerous recordings of concerts for radio and television, Mr. Onczay has recorded numerous CD's: concertos of C.P.E. Bach, R. Schumann, Lalo, Villa E. Lobos, E. Dohnányi, and all the sonatas of Beethoven, and solo suites of J. S. Bach. He has been awarded the Liszt Ferenc Prize (1976), the Merited Artist title (1986), the Bartók-Pásztory Prize in 2004, and the Kossuth Prize (1993). – B: 0874, 2054, T: 7103.

Ond, (9-10th century) – One of the khans (leaders) of the Seven Hungarian Tribes. According to the sources of the chronicler Anonymus, at the time of the conquest of the Carpathian Basin, Ond, together with khans Ketel and Tarcal, delivered the gifts from Khagan (Reigning Prince) Árpád to Zalán (Szalan, Salán?) the then ruler of the Trans-Tisza region, consisting of twelve white horses, twelve camels, twelve Cumanian boys, twelve Ruthenian girls, and several more treasures. Zalán graciously accepted these gifts and allowed the bearers to return after ten days. Árpád donated as living quarters to Ond and his tribes the land of Szer, extending from the River Tisza to the Marsh Botva and from Lake Körtvély to the hills of Alpár. His son Ete constructed the Fortress of Csongrád. Khan Ond was the ancestor of the Kalán and Kölcse Clans. The Kölcse Clan's name is preserved by the town of Kölcse in the Trans-Tisza region, and by the Kölcsey family that produced the famous 19th century poet, Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey, author of the Hungarian National Anthem, the Himnusz. The Kalán Clan's name is preserved in a town in the County of Zemplén, and in two villages in the County of Vas.– B: 0942, 0663, T: 7658, 7456. → Anonymus; Árpád; Kölcsey, Ferenc.

Ónod Parliament – The Hungarian National Assembly of the Estates, convoked by Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, the Reigning Prince of Transylvania, on 31 May 1707 at Ónod for negotiations with the Imperial (Habsburg) Party, failed. It was held in Korom in Northern Hungary, near the castle of Ónod and ended on 22 June the same year.

During the negotiations, on 6 June, Count Miklós (Nicholas) Bercsényi brought up for discussion Turóc County's 31 January circular, which supported the peace, but also contained accusations. Since the two representatives of the County, Menyhért (Melchior) Rakovszky and Kristóf (Christopher) Okolicsányi, could not prove the accusations, in their anger, those present attacked Rakovszky and cut him to pieces, while Okolicsányi was sentenced to death and beheaded on 9 June. On 13 June, Rákóczi proposed to the Assembly to abrogate the Habsburg's right to the Hungarian throne, since their only intention was to ruin the country. Bercsényi finished his spirited speech supporting Rákóczi's proposal with the words "... Starting from today Joseph is not our Emperor!" The Estates passed the Law, finalizing Hungary's separation from Austria. On the same day, Parliament elected Ferenc Rákóczi II to be the Reigning Prince of Hungary, and entrusted the governing of the country to the Prince and a Senate. On 6 June 1707, in his proclamation from Ónod, Ferenc Rákóczi II made known to the peoples of Europe the annulment of the Habsburgs' right to the throne and declared the Hungarian throne to be vacant.

On 29 June, in the name of those high ranking members of the aristocracy, who remained loyal to the Habsburg House, Prince Pál (Paul) Esterházy, the Palatine, protested against the decisions of the Parliament of Ónod and, in his 29 August proclamation delivered to the European states, he declared them invalid. – B: 0942, 1078, 1230, T: 7665.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Bercsényi, Miklós; Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Esterházy, Prince Pál.

Ónodi, Adolf (Miskolc, 7 November 1857 - Vienna, 15 November 1919) – Physician. In 1881 he graduated from the Medical School of the University of Budapest. From 1880 to 1887 he was an assistant professor at the Institute of Anatomy in Budapest. From 1887 to 1890, he ran a private practice for the treatment of laryngitis in the Korányi Clinic. After 1890 he became Professor of Rhino-laryngology. In 1919 he moved to Vienna. He was a member of the Société Française d’Otologie, de Laryngologie et de Rhinologie and the American Laryngological, Rhinological and Otological Society. In his research, he concentrated on the study of the nervous system of the larynx and the nasal cavities. Some of his publications are Das Geherin und die Nebenholen der Nase (Wien, 1908) and Die Nase (Bp. 1916). His famous anatomy collection was deposited in London, but it perished during World War II. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1896). – B: 1730, 1160, 0907, T: 7656.

Onogurs (Onogundurs or Utigurs) – Early Hungarian people’s tribal alliance of ten, assumed to be Hungarian-speaking tribes, with settlements (territories) formerly located north of the Caucasian Mountains. Their name (Onogur) means – in Turkish – “ten Ogurs” or “ten arrows”. Byzantine writers mention them from the middle of the 5th century. In the second half of the 7th century, they defeated – through several battles – the “Várkhonys”, and settled down in the Carpathian Basin. The Illuminated Chronicle (Chronicon pictum, Képes Krónika) of 1360 records the arrival of the Onogurs in the Carpathian Basin in 677, and mentions it as a “return arrival” (arrival the second time). It also records Árpád’s arrival without a date in the following manner: “God gave back Pannonia to the Hungarians...” According to the assumption of the chronicler, the arrival of Árpád in the Carpathian Basin enabled the Onogurs to regain their ancient land, Pannonia. – B: 1666, 1031, T: 7684.→Hungarians, History of; Dual Conquest; Dual, Successive Hungarian Settlement; László, Gyula; Illuminated Chronicle.

On the Administration of the Empire (De administrando imperio) – The literary work of the Byzantine Emperor Constantine VII, Porphyrogenitus, “the purple-born” (September 905 - 9 November 959). He was a scholarly emperor, who wrote books in Greek, among them the noted one. The author did not give its title; a Roman translator did. The work describes, inter alia, the Petchenegs (Besenyők), the Kievan Rus, Bulgarians, Khazars, Tartars and the Magyars, to whom it refers as “Turks in the north”; the Arabs to the east and south; and the Germans, Lombards, Venetians, Dalmatians Croats, Serbs and Moravians to the west. He provided even geographical information about imperial provinces, with useful records of diplomatic events. As to the Magyars: it contains valuable information about them, including information about the 10th century Magyar language, primarily in the form of personal names and geographical features, which he obtained from the Magyar visitors to his Court, i.e. the tribal leaders Bulcsu, and Tormás (Termatzu), as well as from his envoys to the Hungarians. The work listed for the first time the names of the seven Hungarian tribes: Nyék, Megyer, Kürt-Gyarmat, Tarján, Jenő, Kér, Keszi. – B: 0881, 1031, T: 7103.→Bulcsu; Khazars.

Opera House, Hungarian State (Magyar Állami Operaház) – The construction of the Budapest Opera House in Renaissance style, was commissioned by Emperor and King Ferenc József (Franz Joseph (1830-1916). The preparations for the construction began when the Interior Minister, Count Gyula (Julius) Szapáry, invited some specialists for this purpose. The leading architect, Miklós (Nicholas) Ybl, prepared a plan for the building, which was accepted. The building operations were started on 11 October 1875, and were completed by 1880. The safety system was additionally planned and carried out, using the up-to-date, hydraulically operated Asphaleia system, although, for the time being, the gaslight illumination was retained. The Hungarian Royal Opera House, one of the most attractive opera houses in Europe, was opened on 27 September 1884. During the festive opening performance, King Francis Joseph I appeared briefly. The program consisted of Ferenc (Francis) Erkel's opera Bánk bán Act I, the great overture to his opera, László Hunyadi, and Act I. of Richard Wagner's opera, Lohengrin. The complete modernization of the building was completed by the time of its hundredth anniversary. Frigyes (Frederick) Podmaniczky was the administrator for the first ten years. The Musical Director was the composer, Ferenc Erkel. Famous figures as directors in the first decades were: Gustav Mahler (1888-1891), Arthur Nikisch (1893-1895) and Imre (Emeric) Mészáros (1907-1913). During the interwar years, the work of the director Miklós (Nicholas) Radnai stood out (1925-1935). In the years of World War II, it was László Márkus, who worked as Director (1940-1944) and Sergio Failoni acted as guest conductor. The work of the Opera House was reorganized after the end of the war in 1945. In the post-war years, the leading personage proved to be János (John) Ferencsik, who was Principal Conductor from 1945 to 1957, and Musical Director from 1957 to 1973, and 1978 to 1984. Aladár Tóth was Director between 1945 and 1955. Otto Klemperer was guest conductor for three active years (1947-1950). Gusztáv Oláh worked as the leading stage manager from 1936 to 1956. Lamberto Gardelli was a famous guest personality in the 1960s, and later. Emil Petrovics filled the director's position for four seasons. After the death of Ferencsik, the musical director was András (Andrew) Kórodi from 1984, Ervin Lukács from 1987, and Ádám Medveczky from 1990. The Hungarian State Opera House has become the postwar new name for the Budapest Opera (Hungary having become a Republic in the Communist era after 1945). The grand operas on the program were the works of Mozart, Bellini, Donizetti, Verdi, Gounod, Thomas, and the increasingly often-performed works of Wagner, especially Lohengrin, Tannhäuser and The Flying Dutchman, while the result of Mahler's creative activity brought onto the stage Das Rheingold and Die Valküre from Der Ring des Nibelungen cycle. New attractive operas by Puccini started to appear on the stage from 1894; he himself conducted and interpreted them on occasion. Mascagni's one-act opera, Cavalleria Rusticana started a long string of successes from 1890. Between 1912 and 1915, the stage manager, Dr. Sándor Hevesi, excelled with his production of the works of Mozart and Verdi, both musically and dramatically; he also undertook to present a more recent opera: Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov. Stage works of Béla Bartók began to appear: the ballet, The Wooden Prince (A fából faragott királyfi) in 1917; the one-act opera Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú herceg vára) in 1918, and the ballet-pantomime, The Miraculous Mandarin (A csodálatos mandarin) in 1919. Ballet presentations were slow to develop in the Opera House; however, from 1902 to 1915, Miklós (Nicholas) Guerra created twenty choreographies with talented soloists; his most successful work was The Dwarf Grenadier (A törpe gránátos), by F. S. Guerra M., which remained on the stage till 1934, and reached 100 performances. After World War I, the repertoire was modernized after Miklós Radnai was appointed as director. Novelties like Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande, Stravinsky's ballet Petrushka, and his opera Oedipus were performed. Respighi's opera, The Flame (La flamma, A láng), became a great success as a result of the multi-faceted artistic stage work of the internationally known Gusztáv Oláh. In the 1930s, a new Verdi cycle and a new Wagner cycle were put on stage. Two talented choreographers, Gyula Harangozó and Aurél Milloss, encouraged new growth in the world of ballet. After the 1944-1945 war-torn years, the Opera House was relatively quickly reorganized and, as early as 1946, the five great Mozart operas were performed. The first modern item presented was Benjamin Britten's Peter Grimes in 1947. National romanticism also came to the fore with Erkel's operatic-version of Bánk bán. Works of Russian and Soviet opera and ballet composers (e.g. Shostakovich) were performed, as well as the Austrian Alban Berg's Wozzeck (1964). A young generation of operatic composers appeared, such as Emil Petrovics, György Ránki, Sándor Szokolay. The last decades of the twentieth century saw the emergence of the stage managers of determination: András Mikó (1963-1987) and Viktor Nagy (from 1991), together with Gusztáv Oláh as chief superintendent. Zoltán Fülöp's over three decades of stage designing (1928-1967) proved significant. Tivadar Márk was a renowned costume designer (1938-1974), Gizella Szeitz did fine work in dress designing (1945-1975), and the imaginative work of the artist Gábor Forray contributed enormously to the preparation of stage-settings (1967-1974). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.→Ferenc, József; Ybl, Miklós; Erkel, Ferenc; Mahler, Gustav; Nikitsch, Artur; Márkus, László; Radnai, Miklós; Ferencsik, János; Kórodi, András; Lukács, Ervin; Medveczky, Ádám; Hevesi, Sándor; Bartók, Béla; Oláh, Gusztáv; Harangozó Gyula; Petrovics, Emil; Ránki, György; Szokolay, Sándor; Márk, Tivadar.

Operatic Performances in Hungary – The history of opera in Hungary originates from three different sources. The first information dates back to 1646, to the Comico Tragedia, written by an anonymous artist. In this respect, the Reformed Colleges promoted primarily the Hungarian language and, during the subsequent one-and-a-half century, its musical school dramas had great effect. The second starting date came from the operatic performances of the Italian touring companies. Such performances took place in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), on the occasion of the coronation of Ferdinand III's second wife, the Habsburg Princess Maria Leopoldina (1632-1649). At that time, Pozsony was the scene of the coronations of the Hungarian kings and queens. The Italian opera companies then performed in Sopron and Nagyszeben, followed by the German companies. In Pozsony, at that time, the operas and theatrical plays were performed in inns. Since these were not considered safe, in 1776 Count György Csáki built, at his own expense, a three-story theater, which was available for rent to any theatrical company. Anyone, who purchased a ticket, was free to go in to see or hear the performances. Soon, other towns followed the example of Pozsony; in 1769, a flourmill was converted into a theater; Pest created a theater from a bastion, the Rondella, which operated between 1774 and 1815. In 1778 in Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania); in 1787 in Buda, the Várszínház (Castle Theater), which still stands; in 1789 in Kassa; in 1795 in Temesvár (now Timisoara, Romania), and in 1798 in Győr, theaters were also built. Operas of Italian, French and German composers, performed in the German language, suddenly appeared in these theaters. The third starting point of the operatic performances was the performance of plays in the courts of the aristocrats. The initiator was Prince Miklós József (Nicholas, Joseph) Esterházy, who invited Joseph Haydn in 1761. The opera performances were held first in Kismarton (now Eisenstadt, Austria), and later, in Eszterháza (now Fertőd, Hungary), particularly after the Opera House, with a capacity of 660, was built in 1768. These were open only to the Prince's family and their guests. All the operas, which were the works of Haydn and other composers, were sung in Italian. While the singers were predominantly Italian, the majority of the orchestra members were German. The Prince built a puppet theater in 1772, for which Haydn composed puppet show operas. After the death of the Prince, the theatrical company was disbanded; but Prince Miklós (Nicholas) Esterházy reorganized it and, between 1800 and 1812, put it on the stage exclusively at Kismarton. Following the example of the Esterházy, the Bishop of Nagyvárad built a theater at his residence, and to these performances members of the nobility from the town and the outskirts were invited. Since mainly Latin and Hungarian were understood, the presentations were performed in Latin. Count József Batthyány, Archbishop of Pozsony, organized the third courtly theater, where he periodically engaged opera companies. These performances were open to the nobility and the civilian population as well. Other aristocrats also followed their example. In spite of the powerful German influence, the Hungarian opera performances commenced almost simultaneously in both Buda and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), using mainly actors, who had formerly performed in school dramas. After finishing his legal studies, László (Ladislav) Kelemen returned home from abroad and created, in 1790, a Hungarian Theatrical Company in Buda and, in 1793, they presented in the Hungarian language a musical comedy Pikkó Hertzeg and Jutka Perzsi, composed by their conductor József Chudy. After a few years, the company went bankrupt because of financial difficulties. In Kolozsvár in 1792, with financial assistance from Baron Miklós (Nicholas) Wesselényi, under the direction of János Kotsi Patkó, a high quality, permanent theatrical company was established. János (John) Kotsi Patkó was the first to translate Shakespeare's Hamlet into Hungarian and, in 1794, presented it splendidly on stage. The company, annually averaging one hundred productions, performed not only in Kolozsvár, but in Marosvásárhely and in Debrecen as well. Thus, musical comedies and French and Italian operas contributed to the development of the Hungarian opera. Until 1833, Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) was famous because of its opera performances. Permanent opera performances commenced at the Castle Theater (Várszínház) of Buda in 1835. Ferenc (Francis) Erkel was its musical director for 30 years. He was the founder of the Hungarian National Opera. Of the operas he composed, Hunyadi László and Bánk bán proved to be the most popular. In the fourth quarter of the 19th century, several opera houses were built. In 1884 the new Opera House in Budapest was opened. Operas, composed by the great composers of Europe, were performed by gifted singers, orchestras and conductors. The Hungarian composers at that time were guided by different trends until the great personage, Béla Bartók appeared. The end of the First World War closed an era of the Hungarian opera, when the nation lost two thirds of its territory. Besides Budapest, regular operas are also performed in Debrecen, Szeged and Pécs. The opera houses in Miskolc and Győr also operate on a reduced scale. Significantly, Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály stand out among the operatic composers of the era. – B: 1020, T: 7685. → Most of the persons in the article have their own entry.

Opré, Kálmán (Coloman) (Szeged, 9 September 1924 - North Vancouver, 19 October 2010) – Publisher, museum designer, mechanical engineer, cultural consultant, and graphic artist since childhood. After completing his secondary education in Szeged, he began engineering studies at the Budapest Polytechnic. During World War II, he worked as mechanical engineer at the war factory Rába Works in Győr. In 1944, the war forced him to move to Austria, to the migrant camp of Kufstein, where he came under French occupation in the spring of 1945. He joined the French forces, where he worked for 5 years. In 1949 he emigrated to Canada and settled near Ottawa, working on the construction of a hydroelectric station. Later he worked for the railways and settled in Vancouver, where he met his wife. At first he worked as a graphic artist, but later he started his own business, was engaged in the publication of books and gramophone records. He was commissioned to work out a plan for the Britannia Beach Museum of Mining in North Vancouver. Already in his childhood he was associated with art. As a high school student he was one of those fortunate, who was able to work on the famous fresco "The Heroes' Gate" by Vilmos Aba-Novák in Szeged.

Since his retirement he devoted his time to art. He had his first one-man show in 1985 at the Harrison Galleries in Vancouver, consisting of black-and-white tonal paintings of North Vancouver, Europe, and of the Queen Charlottes. In the 1980s, he did a series of 12 watercolour paintings of Edgemont Village, which he donated to the District of North Vancouver. Some of the paintings are hung in offices at the Municipal Hall. Opré taught design in North Vancouver's Continuing Education Program as well as in West Vancouver for the Recreation Commission. He served on several Boards and Arts Councils. He had close to 50 exhibitions in Vancouver and its environs.

Opré did not forget his Hungarian roots. At the Commemoration of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution at the Hungarian Cultural Society of Greater Vancouver on 21 October 2006, he presented an audio-visual show "Remember 1956"; to capture the human drama of the uprising, he combined images from books and films published about the Revolution. – B&T: 7617, 7456. → Aba Novák, Vilmos.

Opus Pacis (Békemű – Peace Work) – It was the name of the Catholic Clerical Peace Movement (Katolikus Papi Békemozgalom). During the Communist rule in Hungary under Soviet military occupation, the idea of a Catholic Clerical Peace Movement was introduced in or about 1949, with the aim of helping to iron out the differences between the "new order" and the Catholic Church. On 1 August 1950, a national conference of the Catholic clergy of Hungary assembled, with one of the speakers being Pater István (Stephen) Balogh. It was here that a decision was signed by nearly 300 priests, under duress; it was to be the document that heralded the clerical peace movement in Hungary. The members of its National Executive Committee were: Archbishop József (Joseph) Grósz, Bishop Endre (Andrew) Hamvas, titular Provost Miklós (Nicholas) Beresztóczy, Church Director Richárd Horváth, Parish Priest Béla Mag, and others. The task of Opus Pacis was to help bring into being the program of both the National Peace Council (Országos Béketanács) and the Patriotic People's Front (Hazafias Népfront). Its action began with a notice sent out to every parish priest. The paper of the movement was the Catholic Word (Katolikus Szó). The Patriotic People's Front organized the Clerical Peace Movement's meetings on national or county level for the information of the Roman Catholic clergy, and later also for the clergy of other denominations. Lectures were held on the problems of community peace, with the intention that, through the priests, all that had been discussed would reach the faithful. At first, the meetings were held once a month; from the 1970s, at every quarter, and then, more and more less frequently. The presence of the clergy at the meetings was considered to be a condition of reliability and a sign of "progressive thinking". The Central Seminary of Budapest was dissolved in 1959, because its students refused to participate in the Opus Pacis meeting. The movement ended with the termination of the Communist regime in 1989. – B:

Oravecz, Imre (Emeric) (Szajla, 16 February 1943 - ) – Poet and translator of literary works. He graduated from the University of Debrecen in Hungarian and German Literature (1967). For political reasons, he could not get a teaching job and he was a manual laborer, cinema manager, educator and, later, Secretary at the European Publishers (Európai Könyvkiadó) (1968-1973). In 1973-1974 he was on a scholarship at the University of Iowa, USA. From 1974 to 1976 he was an assistant professor at the Foreign Language Institution of the University of Economics, Budapest. In 1976 he studied Linguistics at the University of Illinois, USA; thereafter, he was a free-lance writer. From 1982, back in Hungary, he was editor of the poetry column of the literary review, Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom). In 1985-1986 he was a Fulbright Guest Professor at the University of California. From 1990, for a short while, he was a member of the Advisory Committee of the Prime Minister of Hungary. In 1991 and 1992 he was chief contributor for the paper, New Hungary (Új Magyarország); and after that, of the Pest Newsletter (Pesti Hírlap) in 1993. From 1995 on, he has been a professor at the Catholic University; and in 2006 he became a member of the Digital Literary Academy. On the surface, his poetry is heavy and objective. He discovered a unity between nature and man in his newly created folk-poetry, the Hopi-Indian poems. He dedicated a cycle to his village of birth, with almost ethnographic precision. His writing about unrequited love is remarkable. His works include The Books of the Hopis (A hopik könyve) (1983); September 1972 (1972 szeptember) (1988, 1993); Collected Poems (Egybegyűjtött versek) (1994); Fisherman, Szajla... (Halászóember, Szajla...) (1998), and The Appropriate Day (A megfelelő nap) (2002). He has translated works from Paul Celam, Barbara Frischmuth, Franz Xaver Kroetz and the Japanese Ryokan. He is recipient of a number of awards, among them: the Lajos Kassák Prize (1972), the Milán Füst Prize (1988), the Sándor Weöres Prize (1996), the Book of the Year Prize (1997), and the Kossuth Prize (2003). – B: 1257, 0878, 1031, T: 7103.

Oravecz, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 7 May 1895 - Budapest, 14 August 1962 – Physician and stomatologist. He graduated from the Medical School of Budapest in 1921, specializing infant stomatology. From 1921 to 1931 he practiced at the Stomatological Clinic at the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest. From 1933 to 1945 he was Medical Director of the Stephania Children's Hospital (Stefánia Gyermekkórház). From 1926 to 1931 he was Chief Executive Secretary of the Hungarian Dental Society. In 1937 he became Professor of Dentistry at the University of Pécs, where, in 1952, he became an honorary lecturer in Medicine. In the latter part of his professional life, he concentrated on the research of dental hygiene in children and in schools. He set up the Stomatology Clinic at the University of Pécs. His works include New Characterization of the Circular Caries of Milk-Teeth (A tejfogak cirkularis cariesének új jellemzése) (1934), and Description of the Diastema Physiologicum (A diastéma physiologikum leírása) (Dental Observer, 1934). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7656.

Orbán, Baron Balázs (Blaise) (Lengyelfalva, near Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu Seculesc in Transylvania, Romania, 3 February 1830 - Budapest, 19 April 1890) – Ethnographer, geographer and writer; scion of a noble Szekler (Transylvanian Hungarian) family. He completed his higher studies at the Reformed College of Székelyudvarhely. In 1847 he traveled through Egypt, Syria, Palestine, and the Arabian Peninsula. In 1849, on his way back to Hungary, he learned of the outbreak of the War of Independence against Habsburg rule, and organized a detachment of 150 soldiers in Constantinople to assist the Hungarian Army; but he arrived in Hungary too late, shortly before the surrender at Világos. He was forced to emigrate, first to London, then, for a second time, he went to Constantinople, where he lived for 14 years; he wrote reports about his travels and helped the local Hungarian refugees. During this time, he became acquainted with Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, Richard Guyon, and among his friends was Victor Hugo. Later, he lived in Paris and London. He returned to Hungary in 1859 and settled in his Szekler region of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), where he pursued administrative activities: first, in 1867, as recorder for County Kolozs and, from 1871, as Member of Parliament, representing the Szekler region, Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, Romania), as its center. During his travels he made valuable ethnographic collections and geographical descriptions. In his time, he was the leading expert on the Szekler-question. He wrote a number of articles and ten books. His magnum opus is a still valuable, six-volume treatise entitled: Description of Szeklerland (A Székelyföld leírása) (1868-1873). About his ethnographic collecting in Transylvania, he wrote the Szeklerland Collections (Székelyföldi gyűjtés) (1882). He also wrote: The Town of Torda and its Environs (Torda és környéke) (1889). His lifetime aim was to achieve independence for Hungary. He was a generous patron of students, of schools, and of the Cultural Society of Transylvania (Edélyi Közművelődésügyi Egylet). He became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1887. Foundations, schools, and streets bear his name. – B: 0883, 0907, T: 7456.→Kossuth, Lajos; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Szeklers.

Orbán, Dezső (Desider) (Győr, 26 November 1884 - Sydney, Australia, 5 October 1985) – Painter, graphic artist and educator. He obtained a B.Sc. degree in Mathematics from the University of Budapest. Self-taught, he painted nudes, landscapes and still-life pictures. As early as 1905 and 1906, he had several exhibitions in Budapest. Later, he went to Paris and tried with little success to study at the Julian Private College. While in Paris, he became acquainted with Róbert Berényi, who helped him to meet some important figures in the field of Art. Back in Hungary in 1909, it was in his studio, where the Seekers' Society (Keresők Társasága) was formed. In 1911 it became the well-known group of progressive bourgeois artists, called: The Eight (Nyolcak). The painting, Landscape (Tájkép) was his introductory piece at an exhibition, a work that reflected the influence of Cézanne. His peculiar style was formed between 1910 and 1912, e.g. Great Still Life (Nagy csendélet) (1911); Books, Cacti, Tableware (Könyvek, kaktuszok, edények) (1911); Reclining Nude (Fekvő akt) (1911), and Still Life (Csendélet) (1909, 1911). In the second exhibition of The Eight in 1911, eight of his paintings and some drawings were shown. His first independent exhibition was arranged in 1917, and a number of his paintings were shown in the Ernst Museum in Budapest. During his travels in the 1920s in Spain, Italy and Germany, he exhibited scenes and townscapes, e.g. in Nuremberg (1929), Rothenburg (1929) and, in Hungary, his works were shown in a number of exhibitions in the 1920s. He won a Gold Medal at an exhibition in Barcelona (1929). In 1931, he founded the Atelier School and Studio of Artistic Planning, similar to the German Bauhaus, emphasizing the planned method of the training of artists. In his Private Art School, he employed talented artists, such as Lajos (Louis) Kozma, Farkas Molnár and Anna Lesznai. In 1938, critics recognized his students favorably. In 1939, he settled in Sydney, Australia with his family, where he founded an Art School in 1943. In the 1960s, he visited Japan; one of his paintings from there is the Wave (Hullám) (1965). At the age of 85, he won the Blake Prize for his painting Hosanna (Hozsanna)

(1969) in Sydney. His works on art-theory include Understanding Art (1968) and What is Art all about (1975). – B: 0883, 1721, 1445, T: 7456. → Berény, Róbert; Eight, The Group of.

Orbán, György (1) (George) (Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Transylvania, Romania, 12 July 1947 - ) – Composer. He studied at the Music Academy of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) under the guidance of Sigismund Toduta and János Jagamas. After completing his studies in 1973, he taught music theory at the same institution. Since 1979 he has been living in Hungary, teaching composition at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. His early style was closest to the western avant-garde technique. Around the middle of the 1980s, he turned toward the neo-romantic style. Oratorios and choral compositions characterized his works. He composed instrumental works in many different forms: from symphonic pieces, solo instrumental-vocal works, and works for brass wind instruments to chamber music. His works include Serenade I (1988); Sonata for Clarinet and Piano; Sonata concertante Scherzo I, Ballade II, Finale III (1995); Hymns: a. Te lucis; b. Nobis natus; c. Ave regina (1995); Album Pages (Albumlapok); Overture for Count Razumosky (Razumovszkij grófnak Nyitány) etc., and Zingarese (2002). His choral works include Psalm 126; Ave Maria; Adeste fideles; Nunc dimittis; Pange lingua; Veni creator spiritus; a Psalm Variation, and a Preacher-song. He wrote 13 masses with orchestral and organ accompaniment, music for films, and had a number of recordings. Orbán is a prolific composer with ever-increasing reputation. He received the Bartók-Pásztory Award (1991), and the Ferenc Erkel Award (1989, 2002). – B: 1178, 1438, 1031, T: 7684,7456.

Orbán, György (2) (George) (Budapest, 25 August 1906 - Budapest, 16 February 1976) – Physician, gynecologist. He graduated from the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest in 1931, specializing in Gynecology. From 1931 to 1947 he was Assistant Professor at No. I. Clinic for Women in Budapest. From 1947 to 1955 he was Chief Surgeon and Director of the Balassa Hospital, and concurrently, Director of the National Institute of Female Infertility. He developed early tests for pregnancy and researched new methods of child delivery. His major works are: The Painless Delivery (A fájdalom nélküli szülés) (1962) and On Pregnancy, Childbirth and Confinement (A terhességről, szülésről, gyermekágyról) (1963). – B: 1730, T: 7656.

Orbán, Ottó (Budapest, 20 May 1936 - Szigliget, 25 May 2002) – Poet, essayist and literary translator. He was raised in an orphanage. He graduated from the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest in 1961. From 1958 he earned his living from literary activity. From 1981 on, he was Column-Editor for the periodical, Contemporary (Kortárs.) and from 1990, its chief contributor. In 1997 he was a guest professor at the University of Hamlin in St. Paul, Minnesota, and at the University of Minnesota, USA. He presented papers at a number of International Poets' Conferences (USA, India, South Korea). His first journey to India was immortalized in his travelogue Window to the Earth (Ablak a földre) (1972, 1989). His American experiences appeared in his volume Road-crossing in Minneapolis... (Útkereszteződés Minneapolisban...) (1993). In 1989 he became Vice-President of the Hungarian Pen Club and, in 1993, a member of the Széchenyi Literary and Art Academy in Budapest. The basic motives of his work were: war, persecution, orphanhood, the challenges and lessons of history, the relationship of Hungary to the world, and the possibilities of the individual, society and poetry. His literary translation intended to present world-poetry from the ancient Greeks to that of modern nations. His works include Black Poems (Fekete versek) (1960); Farewell to Bethlehem (Búcsú Bethlehemtől) (1967); The Postponed Resurrection (A feltámadás elmarad) (1971); Being Poor (Szegénynek lenni) (1974); Where Does the Poet Come from? (Honnan jön a költő?) essays (1980); Collected Poems (Összegyűjtött versek) (1986); Note on the Ruins (Cédula a romokon) essays (1994), and Around the World in Sixty Years (Hatvan év a föld körül), collected poems in translation (1998). He received a number of awards, among them: Attila József Prize (1973, 1985), Graves Prize (1974), the Book of the Year Award (1986, 1994), the Radnóti Prize (1987), the Soros Foundation Prize, the Weöres Prize (1990), the Kossuth Prize (1992), and the Pro Literature Life-Achievement Prize (1997). – B: 1178, 0878, 1258, T: 7103.

Orbán, Viktor (Székesfehérvár, 31 March 1963 - ) – Politician, statesman, writer, orator. He spent his childhood in Alcsút, Felcsút and Vértesacsa (40 km west of Budapest). He completed his high school studies at the English Department of the Teleki Blanka High School of Székesfehérvár in 1981. He was conscripted into the army at Zalaegerszeg (1981-1982). He studied Law and Political Science at the University of Budapest, and acquired his Ph.D. in 1987. He worked at the Leadership Training Institute of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food-Supply in 1987-1988. The Soros Foundation awarded him with a scholarship to the Pembroke College of Oxford University (1988-1989), where he studied the History of English Liberal Philosophy. He was one of the founders of the Bíbó István College, Budapest (1983). In 1984, with others, he launched the journal, Century's End (Századvég), and was one of its Editors. He was among the founders of the “FIDESZ” – acronym of Fiatal Demokraták Szövetsége (Alliance of Young Democrats) political movement, on 30 March 1988; later, it became a political party with the name Magyar Polgári Párt – MPP (Hungarian Civil Party). In it, he filled various leadership positions and became its President in 1993. With his leadership the Party was transformed from a radical youth movement to a moderate civil party with national characteristics. He came to the forefront of political life with his oration at the state funeral of Prime Minister Imre Nagy, and other victims of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, organized at Heroes' Square, Budapest, on 16 June 1989. In his speech, he demanded the withdrawal of the Soviet Military Forces from Hungary and free elections. In the summer of 1989, he was one of the opposition members of the so called “round table negotiations”. He has been a Member of Parliament since 1990. Between 1998 and 2002, he was Prime Minister of Hungary. His party led the coalition that barely lost the elections in 2002. Some achievements of his administration were: Hungary became member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in 1999; the new National Theater was constructed; the Mária Valéria Bridge was rebuilt between Esztergom and Párkány (now Sturovo, Slovakia); and the “Status Law” was legislated, declaring that all Hungarians are members of the Hungarian nation, wherever they live. This law provides certain assistance for some 2.5 million ethnic Hungarians living in the surrounding states since the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate (1920), which dismembered Historic Hungary. Orbán's party lost the 2002 and 2006 elections and was in Opposition. In 2007, he was re-elected as President of the FIDESZ MP Party. He won an overwhelming, 2/3rd victory at the 2010 parliamentary election for the FIDESZ and the KDNP coalition, formed the Second Orbán Cabinet, and started rebuilding the country after eight years of devastating governing of the Left-Liberal governments. He has been a member of important international organizations, and Vice-President of the European People's Party. Besides his collected speeches, he wrote: On the Main Road to History. Hungary 1998-2002 (A történelem főutcáján. Magyarország 1998-2002) (2003); 20 Years. Speeches, Writings and Interviews, 1986-2006 (20 év. Beszédék, írások, interjúk 1982-2006) (2006); One Country (Egy az ország) (2007), and Shake-waves (Rengéshullámok) (2010). He received the Freedom Prize of the American Enterprise and the New Atlantic Initiative (2201), the Polak Award (2001), the Franz Josef Strauss Prize (2001), the St. István Prize (2002), the Mérite Européen Golden Prize (2004), and the Great Cross of the Order of St. Gregory the Great (2004). He is an Honorary Senator of the European Art Academy and an Honorary Doctor of the Fletcher Academy of Tufts University, USA. – B: 0988, T: 7103.

Orbók, Attila (Pozsony, now Bratislava in Slovakia, 17 September 1887 - Budapest, 5 October 1964) – Writer and journalist. For a while he lived in Munich. He obtained his Law Degree from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and he went to France and studied at the University of Paris (Sorbonne). From 1912 to 1914 he was a reporter for the daily paper, Hungary (Magyarország) from Paris. In 1918 he was Press Attaché for the Hungarian Consulate in Bern, Switzerland. From 1920 to 1922 he was a Member of Parliament, representing County Bihar. From 1927 on, he worked as a collaborator for various dailies and literary journals. From 1933 he was a correspondent for the daily, Independence (Függetlenség), later, editor of the foreign affairs column. After 1945 he joined the Smallholders' Party (Kisgazda Párt) working in the Press Department; later, he took part in the editing of Novella-paper (Regényújság). He also wrote a number of stage-plays and film scripts. His works include Phenomenon (Tünemény) stage-play (1922), which appeared in Paris, Berlin and London; in the USA, it was adapted for a film; Smile of Transylvania (Erdély mosolya), a collection of anecdotes (1940); The Garden of God (Az isten kertje) novel (1944), and Tom Sawyer's Adventure, a comedy (1959). His other works include The Actress (A színésznő) novel (1926); Life of Paris (Párizs élete) (1927), and Velvet Chair (Bársonyszék), novel (1943). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Orczy, Baroness Emma (Emmuska) (born: Emma Magdalena Rosalia Maria Josefa Barbara Orczy) (Tarnaörs, 27 September 1865 - London, 12 November 1947) – English novelist, playwright and artist. Her family friends at their Hungarian estates included, among others, famous musicians, such as: Charles Gounod, Ferenc (Franz) Liszt and Richard Wagner. She moved to London with her father in the early 1881 and, on 7 November 1894, she married the English Esquire Barstow Montagu. She began to write in 1900. Her major works are Old Fairy Tales (Régi tündérmesék) (Budapest, 1898); Adventures of Lady Molly (Lady Molly kalandjai) (1918); Candelabras of József Ferenc (Ferenc József gyertyatartói) novel (1926); Pimpernel in Transylvania (Pimpernel Erdélyben) (1927); The Wise Pimpernel (Az okos Pimpernel) (1931), and Sir Percy Strikes Back (Sir Percy visszaüt) 1930). She became famous with her novel series of The Scarlet Pimpernel (Vörös Pimpernel), and its film version became a world success (1905). Some of her works were translated into other languages. She was also engaged in painting: among the life scenes she painted in the 1880s, the oil painting entitled Good Night (Jó éjszakát), appeared in the 1889 exhibition of the Art Gallery of Budapest. – B: 0907, 1031, 0883, T: 7103, 7456.

Orczy Family – The first known ancestor of the Orczy family was György (George), who lived during the reign of Emperor and King Ferdinand I, (1526-1564). It was one of the oldest families in County Somogy. Their name derives from the area's place-name of Orczi. Mention was made of the family in the 15th century, but continuous lineage can be shown only from the end of the 16th century, through Gergely. István (Gregory Stephan, 1669-1749), who gave the family its rank, when he received the upgraded title of Baron in 1736. Lord Lieutenant László (Ladislás) (1750-1807), who was Commander-in-Chief of the National Banderiums (Nemzeti Banderiumok), donated the land that was used for the City of Pest, which has preserved his name to this day. Many generations of courageous soldiers descended from this family. – B: 0942, 0883, T: 7676.

Orczy, Lőrinc (Lawrence), Baron (Tarnaörs, 9 August 1718 - Pest, 28 July 1789) – Poet. As a cavalry officer he took part in the War of Austrian Succession (1740-1748), and in the Seven Years' War (1756-1763). During the siege of Dresden and then Berlin, he led regiments of Hajdus and Jazygs (Jászok), established by him. He was conversant with the French writers. In 1764 he retired with the rank of Cavalry General and managed his estate in Tarnaörs. In 1767, the King appointed him Vice Lord Lieutenant of County Abaúj. Later, he became its Lord Lieutenant proper. He resigned in 1784. From 1774 to 1782, he was Government Commissioner for the regulation of the upper course of the River Tisza. Writers used to visit him in his manor house in Tarnaörs; after 1772, he sometimes appeared in Pest and Buda. He was the first poet of Hungary to sing of the Great Plains and the River Tisza. He was the poet of late Hungarian feudalism, the late representative of the poet-type of a large estate owner, reflecting the old aristocratic view of life, with only an occasional glimmer of the enlightenment. His poems were often pictures of morality, important culturally and historically. Miklós (Nicholas) Révai (1750-1807) edited the collection of his poems. The great poet, János (John) Arany wrote a masterly character sketch of him. His works include Company of György Bessenyei (Bessenyei György társasága (1777) and Poetic Creations of Two Great Minds (Két nagyságos elmének költeményes szüleményei) including poetry from Abrahám Barcsay (1789). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456, 7668. → Arany, János; Révai, Miklós.

Ordass, Lajos (Louis) (Wolf) (Torzsa, now Savino Selo, Serbia, 6 February 1901 - Budapest, 14 August 1978) – Lutheran Bishop. He studied in Bonyhád, Budapest, Sopron, and Halle, Germany. First he served as an assistant pastor in congregations in the countryside; then became an assistant pastor of the Budapest Deák Square Congregation. In 1927 he received a scholarship to Sweden. Consequently he became Pastor of the Cegléd Congregation in Hungary in 1931. He was Arch-Deacon in County Pest from 1937 on, and Pastor of the Budapest-Kelenföld congregation. Utilizing his foreign connections, he took part in saving Jews from persecution, during World War II. From 1945 he was Bishop of the Bányai District of the Evangelical-Lutheran Church in Hungary. He played an active role in the process of renewing the Church after World War II. Due to his strong stand against the nationalization of church schools, he was arrested, tried in a show trial, and imprisoned in 1948. In 1950 the Church-Court, under State pressure, removed him from office. He returned to office in 1956 but, in 1958, he was permanently removed. He lived in forced seclusion, translating from Swedish as well as from Icelandic, for which he was awarded an Honorary Doctorate by the University of Reykjavik. He was the Deputy President of the Lutheran World Federation from 1947 to 1952, and from 1957 to 1963. His most important works are Good News for the Sufferers (Jó hír szenvedőknek) sermons (1992); At the Foot of the Cross (A keresztfa tövében) (1989); Passion Songs (Passió Énekek), translation from Icelandic (1974); Autobiographical Writings, vols. i,ii. (Önéletrajzi Írások, I-II) (1985, 1987), and Selected Works, vols. i,ii (Válogatott írások I-II) (1982, 1998), both were compiled by Pastor István (Stephen) Szépfalusi. There is a Lajos Ordass prize. – B: 1050, 1122, T: 7691.→Szépfalusi, István.

Ordódy, Katalin (Catherine) (Léva, now Levice, Slovakia, 22 February 1918 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 17 June, 2000) – Writer. In 1938 she completed her high-school studies at the Women Teachers' College of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and obtained her teacher's qualification in 1938. In 1938-1939 she was a bank clerk in Zseliz (now Želiezovce, Slovakia). In 1952 and 1953 she worked in an office in Pozsony. From 1953 to 1958 she was Editor of the Advertising Section of a Company. She was unemployed from 1958 to 1964. From 1964 until her retirement in 1972 she was Editor-Reporter for the magazine, Week (Hét). From 1990 she was a member of the Czechoslovak-Hungarian Writers' Association. Her articles appeared in numerous papers and magazines, e.g. the New Word (Új Szó); New Youth (Új Ifjúság); Torch (Fáklya); Week (Hét); Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle), and Working Woman (Dolgozó Nő). She was the writer of the women's column and weekly discussions for the magazine Week (Hét) from 1964 to 1972. Her works include The Discovered Life (Megtalált élet) novel (1958); Generations (Nemzedékek) novel (1961); On the Wrong Track (Téves nyomon), translation, novel by Karel Michal (1964, 2nd edition, 1967); The Stranger (Az idegen) novel (1968); Key and Sword (Kulcs és kard) novel (1991), and Dóra, novel (1994). She wrote juvenile poems, stories and translated Slovakian works into Hungarian. She was awarded the Madách Prize in 1972. – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Ördögh, Szilveszter (Sylvester) (Szeged, 28 October 1948 - Budapest, 16 November, 2007) – Writer and translator literary works. His higher studies were at the French Department of the University of Budapest (1968-1973). Thereafter, he was on a scholarship at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. From 1975 he was Editor at the Publishing House Magvető Kiadó, Budapest, and from 1983, a columnist for New Writing (Új Írás). He was on a Zsigmond Móricz scholarship in 1982. In 1988 he founded the newspaper Glimpse (Tekintet), and became its Editor. He started publishing in 1966. In his early work he wrote about peasant life of his times, the conflicts between peasant parents and their intellectual sons. His parabolic novel, the Mount of Skulls (Koponyák hegye) (1976), is an actualization of the Biblical passion. Another work: Lo! You Will Not Die (Bizony nem haltok meg) is a mixture of history and myth. Some of his works were adapted to Radio and TV plays. His other works include The Colt (A csikó), story (1973); Gates in Thebes (Kapuk Thébában) drama (1978); The Peace of Lazarus (Lázár békéje) novel (1985, in German 1986); Drumming Snow (Dobol a hó) story (1993), and Skull Cavity (Koponyaiüreg) (1994). He translated works from French and Vietnamese authors. Among his awards are the Attila József Prize (1974), MSZOSZ Prize (1995), Hazám Prize, posthumous (2007). – B: 1257, 0878, 1031, T: 7103.

Orient, Gyula (Julius) (Nagybocskó, now Bocicoiu Mare, Romania, 21 October 1869 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 8 October 1940) – Pharmacist and physician. He obtained his Doctorate in Pharmaceutics from the University of Budapest in 1900; in 1906, he obtained his Doctorate in Medicine. He owned a pharmaceutical store between 1892 and 1898 in Csetnek. In 1898 he became an assistant professor, then an associate professor and, in 1918 full Professor of Chemistry at the University of Kolozsvár. He founded the Pharmaceutical Museum of Kolozsvár in 1918. In his research, he concentrated on the practice and history of pharmaceutical science. His works include Concept and Task of Pharmaceutical Chemistry (A gyógyszerészi chemia fogalma és feladata) (1918), and Ancient Roman Relics of Surgical Instruments and Medical Treatments (Régi római sebészi műszerek és gyógyászati emlékek) (1937). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7656.

Origin, Legends of – Peoples' legends of their origin, based on recollections related to their early history. Among Hungarian legends there are some, which contain historically verifiable elements and are of eastern origin; research into their individual motifs has largely completed. (1) In the 11th century Hungarian Gestas, which served as a common source for Anonymus and other chroniclers, Ménrót appears as the ancestor of the Magyars. Clerically educated writers of Gestas and chronicles identify Ménrót with the Biblical Nimrod. According to the legend of origin, Hunor and Magor were Ménrót's sons. Their descendants were the Huns and the Magyars. As to the Hun-Hungarian chronicle, where the Hungarians are identified as Huns, they are descended only from Hunor. (2) In yet another clerical version of the legend, the Empire of Ménrót and his sons is placed in the Meotis region (the Sea of Azov). During a hunt, the two brothers came upon a white stag, which fled into the Meotis swamps. They searched for a long time without success, before returning home. After some time, they again went into the swamp region "to have a feast". This is the legend of the Wondrous Stag (Csodaszervas). (3) In the swamps of Meotis the two brothers and their warriors surprised the daughters of Dulo, King of the Alans, and married them, thereby becoming the ancestors of the two peoples, the Huns and the Magyars (Hungarians). This is the Abduction of the Women Legend. (4) The Álmos legend is the origin legend of the ruling family, which was preserved by Anonymus. Ügek took Emese as his wife, in whose dream there appeared the holy bird, Astur, which settled on her. In her vision, a river springs from her womb that runs in a foreign land and glorious kings descend from her. – B: 1150, T: 7617.→Anonymus; Meotis; Nimród; Wondrous Stag Legend; Álmos; Hun-Hungarian Legends circle.

Örkény, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 5 April 1912 - Budapest, 24 June 1979) – Writer, playwright and translator of literary works. He completed his high school studies at the Piarist High School, Budapest, in 1930. In the same year, he started his higher studies in the Chemical Engineering Department of the Budapest Polytechnic; but in 1932, transferred to the Pharmacology Department and obtained his Ph.D. degree in 1934. His short story, Sea Dance (Tengertánc) was published in the journal, Nice Word (Szép Szó) in 1937, launching his career as a writer. He was in London in 1938, and in Paris in 1939, existing under rather difficult conditions; he returned to Hungary after the outbreak of World War II. He resumed his studies at the Polytechnic and, in 1941, obtained his B.Sc. Degree in Engineering. In 1942 he did forced labor service on the Soviet-Russian Front, survived the Voronezh offensive of the Russians, and lived in a prisoner-of-war camp near Tambov for two years. In 1945 he was taken to Krasnogorsk, near Moscow, where he was able to start writing again. There, he completed his play Voronezh, also his documentary novel, People of the Camps (Lágerek népe), and his confessions, entitled: Recollections (Emlékezők). He arrived back to Hungary in 1946. He was a dramaturge for the Youth Theater (Ifjúsági Színház) in 1949, and for the Hungarian People's Army Theater (Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza) from 1951. He was text editor for the Literary Publishers (Szépirodalmi Kiadó) from 1954. Until 1963, he could not publish, because of his participation in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. He worked as a Chemical Engineer in the United Pharmaceutical Industry (Egyesült Gyógyszergyár) in Budapest. In the early 1950s, his political convictions brought him to the blind alley of schematics. His novel Marriage Partners was published in 1951. However, he gradually recognized the true reality. His world-view was the grotesque. In 1957 he completed his popular novelette, Gloria, exhibiting his irony and his talent for the grotesque. Pisti in the Blood Bath (Pisti a vérfürdőben) drama (1962), and The Cat's Play (Macskajáték) (1963) were huge international successes. His novel, The Tót Family (Tóték) (1964), later a play, was the first attempt at the "theater of the absurd" in Hungary. His book, Princess of Jerusalem (Jeruzsálem hercegnője) was a success in 1966. The One-Minute Novels (Egyperces novellák) (1968) was translated into several languages. His other works include Stories (Novellák) (1971); Novels (Regények) (1972); Plays (Színművek) (1972); Portraits, Mirror of an Epoch (Arcképek, korképek) (1972); Silence of the Dead (A holtak hallgatása) with István (Stephen) Nemeskürty (1973), and A Scenario Script (Forgatókönyv), drama (1979). He translated works from J. Conrad, T. Williams, E. Hemingway, T. Capote, A. Dumas, Choderlas de Laclos, and H. Cocteau. He created a new literary genre, and it was this new genre that made him famous. He was awarded the Attila József Prize (1955, 1967) and the Kossuth Prize (1973). – B: 0881, 0878, 0877, 1445, 1122, T: 7103, 7456. → Freedom Fight of 1956; Nemeskürty, István.

Orlai Petrics, Soma (Mezőberény, 22 October 1822 - Budapest, 6 June 1880) – Painter. Orlai was the second cousin and friend of the renowned poet Sándor Petőfi, whose portrait he painted. First, he attended high school in his hometown, then in Szarvas and Sopron. He read Law in Sopron, studied Art in Vienna from 1846, then in Munich from 1850. He also undertook a study trip to Rome and Paris. He painted historical tableaux as well as portraits. Some of his works are: St. Stephen and the Assassin (St István és az orgyilkos); King Solomon Curses his Mother (Salamon király anyját megátkozza); Let the Little Children Come to Me (Engedjétek hozzám jönni a kisdedeket); Sándor Petőfi (Petőfi Sándor); National Assembly at Ónod (Ónódi gyűlés), and My Mother (Anyám). He made illustrations for Petőfi's poem, Silly Istók (Bolond Istók). His work is characterized by patriotism. He also wrote critiques. – B: 0931, 0907, 0883, T: 7103. → Petőfi, Sándor.

Orlay, János (John) (Palágy, now Ruska, Carpathian-Ukraine, 1770 - Odessa, Russia, 27 February 1829) – Physician and court physician to the Czar. He emigrated to St. Petersburg and started his medical studies in Russia. In 1795 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Vienna. He returned to Russia and, after a few years of medical practice, he became physician at the Czarist Court. He became a member of the Medical Council of the Russian Empire. He taught Gogol, and was the friend of Goethe. He became Professor of Natural Science and Director of the College of Nobles of Odessa in 1812. Among his numerous publications are: Observationes medico-chirurgicae... (St. Petersburg, 1800), and Dissertatio inauguralis medica sister doctrinae... (Dorpat, 1807). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7656.

Örley, István (Stephen) (Berettyóújfalu 21 April 1913 - Budapest, January 1945) – Writer and critic. A soldier by training, Örley was an artillery lieutenant, who left the military after four years of active service. From 1939 to 1944 he was Copy Editor for the Literary Department of Hungarian Radio. In 1941, he became the Assistant Editor for the paper Hungarian Star (Magyar Csillag). After the German occupation of Hungary, he left his work at the Hungarian Radio and went into hiding as a military deserter. During the siege of Budapest, he was killed by an aerial attack. His writings appeared primarily in papers, such as the West (Nyugat); Hungarian Star (Magyar Csillag), and Life (Élet). His main works are: Carnival (Farsang), short novel serialized in the paper; Life (Élet) (1940), and The Fall of Flocsek (Flocsek bukása), a novel published in the paper Life (1941). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Örley, László (Ladislav) (Pest, 27 October 1856 - Budapest, 12 June 1887) – Zoologist. He completed his studies in Natural Sciences at the University of Budapest in 1876. Thereafter, for five years he was a demonstrator in the Department of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy under Tivadar Margó. In 1878 he obtained a Ph.D. in Arts. In 1880-1881 he worked on a scholarship in Leipzig; then, in 1881-1882, in the British Museum of London, where he worked on the determination and classification of worms in its collection. He also worked briefly in the Zoological Station of Naples. In 1882 he became Assistant Curator for the Zoological Collection at the National Museum, Budapest, and in 1883 he qualified as an honorary lecturer at the University. From 1884 he worked again in the Zoological Station of Naples. He published a number of papers in journals, both in Hungary and abroad. He committed suicide. His works include On Hainworms in the Collection of the British Museum (1881); The Oligochnefauna of Hungary (A magyarországi Oligochnefauna faunája) (1881); On the Color of Animals (Az állatok színéről) (1886), and The Leech Fauna of Hungary (A magyarországi piócák faunája) (1887). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Ormai, József (Josip) (Újvidék, now Novi-Sad, Serbia, 18 October 1923 - Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 26 April 1991) – Actor, puppeteer and producer. He studied acting in Belgrade. He spent eight years in Pristina, where the Children's Theater was established, and became its Manager and Producer. He did acting for two years at Kragujevac, where he also produced children's performances. He returned to Szabadka, and lived there from 1958 to 1959. He produced the first performance of F. Molnár's The Paul Street Boys (A Pál utcai fiúk) in the Children's Theater, for which he received several awards.. He signed a contract with the Children's Theater and was its member until his retirement in 1981. He performed primarily in Serbian and Croatian plays, but acted regularly in Hungarian plays as well. His main role was Medve (Bear) in Matveyeva's The Miraculous Galoshes (A csodálatos kalucsni). – B: 1445, T: 7684.

Ormándy, Eugene (Jenő) (Budapest, 18 November 1899 - Philadelphia, PA., USA, 12 March 1985) – American conductor, originally a violin virtuoso, of Hungarian origin. He started his career as a child prodigy; at the age of 5, he was already a student of Jenő (Eugene) Huby in the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under whom he received his diploma at the age of 14. In 1919, when he was 17, he was appointed Professor of Violin. He was already giving concerts in the musical centers of Europe (e.g. Berlin in 1917), and was Concertmaster of the New York Philharmonic in 1921. He settled there and it was in the USA that his career as a conductor began in 1924. He was a guest conductor with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

Between 1931, and 1936, he conducted the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. In 1936-1937, with Leopold Stokowski, he led the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, taking over as its permanent conductor in 1938. For 44 years he was Music Director of this distinguished orchestra (1936-1980), contributing considerably to its fame; it was well known for its polished sound. He was very particular over every detail and was also celebrated for his dynamic interpretation and his extreme vitality. He usually conducted without a score. He was referred to as the “luxurious” Conductor and Director of the “luxurious” Philadelphia Orchestra, with the world’s highest paid musicians under his baton. On several occasions, he also gave concerts in Budapest. He often appeared in other European cities as a guest conductor. He championed the music of 20th century composers, like Rachmaninov and Shostakovich, Britten and Bartók (e.g. his piano concerto no. 3). He was an enthusiastic promoter of the masters of the Hungarian musical art, first of all of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. He retired in 1980. – B: 0883, 1153, 1197, 1725, T: 7456. → Hubay, Jenő; Bartók, Béla, Kodály, Zoltán.

Ormos, Mária (Debrecen, 1 October 1930 - ) – Historian. Her higher studies were at the University of Debrecen, where she read History and Hungarian Literature (1947-1948). She continued her studies at the University of Budapest (1948-1949). She was an assistant professor at the University of Debrecen (1951-1953), then at the University of Szeged (1953-1957), from where she was dismissed for disciplinary reasons. She was an unskilled laborer at the National Archives in 1957-1958. She worked as a teacher, Encyclopaedia editor, and a contributor for the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1982 to 2000 she was a professor at the Janus Pannonius University in Pécs, later, as Dean. From 2000 until her retirement she was President of the European Historical Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and of the University of Pécs. She was on study trips in Paris (1973-1974) and in Bonn in 1976. Her field of research is 20th century history. She is a member of many learned societies at home and abroad. Her works include France and Eastern Security (Franciaország és a keleti biztonság) (1969); From Padua to Trianon (Padovától Trianonig) (1983); Hitler (1993); Mussolini (1984), and Hungary In the Age of the Two World Wars (Magyarország a két világháború korában), (1998). She is a recipient of the Academy Prize (1984), the Albert Szent-Györgyi Prize (1995), the Széchenyi Prize (1995), the Ferenc Deák Prize (2001), and the Pulitzer Memorial Prize (2001). – B: 0874, 1729, 1257, T: 7103.

Ormós, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Magyarpécska, now Rovine, Romania and Ópécska, now Pecica, Romania, the two settlements now merged as Pécska; 17 km west of Arad, 20 February 1813 - Budapest, 16 November 1894) – Writer and art historian. After completing his studies in Law, as secretary of Consul Sebő Vukovics, he was in the parliamentary youth movements. In 1848 he became a Member of Parliament and, in 1849, took active part in the War of Independence from Habsburg rule (1848-1849). As a result, he was imprisoned for 9 months. After being freed, he retired from political life and lived in Italy for a while. After his return to Hungary in 1867, he became Deputy-Lieutenant and, in 1871, Lord Lieutenant of County Temes in Southern Hungary (the region is now in Romania). He founded the Southern Hungarian Museum Society, soon becoming its President. He wrote a number of novels, studies and articles, including An Exile’s Diary (A bujdosó naplója) novel (1840); Data for the History of Art (Adatok a művészet történetéhez) (1859); Memories of Travels, vols. i-vi (Utazási emlékek, I-VI), a description of Art in Germany (1860-1863), and History of Our Culture During the Árpád Era (Árpádkori művelődésünk története), (1881). He became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1861. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.

Orosz, Adél (Adela) (Budapest, 17 March 1938 - ) – Dancer, ballet director and pedagogue. She was a student of Ferenc Nádasi in the Ballet School of the Opera House, Budapest; thereafter, she continued her studies at the State Ballet Institute, where she obtained a Ballet Artist's Diploma in 1954. From 1954 on, she was member of the Opera House, Budapest; from 1947 she was also its solo dancer. In the 1950s, she received further training in Leningrad. She was a virtuoso, dynamic dancer of pure technique, who danced almost every major role of the repertoire, and traveled all over the world as a guest artist. She was a member of the Opera House until 1982 and, between 1984 and 1988 she was its Ballet Manager. She taught at the State Ballet Institute from 1989. She danced the main role in the only Hungarian dance film: The Girl who Came Alive by Dancing (Az életbe táncoltatott lány) (1973). Her chief roles were: Princess Maria in Voynonen's: Nutcracker (Diótörő); Odette-Odalia in Messzerer's Swan Lake (Hatyúk tava); Aurora in Petipa's Sleeping Beauty (Csipkerózsika); Zarema in Rostislav Zacharov's The Fountain of Bakhchisarai (Bahcsiszeráji szökőkút); Királykisasszony (Royal princess) in L. Sergey's The Wooden Prince (A fából faragott királyfi); Flavia in L. Seregi's Spartacus; Lise in Ashton's The Badly Guarded Girl, a.k.a. The Girl Who Needed Watching (La Fille mal gardée – A rosszul őrzött leány); Fiatal lány (Young lady) in Fokine's The Spectre of the Rose (A rózsaelke), and Taglioni in Dolin's Pas de quatre. She received the Kossuth Award (1965), the Ferenc Liszt Award (1961), the Meritorious Artist title (1972) and Outstanding Artist title (1976), as well as The White Rose of the Finnish Order of Knights. She was made a Life Member of the Opera House in Budapest. – T: 1445, T: 7684.

Orosz, István (Stephen) (Kecskemét, 24 October 1951 - ) – Painter, printmaker, graphic designer and animated film director, known for his mathematically inspired works, impossible objects, optical illusions, double-meaning images and anamorphoses. He studied at the University of Art and Design (now Moholy-Nagy University of Art and Design) in Budapest, as a student of Ernő (Ernest) Rubik. After graduating in 1975, he began to work at theatres as a stage designer, as an animator and film director. He likes to use visual paradox, double meaning images and illusionist approaches, while following traditional printing techniques, such as woodcutting and etching. He also tries to renew the technique of anamorphosis. He is a regular participant in major international biennials of posters and graphic art, and his work has been shown in individual and group exhibitions in Hungary and abroad. He is a film director at the Pannónia Film Studio in Budapest, a professor at the University of Western Hungary in Sopron; co-founder of the Hungarian Poster Association, a member of Alliance Graphique Internationale (AGI), and the Hungarian Art Academy. He often uses OYTIΣ, or Utisz as his artist's pseudonym. István Orosz was known as a poster designer in the first part of his career. He made mainly cultural posters for theaters, movies, galleries, museums and publishing houses. At the time of the quiet revolutions of 1989 in Eastern Europe, he also drew some political posters. His "Tovarishi Adieu" (also used with the text "Tovarishi Koniec" –meaning "Comrades, it is over") appeared in many countries and was known as a symbolic image for changes in the area. He also designs anamorphosis, i.e. optical illusion plays with a perspective to create a distorted image that appears normal only when viewed from the correct angle, or with the aid of curved mirrors.

Orosz tries to renew the technique of anamorphosis, used by Renaissance-era artists, and his aim is to develop it as well, when he gives a meaning to the distorted image, which is independent of that which appears in the mirror, or which is viewed from a special point of view. This approach of anamorphosis is suitable for expressing more sophisticated messages. He is a recipient the Munkácsy Prize, and the Merited Artist title; in 2011 he was awarded the Kossuth Prize. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Rubik, Ernő.

Orosz, Júlia (Julie) (Budapest, 3 March 1908 - Budapest, 19 October 1997) – Singer (soprano). Her musical studies were at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. At the age of 18 she gave successful concerts in France, including Paris, and sang at the concert of the Capital City Orchestra (Székesfővárosi Zenekar) in 1928. In 1929 she made her debut at the Opera House, Budapest, as Blonde in Mozart's Abduction from the Seraglio (Szöktetés a Szerájból). From 1919 to 1930 she was on a scholarship of the Opera House and from 1930 to 1969 she was its private singer. She was one of the multi-faceted divas. She appeared as guest singer on many famous opera stages of Europe. During her career, she sang more than 80 lyric and dramatic soprano roles from Mozart to Wagner and Puccini. Her roles included Desdemone in Verdi's Othello; Elza in Wagner's Lohengrin, Margaret in Gounod's Faust; Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Liu in Turandot, and Zerlina in Mozart's Don Giovanni. She sang at the première of a number of Lehár's operettas, under the baton of Lehár. She was also a fine interpreter of Béla Bartók's arrangements of Hungarian folk songs. She received the the Merited Artist title (1953), the Kossuth Prize (1956), the Outstanding Artist title (1959), the Middle Cross of Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1994), and she was made Life Member of the Opera House, Budapest. – B: 1445, 1767, 1031, T: 7103.→Lehár, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla.

Orosz, László (1) (Ladislav) (Csicsér, now Cicarovce, Slovakia, 18 December 1697 - Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, 11 July 1773) – Jesuit monk, missionary and writer. After completing his secondary school education in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), he entered the Jesuit Order. After repeated petitions, he was finally permitted to set out on a transatlantic missionary assignment in 1726. After spending two years in Spain, his Order sent him to South America. In 1729 he reached Buenos Aires, where the Provost of the local Jesuit Order directed him to the newly opened Jesuit University in Cordoba, Argentina. Only 30 years old, he was one of the leading authorities in Philosophy; he introduced reforms to the Jesuit method of teaching the subject. In 1734 he became Rector of the University of Cordoba. Under his leadership, the intellectual life of the University came alive. In 1743 he became Administrator of the Order House, and built a second Jesuit College in Buenos Aires. By that time the Jesuits were operating 4 Universities, 10 Colleges, 42 Elementary Schools, and 5 Theological Schools in Paraguay. He continued and finished the work of Nicolas de Techo on the history of the Order House. The original manuscripts are at the University Library in Budapest. The huge biographical work on South America is also his work, and it is now in the Cabildo Museum. He founded a printing house in Cordoba in 1764, the first of its kind in the countries along the Rio de Plata. A Royal Decree expelled the Jesuits from Argentina in the middle of 1767, and he was shipped to the Cadiz jail in Spain. Orosz was soon able to make his escape and returned to Nagyszombat, where he resumed his teaching duties. His works include Eucharistion Diuo Ignatio de Loyola (Bártfa, 1715), and Decades (quinque) Virorum illustrium Paraquariae, vols. i,ii. (Nagyszombat, 1759). In manuscript: De transmigratione guaranítica (1756); and a Chinese Vocabulary, translated from Spanish. Orosz was one of the most outstanding personalities of the Hungarian Jesuits serving in Latin America. – B: 0945, 0907, T: 7617→Jesuits, Hungarian, in Latin America; Brentán, Károly.

Orosz, László (2) (Ladislav) (Csépa, 13 July 1925 - ) – Literary historian. His secondary education was in Kecskemét and Beregszász (now Berehovo, Carpathian-Ukraine). From 1943 he studied at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest. From 1948 he taught at the High School in Kecskemét. In 1957 he was arrested for political reasons. From 1958 he was unemployed. In 1959 he worked as an administrator and, from 1961, was a teacher and librarian. From 1976 he was the chief contributor to the József Katona Museum of Kecskemét. He taught again from 1978 until his retirement in 1986. His field of research is the literature of the Enlightenment and the Reform Age, as well as the literary work of József Katona. Some of his works are: József Katona (1954); Ady Bibliography (1972); Literary Heritage of Kecskemét (Kecskemét irodalmi öröksége) (1990); Works of Daniel Berzsenyi (Berzsenyi Dániel művei) (1994), and History of the Interpretations of Bánk bán (A Bánk bán értelmezéseinek története) (1999). Among the awards he received are: the Ferenc Toldy Memorial Medal (1981), the János Apáczai-Csere Prize (1986), and the Pilinszky Prize (1995). He is a Titular Doctor of the University of Szeged, and an Honorary Citizen of Kecskemét. – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7103.→Katona, József; Ady, Endre; Berzsenyi, Dániel.

Oroszlán, Zoltán (Budapest, 16 March 1891 - Budapest, 9 January 1971) – Archeologist and art historian. In 1913 he obtained a Teacher's Degree from the University of Budapest and, in 1918 a Ph.D. in Art. At first, he was a teacher at the Reformed High School of Budapest. In 1914 he was a trainee in the Numismatic and Archeological Department of the National Museum. Between 1914 and 1917 he taught Military Geography and Military History at the Royal Hungarian Ludovika Military Academy. From 1917 to 1919 he was Secretary of the Hungarian Scientific Institute in Constantinople and, from 1919, was Assistant Curator of the National Museum, Budapest. From 1923 he was in charge of the Statue Collection of the Department of Antiquaries of the Museum of Fine Arts, Budapest and, later its Curator. From 1936 he was an honorary lecturer and, from 1941, a professor at the University of Szeged. He took part in several study trips abroad. From 1945 until his retirement in 1967, he was professor at the University of Budapest, lecturing in History of Art, Classical Archeology and Museology; from 1957 to 1959 he was its Deputy Dean. From 1959 he was President of the Hungarian Archeological and Art Historical Society. In 1946 he was a member of the commission to ensure the return the Hungarian art collections from Russia taken during World War II. His publications reached 400, the result of his research on Greek and Roman art, especially Greek terracotta sculpture and Pannonian relief sculpture. Among his published works are Mythological and Symbolic Picture Types on Pannonian Tombs (Mitológiai és szimbolikus képtípusok a pannóniai síremlékeken) (1918), and Terrakotten-Studien (1945). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456.

Orovecz, Béla (Budapest, 5 September 1909 - Budapest, 17 December 1966) – Physician. In 1934 he graduated in Medicine from the University of Budapest. From 1934 to 1936 he worked in the No. II and No. III. Clinics, Budapest. From 1936 to 1945 he worked with the Hungarian Red Cross. From 1945 to 1948 he worked as physician in the Hungarian Army. After 1948 he reorganized and directed the Hungarian Ambulance Service (Országos Mentőszolgálat – OMSZ), and was its Director. In 1956 he organized the Ambulance Hospital and, in 1958, the Air Ambulance Services. His field of research was axiology and lifesaving. He was the author of The

Orowan, Egon (Orován) (Óbuda, 2 August 1902 - Cambridge, Mass., 3 August 1989) – Hungarian and American physicist and metallurgist. He studied Mechanical and Electrical Engineering, and later Physics at the Technical University at Berlin and Vienna, where he received a Ph.D. in Engineering in 1932, then returned to Hungary. In 1934, Orowan realized that the plastic deformation of ductile materials could be explained in terms of the theory of dislocation – the understanding of how materials plastically deform under stress. From this concept, after World War II, the modern science of solid mechanics was developed. After working for a short while on the extraction of krypton from the air for the manufacture of light bulbs, in 1937 Orowan moved to the University of Birmingham, England, where he worked on the theory of fatigue. In 1939 he moved to the University of Cambridge. During World War II, he worked on problems of munitions production. He was invited to join the Faculty at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, so he emigrated to the USA in 1950 and, a year later, he was named George Westinghouse Professor of Mechanical Engineering. He retired from the active faculty in 1968. He published a great number of scientific articles. He won many honors, including the Paul Bergse Medal from the Danish Metallurgical Society in 1973. He was a fellow of the Royal Society of London and a member of the National Academy of Sciences of the United States. – B: 0872, 1031, T: 7103.

Örs – or Ursu, son of Acsád (Osád) – According to 13th century chronicler Anonymus, Örs led his tiny army to the River Nyárád and Prince Árpád bestowed the land of the River Nyárád on his people; later, he built the guard fortress of Örs (Erusur or, Ursur) near the source of the same river. The Clan of Örs lived there in 1347, and they had 36 estates in the Counties of Borsod, Szabolcs, Veszprém and Zala. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 7103.→Anonymus.

Orseolo, Peter, King (Velencei Péter – Peter of Venice) (Venice, 1010-1015 - Székesfehérvár, 1046 or 30 August 1059) – He was born into a Doge family in Venice. He was King of Hungary from 1038 to 1041 and from 1044 to 1046. His mother was the sister of King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038), and lived in the royal court of his uncle. After the death of Prince Emeric (Imre) in 1031, and after the failed rebellion of Vazul, who was blinded, and his sons Levente, András (Andrew) and Béla were exiled, King István confirmed Peter's succession rights. After ascending to the throne he continued his predecessor's policy and tried to strengthen Christianity in his half-converted kingdom; but his arbitrary actions resulted in his deposition. He could only restore his rule with the assistance of Holy Roman Emperor Henry III; but shortly afterwards he was again dethroned during a revolt of the pagan Hungarians led by Samuel Aba until the Imperial troops defeated him in the Battle of Ménfő in 1044. Now Orseolo had to acknowledge the overlordship of Henry III. However, Orseolo lost again the support of the Hungarian nobles and the prelates. In 1046 they called back to the country the two older expelled sons of Duke Vazul from Kijev, and an extensive revolt among the pagan Hungarians broke out, led by Vata, and Peter had to flee to the Western part of the country. In the meantime Peter fell into captivity near Zámoly, was blinded by the rebels, and as a captive he was taken to Székesfehérvár, where he soon died. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→ István I, King; Imre, Saint Prince; Aba, Sámuel; Vata; Vazul.

Orsolya, Erzsébet (Bessy) (Budapest, 6 November 1901 - Budapest, 13 May 1984) – Actress. She completed the Acting School of the National Association of Actors. She acted in Kaposvár in 1921-1922; at Szeged in 1922-1923; and in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) in 1923-1924. In 1924-1925 she was a member of the Comedy Theater (Víg Színház) and, from 1927-1931 and in 1933 of the New Theater (Új Színház), Budapest. She was given acting assignments in the Chamber Theater (Kamara Színház) in 1934, the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház) of Budapest from 1958 to 1960, and between 1934 and 1967, in a succession of theaters in Budapest, as well as in country towns. Thereafter, she performed occasionally on various stages. She was equally successful with her attractive presence, beautiful elocution and well prepared acting either in dramatic or comic roles. Her major roles include Margaret in Goethe's Faust; Puck in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (Szentivánéji álom); Queen Margaret (Margit királyné) in Richard III; Maria in E. Boross' False Window (Vakablak); Mrs. Pearce in G.B. Shaw's Pygmalion; Kvasnya in Gorky's Night Asylum (Éjjeli menedékhely), and Mrs. Baradlay (Baradlayné) in M. Jókai - S. Hevesi's Sons of the Stone Hearted Man (A kőszívű ember fiai). There are 66 feature films to her credit, including Budapest Spring (Budapesti tavasz) (1955); Love on Thursday (Szerelem csütörtökön) (1959); Town without a Face (Arcnélküli város) (1969); I had Thirty-two Names (Harminckét nevem volt) (1971); Cat's Play (Macskajáték) (1974), and Mirror Images (Tükörképek) (1976). – B: 1445, 1732, T: 7684.

Orsós, Ferenc (Francis) (Spindl, next to Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 22 August 1879 - Mainz, Germany, 25 July 1962) – Physician and pathologist. He completed his medical studies at the University of Budapest in 1903. He was Honorary Lecturer of Pathology in 1913. In World War I, he was a physician in the military. He became Professor of Pathology at the Medical School of the University of Debrecen in 1931. From 1935 he was Professor of Forensic Medicine at the Medical School of the University of Budapest. From April to June of 1943 he was a member of one of the three independent International Medical Teams and, as such, worked on the exhumation of the mass graves at Katyn Forest, Poland, where 8000 Polish army officers were executed by the Soviet NKVD in May 1941, and buried in mass graves at the beginning of World War II. The Germans put the blame on the Soviets; the Soviets blamed the Germans for these atrocities. Orsós found a particular calcium deposit on the inner wall of the skull of the victims and, with its help, the date of death could be established. This particular compound develops only three years after death. It proved that massacre occurred when the region was occupied by the Soviets prior to the German occupation. For his discovery, he was declared a war criminal by the Soviets for his "false expert opinion". However, he moved to Germany in December 1944, together with the Medical School. He settled down first in Hamburg, then in Mainz, and taught at its University (1946-1955). Soviet secret agents wanted to kidnap Orsós. About this incident one of his neighbors in the Michelsdorf refugee camp in Germany noted: "The Nuremberg Trials opened in November of 1945. The Soviets, afraid that their guilt in the Katyn massacre will be made public, began to search for the forensic experts involved in the investigation. Whether or not they found any of the others I don't know. But they did discover the whereabouts of Professor Orsós in the Michelsdorf Hungarian refugee camp in Germany. One day, while walking in the neighboring town of Cham, two men grabbed him and tried to force him into a car. Fortunately two American MPs (Military Police) heard his cries and intervened. The assailants fled. After lengthy interrogation by the CIC (Central Intelligence Command), Orsós was assigned 24-hour protection. One MP stood under his barrack window, and one at both barrack entrances. We lived next door to him. He was later invited by the University of Tübingen to fill the Chair of Forensic Medicine. The matter of the Katyn massacre was swept under the carpet at the Nuremberg Trials”. In 1945, the People’s Court in Hungary declared him a war criminal and, since he was not extradited by the Germans, he, in absentia, was deprived of all his offices. He wrote more than 200 papers and some textbooks, such as: The Guidelines of Pathological Anatomy (A kórboncolás vezérfonala) (1928). His membership of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences was not restored in 1994. – B: 0883, 1031, 1730, 7617, T: 7103, 7617.

Országh, Antal (Anthony) (Máramarossziget, now Sighetu Marmăției, Romania, 1818 - Buda, 6 April 1878) – Painter, graphic artist, photographer. In 1848, as an Imperial Royal Cadet, he fled to Italy with about 60 others, becoming an officer of the Venetian Legion. From there, he went to Constantinople, where he earned his living as a photographer and language teacher. In 1853 he moved to Paris, where he excelled himself with masterly pen-and-ink drawings, working as a painter and photographer. He led a rich and carefree life. He invented porcelain photography, but his pieces did not prove durable. He returned to Pest and opened a workshop on Kerepes Avenue, but he was unable to make a success of his invention here either. He was ruined and, as a daily paid clerk, he worked for the Ministry of Commerce, leading a wretched life in Buda, where he shot himself. He was a true master of pen-and-ink drawing, requiring painstaking, arduous work. His work, entitled Huszt Castle (Husztvár), prepared in a medieval tone, was considered a remarkable manuscript both historically and artistically; its text is a translation of Simoncsich’s Latin work, but with numerous new data and documents. He was the author of many articles, letters and a novel, The Parisian Mohicans (A párisi mohikánok), in 34 vols., translated from the French work of Alexander Dumas, by Országh and others (1854-1861). He also wrote a stage work, Exchange Pair (Cserepár), dedicated to the memory of Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey. Many translations of his stage works remained in manuscript form, unpublished. – B: 0907, T: 7456. → Kölcsey, Ferenc.

Országh, László (Ladislav) (Szombathely, 25 October 1907 - Budapest, 27 January 1984) – Philologist and lexicographer. He was a student of the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, traveled to the USA on a scholarship, and completed his university studies at Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida (a suburb of Orlando, Florida). He obtained his Ph.D. in 1935 and, from 1937, was a Professor at Eötvös College, Budapest. Between the years of 1947 and 1950, and from 1957 to 1969, he was Professor and Head of the Department of English Language and Literature at the University of Debrecen. In 1963 he received the Award of the Academy for his outstanding work as Editor-in-Chief of the seven-volume Thesaurus of the Hungarian Language (Magyar Nyelv Értelmező Szótára). From 1950 to 1962 he also published various English-Hungarian and Hungarian-English dictionaries, whose circulation exceeded a million copies. While at the English Department of the University of Debrecen in 1963, he began to publish annals that became one of the most important forums for English studies in Hungarian, the Philological Studies in English (Angol Filológiai Tanulmányok) series. His principal area of research was English and American literary history. His major works include The Origin of the English Novel (Az angol regény eredete) (1941); Shakespeare (1944); The Story of American Literature (Az amerikai irodalom története) (1967); Introduction to American Studies (Bevezetés az amerikanisztikába), (1972), and Elements of English Origin in the Hungarian Vocabulary (Angol eredetű elemek a magyar szókészletben) (1977). He was the holder of a Candidate’s Degree in Linguistics (1957), and Academic Doctor of Philology (1974). For his many achievements, the London Institute of Linguists honored him with a Commemorative Gold Medal in 1970. Then, in 1977, on his seventieth birthday, the British Government conferred on him the honorary title of Commander of the Order of the British Empire (C.B.E.), for his efforts in propagating English language and culture. – B: 0877, 0883, T: 7657.

Országh, Pál (Paul) (Pavel Országh Hviezdoslav)(pen name: Jozef Zbranský) (Felsőkubin, now Vyšný Kubín, Slovakia, 2 February 1849 - Alsókubin, now Dolný Kubín, Slovakia, 8 November 1921) – Slovak poet, playwright and lawyer. He came from a family of the lesser gentry. He studied in the Hungarian schools of Miskolc and Késmárk (now Kesmarok, Slovakia), and received a Law Degree from the University of Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia). Here, he participated in editing the Almanach Napred (Előre Almanach), signifying a new milestone in Slovak literature (1871). Already during his secondary school years, he had written around 200 poems, all of which reflect patriotism and a desire for freedom. At first, he published only Slovak translations of the works of Hungarian poets, such as János (John) Arany and Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, as well as some of the world's classics under the name of Hviezdoslav Pavel. In 1906 he published an excellent Slovak translation of the great Hungarian drama The Tragedy of Man (Az Ember tragédiája) by Imre Madách. The Kisfaludy Literary Society made him a member in 1912. He began his career as a Hungarian poet, but never achieved prominence. Later, with the encouragement of the Slovaks in the County of Árva, he began to write in the Slovak language. He founded the Matica Slovenská (Slovak mother) Cultural Institute, which fostered Slovak Literature. In the end, he became an outstanding Slovak poet and classical writer of Slovak literature. His important works include Sonety (Sonnets), (1882-1886); Žalmy a hymny (Psalms and Hymns) (1885-1892); Stesky (Complains) (1903); Krvavé sonety (Bloody Sonnets) (1914/1919); epic works: Ežo Vlkolinský (1890); Gábor Vlkolinský (1897-1899); dramas: Pomsta (Revenge) (1909); Herodes a Herodias (1909) (Herod és Herodias), and Biblical poetry. He gave service to Hungarian literature by translating Hungarian classics into Slovakian. There is a statue of Országh in every larger Slovak town. Hviezdosfalva was named after him in 1921. – B: 1138, 1031, 1304, T: 7617.→Petőfi, Sándor, Arany, János; Madách, Imre.

Országh, Tivadar (Soroksár, 5 December 1901 - Budapest, 11 October 1963) – Violinist, composer and educator. At the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, he was a student of Jenő (Eugene) Hubay and Zoltán Kodály. From 1929 he was a professor at the Academy of Music. From 1961 until his death, he was Head of the Department of String Instruments. From 1927 to 1946, he was a member of the Waldbauer-Kerpely String Quartet; between 1947 and 1958 was leader of his own string quartet. From 1934 to 1938, he was Concertmaster of the National Capital Orchestra (Székesfővárosi Zenekar); from 1934 to 1938, Concertmaster of the Budapest Concert Orchestra (Budapesti Hangversenyzenekar); from 1938 to 1943, and again from 1948, Concertmaster of the Radio Orchestra (Rádiózenekar); from 1958-1960 he was solo viola-player there. As soloist and chamber-musician he traveled throughout Europe on concert tours. He wrote chamber music, violin compositions and mainly instructive works including his Viola-School (Brácsaiskola). – B: 0883; T: 7456.→Hubay, Jenő; Kodály Zoltán.

Orth, György (George) (Budapest, 30 April 1901 - Porto, Portugal, 11 January 1962) – Soccer player, businessman. He started to play soccer in the youth team of the Vasas Club, then became the center forward of the Hungarian Athletic Circle and became one of the Hungarian National Eleven for the first time in 1917. In the autumn of 1925 he was seriously injured in Vienna and he could play again only in the 1926-1927 professional match, in the team of the Hungária Football Club. He was a member of the National Eleven on 30 separate occasions. After a rich and successful football career he was a trainer in Italy, Germany, France, Mexico, Chile, Argentina, Peru and Portugal. He was a famous Hungarian soccer player in his time, and a successful coach abroad. His bronze bust is in the Népszatadion (Peoples' Stadium), Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Orth, Győző (Victor) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 23 August 1912 - Lake Village, IL, USA., 5 September 1988) – Minister of the Reformed Church in the USA. He attended secondary school in Temesvár, where the famous Hungarian poet-preacher, Mihály (Michael) Szabolcska taught religion. Győző received his love for the Christian faith from Szabolcska and, from the school's Youth Organization he received a deep appreciation for his Hungarian heritage. In 1933, after graduating from the Protestant Academy of Theology in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), he spent a year as an assistant minister in the small mining town of Oravica in the southwestern part of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1934 he studied for a year at the University of Basel, under the renowned Pastoral-Theologian, Edward Thurneysen. In 1937 he was appointed Regional Missionary Minister. For several years, he organized Sunday Schools and other church groups in the 181 congregations of the Transylvanian Királyhágó Reformed District. During this time, he also edited the paper Reformed Future (Református Jövő), and published a collection of religious poems entitled Godly Songs (Istenes énekek). Early in 1945, Orth fled to Germany from advancing Soviet troops, to settle in the town of Osterode. In the following years, he visited Hungarian Protestants in refugee camps in the British Occupied Zone of Germany, publishing for them the Newsletter Evangelical World Service (Evangéliumi Világszolgálat). In 1949 he emigrated to Canada, where he began his ministry in Lethbridge, Alberta, under the guidance of Rev. Dr. Kálmán (Coloman) Tóth of Calgary. In 1951 Orth instituted English-language Sunday school instructions and English sermons in Békevár (now Kipling, Manitoba). Békevár Church, at that time, was the largest Hungarian Reformed Congregation in Canada. For seven years, he also taught Hungarian language at summer camps, with the help of a dedicated church leader. In 1959 he moved to the United States, where he served several Hungarian congregations. In 1968, he accepted a call from the Kálvin Hungarian Church (Kálvin Magyar Református Egyház) in South Chicago. From there, the congregation moved to Lynwood, IL. where they built a new church. It was dedicated on 4 July 1976 on the Bicentenary of the USA. For several years, Revered Orth was Dean of the Western Diocese of the Hungarian Reformed Church in America. He also edited the Reformed Newsletter (Reformátusok Lapja), and was one of the Hungarian translators of the Upper Room publication. In 1987, due to ill health, he resigned his post as Dean and retired to the nearby town of Lake Village, where he passed away at the aged 76. – B: 0906, T: 7617.→Szabolcska, Mihály.

Orthodox Churches (Greek Orthodox, Eastern Churches) – As a result of the Great Schism in 1054, the Orthodox Churches became separated from the Roman Catholic Church, and used the Byzantine liturgy and Church Organization. Their followers were known in southern and eastern Hungary after the Magyars settled in the Carpathian Basin at the end of 9th century. At first, the Byzantine and the Roman Church existed side by side and it was only in the 13th and 14th centuries that the Roman Church became the major church in Hungary, and the national minorities (Serbs, Ruthenians, Wlachs and Greeks) were members of the Orthodox Church. The first Orthodox Bishopric was founded in Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania) in 1572. The seat of the Serbian Metropolitan was in Szentendre, near Budapest, and from 1739, in Karlóca (now Novi Karlovci, Vojvodina, Serbia). Until 1864, in the Kingdom of Hungary, only the Serbian Autocephalous Orthodox Church was active. It became a recognized religion after the Toleration Act (Tűrelmi Rendelet) of Emperor József II (Joseph), confirmed by the No. XVII Act of the 1790 National Assembly and the 1848 the National Assembly.

Since the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate in 1920, which partitioned Hungary, the present Orthodox Churches of Hungary have belonged to the patriarchate of their distinctive nationality. The basic units of the church organizations are the parishes, organized into deaneries, which together with the convents (Orthodox religious orders), constitute the diocese; the dioceses together constitute the District of the Metropolitan.

The Hungarian Orthodox Administration, and the Hungarian and Russian parishes and diaspora are under the authority of Moscow Patriarchate. They have ten parishes (2 in Budapest, 1 each in Miskolc, Nyíregyháza, Szentes, Szeged, Gyöngyös, Kecskemét, Karcag and Üröm). They have about 5-6 thousand members. The Serbian Parish of Buda with about 7,000 members is under the Serbian Patriarchate of Belgrade; the Romanian Orthodox Church of Hungary, with about 16,000 members, is under the Romanian Orthodox Patriarchate of Bucharest, and the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, with about 500 members, is under the authority of the Bulgarian Orthodox Patriarch of Sofia. – B: 1042, T: 7359.

Ortutay, Gyula (Julius) (Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 24 March 1910 - Budapest 22 March 1978) – Politician and folklorist. He pursued his studies at the University of Szeged, worked at the National Museum of Budapest, became Deputy Chair of the Literary Department of the Hungarian Radio; was a private tutor, and an Editor for the periodical, Hungarology (Magyarságtudomány). He joined the Smallholders' Party in 1942 and was organizer of the Historical Memorial Committee (Történelmi Emlékbizottság). Ortutay was in contact with the resistance group of Endre Bajcsy-Zsilinszky. After the German occupation of Hungary on 19 March 1944, he worked at a bookstore and participated in the Resistance Movement. After 1945 he was President of the Hungarian Radio and the Hungarian News Agency (Magyar Távirati Iroda – MTI). He was Minister of Culture and Public Education (1947-1950), and he played a decisive role in the nationalization of the church school system. After 1950, he was also involved in literary activities and was an editor or co-editor of lexicons, periodicals and folklorist publications. He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize, the Academy Prize and the State Prize. – B: 0932, 1122, T: 7103. → Bajcsy-Zsilinszky, Endre; Ortutay, Zsuzsa; Hungarology.

Ortutay, Zsuzsa (Susie) (née Kemény) (Budapest, 13 February 1913 - Budapest, 12 February 1982) – Dancer and technical writer. She received her professional training at the Eurhythmics School of Olga Szentpál. After 1932 she appeared in the productions of the Szentpál Dance Troupe (Szentpál Táncsoport), including Hungarian Mourning (Magyar halottas) and Maria-girls (Mária-lányok), and also participated in pedagogical work. In 1938, after her marriage to Gyula Ortutay, she stopped her performing and pedagogical work. In 1948 she accepted the responsibility of President of the Dance Association that she continued until 1950. Between 1951 and 1956, she was Editor of the monthly, The Art of Dance (Táncművészet) – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7684. → Ortutay, Gyula.

Ortvay, Tivadar (until 1875 Ortmayr) (Csiklovabánya, now Ciclova Montana, Romania, 19 November 1843 - Budapest, 8 July 1916) – Catholic cleric, historian and archeologist. His studies in Theology took place in Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania). He was a priest in various parishes, then a teacher at the High School in Lugos. While working in this capacity, he earned university credentials to be a private tutor. From 1873 he was the Assistant Custodian for the Antiquities Section of the Hungarian National Museum. In 1875 he taught Archeology at the Academy of Law in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1892 he was made Chamberlain in Pápa, and in 1900 Abbot of Csanád. His historical and archeological work was broad in scope, and original in its methods. His main works are Ecclesiastical Mapping of Hungary at the Beginning of the 14th Century, vols. i-iii (Magyarország egyházi földleírása a XIV. század elején, Volumes I-III) (1891-1892); History of the City of Pozsony, vols. i-iv (Pozsony város története, Volumes I-IV), (1892-1913); History of Temes County and the City of Temesvár (Temes vármegye és Temesvár város története) (1896-1914), and Maria, the Wife of Lajos II (Louis), King of Hungary (Mária, II Lajos magyar király neje) (1914). He was a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding in 1875, ordinary member in 1905). He was awarded the Marczibányi Award by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1916. – B: 0883, 0945, T: 7688.

Örvényes monastery (or Örményes) – Monastery founded in County Zala by Miklós (Nicholas) I. Kanizsai, Lord Lieutenant of the Counties of Zala, Vas and Sopron. It was established around 1390 for the Pauline friars, near the village of Kehida (north of Zala-Apáti), in honor of the Virgin Mother. A short time later, a fine Chapel was built near the shrine in honor of King László I (St. Ladislas, 1077-1095). The site quickly became a famous shrine. By 1400, papal approval was requested for pilgrimages to the shrine. It was destroyed by the Turkish invasion in the 16th century. Its ruins could still be seen at the beginning of the 19th century. – B: 0942, T: 7103. → Pauline Order.

Óry, Miklós S.J. (Nicholas) (Németlövő, now Deutsch Schützen, Austria, 9 September 1909 - Klagenfurt, 19 February 1984) – Church historian and writer. In 1927 he joined the Jesuit Order. In the University of Szeged, he studied Philosophy and Theology. In 1938 he was ordained. From 1940 to 1943 in Rome, he studied at St. Gregory University and obtained a Ph.D. in Dogmatics. From 1949 he lived in Italy, then in Belgium and, from 1954, he lived in Austria. He taught at the Canisianum of Innsbruck and, later, at the Diocesan Seminary of Klagenfurt. From 1955 he worked to rally the Hungarian priests and the faithful in the West. He participated in editing the Catholic journal launched in 1969 entitled Service (Szolgálat). Péter Pázmány's life and activity was the main subject of his research and literary work. Among his four published books on Pázmány, there was Pázmány's first Latin work, dealing with the Church, entitled Diatriba Theologica in facsimile edition. Among his works there was Péter Pázmány's Spirituality (Pázmány Péter lelkiisége) (1964). – B: 1702, 1257, T: 7456. → Pázmány, Péter.

Ösbő (Usubu) – A noted warrior who, according to 13th century chronicler Anonymus, was sent by Árpád in a delegation to Mén-Marót, to ask for permission to cross his land from the River Szamos to the border of Nyír and the gate of Meszes. He received a warm welcome and was lavished with gifts but, after three days, was refused permission. Ösbő excelled in warfare in the western part of the country. After a two-week battle, he captured Veszprém, Vásár and Tihany, as he chased the adversaries to the western border. Prince Árpád appointed him Army Commander and sent him against Ménrót. Bolstered with Szekler troops, he fought at the fortress of Bihar in a thirteen-day siege. Szalók, son of Ösbő, became the scion of the Szalók people. – B: 0942, T: 7658.→Anonymus; Árpád.

Osl, Clan of (Osl nemzetség) – Originating from the tribal leader of Sur, the clan had its origins as well as a monastery in Csorna in Transdanubia. Its most notable members were Lieutenant Osl (†1230) and his son Benedek (†1244), who became Bishop of Várad and later, of Győr; Miklós (Nicholas) and Domonkos (Dominic), who were viceroys at the time of Kings Károly Robert I (Charles Robert, 1307-1342) and Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382). The Kanizsai, Móricz, Némethi and Nicky families originate from the Osl branch. The Clan and its family lineage are remembered by the Transdanubian villages of Némethi, Nick, Osl, Ostffyaszszonyfa and Sur. – B: 1078, T: 7676.

Ostyaks – People (in their own tongue Hanti) living near the northern, sub-arctic end of the Ural Mountains, on its eastern, Asian side, on the lower course of the River Ob, near the confluence with the River Irtysh. They speak a Uralic language, the Ob-Ugric branch of the Proto-Ugric part of the Proto-Finno-Ugric family of languages, all derived from the Proto-Uralic (the other part being the Proto-Samoyed), existing as an independent ethnic unit since approximately 4000 BC. Some consider the Proto-Uralic group to be descended from an Altaic ancestral stock; others think that it was related to the Indo-European one. The occupation of the Ostyaks is hunting and taiga fishing. According to the 1989 census, they number 22,283. – B: 1068, 1553, T: 7456.→Uralic languages.

Osvát, Ernő (Ernest) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 7 April 1877 - Budapest, 28 October 1929) – Writer, critic and brother of Kálmán (Coloman). His first short story was published in Nagyvárad. He moved to Budapest in 1895, studied Law; but soon switched to the University's Arts Department. An article that appeared under his name was published in the paper Evening News (Esti Újság) in 1897. From the autumn of 1898, the paper Budapest News (Budapesti Hírlap) published his literary critiques of the books of Géza Gárdonyi, Zoltán Ambrus, and Dániel Papp etc. He was a staff member and headed the literary column at The Week (A Hét) from November 1889. In the first decade of the 20th century he worked at the New Hungarian Review (Új Magyar Szemle). His plans for journal editing were realized in 1902. Between the years 1902-1903 Osvát edited the journal Hungarian Genius (Magyar Géniusz). In 1905 he founded the journal The Observer (Figyelő), which failed after one year. 1908 saw the launch of the important literary review, the West (Nyugat), and with it began a new literary era. Osvát and Miska Fenyő were listed as editors, Ignó as Editor-in-Chief. Though editors changed throughout the years, Osvát remained the main editor, providing an incubator for talent. 1923 saw several notable commemorations in avant-garde Hungarian literature during Osvát's twenty-five years as a writer. Osvát discovered many young writers, including Mihály (Michael) Babits, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz, Gyula (Julius) Illyés, László (Ladislav) Németh, etc. He believed in allowing talent to be created according to its own laws, hence he published many different styles of high quality creative endeavors. During his career, he discovered numerous gifted writers. He is mostly known for his important contributions to the highly influential literary journal, West (Nyugat). In 1929 Osvát's daughter's death left him inconsolable, and he committed suicide. Besides the West (Nyugat), his major works include From the Book of Dissatisfaction (Az elégedetlenség könyvéből), a collection of aphorisms (1930), and His Complete Writings (Összes írásai) (1945). In 1928 he received the Baumgarten Award. – B: 0883, 0877, 0883, 1257, T: 7657, 7688→Osvát, Kálmán; Gellért, Oszkár; Gárdonyi, Géza; Ambrus, Zoltán; Fenyő, Miksa; Ignótus; Babits, Mihály; Móricz, Zsigmond; Illyés, Gyula; Németh, László.

Osvát, Kálmán (Coloman Osváth) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, 18 January 1880 - Budapest, 1 August 1953) – Writer, physicist. He was the younger brother of Ernő (Ernest), a significant participant in the Hungarian literary life of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1919 he began the first Romanian-Hungarian-language literary journal, the Zord Time (Zord Idő), which was published in Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Romania). He was Editor of several literary journals, including the Guide (Kalauz), the Reprise (Repriz) and the Transylvanian Lexicon (Erdélyi Lexikon). Between 1920 and 1927 he worked on the staff of the journal, Our Age (Korunk). In 1945 he had his brother's writings published. His main writings are Rainbow (Szivárvány) poems (1903); In the Jerusalem Church (A jeruzsálem templomban) short stories (1907), and Letters To My Son (Levelek a fiamhoz) (1923). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.→Osvát, Ernő.

Osváth, Júlia (Rákospalota, 15 February 1908 - Budapest, 20 August 1994) – Opera singer (soprano). At the beginning of her career, she performed in the Ensemble of Emil Lichtenberg, first as a member of the choir, later, as a soloist. In 1929 she was a soloist with the Palestrina Chorus and, in 1930, soloist of the Mátyás Church, Budapest. In 1933 she completed three years of vocal studies within one year, at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest; following that, she continued her studies as a private student of Árpád Palotai. The Opera House contracted her in 1935 and she made her debut in the role of Mária Gara in Ferenc Erkel's László Hunyadi. In 1937 she was a guest singer at the Salzburg Festival, singing the role of Queen of the Night in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola), under the baton of Toscanini. She started out as a Mozart singer and sang all the lead roles of Mozart operas performed in Budapest. She was successful as a guest artist in Vienna, Ostend, Bucharest, Moscow and Leningrad. Her rich repertoire of Mozart opera roles extended to roles in the operas of Verdi, Wagner and Tchaikovsky. Her name was closely associated with the roles of the Countess in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága), and that of the Marschallin in R. Strauss' Rosenkavalier (Rózsalovag). Her main roles were: Masenka in Smetana's The Bartered Bride (Az eladott menyasszony); Desdemona in Verdi's Othello; Tatiana in Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin; Eva in R. Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (Nürnbergi Mesterdalnokok); Violetta in Verdi's Traviata; Musette in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet), and Melinda in Erkel's Bánk bán. She was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1949), the titles of Merited Artist (1950), and Outstanding Artist (1951). Her bust is in the Opera House, Budapest. There is a Julia Osváth Prize. – B: 1445, 1679, 1031, T: 7684.

He acquired his Masters Degree in 1970 and his Doctorate in Medicine in 1982. He started his medical practice in the County Hospital of Székesfehérvár in 1952. In 1954 he was transferred to the National Public Health Institute (Országos Közegészségügyi Intézet). In 1957 he started working in the Children's Clinic of the László Hospital, Budapest. In 1964 he became an assistant professor in the Szeged Children's Clinic. After 1968 he became an associate professor.

In 1974 he took over the direction of the Buda Children's Hospital. From 1987 to 1995 he was Director of the Szabadsághegy Children's Sanatorium. In 1988 he became a titular professor at the University of Budapest. On a study trip, he visited Oslo in 1968, Paris in 1973, and Helsinki in 1982. In his research work, he concentrated on immunology and children's allergies. He made basic discoveries in childhood allergy research and applied a number of prophylactic methods. His works include Allergic and Immunity Diseases of Childhood (1976); Allergic Diseases of Childhood; Immunological Aspects of Allergy and Allergic Diseases (1976); Childhood Asthma, Bronchial Heterogeneity and its Prognosis (in: Pneumonology, 1978), and Allergic and Immunology Illnesses of Childhood (Gyermekekori allergiás és immunológiai betegségek) (1976). He was Vice-President of the National Allergy and Immunology Society (1983-1992) and, after 1983, a corresponding member of the American Allergy and Immunological Academy, an honorary member of Charles University of Prague (1989), and recipient of a number of commemorative medals. – B: 1730, T: 7656.

Osváth, Viktor (Victor) (Budapest, 19 September 1921 - Budapest, 15 September 1985) – Minister of the Reformed Church, organist, conductor and composer. When his family moved to Kecskemét, he attended High School there (1931-1939), and completed his theological studies at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest (1939-1944). He earned diplomas to work as a teacher, a singing instructor and a choir-conductor (1948). He was an assistant minister in Cece (1945-1947), Vezensy (1947-1949), and in Budapest-Fasor (1949-1952). He worked as Parish Minister in Vezensy between 1952 and 1959, and Minister, Organist and Choirmaster in Kecskemét (1960-1981). The years in Kecskemét offered him an opportunity to be extensively involved with music, especially church music and composing. He arranged the hymns of the Reformed Hymnbook for mixed choirs with instrumental, mainly organ accompaniment. From this collection the most frequently used pieces are Psalms 5, 65; hymns 161, 165, 251, and 378 of the Reformed Hymnbook. He led the Mihály Kecskeméti Vég Reformed Choir in Kecskemét. The choir performed not only in Kecskemét but in other congregations and institutes as well. He also participated in the training of church organists, locally and nationally. Due to his illness, he retired in 1981 and moved to Budapest. His compositions, arrangements, writings and sermons appeared in print. – B: 0883, 1929, T: 7688, 7103.

Otrokócsi Foris, Ferenc (Francis) (Otrokocs, now Otročok, Slovakia, October 1648 - Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, 1 October 1718) – Theological and philological writer. He began his studies at the Reformed College of Sárospatak. From 1669 he was Rector of the Protestant College at Szatmárnémeti. In 1671 and 1672 he studied at the University of Utrecht. After returning to Hungary in 1673, he became Minister of the Reformed Church in Rimaszécs (now Rimavská Seč, Slovakia). In 1674, together with all the Protestant ministers of Hungary, he was summoned before the Martial Law Court of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), was imprisoned, and sold to the galleys in Naples, from where he was freed in 1676. He wrote a report on his galley captivity, entitled Furor bestiae. For a while, he lived abroad in countries safe from the Catholics: Switzerland, Germany, England and the Netherlands. Finally, in 1678, he returned to Hungary. At first, he became a minister again in Rimaszécs, then, from 1681, in Gyöngyös and, from 1677 in 1690, in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). Later, from 1690 to 1693, he again lived in England and the Netherlands. Back in Hungary, he was striving for the unification of the Catholic and Protestant Churches. In 1694 he became a Roman Catholic. He received a pension from Emperor Leopold I (1654-1705). In 1696 he went to Rome, where he obtained a Catholic Theological, Legal and Philosophical doctorate. From 1699 he was Lecturer in Law at the Nagyszombat Academy, also Curator of the Chapter's Archive. He was the author of a number of Latin and Hungarian theological studies. In his comparative philological work, Origines Hungaricae (1693), he tried to prove a Hungarian-Jewish linguistic affinity, with unscientific, fanciful etymologies. In this field, it was to his credit that he also introduced the Byzantine sources into the research of early Hungarian history. He wrote 19 works, among them Disputatio Theologica De Vocatione Abrahami, (Utrecht, 1672); Under the Cross... (Kereszt alatt nyögő Magyar Izraelnek Hála-adó és Könyörgő Imádságai) five prayers (Kolosvár, 1682); Origines Hungaricae, vols. i-ii (Magyarok eredetei, I-II) (Franeker, 1693), and Roma Civitas Dei Sancta... (Róma, Istennek Szent Városa...Rome, the Holy City of God) (1698). – B: 0883, 1068, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→Kollonich, Count Lipót; Galley Slave of Hungarian Preachers; Decade of Mourning.

Ottlik, Géza (Budapest, 9 May 1912 - Budapest, 9 October 1990) – Writer and translator of literary works. He began his secondary studies at the Kőszeg Military College, and continued them at the Military College of Budapest. He graduated in 1930. At the Budapest Polytechnic he studied Mathematics and Physics under the guidance of Lipót Fejér, and obtained a B.Sc. degree in Natural Sciences. His first short story, Alone (Egyedül), appeared in the paper, Sunrise (Napkelet) in 1931. He worked for the Literary Department of the Hungarian Radio. Ottlik regularly wrote novels and reviews of books and plays from 1939 on. These writings appeared in the papers: The West (Nyugat), Mirror (Tükör), Silver Age (Ezüstkor), Hungarian Star (Magyar Csillag), and later in the New Times (Új Idők), Hungarians (Magyarok), Reply (Válasz), New Moon (Újhold), and Vigil (Vigilia). Ottlik translated O'Neill's play Mourning becomes Electra (Amerikai Elektra), which was first performed at the National Theater in 1937. For a short period in 1945 and 1946, he was the dramaturge for the Hungarian Radio. Later, he produced a twenty-part series for radio, called: Twenty-Five Years of Hungarian Literature. During the hard-line Communist years, he was forced out of the literary life, supporting himself by translating into Hungarian the novels of English, American, German and French authors. From 1957 his novels, essays and short stories began to be published. His children's film (1988) was inspired by his The Rooftops at Dawn (A hajnali háztetők) short story (1957). He was an important figure in Hungarian prose writing. His best-known novel was: School on the Border (Iskola a határon) (1959). He also produced it as a series for the Kossuth Radio. His other works include We Have It All (Minden megvan) short stories (1969); Prose (Próza), critiques and essays (1980); The Valencia Puzzle (A Valencia-rejtély); Ship's Diary (Hajónapló); On Course (Pályákon) dramas and short stories (1989), and Buda, novel, edited by Péter Lengyel (1993, 1997). He received the Attila József Prize in 1981, the Kossuth Prize in 1985, the Ernő Szép Award in 1988, and the Örkény Award in 1990. – B: 0877, 0883, 1122, 1257, T: 7688, 7657.

Ottó, Ferenc (Francis) (Valkó, 26 October 1904 - Gödöllő, 19 November 1976) – Composer. He studied under the direction of Alfiero Arecco in Milan (1924-1926), then, until 1931, under Zoltán Kodály at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. As a member of the Buda Choral Society, the Palestrina Chorus and the University Choir, he reached the Scandinavian countries, also Germany, Italy, Poland and the USA in 1937. His work: Lullaby (Altató) was composed to the words of three verses by Bálint (Valentine) Balassi, and one verse by Attila József. He wrote a study entitled Béla Bartók in the Light of Cantata Profana (Bartók Béla a Cantata Profana tükrében) (1936). He composed an opera for a text written by József Nyírő: Beautiful Girl Julia (Júlia szép lány), produced in the Opera House, Budapest, in 1939. In World War II, he became a prisoner of war in France, and returned to Hungary in 1946. He composed suites Green Helen (Zöld Ilona), and a stage work Hungarian Bacchanalia (Magyar Bacchus). In 1949, on a charge of organizing activities against the Peoples' Democracy, he was sentenced to life imprisonment. On 17 August 1956, he was freed with an amnesty. The Music Publisher (Zeneműkiadó) published several of his songs as well as his wind quintet. His other works include Lumberman (Favágó) to lyrics of Attila József, for male choir (1936), for mixed choir (1937); Two Pastorals for Organ (Két pasztorál orgonára) (1938); Harvesting Day (Aratónap) to a poem by Gyula Illyés (1940); Three Phantasies on Old Hungarian Church-hymns (Három fantázia régi magyar egyházi népénekekre) organwork (1939); Polish Millenary Mass (Lengyel millenniumi mise) (1965); Christmas Pastoral (Krácsonyi Pásztorál) (1967); Three Hungarian Masses (Három Magyar Mise) (1967, 1970, 1971); In Memoriam Zoltán Kodály, horn-solo (1971); Hungarian Lord's Prayer (Magyar Miatyánk) (1972), and the Rákóczi-Oratorio (1974) – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456. → Balassi, Bálint; Kodály, Zoltán; József, Attila; Nyírő, József; Illyés, Gyula,

Otto, King (Otto of Bayern) (Wittlesbach, Otto, or Otto Bayer) (Burghausen, 11 February 1261 - Landshut, 9 September 1312) – King of Hungary (1305- 1307). He came from the House of Wittlesbach, and was Prince of Lower Bavaria. His mother was Erzsébet (Elizabeth), the daughter of King Béla IV (1235-1270). The Polish King Vencel III, renounced the Crown of Hungary and bestowed it on Otto, in Brno. Later, he was met by his faithful supporters in Sopron and was formally crowned in Székesfehérvár by Bishops Benedict Rádi of Veszprém, and Antal of Csanád, on 5 December 1305, – but not by the Archbishop of Esztergom. Then he entered Buda and later, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) to seek the hand of the Voivode's daughter. Despite the warm reception from the Szeklers, Ottó was captured by the Voivode, who stripped him of the Crown and other royal insignia, before releasing him in 1307. Meanwhile, the supporters of Károly Robert (Charles Robert) of the House of Anjou (1307-1342) captured Buda and forced Ottó to flee through Poland to Sicily. Ottó retained his royal title of King of Hungary throughout his life. – B: 1078, 1031, T: 7658.

Otto, Prince, (11th century) – Heir apparent, first son of King István I (St Stephen, 997-1038). His godfather was Emperor Otto III of Germany. Otto died at an early age. – B: 1078, T: 7658. → István I, King.

Ottrubay, Melinda (Budapest, 1921 - ) – Dancer. She trained at the Ballet School of the Opera House, Budapest, and was a student of Rezső Brada; thereafter, she became a member of the Opera House in 1933. She was a ballet dancer of a most attractive appearance, being suggestive and having an outstanding technique. She danced almost all of the lead roles of the repertoire. Her husband, Count Pál (Paul) Esterházy, was sent to the Labor Camp of Reck during the hard-line Communist era at the end of the 1940s, and Melinda Ottrubay was deported from Budapest to the countryside; as a result, both her legs became paralyzed and she could not appear on stage again. During the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, she left Hungary, together with her husband. Her main roles were Fairy (Tündér) in Gy. Harangozó's The Wooden Prince (A fából faragott királyfi); the Girl (Lány) in Gy. Harangozó's The Miraculous Mandarin (A csodalatos Mandarin); Terpszikhore in A. Milloss's The Creations of Prometheus (Prometheusz teremtményei); Szulamit in Cieplinski's The Legend of Joseph (József legendája), and Seherzade in Cieplinski's Bolero. At the age of 24, she received the title prima ballerina assoluta. She is the author of a book entitled Rhythm and Dance (Ritmus és tánc) (1939). B: 1445, 1122, T: 7456.

Outlaws, popular songs of – A form of Hungarian folk poetry, a continuation of the classical ballads of the 19th century. They tell about the legendary doings of the poor outlaws, the escapees of military drafting or bondage, living in marshlands and desolate places. These songs have a relaxed style, although they very much reflect reality. Their favorite heroes, among others, are Bandi Angyal, Imre Bogár, Marci Zöld, Vidróczky and Patkó, who robbed strangers and the rich, but always helped the poor. They were arch-typical folk heroes in richly decorated attire, riding on their famous horses, fighting their enemies, the state representatives and the gendarmes. – B: 1150, T: 3240. → Highwaymen's Time; Sobri, Jóska; Savanyú, Jóska; Vidróczki, Márton; Zöld, Marci; Rózsa, Sándor; Ballads About Convicts and Outlaws.

Outlaws, the World of – Following the defeat of the 1848-1849 War of Independence, the forceful reprisals by the Austrian Imperial power elicited a form of underground resistance throughout Hungary. Public security was greatly diminished, especially in the southern regions of the Nagyalföld (Great Plain). Royal Commissioner, Count Gedeon Ráday was charged on 1 April 1869 with re-establishing order and with eliminating the outlaws. Ráday successfully accomplished his task with the capture of Sándor Rózsa and his accomplices. – B: 1230, 1134, T: 3240. → Rózsa, Sándor.

Óvár Gradual – A gradual more or less contemporaneous with the Batthyány Codex dating from the middle of the 16th century. The partially complete gradual is a carefully notated Protestant liturgical book, including an Appendix of a later period, containing canzone-type compositions. – B: 0942, T: 7617. → Batthyány Codex.

Öveges, József (Joseph) (Páka, 10 November 1895 - Budapest, 4 September 1979) – Physicist. His secondary education was at Győr and Kecskemét. Then he studied at the University of Budapest, in the Department of Mathematics and Physics, obtaining a B.Sc. degree. From 1919 he taught in high schools of the Piarist Order, first in Szeged, then in Tata from 1922, Vác from 1924, again in Tata from 1930, and in Budapest from 1940. In 1946 and 1947 he was a lecturer; from 1948 an associate professor in Physics at the Teachers College of the University of Economics, Budapest. From 1948 he was Head and Professor at the Teachers College until his retirement in 1955. With his books and TV-series, he was the founder of the new Hungarian natural science education of the masses. From 1958 he was Editor for the 100 Questions Program of the Hungarian Television. His main works include Introduction to Natural Science (Bevezetés a természettanba) (1948); The Physics of Recent Times (Legújabb kor fizikája) (1951); Science, Technology, Life (Tudomány, Technika, Élet) (1960); We are Living in a Flood of Radiation (Sugárözönben élünk) (1968); Electronics (Elektrotechnika) (1970); Colorful Experiments 'from Nothing' (Színes fizikai kísérletek a 'semmiből') (1977), also in German, Playful Experiments with Electrons (Játékos kísérletek az elektronnal) (1981). Óz, Pál (Paul) (Pápa, ca. 1766 - Buda, 3 June 1795) – Lawyer and Jacobite. Early in his career he was a follower of the Reforms of Joseph II; later he came to believe in the transformation of the middle class. In 1794 he was arrested for taking part in the Hungarian Jacobite Movement. Even in Court, he courageously championed the transformation of the bourgeoisie and the republican ideas, and stressed the necessity of freeing the feudal serfs from their bondage. Though he did not play a leading role in the Jacobite Movement, he was sentenced to death. He refused an offer to plead for clemency, he only wanted justice. He courageously met with death; he was beheaded on the Vérmező (Meadow of Blood in Buda). – B: 0883, 0907, T: 7456.→Jacobites in Hungary; Martinovics, Ignác; Szentmarjay, Ferenc; Batsányi, János; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Szentjóni Szabó, László; Verseghy, Ferenc.

Óze, Lajos (Louis) (Szentes, 27 April 1935 - Budapest, 21 October 1984) – Actor. He completed the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1956, later he spent two seasons with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc. A little later, the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Budapest engaged him, and he remained there until his death. Earlier on, he played dramatic character roles; later acted in leading roles. His particular personality and tone of voice assured his success in intrigue roles; he could play many different characters with irony. He interpreted numerous characters in an authentic manner, on stage, in films and on television. He gave especially memorable interpretations in Shakespeare works, among them Richard II, and also Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde (Csongor és Tünde). With his work, he substantially contributed to the theatrical success of a number of contemporary writers, such as Gyula Illyés, László Németh and Endre Illés. He appeared on the stage of the National Theater for the last time, when he was acting the role of Professor Möbius in the play The Physicists. He made his last appearance in the Castle Theater (Várszínház), in the summer of 1984, in the leading role in the play by Péter Módos: Also Here On Earth (Itt a földön is). Seriously ill, he undertook to play the leading role in the film, What Is the Time Sir Alarm Clock? (Hány az óra Vekker Úr?) by Péter Bacsó; but he was unable to complete the film. From the working shots an Óze Memorial Film was made. In his memory, an exhibition was opened in the Royal Cinema, The Hours of a Stage Actor (Egy színjátékos órái) (27 April 1985). Some of his roles were Wurm in Schiller's

Love and Intrigue; Tiborc in József Katona's Bánk bán; Möbius in Friedrich Dürrenmatt's The Physicists (A fizikusok); Malvolio in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (Vízkereszt); Zách Felicián in Madách-Keresztury's Last Days of Csák (Csák végnapjai). His film roles include A Glass of Light Beer (Egy pikoló világos) (1955); Twenty-four Hours (Huszonnégy óra) (1964); Outlaws (Szegénylegények) (1965); Cold Days (Hideg napok) (1966); Prince the Soldier (Princ a katona) (TV, 1966); The Witness (A Tanú) (1968, 1970); A Crazy Night (Egy őrült éjszaka) (1969); The Immortal Legionaire (A halhatatlan légiós) (1971); The Fifth Seal (Az ötödik pecsét) (1975); Time Stands Still (Megáll az idő) (1981), and The Market (A piac) (1984). A portrait film was made of his life in 1984, the Devilish Ghosts (Ördögi kísértetek) (1986). He was awarded the Jászai Prize in 1970, the title of Outstanding Artist in 1984, and the Kossuth Prize posthumously in 1990. There is Lajos Ósze Art School in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1445, 1734, T: 7456, 7684.

Ozora, Battle of – The Battle of Ozora, on 7 October 1848, took place between the Hungarian People's Army together with the National Guard, and the Austrian Imperial forces, following the Battle of Pákozd. The Imperial Reserve Army, pursued by Perczel's troops, got as far as Ozora on 6 October, but found the bridge across the Sió Canal burnt down. Crossing the canal was impossible, as the other side was defended by 15,000 men of the People's Army and the National Guard, led by National Guard Major Vilmos (William) Csapó. The Croatian troops approaching the Sió were greeted with rifle fire by the National Guard. Roth tried to negotiate with Csapó about free withdrawal, but they could not come to an agreement. The discussions were interpreted by István (Stephen) Perczel, Csapó's junior officer. Major Csapó chose the tactics of deception and the appearance of numerical superiority. He used false troop movements, a drum-roll and trumpet sounds as well as the tactic of starving the already demoralized Croatians until, in the morning of 7 October, the troops of Mór Perczel and Artúr Görgey arrived, whereupon the trapped Imperial Austrian division surrendered. The success at Ozora was largely due to the courageous action of the People's Army and National Guard of Csapó. In the 1848-1849 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight against the Habsburg oppression, this victory at Ozora was the first by the Hungarian Honvéd army. The Hungarian troops, led by Mór Perczel, actually took prisoner the entire Imperial Army Corps (several divisions) led by the Imperial and Royal Brigadier-Generals Carl Roth and Nicolaus Philippovich, with the largest number of prisoners-of-war taken by the Hungarian forces in the history of the War of Independence. In a statement, the Hungarian parliament expressed their grateful thanks to who was appointed to the rank of General, and Csapó, who was appointed to the rank of Colonel by the National Defense Committee. – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Pákozd, Battle of; Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Görgey, Artúr; Perczel, Mór.

Ozorai, Imre (Emeric) (Born at Ozora in Transdanubia, County Tolna, before 1550) – Reformer, one of the first in Hungary. He planned to become a priest, but then he became a follower of the Reformation, after studying at the University of Krakow in 1530, and at the University of Wittenberg in 1531. When he returned to Hungary he started to act in the interest of Protestantism. As the Pastor of County Békés, he zealously preached the doctrines of Luther on the common border of the counties Békés, Bihar and Zaránd. His main work is the first printed Hungarian-language polemic work in four available incomplete copies, entitled: De Christo et eius ecclesia, item de Antichristo, eiusque ecclesia, published in Krakow in 1535. The best copy is held by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, the second best is in the National Museum, the third copy is in the British Museum in London; and the least complete copy is in the Reformed College of Nagyenyed (now Aiud, in Romania). – B: 0907, T: 7456.

Ozorai, Pipo (Filippo Scolari, Pippo Spano) (Florence, 1369 - Lippa, 27 December 1426, buried in Florence) – Treasurer, Ban of Szörény (Western Wallachia now in Romania). Mercenary. He was born into an impoverished noble family. Later, he became a Hungarian military commander. He came to Hungary as an agent for a businessman from Florence, working in Buda. In 1387 he joined the service of King Zsigmond I (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437). Soon he started to excel in wars and became King Zsigmond's right-hand man. In 1394 it was he, who advised the King to have most of the Croatian lords, taking part in an uprising, secretly killed. In 1397 he became Treasury Overseer, also in Körmöcbánya (now Kremnica, Slovakia) in 1399. In 1401 he was imprisoned, together with King Zsigmond and, with him he was freed again and became a member of the ruling league. In 1402-1403 he fought against László (Ladislav) of Naples. From 1403 to 1425 he was Treasury Overseer of salt, and Bailiff of County Temes. He was Treasurer in 1407-1408, and in 1408-1409 he was Ban of Szörény. In 1411-1412 he fought against Venice. He initiated the development of the defenses of Temesvár, Orsova and Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrad, Serbia). The great military commander, János Hunyadi started his military career under Ozorai. As a commander in 1421-1422, he led a campaign against the Hussites; but was defeated at Némethbród, County Bereg (now in Carpathian-Ukraine) on 8 January 1422. He was victorious against the Ottoman Turks in Wallachia in 1423, and at Galambóc (Golubac, south of the Danube) in 1426. As Treasury Overseer of salt, he reorganized the functioning of the salt-chambers and increased their incomes. He was inside-man for King Zsigmond in political matters in connection with the Great Schism. In 1410 he was the King's envoy in Italy and, during the Council of Constance (1414-1417), it was he, who guarded the anti-pope John XXIII. In Hungary, Ozorai made a fortune. He gave the village of Ozora the privileges of a market town. For the town of Székesfehérvár he built a burial chapel; for Lippa, a hospital. He gave employment in Hungary to the Italian painter Masolino. He was the most successful Hungarian Army Commander of the first third of the 15th century: he was victorious in 20 battles. His main achievement was the build-up of a system of border-fortresses against the Turks. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Zsigmond, King; Hunyadi, János.

Özséb O.S.P.P.E.O., Blessed (Eusebius) (Esztergom, ca 1200 - Pilisszentkereszt, 20 January 1270) – Hermit. He was the founder of the Order of the Hermits of St. Paul (Pálosok). He was educated in the school of Esztergom, where he was ordained. He became an expert in Canon Law, and he became a canon. In 1246 he resigned from his position as Canon and collected the hermits living in the Pilis Range and the Mecsek Mountain (Patacs), after the Mongol invasion of 1241-1242. After a dream, he gathered the hermits in a community and, in 1250 he founded their first monastery at Pilisszentkereszt. He worked out the monastic rules for the Order, named after the Hermit St. Paul, and to have them confirmed, he went to Rome in 1262. Through the good offices of St Thomas Aquinas, Pope Urban IV confirmed the only Hungarian Monastic Order, and Özséb became its first Superior. In 1256, at the Synod of Esztergom, he signed the document as Provincial. He was laid to rest in the church of the monastery at Pilisszentkereszt. His Order was finally acknowledged in 1308. He was beatified in 1988. (He is not to be confused with St. Eusebius). – B: 0883, 1068, 0945, T: 7456.→Paulist Order; Pauline Friars of Paraguay.

Ozsvald, Árpád (Nemesoroszi, now Oros, Slovakia, 28 January 1932 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 14 June, 2003) – Poet, writer, translator of literary works. His secondary studies were in the High School of Csurgó (1942-1950). He obtained a Teacher's Degree in Hungarian Literature from the Teachers' College of Pozsony (1953-1957). In 1956 he was Editor for the magazine, Week (Hét), writing its cultural column as well; from 1960 he became its acting Editor-in-Chief. In 1955 he became a member of the Czechoslovakian-Hungarian Workers' Cultural Federation (CSEMADOK). He exalted the peasants' life in his ballads. His poems, novelettes, reports, literary studies, critiques, cultural-historical and community-oriented articles, as well as translations from the Slovakian and the Czech languages, appeared in various newspapers and magazines, such as: Literary Review (Irodalmi Szemle); Woman (Nő); New Word (Új Szó); The Little Mailman (A kis postás), novel, reached three editions (1965); Shouting into the Wind (Szélkiáltó), anthology of poems (1966); Flame Palace (Tűzpalota), anthology of poems (1990); Spring Will Come Again, Dear (Tavaszi lesz újra, kedves), poems (1956); Ballad of the Carts (Szekerek balladája), poems (1971); Wild Waters (Vadvizek), poems (1978); Column head (Oszlopfő), selection of verses (1981); Age of Pleasures (Gyönyörök kora), by Peter Skarlant, translation (1984); Somewhere at Home (Valahol otthon), poems (1985); There are no Witnesses (Nincsenek tanúk), poems, (1990), and On the Road of Memories (Emlékek útján), studies (1995). In 1968, he was awarded the Imre Madách Prize. – B: 1083, 1257, 1890, T: 7456.

Paál, László (Ladislav) (Zám, 30 July 1846 - Charenton, France, 4 March 1879) – Painter. As a student at Arad (now in Romania), he started painting under the direction of Péter Nagy and, later of Pál (Paul) Bóhm. He also met the famous painter Mihály (Michael) Munkácsy. He went to Vienna to read Law in 1864, but he was really interested in painting. His early figurative works there reflect the traditional approach. During his trip to Holland in 1870, he came under the influence of the Dutch Masters, and developed his own coloristic language; he perceived nature as a large color block. Munkácsy invited him to Düsseldorf, Germany, in 1871. Afterward, he went to London, then to France and, in 1872, he settled in Barbizon, France. Here, his rigid draftsmanship changed into a more relaxed approach. He painted nothing but landscapes, especially forests. He painted the trails, the clearings and the quiet, moody interiors of the Fontainebleau woods. His pessimistic outlook on life, due to a family misfortune and ill health, darkened the tonality of his later works and dulled his colors. On occasion, his dynamic brushwork hinted at his romantic soul; but the general mood of his paintings, brightened only by the occasional dramatic highlights, seemed foreboding. His life-work includes Noon (Dél) (1870); Cloudy Weather (Borús idő) (1871); Landscape with Cows (Tehenek a fák alatt) (1872); Depth of the Forest (Erdő mélye) (1873); Swamp of Frogs (Békák mocsara) (1875); Forest Path (Erdei út) (1876), and Inside the Forest (Erdő belseje) (1877). He died after a long illness and his works were auctioned off in Paris in 1880. As his paintings did not reach Hungary until 1902, he did not influence the work of contemporary Hungarian painters. After 1902, a number of exhibitions of his works took place in Budapest. Paál was an outstanding figure of Hungarian painting in the 19th century, its first plein air advocate. His lifework is related to the Barbizon School. A memorial plaque was placed on the wall of his residence in Barbizon. – B: 0872, 0883, 1140, 1445, 1031, T: 7677.→Munkácsy, Mihály.

Paál, Zoltán (Ózd, 1913 - 1982) – Factory worker. He was born into a family of laborers from Ózd. After completing his primary school, he became a factory worker at the Ózd Works. His ancestors were the Palóc (derived from Avars or Khabars in the Carpathian Basin; their center was Ipolyság [now Šahy, Slovakia], north of Budapest). In January 1945 he was coerced into forced labor, captured by the advancing Soviet Army, and carried off to the Soviet Union. He befriended a Soviet soldier, Salavare Tura, (the shaman of the Mansi/Voguls of the then Soviet Union), who recognized the marks of the “initiated” in Paál, so Tura handed over to him a copy of the Arvisura Heritage in runic script with the obligation to write it down, transliterated into Hungarian, in twenty to thirty years. Tura’s grandfather had preserved the thousand-year-old Hun collection of Arvisura, meaning “telling the truth”, originally kept in Buda. Since all runic scripts were endangered after the conversion of Hungarians to Christianity in the 10-11th century AD, the sons of the blinded Vászony: Prince Endre (Andrew), Béla and Levente rescued the collection by taking it to the Bashkirs. Finally, the collection came to be in the custody of the Mansi. The Chief-Shaman considered that the time was right to return the collection to the Hungarians. Paál fulfilled his commission and thus considerably enriched the ancient knowledge of Hungarians with the Arvisura. – B: 1068,1893, T: 7456.→Arvisura; Hungarian Runic Script.

Pacséry, Imre (Emeric) (Őrszállás, now Stanišić, Serbia, part of former Southern Hungary in the Carpathian Basin, 10 December 1900 - Budapest, 25 January 1980) – Physician and specialist in industrial health. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1924. From 1924 to 1928 he was a physician at the National Institute for Social Insurance (Országos Társadalombitósító Intézet – OTI). In 1928-1929 he carried out research on a Rockefeller scholarship at Harvard University. From 1930 to 1934 he worked as a medical secretary for the OTI Board of Directors. In 1934 he organized the National Lead-Testing Station. Between 1934 and 1949 he was Head of the OTI Department of Industrial Health. From 1973 he was an industrial physician and consultant for the Budapest District XIV Clinic. As a specialist in industrial health issues, he dealt with lead poisoning, injuries caused by aromatic nitro- and amino-compounds, cancer diseases connected with work, and illnesses brought about by harmful substances. He is regarded as the pioneer of Industrial Health Research in Hungary. The number of his published scientific papers amounts to 60, such as: The Methodology of Industrial Health Investigations (Az iparegészségügyi vizsgálatok metodikája) with L. Magos (1960). – B: 1730, 1731, 1160, T: 7456.

Pác, Aladár (Csókás, 11 January 1882 - 1938) – Chemical engineer. After finishing his secondary studies in Hungary, it is believed that he obtained a Ph.D. in Chemistry in Berlin, by the time he was 23. His residence in Hungary was in Salgótarján, near the Czechoslovak border. He emigrated to the United States by ship from Fiume, Hungary (now Rijeka, Croatia), on 11 June 1905. He settled in Cleveland in 1906. He worked at the General Electric Company and, in 1908, he patented his first invention. By 1909 he was working at the Company's Nela Park facility, where he experimented with a new carbon paste for attaching carbon filaments to lead wires. He also worked on molybdenum-tungsten support-wires for tungsten filament lamps. This led to the development of the C-218 in 1915, and it was patented in 1922. He discovered the wolfram filament, which kept its shape in incandescent lamps; thereby the filaments do not bend during the life of the lamp. This invention spread all over the world. In 1920 he left General Electric. His home was near Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio, which became a business center established by him. It was there that he developed aluminum alloys in 1927. He discovered that silicon can be alloyed with aluminum in the presence of sodium chloride. Thus he created the alpax, from which later the excellent and widespread alloy silumin was developed. This can be alloyed as easily as any other aluminum alloy, but its coefficient of thermal expansion is smaller; it does not contract as much on cooling; its static strength and dilation is greater than any other aluminum alloy. Besides, it is easily tractable, cheap, and can be cast within a wide range of temperature; this type of aluminum was used in Zeppelin airships, motor blocks, etc. Pác was granted 46 U.S. patents and, in addition, at least one Austrian, four British, nine Canadian and four German patents. The most important achievement of Aladár Pác was the wire that he developed, which minimized drooping and sagging. The non-sag tungsten wire filament is used worldwide by manufacturers of lamps; another one is his invention of a new aluminum alloy. Later in his life, he traveled to Europe periodically. His place of death is unknown. – B: 1123, 1126, 1160, 1749, T: 7390, 7103.

Paczolay, Gyula (Julius) (Ercsi 2 November 1930 - ) – Chemical engineer, linguist, proverb specialist. He attended secondary schools in Kunszentmiklós and Újpest (1941-1949), and graduated as a Chemical Engineer from the University of Veszprém in 1953.

He was a Production Engineer at the Inota Aluminum Smelter (1953-1956), and later, Research Fellow at the Research Institute for Non-Ferrous Metals, Budapest (1956-1963). He was on scholarship at Milan Polytechnic, Italy (1962-1963). In 1992 he retired as Associate Professor of Physical Chemistry at Veszprém University. From 1972 on, he has been engaged in the comparative study of proverbs, giving lectures at international folklore and Finno-Ugric congresses in Göttingen, Jyväskylä, Melbourne, Mysore, Nairobi, Peking, Rome, Syktyvkar, Tartu, Tokyo, etc. His works include Sciences and Systems (Tudományok és rendszerek) (1973); A Comparative Dictionary of Hungarian, Estonian, German, English, Finnish and Latin proverbs, with an appendix in Cheremiss and Zyryan (1987); Hungarian and Japanese Proverbs (1994); European, Far-Eastern, and some Asian Proverbs (1994); European Proverbs in 55 Languages with Equivalents in Arabic, Persian, Sanskrit, Chinese and Japanese (1997); Tivadar Duka (Duka Tivadar) (1998); 1000 Hungarian Proverbs with English, Estonian, Finnish and German Translations (2000), and János Baranyai Decsi and his Adagia, the first Hungarian Proverb Collection from 1598 (2000). He is the holder of the Maarjamaa Cross of the Estonian Republic (2002). – B: 0874, 0880, T: 7683.

Padányi, Victor (Vatta, County Borsod, 26 January 1906 - Melbourne, VIC, Australia, 3 December 1963) – Historian, writer. He completed his higher studies at the Teachers' Colleges of the Universities of Szeged and Budapest, and he obtained his Ph.D. in History from the University of Szeged. In Hungary, he dealt with didactic-political problems. In 1945 he moved to Germany, where he lived for six years in Oberammergau. In 1951 he emigrated to Australia, and worked in Melbourne as a high school teacher. In his studies he dealt with the origin and ancient history of the Hungarian people. His writings appeared in books and as articles in Hungarian newspapers abroad. His major works include The Great Tragedy (A nagy tragédia) textbook (1952, 1977); Vérbulcsú (1954); Vászoly, play (1955); Space and History (Tér és Történelem) (1955); Rákóczi (1961); The Spiritual Identity of the Sumerian and Hungarian Languages (A szumír magyar nyelv lélekazonossága) (1962); Dentumagyararia (1963, 1989); The Only Escape (Egyetlen menekvés) (1967), and Historical Studies (Történelmi tanulmányok) (1972). He was one of the few Hungarian historians in exile. In 1964, the Australian Victor Padányi Society was founded in his memory. – B: 1672, 7456, T: 7103.→Bobula, Ida; Badiny Jós, Ferenc.

Pagan Religious World – Medieval Hungarian Chronicles and fragments of folk traditions preserve the ancestral folk-religion. The most ancient one is the cult of the Mother Earth; its memory is preserved in ancient incantations. The tradition of the Ukkon cup is the remnant of the Old God (Öregisten) religion. The number “three” preserves the traditions of the Moon Cult: Little Blessed Lady, Blessed Lady, and Great Blessed Lady. The union of the giant Ukkon, or otherwise Ménrót (Nimrod), and the Moon Goddess cult is the origin of the Divine Twins myth. The Spring and Autumn Sun God cults mirror Hunor and Magor. Finally, the tradition of the Turul Bird represents elements of the Fire Cult.

Hungarians, after their conversion to Christianity in the 10-11th century A.D., transformed the local heathen illustrations and endowed them with Christian symbolisms. Some of these are preserved in medieval Hungarian cathedrals, and also in small village churches, especially in those built during the Árpád Dynasty. At Ják, and at other Romanesque churches, the remnants of Medieval Hungarian Christian culture differ from those of the Italian, German and other Christian cultures. Archeological findings, Hungarian codices, folk prayers preserved many such ancient traditions, transplanting them into Christian concepts. – B: 1020, T: 7682.→Turul; Madonna the Great.

Page (Apród) – Originally, young boys of noble lineage, who were predestined for knighthood, were raised at the court of a highborn noble or a prince. Their education and development of chivalric skills were the obligations of the lord, who accepted them into his court. The page was a nobleman, but he had to perform certain non-humiliating services. In case of war, the older pages were duty-bound to accompany their masters to camp. Later, in certain guilds, it became customary to call their apprentices pages. The term Apród (page) remained in use for the longest time, in connection with legally trained candidates. – B: 0942, T: 3233.

Páger, Antal (Anthony) (Makó, 29 January 1899 - Budapest, 14 December 1986) - Actor. He was discovered at a performance for connoisseurs of art, after which Zsigmond (Sigismund) Andor put him under contract as a dancer/comedian in Székesfehérvár. He went on to perform in Kecskemét, Pécs, Nagyvárad and Szeged. Páger's popularity derived from his operetta performances, where he displayed his great sense of humor, dancing skills, and ability for caricature. The 1930s saw him perform at the King and Comedy Theaters (Király Színház, Vígszínház) in Budapest. Near the end of World War II, he emigrated with his family to Argentina, where he occupied himself with painting. His works were exhibited in several galleries. In August 1956 he returned to Hungary and became a member of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest. As the decades passed, his theatrical style became simplified and more suggestive. His theatrical range was considerable: he was equally at home in classics, modern pieces, tragedies, comedies, humorous plays, grotesque works, and numerous incarnations of "common man" types. The roles he played in old age reflected his deep humanity. Páger's main roles were: Liliom in Ferenc (Francis) Molnár's Liliom; Turay in Play's the Thing (Játék a kastélyban); János Kántor in János (John) Kodolányi's Earthquake (Földindulás); Big Daddy (Atyus) in Williams' Cat On a Hot Tin Roof; Zoltán in J. Bókay's The Wife (A feleség), and Cebukin in Chechov's The Three Sisters (Három nővér). There are some 170 feature and TV films to his credit, including Piri Knows Everything (Piri mindent tud) (1932); Azure Express (1938); Rosewood Cane (Rózsafabot) (1940); A Night in Transylvania (Egy éjszaka Erdélyben) (1941); The Two Lives of Auntie Mici (Mici néni két élete) (1962); Lark (Pacsirta) (1963); The Conquest (Honfoglalás), (TV, 1963); The Regent (A kormányzó) (1969); Médea (1971); Philemon and Baucis (1978); Heavenly Hosts (Mennyei seregek) (1983), and Lost Paradise (Elveszett paradicsom) (1986). He also appeared in more than forty television films. In 1964 he shared the prize for best male performance at the Cannes Film Festival. Antal Páger was a Kossuth Prize recipient in 1965, and received the title of Outstanding Artist in 1963. – B: 0883, 1439, T: 7688.→Molnár, Ferenc; Kodolány, János.

Paget, János (John Paget esquire) (Thorpe Satchville, Leicester, England, 1808 - Aranyosgyéres, now Ghiris, Transylvania in Romania, 10 April 1892) – Travelogue writer, author, and owner of a large estate. He obtained a Medical Degree from the University of Edinburgh; thereafter, he went on a study trip to Paris and Italy, where, in 1835, he met Baroness Polyxena Wesselényi, a widow (formerly married to Baron László Bánffy). She accompanied him to Hungary, where he married her, settled in Gyéres (former name of Aranyosgyéres), and worked on a large estate. In 1835 and 1836 he traveled in Transylvania and other parts of Hungary; he wrote a book about his experiences on this journey. In 1847 Paget was given Hungarian citizenship, and he made the acquaintance of Count István Széchenyi, the “Greatest Hungarian”. During the 1848-1849 Revolution and War of Independence from Habsburg oppression, he joined General Bem and served as one of his aide-de-camps but, after the fall of the Revolution, he was forced to flee to England. Only in 1855 was he able to return again and, on his estate at Aranyosgyéres, he established a model farm, using modern methods. He was a founding member of the Transylvanian Economic Circle and, as such, he did a lot for the development of wine production and viticulture in Hungary. He translated several Hungarian works into English. His chief published work is Hungary and Transylvania (1839). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Széchenyi, Count István; Bem, József.

Páhán, István (Stephen) (Nagykőrös 22 August 1922 - Nagykőrös, 11 January 2002-burial date) – Teacher of Physics. He was born into a teacher’s family. He graduated from the Reformed High School at Nagykőrös in 1940. His higher studies were at the University of Debrecen, where he obtained a B.Sc. Degree in Mathematics and Physics. He was taken prisoner of war in 1945. After his return, he became a substitute teacher at the Reformed High School of Nagykőrös, and from 1951, an appointed teacher of Physics at the same school. From 1966 he was Supervisor for the Instruction of Physics in County Pest. For 16 years, together with Elemér (Elmer) Sass, he edited and performed the popular TV classes on Physics. He was the founder of the County Pest groups of the Loránd Eötvös Physics Society. In 1982 he organized a successful Physics Conference at Nagykőrös. He was a recipient of the Sándor Mikola Prize, the TV Nívó Prize, the János Apáczai Csere Prize, and he received the title of Outstanding Teacher. – B: 1747, T: 7103.

Painted Wooden Ceiling – Medieval Hungarian records indicate that the ceilings of aristocratic manor houses, castles and, on rare occasions, some country houses were painted. Unfortunately, these painted ceilings became so rare that researchers were able to study only the painted ceiling of the Kornis Castle at Szentbenedek. However, some painted church ceilings survived. The oldest known Hungarian painted ceilings in the Carpathian Basin originated in the 15th and 16th centuries. These were ordered as a favor of patronage. From the end of the 16th century, there was more demand for such folk mementos, reflecting the taste of the era. Traveling members of the larger master artist groups painted these ceilings. Several types were known. The ceiling structures were made with a main beam similar to the ceiling of a peasant house. The wooden ceiling was often fastened to the church’s roof-beams. These ceilings were generally divided by staves into wooden squares and were called coffered ceilings. The painters/carpenters of the individual master groups probably used a sample book. There are many churches with painted ceiling in many parts of Hungary. One of the most beautiful of these painted coffered ceilings can be seen at the Reformed Church in Dévaványa in South-Western Hungary. Another interesting example is in the Unitarian Church in Énlaka in Transylvania (now Inlăceni, Romania), which even contains a script in ancient Hungarian runic writing: "Egy az isten, Georgyius Musnai diakon(us)" (There is one God, [by] Georgyius Musnai Deacon). Their motives originated in the late Gothic period and the Renaissance decorative era. Usually the flower ornaments survived. The peculiarities of a few workshops or the style of one or two generations are recognized only in these. – B: 1134, T: 3240.→ Hungarian Runic Script.

Painting in Hungary – Beginnings. In Hungary, the art of painting began simultaneously with the building of churches. The Basilica of Székesfehérvár was decorated with mosaics; the wall paintings of the Benedictine Monastery in Pécsvárad are related to the Benedictine Art Studio of Montecassino, Italy. The Byzantine-style wall paintings of the Crypt of Feldebrő have been estimated by some to be derived from the beginning of the 11th century; according to others, they originate from the 12th. The frescoes, which decorate the triumphal arch of the Maria Church in Sopron-Bánfalva, are dated from this time, as well as the paintings of the Apostles in the church of Hidegség (with a Roman apse). In the early phase of book-copying, decorated initials and other illustrations were painted to decorate the codices but, at the end of the 12th century, in the Pray-Codex, there are ink drawings to be found and, in the Gut-Keled Bible from the 11th century, elaborate miniature graphics were used for the purpose of book decoration. The statues of the saints, standing in pairs in the chapel of Gizella in Veszprém, show a great deal of Hungarian influence on the Italian masters, who followed the contemporary Byzantine style. The frescoes in the church in Vizsony, illustrating Christ's life, are excellent examples of the medieval church interior (illustrative) decoration. In Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and Northern Hungary (now Slovakia), besides the religious wall paintings, people also preferred the illustrations of the Legend of King St. László I (Ladislav, 1077-1095). The evolution of commerce and the population growth in the cities of Northern Hungary set in motion a great movement in the field of the arts. In the Middle Ages, the Illuminated Chronicle (Képes Krónika, about 1370) stands out as a monumental work, with 139 miniatures and initials, illuminated by the court artist of King Lajos (Louis the Great, 1342-1382), possibly Miklós Hertulfia. These miniatures influenced the first Hungarian fresco-painter known by name, John Aquila, who already presided over a large studio in the second half of the 14th century. In the art of fresco painting, the illustration of feelings and sentiments became very important. At that time, the artists painted religious themes that had human subject matter and also began painting realistically about the life of that period. Besides fresco painting, another artistic form emerged that became popular: miniature painting. At the end of the century, the panel painting also increased in popularity. The first panel painter was the great master, Tamás (Thomas) Kolozsvári, who painted the winged altar of the Garamszentbenedek church (1427). In the 15th century, the scenes from the Bible almost assumed a secondary place because these pictures were changed to depict real-life illustrations. Later, in the reign of King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437), miniature painting became very popular and extended up to the time of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), who offered patronage to and supported the shops for book illustration and book printing. The frescoes painted by Italian artists in the 16th century were a preferred style in Hungary, used for decorating the walls of castles. Some of the most famous panel paintings and triptychs of northern Hungary (in Slovakia since 1920), and Transylvania (in Romania since 1920) are dated from the 16th century. In the early Renaissance, Hungarian painting was exposed to serious changes and a great deal of destruction was caused by the Turkish occupation and the ceaseless fighting (1526-1686). Under such conditions, from the middle of the 16th century to the end of the 17th, works of art became understandably rare, and only the art of miniature decorations on codices, and letters containing crests or coats of arms were available. In the late Renaissance, painting became universal and the most flourishing branch was that of fresco painting (murals). At this time the wall decorations of the castles included life-size portraits, and series of portraits of famous people and historical personalities such as kings, dignitaries and clergyman. Besides the figurative painting, ornamental painting gained importance, especially the letters patent granting armorial bearings, letters patent of nobility and painted ceilings and arches. Both styles became very popular in Transylvania, where the masters of the time developed a specifically Hungarian ornamental style. In the 17th century, historical painting, genre painting, portrait and landscape painting were the most often used artistic expression. Of the historical paintings, the most popular scenes were those illustrating the battles between the Turks and Hungarians. At this time, many Hungarian artists were working abroad in foreign countries. Portrait painting became one of the most popular styles at the beginning of the 18th century. Ádám Mányoki was a Hungarian master, who painted in Baroque style the famous portrait of Reigning Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II (1705-1711). Another famous artist of the century was the Austrian, István Dorffmeister, living in Sopron, whose major works were painted on the walls of numerous churches in the Transdanubian region.

First flourishing. As a result of the cultural and industrial developments of 19th to 20th century Europe, painting became one of the most developed branches of art in Hungary. An original and varied development occurred, including modern, contemporary art forms. In the 19th century, Miklós (Nicholas) Barabás was the first artist who did pioneering work. The second half of the century proved to be the most fruitful for painting. The first representatives of the Romanticist trend were Mihály (Michael) Zichy, one of the most talented artists of the age, and Mór (Maurice) Than. Viktor Madarász represented the genre of Hungarian historical painting. Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely painted in the spirit of the Resistance against Austrian rule, even after the Compromise of 1867; his famous paintings include his Self-portrait (Önarckép), and historical compositions, such as Women of Eger (Egri Nők) and Outbreak of Count Zrinyi (Zrinyi kirohanása). Károly (Charles) Lotz was the master of frescoes. Gyula (Julius) Benczúr created great historical canvases: Recapture of Buda Castle (Budavár visszavétele); Farewell of László (Ladislás) Hunyadi (Hunyadi László búcsúja), etc. Mihály (Michael) Munkácsi became famous for his Jesus tableaus: Ecce homo, Christ before Pilate (Jézus Pilátus előtt), and Golgotha. He was the first who depicted simple folk life: Wood-carrying Woman (Rőzsehordó asszony); Death Cell (Siralomház); Lint-dressing Makers (Tépécsinálók). László (Ladislás) Pál painted excellent landscapes; Géza Mészöly depicted typical Hungarian countryside scenes. Pál (Paul) Szinyei Merse was the first who discovered the plein-air painting, independently from French painters. Árpád Feszty painted the monumental, life-size cyclorama: Entry of the Magyars into the Carpathian Basin in 896 (Magyarok bejövetele), now exhibited at the Ópusztaszer National Memorial Park.

A major change in painting was introduced by the appearance of the painters of the Nagybánya School (Colony) (since 1920, Baia Mare, Romania,), founded in 1896, by the Munich-based Simon Hollósy, with the collaboration of Károly (Charles) Ferenczy, Béla Iványi-Grünwald, István (Stephen) Réti, János (John) Thorma, and for a shorter period, István (Stephen) Csók. The activity of this school opened a new period in Hungarian painting, rendering it independent from the Munich school, tying it to the native Hungarian soil and achieving individual freedom for the artists. The Trianon Peace Dictate of 1920 put an end to the artists' activity in Nagybánya with the incoming Romanian rule in Transylvania.

Early in the 20th century, the painters of the Alföld School adopted a distinct style: it was folk-based and peasant inspired; their ability to see the realities of life became deeper. The representatives of this school are István (Stephen) Nagy, as well as József (Joseph) Koszta and János (John) Tornyai. The so-called "naïve painters" of the 1920s also featured peasants and workers, e.g. Péter Benedek, Elek (Alec) Győri and János (John) Gajdos. After 1920, the art of Róbert Berény represented the direction of art-life in the whole interwar period: it became the Post-Nagybánya School (or Gresham circle), to which István (Stephen) Szünyi and Aurél Bernáth also belong.

The Colony, The Eight, was formed in 1909 by a group of early Avant-Garde artists, who declared: "We believe in nature. We draw from it with our reason" (i.e. a rational selection from nature). They followed humaneness, artistic humility and moderation. The philosopher Georg (György) Lukács best understood their Weltanschauung. The head of the group was Károly (Charles) Kernstok, an open minded radical and freemason. The other members were: Róbert Berény, Dezső (Desider) Czigány, Béla Czóbel, Ödön (Edmund) Márffy, Dezső Orbán, Bertalan (Bartholomew) Pór and Lajos (Louis) Tihanyi. Later on, two of these, Béla Czóbel and Ödön Márffy, joined the great international current of the École de Paris.

The Gödöllő Art Colony showed a strong tendency toward religious symbolism combined with a strong social conscience. Its members were: Leo Belmonte, Endre (Andrew) Frecskai, Árpád Juhász, Aladár Kőrösfői Kriesch, Rezső (Rudolph) Mihály, Sándor (Alexander) Nagy, his wife Laura Kriesch, Ervin Raáb, Jenő (Eugene) Remsey, erenc (Francis) Sidló, Mariska and Carla Undi, and István (Stephen) Zichy, to mention only the more important members.

After 1930 there was a tendency by Hungarian artists to orientate toward Italy, following the similar trend in economic and political spheres. As a result, Italian Neoclassicism appeared. Young Hungarian artists were sent to Rome. By the mid-1930s, this developed into the Rome School; its shining star was Vilmos (William) Aba Novák. The style of this school developed into the official art policy. The Socialist Artists' Group with its programmed art was the Communist counterpart of the Rome school during the Soviet military occupation of Hungary for forty-five years.

Expressionism, emphasizing free expression of an artist's emotional reactions and his inner world (instead of representing the natural appearance of things) became the most favored school among young Hungarian artists of the 20th century. It had a national characteristic, the experience of crisis caused by the dismemberment of Historic Hungary and the desire for novelty. The greatest figure of Hungarian expressionism was Gyula (Julius) Derkovits. Others included István (Stephen) Dési Huber and a former member of The Eight, Károly (Charles) Kernstok; József (Joseph) Egry may perhaps be included here as well.

Avant-garde artists in the 1930s, mainly young painters, were represented by Jenő (Eugene) Barcsay and Lajos (Louis) Vajda. Barcsay was for Hungarian constructivism filled with expressionism, while Vajda was all for Hungarian surrealism, depicting the work of the subconscious mind, only expressing the artist's imagination. They differed from each other, but they were imbued with the atmosphere of another school:

The Szentendre School, barely 20 km north of the Hungarian Capital: an artists' colony, formed by Béla Iványi-Grünwald in 1926; its members meant to continue the artistic approach of the Nagybánya School, but deviated from this later on; it reached its zenith in the late 1930s, representing a medley of different styles and directions, existing side by side, bound by a common experience and atmosphere: the town of Szentendre (St. Andrew). The young avant-garde artists active here included, among others, Imre Ámos.

The depressed economic conditions of the early 1930s, with an equally stagnant situation in the world of art brought about the creation of the first “National Art Exhibition” in 1933, to improve the artists’ life financially; all the various groups and schools participated, all with their separate hanging committees. Since it was a great success, it led to annual art exhibitions. The number of art associations also grew during this period. The regional art centers with their own colonies, like those of Szentendre, Gödöllő, Szolnok, and the Schools of Art at Miskolc and Kecskemét, also began to flourish. The painters of Szolnok and later, the painters of Kecskemét concentrated on painting nature, people, village- and town life. József Rippl-Rónai represented the secessionist style. Tivadar Csontváry Kosztka followed both secessionist and impressionist styles; his work was extremely individualistic and strongly nationalistic. In contrast, Lajos Gulácsy painted a dream-like world.

After the Second World War, Hungarian fine arts and graphic arts changed direction and revived certain neglected art forms, but confusion and searching for new ways characterized painting at first. In 1949, painters were members of the Alliance of Applied Arts and tried to immortalize life in Socialism along the lines of “Socialist Realism”. In this milieu, searching for new forms began to diminish. In the first few years following the 1945 Soviet occupation and Communist takeover, the so-called “European School” was operating, closely following Western European trends. This was followed by an upsurge in the field of graphics. As in sculpture, new talents made their mark in the field of painting, and for the middle-generation, a new multi-layer, diverse style became the new mode of expression.

The better-known Hungarian painters are as follows: Ábel Bazilides Barna, Kálmán (Coloman) Beszédes, Ervin Bossányi, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Brunner, the Medieval painters from Buda, György (George) Buday, Tivadar Csontváry Koszta, József (Joseph) Cziffery, Jenő (Eugen) Dénes, Albrecht Dürer, Aladár Edvi Illés, Bálint (Valentine) Fehérkuty, Béni (Ben) Ferenczy, Károly (Charles) Ferenczy, Árpád Feszty, Adolf Fenyves, Alfred Forbáth, Kálmán (Coloman) Gáborjáni Szabó, Emil Grabovszky, Ernő (Ernest) Gyimesi Kásás, István (Stephen) Hódi, József (Joseph) Horváth, István, (Stephen) László Jakab, Lajos (Louis) Jánosa, the Master of The Legend of St Elizabeth of Hungary of Kassa, the Master of the series on The Life of Mary of Kassa, Judith Kaszab (Cassab), Lipót (Leopold) Kerpel, Tamás (Thomas) Kolozsvári, Károly (Charles) Kós, Ferenc (Francis) Kozics, Ádám Kunos, Sándor (Alexander) Liezen-Mayer, Gyula (Julius) Macskássy, Éva Makk, Imre (Emeric) Makk, Béla Magori-Vargha, Master Márton, the Master of the Altar of Medgyes, Baron László (Ladislav) Mednyánszky, Géza Mészöly, Miklós (Nicholas) József, M. S. Master, Endre (Andrew) Nemes, the Master from Okolicsnó, Viktor Olgyay, Dezső (Desider) Orbán, József (Joseph) Orient, András (Andrew) Pösze, Mihály (Michael) Pannoniai, Béla Petry, László (Ladislav) Philipp, Rudolf Pintye, Artur Podolini-Volkman, Bertalan (Bartholomew) Pór, József (Joseph) Rippl-Rónai, András (Andrew) Salgó, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) Sass-Brunner (Farkas), Sher Gil, Amrita, Ferenc (Francis) Stornó Sr., Moholy-Nagy László (Ladislav), Gyula (Julius) Szalay, István (Stephen) Szőnyi, János (John) Thorma, Victor Vasarely (Győző Vásárhelyi) Marcel Vértés, Pál (Paul) Vidor, Imre (Emeric) Zsogodi Nagy. – B:

Pais, Dezső (Desider) (Zalaegerszeg, 20 March 1886 - Budapest, 6 April 1973) – Linguist. He obtained a teacher’s qualification in Hungarian, Latin and Greek Languages. As an educator, he did linguistic research at the Zalaegerszeg Archives; he was a Secondary School teacher in Sopron, Cegléd and Budapest; between 1933 and 1937, a teacher at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest and, between 1937 and 1959, Professor of the Hungarian Linguistic Institute, University of Budapest. His scientific work started with literary history essays, among the first of them on Janus Pannonius in 1910. He initiated research on the history of literary language with his books: The Hungarian Literary Language, and From the Linguistic Relics of the Hungarian Ancient Religion (Ősvallásunk nyelvi emlékeiből), the latter published by his estate. Dezső Pais opened new ways for research; he was the first to establish the Semantics of Medieval naming of persons. He created a new genre by examining complete word families. Another area of his activities was the explanation of language relics. (Anonymus; The Nuns of Veszprém Valley; Funeral Oration and Prayer, etc). He translated Anonymus’ Chronicle into Hungarian (1926), then, with Emil Jankovich, he published the Ancient Hungarian Reading Book in 1929. He also worked on the methodology of syntax theories and phonetics history. In addition to more than one thousand scientific publications, he wrote numerous articles popularizing science. As a teacher and scientist, he created a scholarly tradition. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding from 1930, regular from 1941). He received a number of awards, including the Sámuel Prize (1919), the Kossuth Prize (1951), and the Miklós Révai Memorial Medal (1968). There is a Dezső Pais Prize in Zalaegerszeg. – B: 0883, 1257, 0878; T: 7669.→Anonymus; Janus Pannonius.

Pajor, Kornél (Cornelius) (Budapest, 1 July 1923 - ) – Architect, speed skater, world champion. From 1941 he was a speed skater at the Budapest Skating Club (Budapesti Korcsolyázó Egylet – BKE). Because of World War II, there were not many competitions for this young skater. In 1943, in Klagenfurt, Austria, he won the 3000 m competition. In the 1948 Winter Olympics of St. Moritz he finished in fourth place on the 10000 m. In 1949 he became Hungarian National Allround Champion for the fourth time, and then won bronze at the European Allround Championships, while setting a new world record on the 5000 m. At the 1949 World Allrounds Championships in Oslo, Norway, Pajor won a gold medal, the first Hungarian skater to become World Allround Champion. In 1949, Pajor did not return to Hungary from Oslo. In the 1951 World Allround Championships he won a bronze medal, but he did not represent any country; however, he was allowed to participate as an “independent skater”, representing the ISU. In 1952, skating for IF Castor of Östersund, Sweden, Pajor won a bronze medal at the European Allround Championships. In Sweden he worked as an architect in his own architect firm. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Pajor, Sándor (Alexander) (Melcsic, now Melčice, Slovakia, in former County Trencsén, 4 November 1861 - Budapest, 1935) – Physician. His medical studies were completed at the Universities of Vienna and Budapest, from where he obtained his Medical Degree in 1885. From 1886, he worked in the Rókus Hospital of Budapest, and from 1888, in the Saint Stephen Hospital (Szt. István Kórház), Budapest. In 1888 he went on a European study trip. In 1898 he established his own Hydrotherapy Resort (water-curing) in Szentkirály Street, Budapest. In 1906 he founded the Pajor Sanatorium at No. 17, Vas Street, Budapest, initially with 30 beds, but it developed into a 130-bed Sanatorium. It was the largest private hospital in the country with a good reputation. In 1948 it was nationalized by the Communist regime. First, it was transformed into a Party School, then, a home for Greeks. Finally, in 1954, the János (John) Balassa Hospital opened in it, and functioned until its closure in 1988. His works include Handbook of Dermatology (Bőrgyógyászati zsebkönyv) (1891) and Neurasthenia and its Hydrotherapy (A neurasthénia és vizgyógymódjáról) (1897). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.

Pákh, Albert (Rozsnyó, now Rožňava, Slovakia, 1823, 11 March 1823 - Pest, 10 February 1867) – Writer and lawyer. In Sopron, he studied Lutheran Theology (1839-1842), and he studied Law in Debrecen (1842-1843). It was in these cities that he became friends with the great poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi. From 1844 to 1846 he interned as a legal practitioner and lawyer in Pest but, after he passed the Bar Examinations, Pákh turned to writing. Beginning in 1845, he was the feuilleton writer for the journal, Pest News (Pesti Hirlap). By 1846 he was a member of the Group of Ten, which brought together democratic writers. In 1846 and 1847 he shared accommodation with Petőfi. He became seriously ill in 1847 and, while he was treated in a hydropathic-establishment near Vienna, his career was interrupted. From 1850 he was editor for various publications; from 1855 Editor for Modern Encyclopedia (Újabbkori Ismerettár), and librarian of the National Casino (Nemzeti Kaszinó). Concurrently, in 1853, he was Editor (with Pál Gyulai) for the Szépirodalmi Lapok (Literary Journal). From 1854 to 1867 he was Editor for the Sunday News (Vasárnapi Újság), playing a significant role in the development of literary life and in the growth of readership. From 1863 to 1865 he was Editor (with Ágoston Greguss) for the paper, Hungarian Press (Magyar Sajtó). In 1864 he became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1865 Pákh was elected to be a member of the Kisfaludy Society (Kisfaludy Társaság), which published his humorous works. His humorous life portraits and short stories about life in the capital city, written under the pseudonym Ábel Kaján, made him one of the most popular writers of the 1840s. His main works are: Guide to the Library of the National Casino (Kalauz a nemzeti casino könyvtárához) (1852), and The Humorous Life Portraits of Albert Pákh (Pákh Albert humoros életképei) (1870). He was the first corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688, 7456. → Petőfi, Sándor; Nagy, Miklós.

Pakocs, Károly (Charles) (Nagykároly, now Carei, Romania, 17 November 1892 - Bucharest, Romania, 23 October 1966) – Roman Catholic priest and martyr. He attended high school in his hometown, Nagykároly. He graduated from Szatmár (now Satu-Mare, Romania), where he entered the R.C. Seminary. Sent to the Central Seminary, Budapest, he was ordained in 1915. He taught Religion at Máramarossziget (now Sighetu Marmatiei, Romania), and later, in Szatmár. For his dedicated work, he was appointed first Under-Secretary and Archivist, then teacher of Holy Scriptures in the Seminary. In 1926 he served as Secretary to the Bishop and Director of the Bishop's Office. When, on the orders of the Romanian authorities, the Bishop had to dismiss all the Hungarian personnel from his office, Pakocs was sent to Szinérváralja (now Seini), as Parish Priest and Dean and, in 1937, to Nagybánya (now Baia-Mare), where he was given the title Canon Scholasticus. But, because of his involvement with a Hungarian underground group, called Rongyosgárda (Ragged Guard), he had to escape to Hungary on 14 October 1939. When the northern part of Transylvania (Erdély) was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award on 22 September 1941, Pakocs was back in Szatmár again. He resigned shortly thereafter as Parish Priest and became a Member of Parliament and Vicar General for Áron Márton, the Bishop of Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia). In the summer of 1945 he left Romania again for Hungary to avoid arrest; yet, at the end 1947, he returned to Romania. Soon the Romanian police arrested and jailed him for two years (1949-1951). After his release, he tried to mediate between the Church and the State in Romania. Meanwhile, he taught again in the Seminary of Gyulafehérvár and, in 1956, at the Seminary of Jászvásár (now Iasi). In 1957 he was arrested again for his poem, David and Goliath, and sentenced to imprisonment. He was released in 1963 and sent to Popesti-Leordeni. In 1964 he was invited to participate in the Second Vatican Council in Rome. Back in Romania in the summer of 1966 he was permitted to visit Budapest, where the secret agents of the Romanian Embassy caught and tortured him, and smuggled him back to Romania, where he was beaten again which proved physically too severe for him and he died. Fr. Pakocs published many articles and some 15 books. A selection of his works: Hot Words (Forró szavak), poems (1924); Spirit Country (Lélekország), poems (1926); The Crashing of the Sprit (Lélekzuhanás), novel (1928); I Came from the City of God (Isten városából jöttem), poems (1929); God of the Seven Gifts (A hét ajándék Istene), (1934); The Prodigal Son (A tékozló fiú), play (1939); The Spirit Returns (A lélek visszatér), stories (1941), and Strange People (Különös emberek), stories (1941). – B: 1000, T: 7103.→Ragged Guard; Márton, Áron.

Pakony, Massacre and its Memorial – On 14 November 1944, between the villages of Ócsa and Üllő, a battalion of the Red Army, supported by armed forces, organized a hunt for Hungarian soldiers who were left behind the Soviet lines, many of whom were seriously wounded. By this time, the Soviet Front line was at Vecsés, close to Budapest, and there was no military action in the area. The Soviets captured 17 uniformed but unarmed young soldiers, drove them to the Kos farm, and took away their documents; then, without any interrogation, the drunken Soviet soldiers massacred them. From the barn where they were shot, agonizing groans were heard and, when the commander of the unit ordered two T34 tanks to destroy the barn, the young soldiers were squashed into the ground with the ruins of the building. After the departure of the Soviet unit, the remains of the dead were buried in a mass grave in Ócsa and no one talked about the case until 1985. Since Hungary was under Soviet military occupation, it would not have been advisable to mention the tragedy in public. There was, however, an eyewitness, who saw the massacre, pointed out the exact location of the barn and gave his account of the events for posterity. In 1994 the János (John) Bolyai Technical Military College of Budapest and the municipal government of Ócsa held a memorial service and erected a traditional grave marker post at the site of the massacre. Since the identity of the victims was unknown, the marble plaque contained only the following words; “In memory of the 17 unknown heroes”. – B: 1020, T: 7665.

Pákozd, Battle of – The first battle of the 1848 Revolution and War of Independence took place on 29 September 1848. The new Hungarian national Honvéd-army, led by Lieutenant-General János Móga, defeated the Austrian Imperial Army, led by Lieutenant-General Jelačić between Pákozd and Sukoró. The battle was waged for the defense of the shortest route to the capital against the invading combined Imperial and Croatian armies proceeding from Croatia.

The Hungarian forces took up their position between the hills of Velence and Lake Velence, thereby closing off the way to the Capital. The invading Croatian army advanced to this position, after coming through and pillaging the towns of Nagykanizsa and Székesfehérvár. At 9 o'clock in the morning, the left wing of the Croatian Army began the first attack against the Hungarian right wing in the field of Patka. The Hungarians repulsed this attack and then frustrated the Croatian attempt to encircle them by a lateral thrust. Following this, the Hungarian right wing began a counter-attack, forcing the Croatian troops to flee; these were further pursued by the national guard of Zámoly arriving from Patka. Seeing the failure of his left wing, General Josip Jelačić - around noon - began the attack with the main body of his army, consisting of about 10,000 men, on both sides of the road leading to Buda. Coming under fire by the Honvéd artillery, the Croatian Army withdrew to Pákozd. Next, in order to force a break-through, Jelačić ordered four unsuccessful attacks under the crossfire of the defending forces positioned in the valleys, which ran north to south. Giving up further action, Jelačić asked for a three-day cease-fire, during which he withdrew to Székesfehérvár and then, through Győr and Mosonmagyaróvár, he fled to Austria. His rear guard at Székesfehérvár on 3 October, and his auxiliaries at Ozora on 7 October, were both disarmed by the National Guard. The victory was, first of all, a moral and political success, which effectively boosted Hungarian morale during the successive victorious period of the Revolution, providing inspiration to continue the struggle. There is an obelisk on the site of the battle and also a museum was established there in 1978. In memory of the victory, 20 September 1990 was celebrated as "The Day of the Armed Forces." – B: 1153, 1020, T: 7665. → Móga, János; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Pákozdy, Ferenc (Francis) (also known as Vásárhelyi Pákozdy) (Hódmezővásárhely, 7 October 1904 - Debrecen, 11 May 1970) – Poet. He studied Medicine, intending to become a physician, but he switched to law instead, receiving a PhD in Jurisprudence and Political Science. Between 1928 and 1944 he was a journalist for various papers. After 1945 he worked in his native town. From 1952 he was an associate at the Debrecen University Library. During the 1930s, he was a supporter and a critic of the 20th century poet Attila József, and defended his poetry, as seen in his review of the poem Suburban Night (Külvárosi éj) in the Monday News (Hétfői Újság) (2 January 1933). His works include The Seagull of Tisza (A Tisza sirálya) poems (1927); In the Storm (Förgetegben) poems (1943), and Evening Twilight (Esthajnla) poems (1968). His literary translations include Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar) (1955) and his Sonnets (1943). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7645. → József, Attila.

Pákozdy, László Márton (Ladislas Martin) (1910-1993) – Theologian of the Reformed Church. He completed his high school studies at the Reformed High School in Hódmezővásárhely in 1928. He studied Theology and Philosophy at the University of Debrecen (1928-1932), the University of Wittenberg (1932-1943), and Utrecht (1934-1937). He was a lecturer at the University of Debrecen in 1934; Assistant Minister in the Pozsonyi Street Congregation, Budapest (1934, 1937-1939). He was also a teacher of Religion (1937-1946). He obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Debrecen in 1942. He worked with Rev. Albert Bereczky in rescuing Jews during World War II. Pákozdy was a professor in the Department of Religion at the University of Debrecen (1946-1950), then a professor of the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen (1950-1966) and, finally, a professor of the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest (1966-1983). Besides teaching and scientific works, he was involved in church politics. He wrote a number of studies and articles in the field of Theology and Ethics, and was a board member of domestic and international church periodicals. He was the Editor for the newly published Theological Review (Theológiai Szemle), from 1958. He was recipient of the Banner Order of the Peoples' Republic of Hungary, 3rd Class, and the Medal for Socialist Journalism. – B: 0910, T: 7103.→Bereczky, Albert.

Paku, Imre (Emeric) (Hódmezővásárhely, 12 May 1910 - Budapest, 3 April 1975) – Literary historian. After completing his high school studies (1930-1934), he did a variety of casual jobs for a living. In 1939 he completed the Greek-Latin-Hungarian Literary studies at the University of Szeged, and from 1938 to 1941 he was a research student at the Department of Linguistics, and, at the same time, President of several societies. From 1942 to 1964 he worked in various capacities for publishing companies, such as the Atheneum, New Times Literary Co. (Új Idők Irodalmi Rt.), Révay Co., Belles-lettres Publishing Co. (Szépirodalmi Könyvkiadó) and the Seed-Sower Co. (Magvető Könyvkiadó). From 1963 until his retirement in 1973 he was Assistant Editor for the magazine Horizon (Látóhatár). He prepared for the press several literary works, such as Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi's Devotion in September (Szeptemberi áhitat) unpublished poems (1939); Collected Poems (1905-1922) of Gyula (Julius) Juhász (1940); Collected Works of Gyula (Julius) Reviczky, introduction by him (1944); The Poor Man's Justification (A szegény ember igaza), Hungarian folk tales (1949), and Ferenc (Francis) Móra: Painted Chest with Tulips from Szeged (Szegedi tulipános láda) articles (1964). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Kosztolányi, Dezső; Juhász, Gyula; Reviczky, Gyula; Móra, Ferenc.

Pál (Paul) (13th century) – Court judge of King Béla IV (1235-1270). He freed his younger brother, Dalmad, and 12 other noblemen from the Castle of Klissza. At the Castle of Kális in Galicia, he repulsed an attack on the king, and repulsed another army and retook the castles at Borostyán and Landeck from the Germans. On the River Mura, he had a dam built on the other side of the river, in view of the Germans and, by doing so he prevented the flooding of many communities. He held off for a long time the crossing of the River Danube by the Mongol-Tartar army and, after they withdrew, he had a large number of thieves captured or killed along the Danube River, and the Partium Region. He regathered the local people in hiding and gave them work at the local salt mines. For his efforts in rebuilding the nation, King Béla IV gave him great benefits and possessions. – B: 0942, 1031, T: 7644. →Béla IV, King.

Pál, George (György) (Cegléd, 1 February 1908 - California, USA, 2 May 1980) – Cartoon filmmaker. He attended the Budapest Academy to train as an architect, but finished in illustration classes. In his first job, he was an animation illustrator at the Hunnia Film Studio. Soon he moved to Berlin, where he found similar work at the UFA Studio. Within sixty days, he was in charge of their cartoon production. In 1933 he left for Prague; then went on to Paris, where he became famous with his animated advertisements. He moved to Eindhoven, Holland, where he opened his Dollywood Studio. In 1939 Pál settled in America, where Paramount Pictures made a long-term contract with him to produce Puppetoons. The Puppetoons were animated wooden puppets set against papier-maché and cardboard backgrounds. The puppets and backgrounds were intricately detailed and richly decorated. The Puppetoons were an extension of his unique imagination. Among other films, from 1949, he made in succession: Destination Moon; War of the Worlds; The Time Machine and The Seven Faces of Dr. Lao; When Worlds Collide, and The Power and Doc Savage. His films are some of the most purely optimistic ever made. He won five Academy Awards for Special Effects. – B&T: 1041.

Pál, Tamás (Thomas) (Gyula, 16 July 1937 - ) – Conductor. He studied at the Department of Conducting and Composing at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest under János (John) Viski and András (Andrew) Kórodi from 1956 to 1965. Between 1960 and 1975 he was chorus master and later conductor of the Opera House, Budapest. From 1975 to 1983 he was Music Director of the National Theater and the Symphony Orchestra of Szeged; later, he became Director of the Theater. From 1983 to 1985 he was Conductor of the Opera House, Budapest. From 1986 to 1989 he was Music Director of the Art Weeks of Budapest, and member of the Board of Directors of the Open-Air Theaters. From 1989 he was Artistic Director of the Szeged Symphony Orchestra; from 2001 the Szombathely Symphony Orchestra and, since 2008, the first conductor of the Opera Company of the National Theater of Szeged. Pál's international career began with the opening of the Opera House of Caracas in 1978, where he conducted Verdi's Aida. Since then, he has been a welcome guest of the opera houses of the world and at European opera festivals. Among his discs, his newly discovered operas are known worldwide: Salieri's Falstaff, Cimarosa's Il Pittor Parigino, Liszt's Don Sanche. Recording of several operas were made with his conducting. He was awarded the Franz Liszt Prize, and received the Outstanding Artist title. – B: 1031, 1445, T: 7456. → Koródi, András; Viski, János (2).

Palace of Buda Fortress – The southern area of Buda Castle on Buda Hill of Budapest is occupied by the Royal Palace. The original construction was initiated by the Anjou King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382), at the start of the 14th century, when he relocated the Royal Court from Visegrád to Buda. This period of construction lasted nearly 2 centuries and, during the reign of King Mátyás I (Mathias Corvinus, 1443-1490), the castle became one of the finest buildings in Europe. During and after the Turkish occupation, starting in 1541, the castle badly deteriorated. In 1881, Miklós (Nicholas) Ybl received the contract to rebuild the castle. During World War II, the complex was heavily damaged again, but it was reconstructed during the 1970s and '80s. During the reconstruction, archeological explorations found many valuable relics. Now the palace is a cultural center, containing the Historical Museum of Budapest, the Hungarian Workers' Museum, the Hungarian National Gallery, and the National Széchényi Library. – B: 1020, T: 7 656. → Ybl, Miklós; Buda Castle.

Palágyi, Menyhért (Melchior) (M. Salamon Silberstein) (Paks, 16 December 1859 - Darmstadt, Germany, 14 July 1924) – Mathematician, literary historian and philosopher. He studied Mathematics and Natural Sciences at the Budapest Polytechnic. His Doctoral thesis dealt with projective geometry, and this scored considerable success in mathematical circles, and was published by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. At this stage, he turned away from mathematics and, together with his brother, Lajos (Louis)

Palágyi, he started publishing a literary journal, Present Age (Jelenkor) (1896-1897), becoming one of the outstanding literary critics and literary historians of his age. His studies, dealing with the poetry of Sándor Petőfi and János Vajda, and Imre Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája), are significant to this day. In Madách's great work he used in-depth psychological analysis, anticipating the later Freudism. Sándor (Alexander) Ferenczi, the founder of the Hungarian psychoanalytic school, specifically refers to him. Similarly significant is his esthetic study dealing with the paintings of Bertalan (Bartholomew) Székely. Toward the end of the 19th century, Palágyi turned to philosophy. In his epistemological writings, he attempted to rise above the dichotomy of psychology and logical formalism (the so-called German Psychologismusstreit). His work, New Theory of Space and Time (A tér és az idő új elmélete) appeared, anticipating Minkowski and Einstein. He was the first to integrate space and time into a model as a four-dimensional mathematical space-time continuum, and in the course of this work, similarly to the Minkowski-space, he had the imaginary axis correspond to time. After its publication, he subjected Einstein's Theory of Relativity to philosophical analysis and, in addition to the virtues of the theory, he criticized its one-sided, calculative-formalistic, mathematical stance. From 1905 he was a professor at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he came under the influence of the eminent physician, biologist and zoologist, István (Stephen) Apáthy. In his work, Naturphilosophische Vorlesungen, under the influence of Apáthy, he embraced vitalism, although he criticized its traditional forms. According to him, the problems arising from the criticized, one-sided aspects of vitalism could only be avoided by creating a new philosophy of consciousness. In his attempt to elaborate such a philosophy, he anticipated the cognitive psychology of our times in a number of respects. His views, set forth in Naturphilosophische Vorlesungen, exercised a strong influence on Ludwig Klages and Max Scheler. In his last years, Palágyi settled in Germany. His works include Petőfi (1889); The Law of Reason (Az ész törvénye); The Life and Poetry of Imre Madách (Madách Imre élete és költészete) (1900); Neue Theorie des Raumes und der Zeit (1901); Naturphilosophische Vorlesungen. Über die Grundprobleme des Bewusstseins und des Lebens (1908), and Die Relativitätstheorie in der modernen Physik (1914). Related writings include Németh G. Béla (1980): The Hungarian Literary Critical Thinking in the Age of Positivism (A magyar irodalomkritikai gondolkodás a pozitivizmus korában), and L Székely: Melchior Palágyi's Space-Time and the Polar Structure of Ultimate Reality and Meaning in Interdisciplinary Studies in the Philosophy of Understanding, in vol. 19, No. 1, 3-15 (1996). – B: 1028, 0883, 1257, T: 7617, 7456, 7688.→Petőfi, Sándor; Vajda, János; Madách, Imre; Székely, Bertalan; Ferenczi, Sándor; Apáthy, István.

Palánkay, Klára (Clara) (Budapest, 3 June 1921 - Budapest, 24 January, 2007) – Opera singer (mezzo soprano). She conducted her studies under the direction of Anna Rosti at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt of Academy of Music, Budapest from 1938 to 1944, and continued her vocal training in Rome. Her debut was in 1944, when she sang the role of Amneris in Verdi's Aida at the Opera House, Budapest, where she remained the leading solo singer until her retirement in 1970. In the Hungarian operatic life after World War II, she was the outstanding dramatic mezzo. Particularly the dramatic power of her voice coupled with her extraordinary passion rendered her acting unforgettable. In the leading role of Judit in Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle, she was one of the most competent interpreters. She and Mihály (Michael) Székely launched it to world success. She appeared on many opera stages in Europe as a guest artist. She was also a recording artist.

Her roles include Ulrica in Verdi's Masked Ball (Álarcos Bál); Ezucena in Verdi's Il Trovatore (Trubadur); Eboli in Verdi's Don Carlos; Gertrud in F. Erkel's Bánk bán; Ortrud in Wagner's Lohengrin; Fricka in Wagner's Die Walküre (A Walkür); Carmen in Bizet's Carmen; Delilah in Saint-Saëns' Samson et Delilah, and Mária Lujza in Kodály's Háry János. Her memoirs are contained in the book: The Diva, written by Judit Várkonyi. She received the title of Artist of Merit (1964), the Memorial Medal of Béla Bartók (1982), the Bartók-Pásztory Prize (1999), and the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1995). She was elected Life Member of the Opera House, Budapest (2004). – B: 1445, 1426, T: 7456.→Székely, Mihály.

Palasovszky, Ödön (Edmund) (Budapest, 5 March 1899 - Budapest, 18 December 1980) – Actor, stage manager, writer, poet and theater director. He studied at the Faculty of Humanities of the University of Budapest and continued his studies at the School of the National Actor's Union. In 1919 he taught at a School of Eurhythmics in Budapest. There, he conceived the idea of the "essence-oriented theater" (lényegretörő színház) that he tried to realize. In 1925 he founded the Green Donkey Cabaret (Zöld Szamár Cabaré), where he and his colleagues tried to create a new theater style. The name of the theater frequently changed and it finally operated under the name Prisma (Prizma). Unfortunately, the authorities usually banned the plays they intended to perform. Then, for a short while, he became a member of various theaters. He co-edited the periodical Theater and Film (Színház és Film). During the war years, he was prevented from acting. From 1944 he again worked at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház). In 1948 he became one of the cultural activists of the Christian Peoples' Party (Keresztyén Néppárt), but was soon excluded from there. He worked as ceramist and gardener. In 1969 he appeared on the Literary Stage (Irodalmi Színpad) and, in his lecture, he argued for the Total Theater (Totális Színház). Some of his stage managements were F.R. Toller's Machine Destroyers (Géprombolók); Market in Babylon (Babilóni vásár), and his own work: Daughter of Ayrus (Ayrus lánya). His works include For a New Art! (Új művészetet!), with Sándor Hevesy (1922); Essence Oriented Theater (Lényegre Törő Színház) (1961, 1980), and Opal Hymns (Opál himnuszok), selected poems (1977) – 1445, 1257, T: 7103.→Hevesi, Sándor.

Palcsó, Sándor (Alexander) (Pécs, 8 November 1929 - ) – Opera singer (tenor). At first he studied Law at the University of Pécs (1948-1949), from where he was removed in 1949 because of his "class alien" origin. Later, he underwent training in singing at the Music School of the Honvéd Artist Ensemble (Honvéd Művészegyüttes), as a student of István (Stephen) Kis and Mária Érsek. From 1952 to 1957 he was the soloist of the male choir of the Honvéd Artist Ensemble and, from 1957 to 1979, soloist of the Opera House in Budapest. Throughout his career, he participated in the world première of new Hungarian operas, e.g. by András (Andrew) Mihály, Sándor (Alexander) Szokolay, Emil Petrovics and György (George) Ránki. As a character tenor, he is one of the most versatile ones, performing 74 operatic tenor roles, with good acting abilities. He appeared in many European cities as a guest artist and also sang in radio and TV shows. His roles include Pedrillo in Mozart's Il Seraglio (Szöktetés a szerájból); Mime and Loge in Wagner's Das Rheingold; David in Wagner's Die Mastersinger von Nürnberg (A nürnbergi mesterdalnokok); Pelléas in Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande; Hamlet in Thomas' Hamlet, and Herod in R. Strauss' Salome. He appeared in TV films: Barrabás, and The Bell (A csngő). He was awarded the Franz Liszt Prize (1963, 1971), the Merited Artist title (1974), and the Outstanding Artist title (1980). – B: 1445, 1679, T: 7456.

Paleolithic Period in the Carpathian Basin (Old Stone Age), geologically the Pleistocene epoch, which lasted from 1.8 million to 7000-8000 years ago (the beginnings may even be 3.5 million years). The European ice-sheet of the Pleistocene extended southward as far as the northern foothills of the Carpathian Mountains, with one glaciated range, (the Tatra Mtn.) inside the Northern Carpathians. The Paleolithic was followed by the Neolithic (New Stone Age), which was already part of the Holocene or Geological Ages. In the Carpathian Basin, the earliest human settlement (with Homo erectus) was at Vértesszőlős (west of Budapest) from the early Paleolithic Period, dated 350,000 years ago. The Middle Paleolithic is represented by the Mousterian remains of the Neanderthal hominid: adult mandible, post-crania, with mammal bones (dated 120,000 bp and extinct by 30,000 bp), in the Subalyuk Cave of the Bükk Mountain, as well as some settlements in Transdanubia, such as those of Érd and Tata. The human remains of the Late Paleolithic in the Carpathian Basin are already referred to as Homo sapiens. They are represented by three different cultures. (1) The Szeleta Culture, first discovered at Herpály, is represented by the finds in the Szeleta Cave, near Lillafüred, west of Miskolc, in the Bükk Mountain. These finds were excavated from two layers; the upper, younger one contained spear points, shaped as laurel leaves, made of ash-gray quartz porphyry. (2) The Aurignacian Culture from the finds of the Istállóskő Cave on the western slopes of the Bükk Mountain contained well-roughened blades (3) Gravettian Culture occurred along the riverbanks, in the valleys of the Danube and Ipoly Rivers. The spear points of the Gravettian material occur in northeast Hungary (Arka, Bodrogkeresztúr, famous also for its early Copper Age graves, dated 5000 bp), in the southern part of Transdanubia (Dunaföldvár on the Danube and Ságvár, south of Siófok, near Lake Balaton, rich in loess), and in the southern Great Hungarian Plain at Madaras and Szeged. In the Jankovich Cave near Bajót, on the side of Öregkő peak of the Gerecse Range, west of Esztergom, south of the Danube, spear points were found, similar to those from the Szeleta Cave, dated early Solutrean of the Upper Paleolithic with an upper layer from the stone industry of Magdalenian age. – B: 1068, 1078, 1231,1020, 1281, T: 7456.→Ice Age in the Carpathian Basin; Ice Age termination and Early Man in the Carpathian Basin; Vértesszőlős; Neolithic in the Carpathian Basin; Bronze Age in the Carpathian Basin; Copper Age in the Carpathian Basin.

Pálfalvi, Nándor (Ferdinand) (Balassagyarmat, 15 April 1931 - ) – Writer and journalist. He studied at a commercial school in Budapest (1947-1949), and in an artillery cadet school (1949-1950). In 1950, as a lieutenant, he became a contributor to the People's Army Newspaper (Néphadsereg Újsága). In 1953 and 1954 he was a columnist at the juvenile paper Buddy (Pajtás). Concurrently, he was a corresponding student at the literary department of the University of Budapest. From 1954, he worked for the newspaper Free Soil (Szabad Föld), from 1957 as a reporter for the Hungarian Radio; from 1959, he was a dramaturge for the TV and was an editor-reporter from 1965 to 1977. In 1973, he obtained a Diploma in Philosophy from the Marxist-Leninist University's evening section. From 1978 he was a contributor, then a columnist and member of the editorial board for the Illustrated Newspaper (Képes Újság). In 1985 he became Editor-in-Chief of the Hungarian Television. His main themes were changes in village society, and the situation of intellectuals. His numerous works include Necklaces from Paris (Nyakékek Párizsból) novel (1961); Miracle in Lombos (Csoda Lomboson) novel (1967); The Wooden Cow (A fatehén) novel (1973); Double Shadow (Kettős árnyék) novel (1987); Magical Hargita: The Youth of Endre Szász (Varázslatos Hargita, Szász Endre ifjúsága) (1990), and Do Not Paint Evil (Ne fessd az ördögöt) short stories (2006). He is a recipient of the Silver Class of the Workers Award (1980), and the Nimród Medal (1983). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7103.

Pálffy, Albert (Erdődy Pálffy, Pálfy) (Gyula, 20 April 1820 - Budapest, 22 December 1897) – Writer. He was born into an impoverished noble family. He studied in Debrecen, Nagybánya and Arad (now Baia Mare and Arad in Romania). In 1837 he was Chaplain in Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania), but he left the priesthood before his ordination. He read Law in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), and in Pest, where he passed the Bar Examinations in 1843. From 1844 he had friendly ties with the renowned poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi. From 1847 he was a columnist at the journal, Pest News (Pesti Hírlap), and, in 1848, he launched the radical newspaper, March Fifteenth (Március Tizenötödike). He wrote articles for it anonymously or under the pen name, Gedeon Nagy. These writings signified the appearance of the first modern Hungarian publicizing. After the collapse of the War of Independence (1848-1849), he went into hiding; but in 1853 was arrested and was sent to the concentration camp of Budweis, where he spent two years. After his release he got married and returned to Hungary and lived in Esztergom and Pest. From 1860 he was a contributor for various papers. In 1860 he became a member of the Kisfaludy Society and, in 1884, corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Among his works are the Hungarian Millionaire, vols. i, ii (Magyar millionaire, I,II) novel (1848); The Black Book (Fekete könyv) novel (1847); Attila, the Scourge of God (Attila Isten ostora) novel (1859), and Professor of Lady Esthy, vols. i,ii,iii (Esztyke kisasszony professzora, I-III) novel (1884). At first, he followed the French Romanticism; later, he tried to please his female readers with sentimental stories. – B: 1257, 1091, T: 7103. → Petőfi, Sándor.

Pálffy, Count János (John) (Vöröskő, now Červený Kameň, Slovakia, 20 August 1663 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 24 March 1751) – Palatine of Hungary. He studied in Vienna and Prague; then became a soldier. He started his military career as a volunteer in the Isemburg German Infantry Regiment; then, in 1696, he joined the newly established Pálffy Hussar Regiment as a flag-bearer. He began his military service in the battles against the Turks. He participated in the liberation of Vienna (1683), then in the battles at Párkány and Esztergom. He took part in the siege of Visegrád and Vác in 1684, and in the retaking of Buda from the Turks in 1686, where he played a significant role in defeating the Turkish relief forces. In 1700 he was made Imperial Lieutenant General. In 1701 he fought in battles in Italy and, early in 1702, he fought against Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II. In 1704 Pálffy was Viceroy of Croatia, Slavonia and Dalmatia, and was also the Cavalry Field Marshal. He participated in the Battles of Pudneric (1705), Nagymagyar (1706) and Trencsén (now Trenčín, Slovakia) (1708). In 1709 he was a General and Lord Lieutenant of the County Sáros. In 1710, he was Commander of the Armies of Northern Hungary; then, he became Supreme Commander of the Imperial Armed Forces. As a delegate with full powers, he represented the Austrian Emperor and signed the Peace Treaty of Szatmár with Count Sándor Károlyi, on 1 May 1711. In 1716 and 1717 he was Commander of the Cavalry in the Turkish War. He participated in the Battle of Pétervárad and in the siege of Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania) and Belgrade. In 1722 he played a significant role in the acceptance by Parliament of the Pragmatica Sanctio (Pragmatic Sanction, the female-line succession of the House of Habsburg). From 1724 he was a member of the Governing Council; from 1731, a member of the Septemvirate and State Judge. From 1732, he was Viceroy for Life and Chief of Police of Pozsony. In 1741 he was Councilor and Supreme Military Governor and Palatine of Hungary, presented to the nation by the King. His statue was erected on the Plaza at Andrásy Avenue, Budapest, on 10 November 1906. He is the central figure in the painting Recapture of the Castle of Buda by Gyula (Julius) Benczúr. – B: 1078, 1031, T: 7644.→Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; József I, Emperor and King; Reconquest of Buda in 1686; Benczúr, Gyula.

Pálffy, Count Miklós (Nicholas), (erdódi) (? , 10 September 1552 - Vöröskő 23 April 1600) – Lord Chief Justice and military commander. He was a descendant of a family of lesser nobility with a large estate. From 1564, he grew up in the Imperial Court. He was in the retinue of King Rudolph in Spain. In 1574 he was a gentleman carver; from 1580 Lord Lieutenant of the Capital, Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and Captain-General of its Castle Fortress. From 1581 he was Lord Chamberlain; in 1584 Lord Lieutenant of the town Komárom, and in 1588 Lord Lieutenant of Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia). In 1592 he was given the landed property of Vöröskő (now Červený Kameň, Slovakia). In 1595 he became Lord Lieutenant of the town of Esztergom. Pálffy is known as the most illustrious Hungarian military commander of the fifteen-year Turkish war. He took part in the battle of Pákozd and the siege of Fejérvár (now called Székesfehérvár) in 1593; he reoccupied Fülek (now Filakovo, Slovakia) also in 1593, which had been under Turkish rule since 1554; and later, also Szécsény. In 1595 he took Párkány (now Sturovo, Slovakia), and Visegrád, and participated in the siege of Esztergom. In 1596 he recaptured Vác, and took part in the Battle of Mezőkeresztes. A celebrated military feat of his was the recapture of the castle fort of Győr on 27 March 1598. In the same year, he retook Tata, Veszprém, Palota (in former County Zemplén), and Nagyvázsony (southwest of Veszprém); his castle belonged to Pál Kinizsi. In 1599 he took part in the unsuccessful siege of Pest, Buda and Székesfehérvár. His merits were put on the Statute Book, Act 48 of 1599, but he could not win the Hungarian supreme command. In 1581 he was given the rank of Hungarian Baron and, in 1599, the German Imperial rank of Count, and he was given the Castle of Pozsony, with the title of Lord Lieutenant for life. His wife was Baroness Mária Fugger. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Pálinkás, József (Joseph) (Galvács, 18 September 1952 - ) – Physicist, politician. From 1972 he studied in the Science Department, majoring in Physics at the University of Szeged, obtaining his B.Sc. Degree in 1977. Thereafter, he became a research fellow of the Nuclear Research Institute of the Academy of Sciences at Debrecen, where he was Deputy Director in 1990 and 1991, and Director until 1996. Since then, he has been a research professor. In the 1980s, he was a visiting scholar in Texas and Stockholm. In 1994 he became Professor of the Chair of Experimental Physics at the University of Debrecen, later to become Head of the Department. During 1997 and 1998, he was on scholarship as a Széchenyi professor. He was Minister of Education between 2001 and 2002. His research field is Physics, especially nuclear and molecular physics. He is the author of more than 90 scientific publications. He is a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1995, ordinary 2004), and he has been its President since 2008. He was winner of the Academy Prize in 1986, and was presented with the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 1997. B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.→Vizi, Elek Szilveszter.

Páll, Lajos (Louis) (Korond, now Corund, Romania, 3 April 1938 – ) – Painter and poet. He came from a Szekler potter family. He completed his studies at the High School of Fine Arts of Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania), 1955 and the Andreescu Academy of Fine Arts of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1956-1958). After the Hungarian Revolution of 1956, he was sentenced to prison on account of political activity (1958-1962). He was banned from publishing until 1970. His studio is at Korond. He is Editor of the journal, Homeland Spectator (Hazanéző), Korond. His illustrated poems are Light Worshippers (Fényimádók) (1970); Stony Fields (Köves földek) (1980); Dry Lightning (Szárászvillám) (1993); Landing (Partraszállás) (1994), and On Andromache's Barge (Andromaké uszályán). He is a member of professional societies, among them the Fine Arts Foundation, Budapest; the Romanian Writers Union, and the Hungarian Writers Union. He has received a number of awards, including the Memorial Medal of 1956, (1995); the György Aranka Literary Prize (1995), and the Pro Cultura Hungarica (1998). – B: 0875, 0878, 0877, T: 7103.

Pallasite – A type of stony-iron meteorite, named after Peter Pallas (1741-1811) of Berlin, a naturalist of Hungarian descent, who located a specimen in the Krasnojarsk area of Siberia in 1772, which had a mass of 680 kg (main mass is 515 kg) and is kept in the Academy of Sciences, Moscow. The meteorite contains numerous vugs (small cavities) of different sizes, creating sponge-like impressions. It consists of cm-sized olivine crystals in an iron-nickel matrix. The Pallasite means a group of meteorites whose compositions and structures are similar to those of the original find. Since Pallas' discovery a good number of pallasites have been found around the world. – B: 0924, 1031, T: 7674.

Pallay, Anna (Szeged, 24 May 1890 - Budapest, 4 April 1970) – Dancer, ballet mistress. From 1902 to 1905 she was a student of Miklós Guerra. She first appeared as a soloist in the Opera House of Budapest on 16 December 1907, where she continued as a member until 1919. Then, until the mid-1920s, she went on tour in Europe and the USA with great success. The choreography of the dances she performed was in great part prepared by her. In 1918 she started her own Dance School in Budapest, where she resumed teaching after her return to Hungary in 1926, having stopped all stage appearances. Apart from teaching in her own school, she also taught stage movement, rhythm and plasticity at the Academy of Music from 1930 to 1939. She was one of the most musical, most versatile dancers in technique and performance. Her main roles included The Baby Fairy by Hassreiter; Fairytale World; Sylvia; Coppelia, Winter Dream by M. Guerra, and The Wooden Prince by O. Zöbisch. – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456.

Palló, Imre (Emeric) (Mátisfalva, now Mățișeni, Romania, 23 October 1891 - Budapest, 25 January 1978) – Opera singer (baritone). He was born into a Transylvanian Szekler (Hungarian) peasant family; he began his high school studies at Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania) and completed it in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), in 1910. He studied at the Academy of Music of Budapest under the direction of József (Joseph) Sík and Géza László. He first appeared in the Opera House, Budapest, in the role of Alfio in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana, and, as a guest-artist, was on study trip in Austria, Germany, Belgium and, on the invitation of Mascagni, also in Italy. He appeared as a guest artist in North America and Egypt. From 1917 Palló was the solo singer in the Opera House, Budapest; from 1934, its Life Member, and Director in 1957 and 1958. His superb appearance, his evenly distributed baritone voice with powerful carrying capacity made him an outstanding figure of opera singing in Hungary, especially in lyric roles. In 1935 he was a guest singer at the Rome Opera House. His vast repertoire extends through the baritone roles of the operas of Verdi and Wagner (La Traviata, Rigoletto, Falstaff, Lohengrin, Tannhäuser, Tristan und Isolde), and also to the operas of Rossini, Puccini, Mascagni, Leoncavallo, Richard Strauss, including the leading roles of stage works by Hungarian opera composers Ferenc Erkel and Zoltán Kodály. He was well known as the Bán in Erkel's Bánk bán. He is regarded as the most famous Kodály interpreter, and is also well known as a singer in oratorio and as a concert singer. Bartók asked him to perform the prose prologue to Bluebeard's Castle. In 1934 Palló sang in the world premier of Bartók's Cantata Profana in London, first performed in Budapest in 1936. Kodály called him "the master singer of Hungarian folk songs"; he was the first to appear as Háry János in Kodály's Singspiel of the same name (1926), and sang the title role in Kodály's Székelyfőnök (1932). He often sang in operetta as well, and made numerous recordings. He retired in 1967. His most famous roles were: The Barber in Rossini's The Barber of Seville (A sevillai borbély), Marquis Posa in Verdi's Don Carlos, Count Luna in Verdi's Il Trovatore (A Trubadur), the title role in Verdi's Rigoletto, Wolfram von Eschenbach in Wagner's Tannhäuser, Tonio in Leoncavallo's Pagliacci, and Figaro in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága). He was awarded the Corvin Wreath (1938), the Kossuth Prize (1949), and the Outstanding Artist title (1950). – B: 0883, 1120, 1445, T: 7671, 7688, 7456. → Erkel, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán; Bartók, Béla.

Palló, Margit K. (Margaret) (Bojtorjános, now Săcius, Romania, 24 January 1897 - Budapest, 3 September 1984) – Linguist, Turkologist. She studied comparative Ural-Altaic linguistics under Zoltán Gombocz at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); this led to her studies of aspects of Turkology, and she obtained a Ph.D. in Arts in 1920. Thereafter, she worked as a teacher at the High School of Székesfehérvár for two years and, later (1922-1923), she continued her Turkological studies at the Humboldt University of Berlin, under the eminent professor of Turkology, Willi Bang-Kaup, author of Uralaltaische Forschungen (Ural-Altaic Research) (1890), and Studien zur vergleichenden Grammatik der Türkischen Sprachen (Studies on the Comparative Grammar of the Turkic Languages) (1916). She was specialized mainly in the early Turkic loan words of the Hungarian language. The circumstances of her family prevented her for a long time to carry on with her scientific research and she only began to publish regularly on Turkic linguistics in the middle of the 1950s, when she was in her late 50s. Her main work was entitled: Our Verbs of Old Turkic Origin (Régi török eredetű igéink) (1982, aged 85). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Gombocz, Zoltán.

Palóc dialect – A dialect of northern Hungary with the main center in the town Ipolyság, characterized by phonetic differences from the standard language, covering an unusually large dialect area north of Budapest. There are some typical deviations in the dialect. (1) They pronounce the vowel "ö" as "ë" as in the adverb föl. (2) They prefer the close "ë", especially at the end of words instead of the standard "e", e.g. bennë = benne (= in it), vinnë = vinne (= he would take it). (3) They pronounce the short "a" sound in the ancient illabial way as in the German past tense verb “hatte”. (4) They differentiate between the “ë “ and “ê” sounds; the latter is like the German ä in wäre, e.g. in the noun tehên. (5) They have very typical diphthongs, such as sziép = szép (beautiful), szaóma = szalma (hay); keómed = kelmed (archaic form of te). (6) They like to use the palatal sound as in lyány = lány (girl), télyi = téli (of winter). (7) The consonant “l” is silent at the end words and syllables, as in case of házbó = házból (= from the house). (8) In case of noun inflexions: forintvaó = forinttal (with forint) (9) The unusual use of suffixes –ni, –nól, –nott, e.g. in: papnyi megyek = paphoz megyek (I am going to the priest). (10) When using possessive suffixes in conjugation, they have: urónk = urunk (= our lord), lovok = lovuk (= their horse). (11) In conjugation they say: vagyónk = vagyunk (we are), segijën = segítsen (he should help), tisztijám = tisztítsam (I should clean it). Palóc Origin Legends – Prince Palóc, the mystical prince of the people of Göcsej, sped on his stag-drawn carriage to rescue Attila, who was close beset by the enemy.

According to the origin-legend of the Csángós, of the two brothers who came from Asia the first one to arrive settled in Moldova (a region in Romania). The brother who arrived later, attacked the Moldovans twice, then, when he lost the battle the second time, he proceeded to the Carpathian Basin. This fragment, reflecting the legend about Hunor and Magor repeatedly supports the early presence of the Hungarian speaking Palóc and their equivalent ethnic group, the Csángós, in pre-Attila times in the Carpathian Basin.

The Toldi legend was still traceable in the Palóc region in the 19th century. Its ancient mythological character is preserved in the fragmental remains of the five zodiacal adventures: the mastering of the bull (Taurus), the duel with one of equal strength (Gemini), the lion scene (Leo), the woman scene (Virgo) and the carrying of water (Aquarius). He is the Erős János (Strong John – Hercules) of the tales, remnant of the autumn Sun God religion. – B: 1020, T: 7659.→Csángó; Palóc; Palóc dialect.

Palóc – A very ancient ethnic component of the Hungarian people, its origin going back to the Avars and probably also to the Kabars, the tribe that joined the Hungarian tribal confederation prior to the Carpathian Settlement. Ethnically the Mongoloid element is higher than the national average, reaching over 25%. Their costumes are ornate, the women’s is particularly typical, minutely pleated; they are fond of a showy wedding. They are generally superstitious, masters of jokes and play on words. Their folksongs reveal ancient eastern influence with their pentatonic melodies. B: 1068. T: 7456.→Palóc Origin Legends; Palóc dialect; Music of the Hungarians.

Pálóczi Horváth, Ádám (Kömlöd, 11 May 1760 - Nagybjom, 28 January 1820) – Poet, folklorist. He is one of the first dedicated collectors of Hungarian folk poetry. He studied at the Reformed College of Debrecen from 1773 to 1780. He completed his law and engineering examinations in the same year. After a short stint as a surveyor-engineer, he farmed in various townships of Somogy and Zala Counties from 1783 until the end of his life. He became a writer who wrote in many styles: aside from several volumes of poetry, two epic poems, and one comedy, linguistic, philosophical and scientific works, tracts and political reports also flowed from his pen. By 1790 he was known throughout the land, particularly as a popular poet. Pálóczi Horváth was a good friend of the poet Mihály (Michael) Csokonai Vitéz, and he was the first to discover his friend’s talent. Modeled on the Helicon of Keszthely (Keszthelyi Helikon), while he was at Petrikeresztúr between 1812-1818, he founded and held together the literary group of the Helicon of Göcsej (Göcseji Helikon), consisting mainly of women authors. Proceedings were instituted against him in 1814, because of his poems mocking Germans, after which he averted suspicion from himself with shrewd ideas and deceptive rewriting of his poems. His literary activity was influenced above all by the idea of preserving tradition. As a member of the Diet from 1790, he participated in almost every National Assembly. He raised issues in the interest of women's voting rights and tenure of office, ahead of the western feminist movements. He was the first to note the text and, having a good ear for music, to record the tunes as well for numerous songs from the 17th and 18th centuries, which, besides Kuruc folksongs, including folk songs sung to this very day. His significant work is his handwritten songbook, entitled: Old and New some Four and a Half Hundred Songs (Ó és új, mintegy ötfélszáz énekek), in which he included the bulk of his output, together with their tunes (1913). This collection is an extraordinarily valuable repository for turn-of-the-century popular songs. Aside from older story-telling songs and folk music, new folk and other songs are also contained in the collection, including some of Pálóczi Horváth's own compositions. His main works are: Hunniás, heroic epic (1787); Things, vols. i-iii (Holmi, I-III), poems (1788-1793), and Rudophias, heroic poem (1817). – B: 1134, 0883, 1257, T: 7659, 7688. → Csokonai Vitéz, Mihály.

Pálóczi-Horváth, György (George) (Budapest, 20 March 1908 - London, 4 January 1973) – Writer, publicist, journalist. He engaged in studies at the University of Vienna (1926-1927) and at the Franklin Marshall College in the USA (1927-1929). After returning to Hungary, he worked as a journalist for the daily paper Pest Diary (Pesti Napló), first as foreign affairs correspondent, then as a column editor until the paper folded up in 1939. From 1939 on, he was a columnist for foreign affairs for the weekly, Independent Hungary (Független Magyarország). From 1940 to 1942, at the request of the Prime Minister, Count Pál Teleki, he was also a foreign affairs correspondent for the official governmental paper Hungarians (Magyarság). After Teleki's suicide, he emigrated to Egypt and entered the service of the British Operations Executive in Cairo. In the spring of 1943, he took part in the Istanbul discussions of Prime Minister Miklós Kállay's Government to negotiate a separate peace with the Allied Powers. In 1945, he settled in London and worked for the Hungarian Section of the BBC Radio. In May 1947 he returned to Hungary, became a member of the Communist Party, and Managing Editor for the Communist weekly Onward (Tovább). In 1948 and 1949 he was Head of the Foreign Languages Department of the Hungarian Radio, and became the literary Editor for the publishing house Hungaria Könyvkiadó. In September 1949, Pálóczi-Horváth was arrested on trumped-up charges and sentenced to 15 years forced labor; however, after five years, he was freed (1954). After his rehabilitation, he worked in the Institute of History of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and became a columnist for the journal, Literary News (Irodalmi Újság). After the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, he emigrated to the West and settled in London. He became Editor and Publisher for the Literary News; from then on, he published in London and worked as a leading contributor. He also worked as a publicist for English newspapers, among them The Times, Sunday Times and Manchester Guardian, while his Hungarian writings appeared in Review (Szemle) and Literary News (Irodalmi Újság). After the 1956 Revolution, he used his position in England to attack Communist regimes. He wrote a great deal about the Hungarian Revolution, timely international problems, and about Communism. His works included Chamberlain is Responsible (Chamberlain felelős) (1939); In Darkest Hungary (study, 1945); One Sentence on Tyranny (1957); Lost Generation (Elveszett nemzedék) memoirs (1958); Krushchev: the Road to Power (1960); Mao Tse Tung, Emperor of the Blue Ants (1962); Jugend – Schicksal der Welt (1965), and Alle Macht der Jugend? Thesen zum Generationskonflikt unserer Zeit (1971). He was awarded with two literary prizes. – B: 0883, 1672, T: 7688, 7456.→Teleki, Count Pál; Kállay, Miklós.

Pálos, Antal S.J. (Bükkösd, 24 August 1914 - Piliscsaba, 3 February 2005) – Priest, Jesuit Provincial, visitor, educator. He entered the Jesuit Order in 1933, and was ordained in 1943. He became Provincial with the power of a visitor of the Society of Jesus with the right to designate his successor. Once the Society of Jesus was suppressed during the Communist regime (1948-1989) and any Jesuit could have been arrested for being a member of an illegal society, the General Superior of the Society in Rome authorized each Hungarian provincial to appoint his successor in case of his arrest. This is how Antal Pálos became the successor of the imprisoned provincial, Elemér (Elmer) Csávossy, on 7 May 1951. With two provincials already in prison, Pálos had no illusions about his future, when he read P. Csávossy's letter, dated before his arrest. Therefore, he, in turn, at once appointed two of his successors, János (John) Tamás and György (George) Bodó. At that time, there were 150 Jesuit priests, 70 Jesuit Brothers and 30 scholastics pursuing their studies in Hungary. Of them, 25 Jesuits were already in prison. As provincial, he was convinced that, despite all those rules abolishing the Society of Jesus in Hungary, the Jesuits would remain Jesuits and, as Jesuits, they would have to continue to exist. He found ways to meet and educate young candidates in secret, and was able to send 30 novices abroad during the 1956 Revolution, and to have three priests in the village of Pomáz secretly ordained. Meanwhile, after 38 months, Fr. Pálos was arrested by the Communist authorities, accused of secretly leading an illegal religious community and was sentenced to 17 years in prison in 1955. He was in forced labor camps and worked in a coalmine, carpet-making and carpenter workshops, before he was released in 1963. In his retirement, he lived at Piliscsaba. – B: 1045, T: 7103.→Csávossy, Elemér Béla S. J.

Pálos, György (George) (Patrovits) (Budapest, 8 May 1920 - Budapest, 3 January 1970) – Actor. In 1940 he completed the acting course at the School of Dramatic Art in the National Actor's Association and became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged. After World War II, he entered the stage again in the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) of Budapest in 1948. From 1949 to 1951 he played on the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad). From 1952, until his passing, he was an actor at the Hungarian People's Army Theater (A Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza) and the Comedy Theater, though, from 1965, because of his heart condition, he only took on dubbed and radio roles. His power of expression, his elocution and performance rendered him suited for any role. He was also engaged in music composition: he provided the background music for Priestley's Adam and Eve. His roles included Dauphin in Shaw's Saint Joan; Napoleon in Tolstoy-Piscator's War and Peace (Háború és Béke); Title role in Goethe's Faust; King Matthias in Heltai's The Mute Knight (A néma katona), and Daniel in Thomas's Poor Daniel (Szegény Dániel). There are 19 feature films to his credit, including Yesterday (Tegnap) (1959); Trial Run (Próbaút) (1961); The Golden Head (Az aranyfej) (1963), and The Corporal and the Others (A tizedes meg a többiek) (1965). He was a recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize in 1958, and was awarded the Merited Artist title in 1965. – B: 1445, 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Pálósszentkút, Affair of – The charges against Ferenc Vezér, a member of the Pálos monastic order, and his associates were an armed conspiracy and the organizing of self-defense groups against marauding and drunken Soviet soldiers. The arrests began on 28 June 1951, and the questioning of those arrested was conducted by the State Security Police – (Államvédelmi Hatóság – AVH), in their centers in Kecskemét and Budapest. The trial by the “People’s Court” was held soon after the Archbishop József (Joseph) Grósz trial in July 1951. During the preparation of the trial, the AVH persuaded Gyula (Julius) Petrus, a jockey by profession, and Illés (Elias) Tóth, a restaurateur, with promises of freedom, to provide condemning evidence against their associates. Coached by AVH officers, they had to memorize their confessions in the form of questions and answers. They were provided with comfortable accommodation, received excellent food of their own choice and were given custom-made suits. During the course of the trial, which was shown on television, under the supervision of plain clothes AVH officers, they were instructed to mix in with the general public. When they were called by name to the microphone, they recited their answers to the questions of the judge, which, of course, were identical to those they had also memorized. A verdict of death was pronounced against Sándor (Alexander) Farkas, Bálint (Valentine) Iványi and János István John Stephen) Tóth, all smallholders, as well as against János (John) Tóth, a fireman. The case of Ferenc (Francis) Vezér was joined to the Grósz case and he was sentenced to death. The rest of the accused received lighter sentences. However, despite the promises made to them, Gyula Petrus and Illés Tóth were also sentenced to death in a secret trial and, together with the others, they were executed in the courtyard of the Gyűjtő Kiszfogház (a prison in Budapest) on 28 May 1952. It is presumed that Ferenc Vezér was also executed at this time. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→Pauline Order; State Security Police.

Palotai, Boris (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 23 May 1904 - Budapest, 12 September 1983) – Writer, poet. Palotai lived from 1919 to 1940 in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). It was here that he attended secondary school, and where his first booklet of poems was published in 1926. The Director, Pál (Paul) Fejős, took a liking to one of his shorter writings, which led to the beginning of his “film career”: six films were made based on his novels and short stories. In 1946, Palotai became the Editor for the magazine, Women (Asszonyok). Between 1947 and 1953 he was the Cultural Affairs Editor for the daily, The Voice of the People (Népszava). In the following years, his novels became darker and more pessimistic, as Palotai became adept at depicting the conflict between the individual and social circumstance. The novel, Bitter Almonds (Keserű mandula) (1958) was an exceptional success, and had several editions. He was prolific and had a light touch in his short stories and in his novels for the youth market. His best works were a true-to-life depiction of the times. His other publications included Celebratory Supper (Ünnepi vacsora) novel (1955); The Birds Became Silent (A madarak elhallgattak), novel (1962), and Green Walnut (Zöld dió) novel (1968). The films Small Penny (Kiskrajczár), Celebratory Supper (Ünnepi vacsora), and Darkness During the Day (Nappali sötétség), based on his writings, won the jury’s Honorable Mention Award at the Locarno film festival. The TV drama, Woman in the Barracks (Nő a barrakkban), won the Grand Prix at the Monte Carlo film festival. Palotai received the Attila József Prize in 1950 and 1967. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Palotás or “Palace” Dance – Its origins reach back to the 15th century with the development of an active life at court. The Palotás reached its peak in popularity during the reign of Count Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, and it was in this period that the dance became famous. The Palotás was generally performed in front of the King in his Palace, where the young nobility and military men would get a chance to present themselves and their ladies to the King; Ferenc (Francis) Erkel composed a Palotás for his opera, László Hunyadi. The Palotás became the traditional opening dance of all formal balls in Hungary; and today, wherever Hungarians live and keep their old traditions, they perform this dance. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Erkel, Ferenc; Rákóczi II, Count Ferenc; Kuruc Age; Hungarian Dances, Traditional.

Palotás, Péter (née Poteleczy) (Budapest, 27 June 1929 - Budapest, 17 May 1967) – Soccer player. He was member of the legal successors of the Circle of Hungarian Athletic Sportsmen (MTK): the Textiles, the Bastion (Bástya) of Budapest, and the players of the Budapest Red Flag (Vörös Lobogó). He played at the 1952 Summer Olympic Games, where his team won the Championship. He also appeared at the Soccer World Championship, where he played in the Golden Team, placed second in Bern. He played center-forward, and he was in the National Team 24-times from 1950 to 1956, scoring 19 goals. Due to his illness, he withdrew early and, until his death (aged 38), he worked in the textile industry. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Golden Team.

Palotay, Sándor (Alexander) (Lupény, now Lupeni, Romania, 25 September 1926 - Budapest, 5 August 1979) – Pastor of the Seventh Day Adventist Church in Hungary from 1954; later, he was its Economic Secretary. He became the Managing Director for the Council of Free Churches (Szabadegyházak Tanácsa – SZET) in 1958; from 1961 was its General Secretary and, finally, its President from 1969. The SZET was dissolved in 1989. He was Editor for the weekly, Harbinger of Peace (Békehírnök), a paper of the Baptist Church. In 1969, he set up the Ministerial Training Institute for SZET. Since 1972, its graduate students have been able to acquire a Diploma of Ministry from the Reformed Theological Academy, Debrecen. He was member of the Christian Peace Conference from 1958. He received a teacher’s diploma from the Reformed Theological Academy, Debrecen, in 1972. He invited Billy Graham, the renowned American Evangelist, for a Hungarian crusade in 1977. He authored numerous articles and books, including The Nazarenes (A nazarénusok) with a co-author (1969), and On the Road of Mistakes (A tévedések útján), with a co-author (1977). He received an Honorary Doctorate in Theology from the Lutheran Theological Academy, Budapest, in 1978. – B 0883, 1506, T: 7103.

Pálúr, János (John) (Budapest, 1967 - ) – Organist. He began to play the piano at the age of 6 at a State Music School. When he was 13, he changed to the organ, and István (Stephen) Baróti was his teacher from 1980 to 1986. He graduated from the Zsigmond Móricz High School in Budapest in 1985. In 1986 he was admitted to the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music to study organ, where his teacher was Gábor (Gabriel) Lehotka. At the invitation of the Albert Schweitzer House in Gunsbach, France in 1987, he participated at a course taught by Daniel Roth, dealing with the compositions of J.S. Bach and Ch. M. Widor. In the same year, he gave a successful concert at the Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris. In 1988 he gave several concerts in Germany and in the Netherlands. He gave organ recitals in 12 European countries and in the USA. In 1995 he was a student at the Conservatoire in Paris. Since 1997 he has been the organist and organ instructor at the Fásor Reformed Church in Budapest. He is also a recording artist; his CDs include all organ works of Robert Schumann and those of Maurice Duruflé. Since 1998, he has been teaching organ and improvisation at the Ferenc Liszt Academy of Music. In 1997 he won the Prix de Paris at the 2nd International Organ Competition in Paris, as well as a Special Prize for his presentation of a 20th century composition. – B: 1852, 1937, T: 7103.→Lehotka, Gábor.

Pályi, Márton (Martin) (Prager) (Kiskunhalas, 14 March 1892 - Budapest, 18 September 1961) – Physician. In 1916 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest. From 1918 to 1945 he worked as District Health Officer; in 1946 he became an honorary lecturer in Industrial Health; from 1947 to 1949 he was acting as Supervisor for the Minister of Industry. From 1949 he was Medical Superintendent of Schools. He provided information in health issues, industrial health and settlement sanitation. His works include The Public Health Issue of the Joiner's Trade (Az asztalosipar egészségügye) (1942) and Alcoholism. Causes, Prevention and Medical Treatment (Alkoholizmus. Okai, megelőzése, gyógyítása) (1944). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.

Panama Canal – The Spaniards already planned to build a canal across the narrowest portion of Central America between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans in 1591; however, Ferdinand Lesseps, who built the Suez Canal in 1869, was only able to establish the “Canal Company” in 1876. István (Stephen) Türr, Lesseps’ friend, was also invited to participate in the planning project. The execution of the project was accompanied by complicated setbacks, financial failures and scandals. István Türr was also among the losing investors and he became financially ruined. The Hungarian word ‘panamázás’ – meaning swindling – indicates that, during the building of the Canal, the Criminal Code had a significant role. Later on, with the help of American capital, the Canal was completed in 1914, but István Türr had died six years earlier. – B: 1020, T: 7644.→Türr, István.

Pándi, Pál (Paul) (original name Kardos) (Debrecen, 2 August 1926 - Budapest, 19 January 1987) – Literary historian, critic. Pándi completed his secondary schooling in Debrecen. He was a student of Humanities at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest. In 1944, the Germans deported him to the concentration camp in Laxenburg. After he returned home in 1946, Pándi published critiques in the papers, New Moon (Újhold), Hungarians (Magyarok), Response (Válasz), and later, mainly in Star (Csillag), and Free People (Szabad Nép). His teaching career began with his 1949 appointment to the Department of Humanities of the University of Budapest. From 1967 he was Professor and Head of Department, a post he held until 1983. Pándi began his editorial career as Cultural Affairs Editor for the daily, Free People (Szabad Nép), in December 1955. After the defeat of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he became a theoretician of the reform-oriented, consolidation-building Hungarian Socialist Workers’ Party (MSZMP). In 1972 he was a founding editor for the revamped paper, Criticism (Kritika), where he opened a forum for discussion and gave a start to the careers of many young talented writers. He left this paper in 1983, but continued as a member of the Editorial committee for the cultural-scientific section of the daily, Freedom of the People (Népszabadság), until his resignation in 1985. In the 1960s and 1970s, Pándi was regarded as one of the leading cultural politicians of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party. As a literary historian, he specialized in writing about the Hungarian reform period. His main publications are: Petőfi (1961); The History of Hungarian Literature from 1772 to 1849 (A Magyar irodalom története 1772-től 1849-ig) (1965); Commentaries on Bánk bán (Bánk bán-kommentárok) (1980), and Collected Writings from the Time of the Revolution and War of Independence of 1848-1849 (Szöveggyűjtemény a forradalom és a szabadságharc korának irodalmából) (1980). Pál Pándi won the Attila József Award in 1954 and 1962, was elected Corresponding Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1973 and an Ordinary Member in 1985. He won the Kossuth Prize in 1970. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Pándy, Kálmán (Coloman) (Ókígyós, 14 October 1868 - Szentistvántelep, north of Budapest, 27 January 1945). Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1893; then went abroad, studying on a scholarship in Germany, France, England and Finland. From 1898 he was Senior Physician at Gyula; from 1905 he was Senior Physician in the National Institute of Mental Health of Lipótmező, Budapest. In 1909 he became an honorary lecturer; in 1910 an assistant professor. Between 1911 and 1918 he was Director of the Mental Hospital at Nagyszeben, in Transylvania (now Sibiu, Romania). After the Romanian occupation of Transylvania in December of 1918, he fled to truncated Hungary (result of the 1920 Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate). From 1920, he practiced at Gyula, where he became the Head of the Mental Hospital, which he founded. He was engaged in the study of the reflex mechanism of the cerebral cortex, nervous facialis paresis and tabes dorsalis (progressive degeneration of the spinal cord that occurs in the tertiary [third] phase of syphilis). The liquor reaction that he discovered (the so-called Pandy-reaction: a test to determine the presence of proteins – chiefly globulins – in the spinal fluid) brought international fame for him. His works include Le mécanisme cortical des phénomènes réflexes (1893), and On Alcoholic Drinks and Sexual Diseases (A szesz italokról és a nemibetegségekről) (1907). The Békés County Hospital and Hospice in Gyula, and a memorial medal bear his name. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Pándy, Pál (Paul) (Hungary, 7 August 1905 - Ivalo, Finland, 24 September 1986) – Military officer, naturalist. He was born of a Hungarian father and a Finnish mother. After completing military school, he served with the border guards. In 1934 he moved to Finland and purchased an estate in Lapland on the shore of Lake Inari. In World War II, as a Finnish officer, he participated in the Battles of Petsamo and Lutto; then, because of his foreign language skills, served as a liaison officer. After the war he traveled in Central and Southern Europe, in Lapp folk costume. During his travels, he gave many lectures about the natural beauty of Lapland, contributing to the enhancement of the tourist industry in this far-north region of Europe. For this reason, in his country, he was often spoken of as the “Lapp ambassador”. In Lapland he organized walking tours mainly for Swiss, German and Italian nature lovers, presenting the arctic land's beauty and points of interest. In the meantime, on his Kultahanti (Golden Bay) estate, he practiced efficient land management, producing mainly vegetables and herbs. He managed to domesticate plants, which were previously not considered possible to cultivate in the region of the severe climate above the Polar Circle. – B: 1020, T: 7644.

Panek, Zoltán (Terep, now Trip, Romania, 22 January 1928 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 22 January 2001) – Writer, poet. He graduated in 1948 from the High School of Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania), studied at the Literary Academy of Bucharest, and obtained his Degree in 1952. Initially, he edited the paper, Our Way (Utunk) in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). From 1948 he was a manual laborer. From 1958 he edited a number of newspapers, including the Working Woman (A Dolgozó Nő); Forward (Előre) and True Word (Igaz Szó). In 1986 he retired; in the following year he moved to Hungary. In his writings, he describes the situation, the inner conflicts and the hopelessness of Transylvanian Hungarian intellectuals. He made new technical experiments in prose writing, by moving the limits of the novel toward essay and diary. His works include Separate Notices Will Not Be Sent Out (Minden külön értesítés helyett), novel (1957); Low-flying (Mélyrepülés) poems (1971); Miracles of Minor Importance (Mellékes csodák) stories (1974), and Witch Circle (Boszorkánygyűűű) stories (1982). He received the Prize of the Writers' Society in Kolozsvár (1971), the Prize of the Romanian Writers Union (1974), and the Champaign Prize (1977). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7103.

Pan-European Picnic – The label given to a meeting that became one of the milestones of change in the Eastern European political system during 1989 and 1990. It took place near Sopron, on 19 August 1989. It was here that the “iron curtain”, erected four decades earlier, was torn down. This event, jointly patronized by Otto Habsburg and Imre Pozsgay, was widely regarded something like a miracle at the time, as hundreds of East German tourists were able to cross the Austrian-Hungarian border for the first time without difficulty. The border was officially opened by the Hungarian Government on 10 September, and so the human creek that started to flow 3 weeks earlier, suddenly swelled into a human flood. Tens of thousands of East Germans poured into Austria and into the complete freedom of West Germany, which soon incorporated the economically collapsed Communist East Germany.

Thereafter, the political events quickly developed toward the complete disintegration of the eastern block of Europe, as well as the whole Communist world order. On 1 October 1989, the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party (MSZMP) dissolved itself and the reformist members of the party founded the Hungarian Socialist Party (MSZP). On 9 November the Berlin Wall fell; and on 24 December, following the Revolution at Temesvár (now Timisoara, Romania) and at Bucharest, the universally hated Ceausescu couple was executed. In March and April of 1990, elections took place in Hungary and, on 23 May, the first post-Communist government was installed under the leadership of the victorious Hungarian Democratic Forum and the new Prime Minister, József Antall (1992-1993). After the events of August 1989, within a few months all the Eastern European Communist governments were overthrown and, by the end of 1991, the whole of the Soviet Union disintegrated. – B: 1926, T: 7456. → Iron Curtain; Habsburg, Otto von; Pozsgay, Imre; Antall, József; Temesvár; Berlin Wall.

Pannon Sea – The ancient Pannon Sea of the Tertiary Period (65.5 to 1.8 million years ago) the Tethys Sea of geologists, which covered not only the Carpathian Basin, but extended over the Mediterranean Sea, the Caspian Sea and the Aral Sea, forming one large, continuous Eurasian Sea. It was at its full development in the late tertiary (Neocene), mainly in the Miocene Period, i.e. 20 to 10 million years ago. Later, by the end of the Miocene Period, about 5 million years ago, the connection between these seas disappeared, broken up into separate basins. The Black Sea area became limnic, swampy, freshwater, while the Caspian Sea remained saltwater and much larger in area extending northward. Another of these basins became the Carpathian Basin; the in-flowing rivers slowly turned it into a freshwater lake during Pliocene times (5 to 2 million years ago), surrounded by the Carpathian Mountains that were in the process of formation at the time, as a result of the world-wide Alpine Orogeny (Mountain Building). By the time of the Pleistocene Age (beginning 2 million years ago), adjacent to the glaciation caused by the Ice Age west and north of the Carpathian Basin, the inland lake area was gradually filled up, forming the dust-wastes of the loess deposits of the Great and Little Hungarian Plains. Rising out of this geographic situation were the volcanic mountains (like the Volcanic Ore Mountain Complex in the north of the Basin, including the Selmec Ore Mtn.) and the old relic hills and low-lying mountains in the Basin interior, as the Transdanubian ranges (Bakony, Mecsek, etc.) in the west, and the Bihar Mountain Complex in the eastern, Transylvanian part of the Basin. – B: 1020, 1068, T: 7644, 7456.

Pannonhalma, Archabbey of the Benedictine Order – In 996 A.D., Reigning Prince

Géza settled Benedictine monks on the Saint Martin's Hill of Pannonia. The founders of the monastery were convinced that the great Bishop of Tours, Saint Martin was born near "Mons Sacer" or "Sacred Mountain". The first monastery was a modest one, as excavations show. During the rule of King St. István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038), the Monastery became an Abbey. Its task was to spread Christianity and European culture. The first church was consecrated in 1001, and the present one in 1225. The kings of the Árpád Dynasty enriched the Abbey with grants. The monks were under the authority of the Holy See and not that of the local bishop. After a modest beginning, the library now contains some 250,000 volumes, including 230 incunabula. The oldest surviving document to use the Hungarian language, the Charter of the Tihany Benedictine Abbey, dating back to 1055, is still preserved in the library. The Abbey, surrounded by the Monastery, is one of the excellent examples of the late Roman, early Gothic architecture of the Middle Ages. The building complex expanded in the passing of time. It served as a fortification during the Turkish occupation (1526-1686), when the monks were forced to abandon the Abbey for various lengths of time. Apart from the library, the building complex contains a magnificent Basilica, a seminary, a boarding school, and even a traditional winery. The Basilica's pillars and early Gothic vault were built in the early 18th century, using the walls of the former church. In 1486 it was reconstructed under King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) in Gothic style. In the 17th and 18th centuries, rich Baroque adornments and extensions were added to the complex and much of its current façade dates from this time. It received its present form in 1832, with the library and the tower, which was built in classicist style. After World War II, the properties of the Order and the schools were confiscated by the Communist Government, from 1950 until the end of Communist rule in Hungary in 1990. The monastery was instrumental in the development of Christian culture and the values of universal human culture in Hungary. It has been a World Heritage Site since 1996. – B: 1782, 1031, T: 7103. → Tihany Benedictine Abbey.

Pannonia – Its territory is bounded in the north and east by the Danube; it is conterminous westward with Noricum and upper Italy, and southward with Dalmatia and upper Moesia. Pannonia was located in the territory of the present-day countries of Eastern Austria, Croatia, Western Hungary, Upper-Serbia, Eastern Slovenia, Southern Slovakia and Bosnia and Herzegovina. Today, the term, Pannonia, is used for what is called Transdanubia (Dunántúl) in Hungary, and for the northern parts of Croatia and a small part of Slovenia and Austria, which are located in the Pannonian Plain. The Pannonians first settled between the Dráva and Száva Rivers and in Transdanubia; later, they occupied Lower-Austria, the Vienna-Basin, then Styria, Croatia and the Szerémség. Their later empire also included Slovenia.

The expanding Roman Empire's first significant attack against Pannonia occurred in 35 BC, when Augustus, at the time still a triumvirate member, defeated a Pannonian army at Siscia (Sziszek). After this, 44 years of serious warring took place, and then, with a huge army, Tiberius occupied their land in 9 AD and annexed it to the Roman Empire. Probably in 10 AD, Pannonia was organized as a province; in 103-106 AD., Emperor Trajan divided it into two parts: the eastern part was called Pannonia Inferior, and the western part Pannonia Superior. Aquincum (a place near Óbuda, Budapest) became the seat of Pannonia Inferior, and the site of the provincial assembly was moved to Gorsium (now Tác). During the reign of Diocletian, the large land area of Pannonia was organized into four provinces; this occurred when the provinces of Pannonia Prima and Valeria were established. To defend against the repeated attacks by the barbarians (Markomanns, Sarmatians, Yaziges) after the end of the 1st century, the limes (border of the Roman Empire), consisting of forts and watchtowers along the border were established. The campsites of the legions were established one after another along the Danube: Carnuntum (Német-Óvár), Vindobona (Vienna), Ad Flexum (Magyaróvár), Brigetio (Szöny), Cirpi (Dunabogdány), Aquincum (Óbuda), Intercisa (Dunaújváros), etc.

During the later period of the Roman Empire, the increasing importance of Pannonia in the defense of the Empire was shown by the fact that soldiers born in Pannonia were elected as emperors (Maximian, Valentinian) several times. In 401 AD, the westward advancing Vandals devastated North-Pannonia, Noricum and Rhaetia. The Goths, led by Alarich, advanced through Pannonia and invaded Italy. In 408, battles between the Huns and the Romans took place in the Tárnok Valley and at Cesuamur (Tullin/Zeiselmauer). In the same year, the western Goths left Pannonia, and then the Quadi and the Gepids, who lived northeast of the Danube, came under Hun rule. In 409, the Romans turned over the province of Valeria to the Huns by signing a treaty; formally Ravenna maintaining its legal claim, but actually the Roman Empire, struggling with internal crises and increasingly strong barbarian attacks could not maintain its rule over Eastern Pannonia. After 430 AD, Pannonia Prima and Valeria came under the rule of the Hun Empire.

Later on, during the reign of Justinian, Pannonia was part of the Eastern Roman Empire and, in 562, the Emperor, against the expanding Gepids, offered the territories occupied by the Longobards to the Avars. On 2 April 562, the Longobard people celebrated the Easter holidays and then left Pannonia to settle in Northern Italy. As a result, the Avars occupied Pannonia. After the fall of the Avar Empire in 828, Louis the German ended the division of Pannonia; the new name of the united province was Regio Pannonia. Its eastern part was known as the "Pannonian Plain". Toward the end of the 9th century, the Magyars came into Pannonia. In 862, Bishop Hinkmar made a note that "so far unknown Ungar enemy appeared" in their midst. The end of the Magyar incursions into Western Europe marked their permanent settlement in the Carpathian Basin. – B: 1078, 1230, Pannoniai, Mihály (Michael) (Michele dai Unni, Michele Ongaro, Michele Pannonio) (? ca. 1390 - Ferrara, Italy, 1459-1464) – Painter. He was an Italian painter of Hungarian ancestry. He was active between 1415 and 1464, and was first mentioned in the 1450s, as a painter at the court of the Duke of Ferrara. A follower of the Ferrara school, he leaned more toward the Gothic style than toward the Renaissance. He painted the frescos of God, St. Peter and St. Paul. In the Cathedral of Ferrara, and in the Castle of Ferrara, the frescos of St. Dominic, St Thomas Aquinas, and St. Peter the Martyr are to be found. His other works are in various churches and galleries. The most famous is Ceres Enthroned. His only work in Hungary is Fecundity in the Fine Arts Museum of Budapest. – B: 1144, 0883, T: 7677.

Pannonian Silver Treasure (or Seuso treasure) – 248 silver peices dating from the 4th century AD, were recovered in Szabadbattyán of the Balaton Highlands in 1878. It originated in the Roman period of Pannonia, bearing the name of the original owner, Sevso (Seuso?). It is presumed to have been in the possession of a noble Pannonian family and survived for centuries hidden in their cellar. Further detail was established with the help of the inscription on several pieces from the Latin name of Lake Balaton: Pelso. The finding was to be auctioned in New York in 1990. However, its origin is disputed: Hungary, Yugoslavia/Serbia and Lebanon announced their ownership rights. A part of the treasure is in the possession of the Hungarian National Museum. – B: 1020, T: 7653.

Pannonians – Pannonians were the indigenous population of the Carpathian Basin. The British archeologist, Gordon Childe pointed out that, around 3000 BC, the people of the Carpathian Basin venerated a goddess that was also venerated in Mesopotamia. The names of Mesopotamian gods and goddesses survived in the names of Hungarian rivers and mountains in the Carpathian Basin. In the 5th century BC, the Greek historian, Herodotus, called the River Danube Ister, and the Romans also used this name. The data could suggest that the language of the Pannonians was an old form of today's Hungarian. In the middle of the 1st century BC, the Celts and Scythians came to the area from the East. Eventually, due to inter-marriages with the large Pannonian population, they assimilated into the population and, in the time of the Romans, the local people were known only as Pannonians. In the year 8 AD, for the very first time, the Romans attacked one of the Pannonian tribes, who laid down their arms at the River Bathinus. Bato, one of the Pannonian chiefs, became king of his tribe; but the Dalmatians persuaded him to rise against the Romans. Tiberius put down the revolt in the following year and resettled all the participating Pannonian tribes. This is the probable time of their arrival in Northern Pannonia. In the preparation of the Dacian war, Emperor Trajan drafted the Pannonians into the Roman Legion. The Pannonians chose the Arian branch of Christianity with the election of Phothonos as Bishop of Sirmium (Szerém, now Sremska Mitrovica, Serbia) in 343. At the beginning of the Roman rule the Pannonians revolted several times.

At the meeting about a tax increase at Sirmium in 359, one of the Pannonian chiefs, in the heat of the discussion, hurled one of his boots at Emperor Constantine II, while screaming “marha, marha” meaning “you ass, you meathead”! The Roman historian, Ammianus Marcellinus, also a military adviser to Ursicinus, was present at this meeting, and later wrote down in Latin the word marha and explained its proper meanings in his Rerum Gestarum. This word is used only in the Hungarian language as such and its original meaning “cattle” is also used as a pejorative description of humans. It is suspected that the Pannonians spoke a language similar to Hungarian. This theory seems to be reinforced by a 4th century runic inscription found on a roof shingle in Pilismarót.

At the time of Emperor Claudius, the Pannonian auxiliary troops fought alongside the Roman legionaries. The great conglomeration of new arrivals (Huns, Avars and Hungarians) from the East assimilated the Pannonians following the Roman rule. At the time of the Magyar settlement of the Carpathian Basin, the majority of the Pannonian settlements were at the western part of Historic Hungary, although for centuries the whole Carpathian Basin was called Pannonia. – B: 1153, 1020, T: 3240.→Pannonia; Hungarian Runic Script.

Pannonius Ambrosius (? - Vienna, 1536) – Humanist and theologian, publisher of liturgical books in Latin. In 1484, he entered into to the so-called Scottish Benedictine Monastery in Vienna, where he became prior in 1509. He published four printed liturgical books, in which the Devotio moderna and Humanist moral can be found together: Cursus Beatae Mariae Virginis (Vienna, 1513); Additiones and Cursus (Vienna, 1514); the Diurnale monasticum (Vienna, 1515), which was written at the request of Máté (Matthew) Tolnai, Archabbot of Pannonhalma, and Virgiliae et officium mortuorum (Vienna, 1518). In the last volume, with Gregorian scores, several distich poems have been found, and the work contains music notes. – B: 1150, 1257, T: 7666.

Pantocsek, Leó (Kielce, Poland, 1812 - Zlatnó 11 September 1893) – Physician and pyrochemist. He obtained his doctorate from the University of Pest, but never practiced medicine. He was engaged in chemistry, especially in pyrochemistry. He was the first one in Hungary, whose interests turned to daguerreotype. Later, he was oriented toward the techniques of picture taking. After that, he was engaged with problems of glass manufacturing – as a chemist of the Ziatno Glassworks –, such as hyaloplasm. He made glass coins with this method, which won him a Gold Medal at the Paris International Exposition. One side of the glass coin was stamped, then silver-plated. The stamping was sharper than it was possible to attain earlier. In the 1850s, he invented the iridescent glass that is similar to the rainbow. It was produced by the artificial oxidation of glass surfaces. – B: 0883, 1226, T: 7675.

Pantograph – An instrument to copy maps in increased or decreased proportions. A mechanism on which, at various points, a needle and a pencil are mounted. The needle follows the shape of the object, the contours of which are drawn by the pencil. The desired proportion was achieved by the lengths of the articulated shafts. The instrument was invented by Kristóf (Christopher) Scheiner, a Hungarian Jesuit in the 17th century. His original instrument was improved later. – B: 1078, T: 7390.

Pap, Gábor (Gabiél) (Budapest, 7 May 1937 - ) – Art historian, researcher in Hungarology. His higher studies were at the University of Budapest, where he studied Hungarian Literature and Art History. In 1962 and 1963 he worked as an officer at the Fine Arts Foundation (Képzőművészeti Alap). From 1963 to 1972 he worked at the Hungarian Television (MTV) as a columnist, editor, reporter, scriptwriter, program director and a dramaturgist. Between 1973 and 1979 he was Deputy Editor-in-Chief for the periodical Art (Művészet). From 1979 and 1981 he was a news delivery man. From 1982 to 1987 he was chief librarian at Kiskunhalas, then a co-worker at the Culture Department of the City Hall. In the meantime, for two years, he managed the publishing work of the Széchenyi Cultural Center, Budapest. In 1987 and 1988 he was a deputy director of the Local Collection of Gödöllő. From 1989 he was a chief co-worker at the International Enamel Workshop of Kecskemét. In the summer seasons between 1973 and 1977, he was a teacher at the István (Stephen) Szőnyi Free School of Zebegény. Since 1974 he has been a lecturer at the University of Debrecen, at the Medical School of the University of Debrecen, at the Teacher Training College of Debrecen, and at Pécs, Szombathely, Zalaegerszeg, Kaposvár, Győr; from 1984 at the College of Polytechnic of Budapest, and at the Club Bercsényi. He also lectures at the Agrarian University of Gödöllő, at the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest, and at the King Louis Private University of Miskolc. Since 1993 he is a member of the Csúvas Academy of Sciences. His works include Nagy István–Nagy Balogh–Tornyai (1965); Inheritance of the Good Shepherds. Hungarian Folk Art (Jó pásztorok hagyatéka. Magyar népművészet) (1993); Finding the Way to Home (Hazatalálás) (1996); Star Falls, Earth Quakes... Attila Plays (Csillag esik, föld reng... Attila-színművek) (2002); Chapters from the History of the Holy Crown and of the Crown Research (Fejezetek a Szent Korona és a koronakutatás történetéből) (2004), and Confessions of the Attila Treasure... (Az Atilla-kincs vallomása...) (2010). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Pap, Géza (Kolozsvár now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 20 January 1954 - ) – Bishop of the Reformed Church in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). His early schooling was in Primary School No.3, followed by secondary schooling at the Apácai Csere János Lyceum, Kolozsvár, where he matriculated in 1973. He did military service for 9 months. From 1974 to 1978 he conducted his theological studies in the Protestant Theological Institute, Kolozsvár. He became Assistant Minister in Bucharest from 1979 to 1981. From 1981 to 1988 he was Parish Minister in Magyarkiskapus in the Kalotaszeg area (now Căpușu Mic, Romania, a Hungarian ethnic area south of Kolozsvár). From December 1988 he was elected Minister of the Reformed Parish in a municipal section of Kolozsvár. On 12 December 2000 the General Assembly of the Transylvanian Reformed Diocese (Erdélyi Egyházkerület) elected him Bishop. In 1995-1996 with a family scholarship, he did further theological studies in Kampen, Holland. His special field is Eschatology. In 1999, his studies appeared in a book, published in Budapest by Kálvin Publishers, entitled: Beware! Teachings on the Final Times (Vigyázzatok! Tanítás az utolsó időkről). – B: 0929, T: 7456.

Pap, Károly (1) (Charles) (Pollak) (Sopron, 24 September 1887 - Bergen-Belsen, after 31 January 1945) – Writer, novelist. He was born into a conservative rabbi family. He came into conflict with his family and broke away from them. After World War I, he participated in the Hungarian Red Army, and he was town-commander in Murakeresztúr as a lieutenant. After the fall of the Hungarian (Soviet) (Council) Republic, he was imprisoned for one and a half years. In 1923 he moved to Vienna. After his return to Hungary, he was a manual laborer, itinerant actor, and clerk. In 1925 he moved to Budapest. His writing career was assisted by Ernő (Ernest) Szép, Lajos (Louis) Mikes and Ernő (Ernest) Ováth. In 1926, he was a contributor to the Evening Newspapers (Estilapok) and the literary review West (Nyugat). In 1936 he was about to be awarded the Baumgarten Prize; but the presentation was prevented by the authorities. The themes of his writings were from the past and about the suffering of the Jews. In 1943 he was conscripted into a labor unit of the army. Later, he was deported to a German concentration camp where he perished. Earlier in his career, his works were characterized by the expectation of miracles and a messianic attitude; later, he scoured the hypocrisy of society and the cruelty of humans, and wrote about the social outcasts. Among his works are Mikháel, stories (1929); Azarel, novel (1937); Batséba (Bathsheba), drama (1940), and The Snow Statue (A hószobor), stories, selected with introduction by Dezső (Desider) Keresztúry (1954). – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7103. → Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Szép, Ernő; Osváth, Ernő; Keresztúry, Dezső.

Pap, Károly (2) (Charles) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj Napoca, Romania, 22 September 1910 - Debrecen, 20 August 1986) – Physician, surgeon, orthopedist and traumatologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Debrecen in 1928. From 1928 to 1934 he was a correspondent for the Institute of Anatomy there. Between 1934 and 1944, he was with the Surgical Clinic at the University of Debrecen. In 1937 he worked as a surgeon. He underwent examinations for orthopedic medical specialization and, in 1940, took an examination to become a traumatologist. In 1941 he became an honorary lecturer. In 1944 (because of wartime conditions) he organized a Red Cross Hospital in Debrecen for the casualties, which from 1945 on became part of its surgical clinic. He was a distinguished orthopedic doctor and traumatologist, who developed methods for nailing of the medullary cavity, the trochanter, etc. In 1960 his department was reorganized as a clinic and he became Professor and Dean of Department. In 1974 he established a rehabilitation center with thermal and quartz therapies. He was the author of several hundred published studies and books. His works include Orthopaedia (1961) and Pain in Orthopaedics and other Clinics (Editor, 1974). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.

Pap, László (Ladislas) (Szentés, 28 February 1908 - Budapest, 16 November 1983) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian. He studied Theology at Debrecen, Zürich and Utrecht, where he earned a Doctorate in 1933. He was Assistant Minister in Hajdúhadháza, then a teacher of religion in Budapest (1935-1938). He was Professor of Old Testament Studies at the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest (1938-1957), its Director (1948-1957), and chief Director of the Ráday Collection, from 1955. He was one of the office bearers of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and member of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches. He was one of the leaders of the Reformed Renewal Movement with Bishop László Ravasz, Endre Gyökössi and János Kardos in 1956. He participated in the new translation of the Bible. Due to political reasons, he was dismissed from his offices in 1957, and posted to the remote congregation of Murga, as Assistant Minister; he was sent into retirement in 1963. He was offered a Professorship at Utrecht University in 1957, which he accepted in 1958, but he did not get travel permission to leave Hungary. His articles and studies appeared in Hungarian, German and Dutch. His works include Das israelitische Neujahrfest, (Kampen, 1933); Az izraelita újév (Pápa, 1939); Das evangelisch-theologische Schrifttum in Ungarn (Halle/Saal, 1940); *Szentírásismeret I. Pápai-Páriz, Ferenc (Francis) (Dés, now Dej, Romania, 10 May 1649 - Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 10 September 1716) – Physician, scientist. He completed his studies at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania), Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, Romania) and at the College of Nagyenyed, after which he went abroad and, from 1672, he attended various universities; he studied Medicine at the University of Leipzig, and obtained his Doctorate in Philosophy from Heidelberg. He did not accept the teaching position that was offered to him there but, upon finishing his studies in Medicine, went to Basel, where he took his Medical Degree in 1674. He did not accept any positions as a physician, but became a teacher at the Nagyenyed College, at the request of the Reigning Prince Mihály Apafi, and taught there until his death. There he introduced the teaching of basic medical knowledge. Between 1703 and 1711, during the time of the Rákóczi II Freedom Fight against the Austrian army, he had to hide for extended periods, together with the alumni that survived. He obtained university scholarships abroad for his students, and collected large sums for the rebuilding of the college. His book, Pax Corporis (Peace of the Body), published in 1690, was the first original medical work in the Hungarian language. It summarized all the medical knowledge of his age. This opus exercised a great impression on medical sciences of the period. A valuable contribution is his Latin-Hungarian dictionary, as proof of his wide-ranging interests. A pioneering work is also his Ars heraldica, the first Hungarian work on heraldry. – B: 0883, 1257, 1730, T: 7675→Protestant School Dramas.

Pápai Szabó, György (George) (Szabó György) (Pápa, 16 May 1956 - ) – Minister of the Reformed Church, journalist, editor. Between 1980 and 1991 he was an associate and later, librarian of the Scientific Collection of Pápa of the Transdanubian Reformed Diocese, and a community council member there in 1990-1991. From 1988 to 1991 he was Parish Minister in Pápa-Tapolca; from 1989 to 1991 he was Editor of the municipal paper, Pápa News (Pápai Hírlap). From 1991, he was an associate and spokesman of the Bishop's Office of the Danubian Reformed Diocese, Budapest. From 1993 he was the founding editor of the papers Reformation (Reformáció) and Christian Education (Keresztyén Nevelés) until 2002. Since 2002, he has been Parish Minister in Velence. He also edited the book-series Reformation (Reformáció) from 1993 to the end of 2002, and edited the books of Bishop Dr. Loránt Hegedűs. From 1992 to 2003 he also took part as a referee in the editing of the Reformed programs of Hungarian Television (Magyar Televízió), e.g. in the programs Good News (Örömhír) and Guidebook (Útmutató), etc. Pápai Szabó György also edited other television films, e.g. the 2-hour long film on the life, past, present and future of Hungarians living in America; another film dealing with the history and effect of the 16th century Reformation in the Carpathian Basin, which was one of the competition films of the 39th Hungarian Film Review (Magyar Filmszemle), entitled: We Trusted in You.., (Tebenned bízunk...). On the Hungarian Radio he was Editor of the Reformed News Magazine and the Theological and Church-History series. In a series of articles and in a radio series, he featured the church confessors, who were executed or vilified in the Communist era. From 1995 to 1997 he was a spokesman of the Presidential Council of the Reformed General Synod, Budapest. His areas of research are: church history, literature, Protestant cultural history and research on Hungarian ancient history and origins, including the so-called Scythian-Hun-Avar-Magyar continuity. He is the author of hundreds of articles in church and lay-papers, journals and book-chapters. Since 2005, he has been Editor of the colorful monthly magazine Home Letter (Honlevél) of the World Federation of Hungarians (Magyarok Világszövetsége). He edited seven volumes of lectures, delivered at the VII World Congress of Hungarians in 2008, and the history of the only Hungarian- founded Monastic Order the Paulines (Pálosok), and the Trilogy (Trilógia) in 2009. He has been Editor of the Hungarian Studies series (Magyarságtudományi Füzetek), launched in 2010, featuring controversial and not yet explained issues of Hungarian history, e.g. on the true Hungarian origins. – B: 2173, T: 7456.→Hegedús, Loránt; World Federation of Hungarians.

Pápay, József (Joseph) (Nagyigmánd, 1 July 1873 - Debrecen, 9 June 1931) – Linguist. He received his higher qualification from the University of Budapest. From 1897 to 1899 he took part in the third Asiatic expedition of Count Jenő Zichy, as his interpreter. He studied the northern Ostyak's (Hanti people's) language in Tobolsk Province during 1898 and 1899, and the language of the Chuvash people in the Cheboksar District of the Kazan Province in Russia. Returning to Hungary, he worked for the National Széchényi Library from 1901 to 1908, and finally became Deputy Librarian. From 1908 until 1914 he was a teacher at the Reformed College in Debrecen, and from 1914 Professor of Hungarian and Finno-Ugric Linguistics at the University of Debrecen. He published a part of the heroic poems of the Ostyak (Hanti) collection of Antal Reguly, and decoded the rest of the texts, which remained unpublished. His works include On the Memory of Antal Reguly (Reguly Antal emlékezete) (1905); My Linguistic Study Trip in the Land of the Northern Ostyaks (Nyelvészeti tanulmányutam az északi osztjások földjén) (1905); Ostyak Folk Poetry Collection (Osztják Népköltési Gyűjtemény) (1905); The Problem of the Finno-Ugric Origin of our Language up to the Appearance of Sajnovics and Gyarmathy (Nyelvünk finnugor eredetének kérdése Sajnovics és Gyarmathy felléptéig) (1909); The Ostyak Heroic Poems of Reguly (A Reguly féle osztják hősi énekekről) (1913); The History of Hungarian Comparative Linguistics (A magyar nyelvhasznítás története) (1922), and Related Peoples and Languages (A rokonnépek és nyelvek) (1922). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1908, and an external member of the Finno-Ugric Society of Helsingfors. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Reguly, Antal.

Pápay, Sámuel (Felsőörs, 8 March 1770 - Pápa, 31 May 1827) – Philologist, literary historian, lawyer. He was the descendant of a noble family of the Reformed faith, from the predominantly Roman Catholic Transdanubia (western part of Hungary). As a youth, he decided to convert to Catholicism and, with the help of the Bishop of Eger, Károly Esterházy, furthered his studies in Pest. From 1791 to 1793 he studied Law in Eger; from 1793 he was a trainee lawyer of the Royal Court of Appeals and, in 1796, he took his final Law examination.. Thereafter, he went to Pápa and, in the same year, was appointed Teacher of Hungarian Language and Literature in the Archbishopal Lyceum of Eger. As a result of illness, he resigned from his position, returned to Pápa, and started working as a lawyer. For the planned establishment of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, he offered three years of his income, amounting to about 1000 silver forints. His works include The Knowledge of Hungarian Literature (A magyarliteratura esmérete) (1808), which represents the first systematic history of literature in the Hungarian language. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Papp, Dániel (Ómoravica, now Stara Moravica, Serbia, 11 February 1865 - Budapest, 14 August 1900) – Writer, journalist. He read Law at the University of Budapest. At the same time, he was a student for one year at the Greek Orthodox Seminary and, from 1891 he worked at a Notary Public office in Budapest. From 1893 he was a contributor to the paper Pest Diary (Pesti Napló), and later, the Budapest Napló (Budapest Diary) and, until 1898, to the National Newspaper (Országos Hírlap). From 1898 he worked as assistant Editor for the Parliament. His anticlerical letters appeared under the pen name “Daniel priest”. In his progressive novels and stories, he called Hungary the ”country of uncompleted liberal spirit”. In his writings, he provided a realistic picture of the life of people of Bácska and Bánát counties in Voivodina (now in Serbia; Bánát is partly in Romania, since the Trianon Peace Dictate in 1920). His works include The Peopple of Rátót (A rátótiak), novel (1898), Marcellusz, story (1889), Fairy Cottage in Hungary (Tündérlak Magyarországon) story (1899), and Music in the Night (Muzsika az éjszakában), selected writings, with an introduction by Miklós (Nicholas) Nagy (1957). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7103.

Papp, Károly (Charles) (szentkirályszabadjai Papp) (Tápióság, 4 November 1873 - Tápióság, 30 June 1963) – Geologist. His higher studies were at the Department of Natural History and Geography of the University of Budapest. At the invitation of the eminent geologist Lajos (Louis) Lóczy, from 1898, he was Assistant Professor in the Department of Geology of the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1899, he participated as a geologist in the Caucasian Expedition of Mór Déchy. From 1900 he worked at the Hungarian Royal Geological Institute (Magyar Királyi Földtani Intézet). Between 1900 and 1913 he made several trips abroad. He did pioneer work primarily in Transylvania, (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1907, with Lajos Lóczy, he discovered a huge earth-gas deposit at Kissármás (now Sáromáse in Romania). In 1917 he became a professor in the Department of Geology of the University of Budapest. In 1945 he was sent into retirement, and in 1949, he was stripped from his membership of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was the first Secretary of the Hungarian Geological Society (1909-1918), and the Editor for the Geological Journal (Földtani Közlöny). On several occasions he represented Hungary at International Geological Congresses. Among his works are: Iron Ore and Coal Deposits of the Hungarian Empire (A Magyar birodalom vasérc- és kőszénkészlete) (1916, in German 1921), and Geological Map of Hungary (Magyarország geológiai térképe), with Pál Teleki and Lajos Lóczy (in Földtani Szemle 1922, in German 1932). In Újpest (a suburb of Budapest) a street bears his name. – B: 1160, 1031, 1105, T: 7456, 7103. → Lóczy, Lajos; Déchy, Mór; Teleki, Count Pál.

Papp, Lajos (Louis) (Aranyosagárd, 21 March 1948 - ) – Heart surgeon. At the age of 3, his family was removed from their village and until 1957, they lived at Csurgó, Alsóleperd and Mágócs. In 1966, he worked as an underground haulage man at the Mecsek Ore Mine. He graduated from the Lajos Nagy High School of Pécs, and studied Medicine at the Medical School of the same University, and obtained an MD in 1973. Between 1973 and 1975, he worked at the City Hospital of Pécs. From 1973 and 1975, he worked as a trainee at the Clinic of Anesthesiology and Intensive Therapy of the Medical Faculty of the University. Between 1977 and 1991, he was an adjunct, later Assistan Professor at the Clinic of Heart Surgery of the Semmelweiss Medical University of Budapest. Thereafter until 1994, he was Director of and Professor at the Heart Surgery Clinic of the Imre Haynal Health Science University of Pécs. Simultaneously, he was Chief- Physician at the Heart Surgery Department of the County Zala Hospital. From 1997, he was Director of the No. 2 Surgical Clinic – the Heart Center of the Medical University of Pécs and the Order of St. John (Irgalmasok, i.e. Merciful, in Latin: Ordo S. Joannis a Deo, OSJD; Ordo Hospitalarius, OH). From 1999 he was Director of the Heart Clinic of the Medical School of the University of Science of Pécs. In 2008 he retired. He has been a member of a number of professional societies. Together with Zsolt Zétényi, they founded the Carpathian-Home National Guard in 2007. His books include Your Kingdom Come (Jöjjön el a te országod); Verbum Cordis –The Word of the Heart (Verbum Cordis – a szív szava); To the Hungarians (A Magyarokhoz), and Wonders and Tragedies in my Life (Csodák és tragédiák életemben). He is recipient a number of distinctions, including the Széchenyi Prize (2001), the Hungarian Heritage Prize (2003), the Prima Primissima Prize (2006), and the Pro Cultura Prize (2008). He received the Freedom of the District V of Budapest, and that of the City of Kaposvár. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Zétényi, Zsolt; Knights of Hospitaller, The.

Papp, László (1) (Ladislav) (Budapest, 25 March 1926 - Budapest, 16 October 2003) – Boxer. Despite a medical problem with his hand, he turned professional in 1957, and rose fast in the middleweight category. He was an Olympic Gold Medalist three times: in the 1948 Summer Olympic Games in London, the 1952 Summer Olympic Games in Helsinki, and the 1956 Summer Olympic Games in Melbourne. Since professional boxing was not permitted during the Communist regime in Hungary, he had to travel to Vienna for training and for his fights: he beat European middle-weights Tiger Jones and Chris Christensen. Later, he defeated Randy Sandy of the USA. He had to fight for his title in Vienna, where he became the crowd's favorite: out of 29 fights he won 27, with two draws. Among the professional boxers, he became European champion on 16 May 1962. In 1964, after Papp had already signed up for the World Championship title bout, the Communist Government of Hungary denied him an exit visa, thus bringing his professional boxing career to an end. He made a living by working as an assistant in the Archives of the Planning Bureau in the Ministry of Metallurgy and the Machine Industry. Papp had a lovable personality: unassuming, selfless, a true sportsman, known and addressed only by his Christian name and faithful to his fatherland. Papp was undefeated in the ring. His fighting record was 27 wins, 2 draws, and no losses. 15 of his wins were with knockouts. He was the greatest Hungarian boxer ever. He received a number of awards including the IOC Award (1982), the Belt of WBC (1989), the Silver Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1992), the International Fair Play Prize (1993), and the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1996). He was inducted into the International Boxing Hall of Fame in 2001. The new Sports Arena in Budapest bears his name. – B: 1031, 1105, 1783, T: 7456.

Papp, László (2) (Ladislav) (Debrecen, 28 April 1929 - ) – Architect. He studied at the Budapest Polytechnic, from where he graduated in 1955. After the fall of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he left Hungary and settled in the USA, where he continued his studies at the Pratt Institute, New York, in 1960. In 1957 he was a designer in Pittsburgh; later, in New York (1958-1963). He was co-owner of a design office in White Plains, N.Y. (1963-1966); its sole owner from 1967 to 1986. He was office-manager from 1987, and chairman of the City-Planning Committee of Stamford, Connecticut from 2001. His activity is wide-ranging, from designing new buildings to restoration of old ones. László Papp was planning-architect of the Hungarian Heritage Center in New Brunswick, New Jersey. He was involved in community affairs as well. He was President of the Alliance of Hungarian Societies (1960-1966); Head of the American Hungarian Engineers' Society (1977-1995); President of the Architects' Society in New York State in 1981; Chairman of the Association of American Architects (1981-1983); Board Member of the World Federation of Hungarians (1992-1996), and President of its Western Region (1996-2000). Papp was President of the American National Council (1993-1997). He was invited to be a member of the Hungarian Standing Conference (Magyar Állandó Értekezlet – MÁÉRT). He did much for bridge building between the parts of the fragmented Hungarian nation. He is the recipient of many prizes, including the George Washington Prize in 1998. – B: 1037, T: 7103.

Papp, Simon Kapnikbánya, now Cavnic, Romania, 14 December 1886 - Budapest, 27 July 1970) – Geologist, petroleum geologist and explorer of crude oil. He completed his university training in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he became an assistant professor at the Faculty of Minerals and Geology in 1909; then the same at the the Selmechbánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia) Mining and Forestry Academy from 1911. He took part in the very successful exploration of natural gas in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) between 1911 and 1913, and played an important role in the discovery of crude oil and natural gas at Egbell (Nyitra County, now in Slovakia), in 1914, as well as at Bujavica (Croatia) in 1918. He investigated, together with Ferenc Pápai-Vajna the anticlinal beds of Budafapuszta, which was considered to be far-reaching. He was active as Ministerial Counselor of Mining and Chief Geologist at the Ministry of Finance. Between 1915 and 1920, he did exploratory work, besides crude oil and natural gas, searching for other natural resources. He went abroad in 1920 and, as an employee of the British-Persian Oil Company Ltd., conducted exploratory work in several countries; then, enriched by his experiences, he returned home to search for crude oil and natural gas.

Papp's finding at Budafapuszta was the first known presence of crude and natural gas on an industrial scale. With this, Hungary entered the circle of oil producing countries. He created and founded the crude oil industry. Then the Hungarian-American Oilproducing Ltd. (MAORT) was founded, and he became its chief executive officer until 1947. He made another important exploration near Lovászi in 1940. He conducted searches for natural gas in northern Transylvania between 1941 and 1944, when this part of Transylvania was returned to Hungary as a result of the Second Vienna Award. He became professor in the Faculty of Oil Exploration and Production at the University of Sopron (1944-1948). He became an ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1946.

At the time of nationalization of the oil industry (1950), Papp was sentenced to death as being the main defendant of the MAORT-case, based on fabricated evidence. Because of his expertise in oil exploration, he was indispensable, so his sentence was commuted to a life term. He directed the operation of the Hungarian Oil Industry out of prison until 3 June 1955, when he was released, and he kept working for the Crude Oil Trust until his retirement in 1962. He was a pioneer not only in the oil industry, but also in the area of university education; he was the first instructor on Petroleum Geology. His book is entitled: My Life (Életem) (1996). – B: 1230, 1020, 7456; T: 7456, 7675.→Vienna Award II; MAORT Affair.

Papp-Váry, Mrs. Elemér (née Szeréna Sziklay) (Rozsnyó, now Rožňava, Slovakia, 18 April 1881 - Budapest, 15 November 1923) – Poetess and wife of General Elemér Papp-Váry. Several volumes of her poetry were published during the First World War (1914-1918). She was active in the Hungarian Irredentist Movement. Her name became known nationwide when she won the competition run by the League of Defense Alliance with her poem, entitled: Creed (Hitvallás), the first three lines of which became the National Creed (Nemzeti Hiszekegy): I believe in One God; I believe in One Patria; I believe in One Eternal Truth; I believe in the Resurrection of Hungary! Amen (Hiszek egy Istenben, hiszek egy Hazában; Hiszek egy istenti örök igazságban!; Hiszek Magyarország feltámadásában! Amen). Paraguay Hungarians in – Hungarian immigrants arrived in Paraguay sporadically and in small groups at first. The first officially registered Hungarian name belonged to the Hertelendy family, who arrived following the collapse of the 1848-1849 War of Independence. Before coming to Paraguay, they founded a settlement in Argentina and named it Clorinda after the wife. In time it developed into a city. They also bought large estates in Argentina and Paraguay. In 1866, the young Imre (Emeric) Domaniczky left Argentina for health reasons and settled down in Paraguay. His family name survived. A few families arrived after World War I (1914-1918). They were mostly farmers and craftsmen who tried to forge closer ties in the 1930s among the members of the Hungarian colony. Around 1934, István (Stephen) Bacsó founded the Hungarian Cultural Society of Paraguay. Not having their own headquarters, they held their meetings at the homes of their members. With the newly arrived immigrants following World War II (1939-1945), 26 families made up the Hungarian colony. These Hungarians were highly educated. They had a lively social life, staged plays, and observed the Hungarian National Days. The oldest and best-known member of the colony was a painter, Adam Kunos, Professor at the University of Asuncion. He encouraged the establishment of a Hungarian School in Yukiti for the natives, as a gift of the colony. The Street in front of it is called Avenida Hungria. Kálmán (Coloman) Poka designed and oversaw the construction of several state and religious buildings. Béla Benkovics founded an international transport company, while István (Stephen) Daróczy was the founder of the first dairy farm. Zsolt Baráth's name was among the best car racers of the country. The first freely elected President of the Republic was Carlos Vamosy, whose origin is Hungarian. The Hungarian colony's highest number was about 40 families. In time, many went to other countries. By 1990, there were only 8-10 families having at least one Hungarian member. The children were assimilated by the local communities and they hardly speak Hungarian anymore. – B: 0906, 1020, T: 3240.

Paraguay, National Anthem of – Debaly, Ferenc József (Francisco Jose Debali) (Kinnen, now Romania, 26 July 1791 - Montevideo, 13 January 1859) – Composer. He was the composer of the National Anthem of Uruguay and, possibly, Paraguay. He composed the music in 1845, to the lyric of the Uruguayan poet, Francisco Acuna de Figueroa (1790-1862). However, Fernando Quijano, his assistant, was credited for the music, since he had submitted the work to the Selecting Committee. Debaly was not credited due to his difficulty with the Spanish language. Debály, a musician, left Hungary for Italy in 1829. He established a family there and had several children, some of whom were born in Uruguay. After a short stay at Sao Paulo, Brazil, they arrived in Uruguay in 1838. Here, he was the Director of the orchestra at the Sala de Comedias in Montevideo from 1841 to 1848. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Parancs, János (John) (Pusztavacs, 30 August 1937 - Budapest, 24 October 1999) – Poet, literary translator. He graduated from a high school in Budapest in 1955, and spent a year in the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1956 he lived in Paris, and studied Mathematics and French Literature at the University of Paris (Sorbonne). He was one of the founders and Editor for the Hungarian Workshop (Magyar Műhely) (1962-1964). In 1964 he returned to Hungary and worked at the Ministry of Culture; from 1966, at the Petőfi Museum and, from 1975, at the Magvető Publishing House (Magvető Könyvkiadó). He worked as Chief Contributor for the Roman Catholic weekly New Man (Új Ember). For a short time he was under the influence of French avant-gardism in Paris. In his poems, he appears as a moralist, as well as a satirist, interested in great and everyday things of life. His works include Semi-Dream (Félálom) poems (1963); In Deep Water (Mélyvízben) poems (1970); The Passing of Time (Az idő vonulása) poems (1980); The Abyss of Everyday Life (A köznapi élet szakadéka), poems, translation of selected poems of Benjamin Péret (1988), and In the Depth of the Labyrinth. Poems 1989-1992 (A labirintus mélyén. Versek 1989-1992) (1994). He received a number of awards, among them the Attila József Prize (1990), Artisjus Literary Prize (shared, 1993), and the Small Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1997) – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7103.

Paris Peace Treaty 1947 – The Peace Treaty after the Second World War (1939-1945) signed in the Luxembourg Palace in Paris on 10 February 1947, after the representatives from the main Allied powers – the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union, and France – drew up peace agreements, between 9 July and 19 October 1946, with Finland, Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, and Italy, and it was finalized by the Council of Foreign Ministers in New York between 4 November and 12 December 1946. In general: each country was required to pay reparations to the Allies, and most had to accept the loss of some territory to neighboring states. All of them had to promise to guarantee “the enjoyment of human rights and of the fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, of press and publication, of religious worship, of political opinion and of public meeting”. Furthermore, they pledged to fight against any resurgence of fascism within their countries; furthermore, they were deemed eligible for membership in the United Nations.

As to Hungary, the Treaty nullified territorial and population gains of the Vienna Awards (1938, 1940) and restored the 1 January 1938 borders of Hungary and, in addition, it awarded three ethnically Hungarian villages: Dunacsány, Horvátújfalu and Oroszvár, on the right bank of the Danube, to the re-created Czechoslovakia. Romania was awarded Northern Transylvania, and part of the Banat region, and Yugoslavia the Backa (Bácska) region, and part of the Banat region; Carpathian-Ukraine (Kárpátalja) was handed over to the Soviet Union by the Czechoslovaks. The Treaty obliged Hungary to pay 200 million US dollars, in 1938 value, to the Soviet Union, 30 million dollars to Czechoslovakia, and 70 million dollars to Yugoslavia as war indemnity. The Peace Treaty limited the size of the Hungarian armed force to 65,000, including the army, the frontier guards and the Danube flotilla; it also limited air force development. The Hungarian prisoners of war were to be returned on the basis of agreements made with individual Allied Powers. While the treaty stated that, within 90 days, all Allied troops were to be withdrawn from Hungary, it allowed the Soviet Union to maintain such troops that it deemed necessary to provide communication with its forces in Soviet occupied Austria. However, the Soviet troops remained in Hungary after the Soviet forces were withdrawn from Austria in 1955, and from Romania in 1958. Strong Soviet forces remained “temporarily” in Hungary until 1991. Hungary was under Soviet occupation and Communist rule until that date.

As a result of the Paris Peace Treaty, 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians with 2/3rd of the area of Historic Hungary in the Carpathian Basin again fell under the rule of hostile neighbor countries (the so-called successor states) with different culture, history, language and values. Indeed, it was a harsher copy of the Trianon-Versailles Peace Treaty of 1920 – with the vengefulness exhibited by the re-occupiers: 50-60 thousand fell victim in Serbia and Carpathian-Ukraine, 160 thousand in Slovakia, and 10 thousand in Romania. Hungary was mutilated again, despite the fact that the Vienna Awards were internationally recognized and guaranteed by the interested parties and, at that time, Hungary was not yet involved in World War II. Both Vienna Awards rightfully returned to Hungary some lost territories with ethnic Hungarian majority. Neither the signatory nor the non-signatory states protested against the Vienna Awards when they were signed.

As early as 1943, the USA prepared various plans for a treaty with Hungary after World War II, including plans for leaving certain overwhelmingly Hungarian-inhabited territories of Transylvania along the border with Hungary, or at least giving autonomous status to the Szekler-land within Romania, or the declaration of an independent statehood for Transylvania. All these plans had fallen through because Hungary was occupied by the Soviet Union and, in practice, Stalin, was in a strong position dictating his peace-terms.

The Soviets’ harsh peace plan for Hungary was the result mainly of the following considerations: (1) Stalin knew that in 1919, there was a short-lived Communist regime in power in Hungary lasting only 133 days, the Council (Soviet) Republic. Due to its terror-reign, Hungarians received first-hand experience about the true nature of Communism. (2) Stalin knew that the same was again waiting for the Hungarians. (3) Stalin also knew that, in Central-Europe, Hungary was the only historical state-forming nation for 1000 years, which had always fought for its independence. (4) The Soviets also knew that Hungarians do not tolerate foreign powers and systems over them. (5) Stalin was firmly determined to create a Communist dictatorship in Hungary, which would lead to fierce opposition. Therefore, Hungary required special attention and handling. (6) All these factors led the creators of Pax Sovietica carry out their intention to make Hungary small, poor and powerless again. (7) In the Treaty of Paris, Hungary fell victim to the Soviet expansionist strategy for world domination.

However, by the Paris Peace Treaty, the Soviets could not make Hungary small, poor and powerless enough so that in 1956, the Hungarians, according to their national tradition, would not rise up against their oppressors, would not win 12 days of freedom and would expose the Soviet system’s oppressive nature. Nonetheless, the Paris Peace Treaty was signed by a Hungary under Soviet military occupation and political domination, and its very validity is questionable under International Law. – B: 1031, 1230, 1231, 0801, 1802, 1803, T: 7665, 7691, 7103.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Trianon Peace Treaty 1920; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II; Atrocities against Hungarians; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Parliament Building (Országház) –

The seat of the National Assembly of Hungary. It is probably the most notable building in Budapest; designed and built by Imre (Emeric) Steindl for the millennium celebration of 1896, completed in 1902. The Neo-Gothic style building lies in the Lajos Kossuth Square on the left bank of the Danube; built on a 260x118 m area. Its height is 96 m. This symbolic building of the Hungarian state is decorated with statues of the historic figures of Hungary, including all the kings, leaders of the first seven original tribes, who settled the Carpathian Basin in AD 896, and other great military heroes. The building comprises 10 courtyards and 29 staircases, 691 rooms, immense halls, and over 12.5 miles of corridors. It has a central dome where the Holy Crown of St István (St. Stephen) (997-1038) the founding king of Hungary, has been exhibited since 2000. – B: 1805, 1031, 1020, T: 7656, 7103.

Parmenius, István of Buda (Stephen) (Budai Parmenius) (Buda, around 1555 - Newfoundland, Canada, 29 August 1583) – Scientist and poet. His original name might have been István Pajzs or Paizs; the Latinized version was Stephanus Parmenius Budeius. He tells about himself only in one of his poems: that he was born in Buda, which was under Turkish occupation at the time. Presumably, his Protestant parents were well off, they sent the young man to Wittenberg University to study in 1579. He arrived in Oxford in 1581, where he made the acquaintance of the English geographer, Richard Hakluyt and many other famous scientists and world travelers, among them Sir Gilbert Humphrey (1539-1583). Admiral Sir Gilbert was a favorite of Queen Elizabeth I, who entrusted him with a second voyage to found and claim potential colonies in the New World. The fleet, consisting of four ships, started off on 11 June 1583, and arrived in the bay of one of Newfoundland's islands, (today Conception Bay, St John's) on 3 August 1583. Two days later, Admiral Gilbert Humphrey took possession of the "newly found land" (Newfoundland) in a ceremony. Historians call this incident a milestone, because this was the beginning of British colonization, which eventually led to formation of a world empire. One of the participants in the fleet was the chronicler of the fleet, a Hungarian, István Parmenius, who was already enjoying the great scientific respect in English scholastic circles. Unfortunately, on the way back to England, he perished on the high seas, and with him perished his notes about the journey, which he intended to publish. From the fleet of four only one ship returned. In 1589, Hakluyt published his book on the expedition under the title: The Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffics and Discoveries of the English Nation. In it he writes: "...among the drowned was a learned man, a Hungarian, born in Buda town, who was called (Istvan) of Buda".. Parmenius' three writings are extant. He was the first Hungarian to step on the ground of North America, and the first Hungarian poet to write a poem about Canada. His commemorative plaque was unveiled at the Lorántffy Home, Akron, on 15 June 1983. – B: 1614, 1020, 1257, T:

Páros, György (George) (Tamási, 28 April 1910 - Budapest 17 December 1975) – Composer of theory and chess-problems and international Grandmaster. He earned degrees in Law and Political Science at the University of Budapest. Afterward, he was a bank clerk, branch manager and, later, Assistant Director. He was in a “free check-mate” form. During his 50-year chess career, he was placed first more than 100 times at local and international tournaments in chess problems. Between 1945 and 1975, on the 10 Hungarian chess-problem–proposing championships, he won first place as a composer. He was President of the Committee for Chess Problem Propounders. – B: 0883, T: 7675.

Pártay, Lilla (Budapest, 25 October 1941 - ) – Dancer and choreographer. She studied ballet in Ferenc Nádasi’s class at the State Ballet Institute between 1954 and 1961. Since 1961, she has been a member of the Opera House, Budapest; from 1971 she was a solo dancer. From 1987 to 1991, she was leader of the ballet ensemble of the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest. Her work as a choreographer first started to unfold toward the last years of her career. In her early period, she choreographed ballets of smaller format, in the neo-classical idiom; later, she took her first two-act choreography to the level of the Opera House ensemble. As a ballerina, the molding of her roles is characterized by a high degree of musicality and dramatic power of expression, and she makes good use of these artistic virtues, both in the one-act pieces and in her two-act dance dramas. Her roles include Odette-Odilia in Messzerer’s Swan Lake (A Hattyúk tava); Flavia in L. Seregi’s Spartacus, and Girl in Harangozó-Seregi-Milloss’s The Miraculous Mandarin (A csodálatos mandarin). Her choreographies include Forgotten Waltzes (Elfelejtett keringők) (1986), and Anna Karenina (1991). She earned the Bronze Medal at the International Ballet Competition at Varna (1968); she also received the Franz Liszt Prize in 1972, the title of Artist of Merit (1977), and the title of Outstanding Artist (1981). – B: 1445, 1797, T: 7456.

Parthia – An ancient middle-eastern country, the home of the Parthians, who, in their early history paid taxes to the Assyrians, the Medes and the Persians. Their area in northeastern Iran roughly corresponded to the modern Iranian province of Khurasan: a mountainous region alternating with fertile valleys, lying south of Hyrcania. Their Empire was established around 250 BC, when the Parthians, led by a talented soldier, Arsaces (Ashk), and his brother, Tiridates, defeated the Seleucids and became independent, making Arsaces I, their first king. It was bordered by Hyrcania in the north, by Aria and Margiana in the east, by the Carmanian desert in the south, and by Medea in the west. It covered the greater part of modern Iran. It was subjugated by Alexander the Great but, after his death in 323 BC, the Seleucid Dynasty ruled this region and Parthia became a province under the rule of a satrap or governor. In due course, the Parthians exploited the slow decline of the Seleucid rule and, finally, Mithridates captured the Seleucid monarch Demetrius Nicator II in 139 BC, and also occupied Mesopotamia and Media in 141 BC. Their power was at its highest under King Mithridates the Great (171-138 BC); their empire stretched from the Euphrates across Afghanistan, as far as the Indus and Oxus Rivers. They not only united 18 kingdoms between the Caspian and Arab Seas, but challenged Rome for domination in the East. Between the two empires, the Euphrates River was the borderline. The capital of Parthia was Ctesiphon. According to Ptolemy, Parthia had 25 large cities; the largest was Hecatompylos, which had 100 gates;

Dura (Europos) was on the banks of the Euphrates River, the city of Seleucia was on the Tigris, and Ecbatana, famous for its royal treasury, was at the foot of Mount Elvend. The Parthians defeated Marcus Licinius Crassus in 53 BC, and threatened Syria and Asia Minor, but they were turned back by Ventidius in 39-38 BC. The country, however, was troubled from time to time by the Scythians of the north. The end of this long-lasting empire came in 224 AD, when the last king was defeated (in a coup d'état) by one of the empire's vassals, the Persians of the Sassanid dynasty, under Ardashir I (Artaxerxes); however, the demise of Parthia was not caused by internal decadence and political anarchy, as a forged chronicle ("Arbela Chronicle" of A. Mingana) attempted to establish. - B: 1153, 1020, 1031, 1068, 1788, 1789, T: 3240, 7456. → Parthians.

Parthians – a Scythian ruler folk, who ruled the Persians. They originated from the Caspian Sea area. Originally a tribe of the horseriding nomadic tribe, living from hunting, later called Parthians. Around 250 BC, Arsaces I (Ashk) established the Parthian Kingdom from the ashes of the Hellenic Monarchy. Chorenei and Sebeos wrote of them: "in the 14th year of the reign of the Seleucid Antiochus, the Parthians shook off the Macedonian yoke and the son of the Ephtalite (White Hun) ruler, Arsac, became their king, and soon all peoples of Asia, the East and North surrendered to him". The five separate tribes were made up of 25 families. One family had to contribute 400 horsemen and the 25 families produced an army of 10,000 horsemen. At first they conquered Iran; and in 141 BC they defeated Mesopotamia. According to the chronicles, these 10,000 horsemen, under the command of Surena, successfully battled the 40,000 Roman legionaries of Crassus in 53 BC. Parthians were famous for their imposing architecture: palace buildings, such as the palace of Hatra, also halls, gates, temples and government buildings.

The Parthians were excellent horsemen and archers. Their arms consisted of a bow, arrow, lance, and double-edged sword, stick and shield. Their horsemen feigned retreat, and shot their arrows unexpectedly backwards, the so-called "Parthian shot", while feigning retreat. The Parthian nobleman's large fancy belt hangs low over his loins as pictured in the Illustrated Chronicle. Their highest god was identified with Hercules as their powerful ancestral god. At the beginning levirate was practiced, which was later replaced by seniority as the legal custom of inheritance. The introduction of this new custom of inheritance created internal power struggles, leading to their eventual demise. In the end the Sassanids of South Iran defeated their empire. Eventually they became absorbed in the population of the neighboring region. – B: 1153, 1020, 1031, 1582; T: 3240. → Parthia; White Huns; Scythians.

Parti Nagy, Lajos (Louis) (pen name: Jolán Sárbogárdi) (Szekszárd, 12 October 1953 - ) – Writer. His higher study was done at the Teachers' College of Pécs, where he studied Hungarian Literature and History (1973-1977). Initially, he worked as a librarian at the Baranya County Library (1977-1979); then he was Editor for the periodical, Our Age (Jelenkor) (1979-1986). In 1987 he was on a Zsigmond Móricz scholarship. He was a freelance writer from 1989 to 1993. He worked as a contributor for the Hungarian Diary (Magyar napló) (1991-1993) His works include poems Angel-stop (Angyalstop) (1982); Wrist-exercise (Csuklógyakorlat) (1986); Soda-riding (Szódalovaglás) (1990); Evening-chalk (Esti kréta) (1995), and Europink (1989). His plays are Ibusár – Mausóleum, (1999). His novels: Neither Drums nor Trumpets (Se dobok, se trombiták) (1993) Billowy Lake Balaton (Hullámzó Balaton) (1994); Body's Angel (A test angyala) (1990,1997), and My Hero's Square (Hősöm tere) (2000). He is a celebrated writer, and a recipient of a number of awards, including the Bölöny Prize (1983), the Déry Prize (1990), Graves Prize (1991), the Attila József Prize (1992), the Artisjus Prize (1995), the Kelemen Mikes Prize (1996), the Republic Laureate Prize (1996), and the Alföld Prize (1997).. – B: 0874, 0878, 1105, 1257, T: 7103.

Partium – The westernmost strip of present-day Romania, along the eastern edge of the Great Hungarian Plain. It is made up of the former Counties of Zaránd, Central Szolnok, Kraszna and the environs of Kővár in County Szatmár. This strip of land became part of the domain of the Transylvanian princes, achieved without any legislation, agreement or negotiation in the 16th and 17th centuries. They possessed these areas not as Princes of Transylvania, but as the lords of parts of Hungary in such a way that, after their death, they would be automatically returned and placed under the power of the Hungarian King, as annexed parts. The re-annexation did take place in 1693. However, a governmental decree of 1733 once again detached these parts from Hungary. Numerous laws provided for their re-annexation to Hungary, but it took place in a finalized form only in the Act of 1877: I. The extent of its territory has changed from time to time during history. After World War I, the Versailles-Trianon Dictated Peace Treaty split historic Partium: 60 % of it was ceded to Romania, 20 % remained in Hungary, and 20 % went to Czechoslovakia. The latter part is now under Ukrainian authority. – B: 1068, 1031, T: 7456. → Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Pártos, Géza (Budapest, 6 January 1917 - Budapest, 30 August 2003) – Stage manager, director. He studied dancing in the Hungarian Ballet Studio of Aurél Milloss. He started his career with the Independent Stage (Független Színpad) in 1938, and later became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest (1945-1949). From 1949 to 1959 he staged plays at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház). He was Stage Manager at the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) for two seasons. Between 1947 and 1969 he taught acting at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and he was again Stage Manager (1961-1969) at the Madách Theater. In 1969, he went to London where, from 1971, he gave lectures at the Guildhall College of the Royal Shakespeare Company; later, he taught final-year opera singers in the Drama Faculty of the University of Manchester. In 1975 he settled in Israel, where he taught in the School of Dramatic Art, Tel Aviv, and managed a studio for training actors. He returned to Hungary in 1996. His stage-management was characterized by serious treatment of parts and detailed execution. He supported contemporary Hungarian drama. To him, it was more important to have action, mimics and formulation of thoughts, than spectacles on the stage. His staging includes: Zs. Móricz' Relatives; Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra; I. Sarkadi's Lost Paradise; M. Füst's Henry IV, and F. Karinthy's Bösendorfer. In 1969, he was honored with the title Artist of Merit. – B: 1105, 1445, T: 7456.

Pártos, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 1 March 1903 - Amsterdam, 4 February 1920) – Violin virtuoso. He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under the direction of Jenő (Eugene) Hubay. Already, while still a student, he performed with great success in Berlin and Leipzig in Germany, and later, in Denmark, Holland and Sweden. With his highly developed musicality and a deep sense of poetic interpretation, he attracted attention. The Hungarian violin culture lost one of its greatest hopes in a road accident. – B: 1197, 1160, T: 7684. → Hubay, Jenő.

Partridge, Gray, Hungarian (fogoly madár) (Perdix perdix) – Originally it is a Eurasian bird species. Since it came from Hungary, it has the name: Hungarian Partridge or Hun. It is a rotund bird, 28-32 cm long, brown-backed, with gray flanks and chest. The belly is white, usually marked with a large chestnut-brown horseshoe mark, mainly in males, but also in many females. The bird, like the bobwhite quail, forms coveys from early fall through winter. The Gray Partridge is important in the game-bird category. In 1905 the Gray Partridge was introduced into Palo Alto County of Iowa, where it proliferated and now can be found in many parts of the USA and in Canada, particularly in the prairies. – B: 1031, 1785, T: 7103.

He read Law at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). His career started as a journalist in 1949; he was a contributor to newspapers in Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania), Bucharest and Kolozsvár. In 1957 he was imprisoned for political reasons. From 1963 he worked as a manual laborer in a book warehouse, and as a bibliographer. From 1971 to 1973 he was Chief Lecturer at the Kriterion Publishing House, Bucharest. He moved from Romania to Hungary in 1974, and worked as a columnist for the literary periodical, Contemporary (Kortárs). He belongs to the first generation of Source (Forrás), a group of Hungarian writers in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He was strongly attached to the Hungarian language and culture and, in his writings, he even attempted new forms. His heroes stand unarmed against fate. His works include the Grade of Fire (Tűz foka) poems (1972); Plays (Színművek) (1974, 1975, 1985); Piano Sawed in Two (A kettéfűrészelt zongora) drama (1976); The Hideout (A rejtekhely) drama (1977); Transylvanian Triptychon (Erdélyi tryptichon) dramas (1984); The Cursed (Az átkozottak) drama (1984); The Great Dilettantissimo, New Poems (A nagy dilettantissimo, Új versek) (1973-1985), and The Joy-spoiling Angel (Az örömrontó angyal), selected writings (1995). He received a number of awards, including the Attila József Prize (1977), the Kossuth Prize (1993) and the Ernő Szép Award (posthumous, 1996) – B: 1257, 0878, 1445, T: 7103.

Pasternak, Joe (József) (Szilágysomlyó, now Simleu Silvaniei, Romania, 19 September 1901 - Hollywood, California, USA, 13 September 1991) – Film producer. He was born into a Jewish family in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He moved to America as a teenager. He was interested in show business and worked at menial jobs at the Paramount Studios, absorbing the know-how of filmmaking. He obtained a job as Second Assistant Director at Paramount in 1923; within three years, he was Manager of Universal Studio's Berlin operation. In the early 1930s, he became famous by producing German, Austrian and Hungarian musicals. He returned to the USA and reorganized the near-bankrupt new Universal Studios. He rescued it by producing the Three Smart Girls (1936), which was an enormous hit with the young Deanna Durbin. Later, he moved to the Metro Goldwin Mayer Co. He created lavish escapist musicals for wartime audiences in old operetta style. He remained at MGM until his retirement in 1968, shortly after producing three of Elvis Presley's best musicals, including the famous Girl Happy. He worked with such stars as Danielle Darieux, Marlene Dietrich, Judy Garland, Mario Lanza and Gene Kelly. He created 105 feature films within forty years, among them: Scandal in Budapest (1933); First Love (1939); Little Bit of Heaven (1940); Thousand Cheers (1943); Holiday in Mexico (1946); Luxury Liner (1958); Where are the Boys? (1960); the Ticklish Affairs (1963), and the Sweet Ride (1968). – B: 1037, 1051, T: 7103.

Pasteurization – On 16 October 1862, chemist Mór Preys demonstrated the pasteurization process in Hungary, at the Association of the Hegyalja Viticulturists. This took place 3 years prior to the discovery by Pasteur, after whom the process was named. – B: 1230, 12260, T: 7675.

Passuth, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 15 July 1900 - Balatonfüred 19 June 1979) – Writer, translator. He studied at the Universities of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and Szeged. He moved to Budapest in 1919. Between 1920 and 1950 he worked as a bank-clerk, between 1950 and 1960 he was a technical translator at the National Translation Agency. He began his writing career in the mid-1920s, with travelogues, historical essays and translations. His articles were published in the literary review, West (Nyugat), the Beautiful Word (Szép Szó), the Hungarian Review (Magyar Szemle), the journals Present Age (Jelenkor), and in the Answer (Válasz). In 1937 he published a volume of essays and studies entitled: Esztergom Symposium. In his novels, time and again, he wrote about the research of historical times and about the strange lives of art historians and archaeologists absorbed in the past, but his reputation as a writer was won primarily by his historical novels. Among these, the first and at the same time most successful was Rain-God Cries for Mexico (Esőisten siratja Mexikót) (1939), then Johanna of Naples (Nápolyi Johanna) (1940), and Rome was Buried in Ravenna (Ravennában temették Rómát) (1963). The strength of his historical novels was that the author set the events in broad perspective, often encompassing the connections throughout the whole of Europe. His works on Hungarian themes include In the Clutches of the Eagle (Sasnak körmei között) (1956), which is about Ilona Zrinyi; and the Four Winds in Transylvania (Négy szél Erdélyben) (1957), about Prince István (Stephen) Báthori. His biographical novels, written about great figures of universal culture stand out, for example: Johanna of Naples (Nápolyi Johanna); The Purple-born (A biborban született) about Byzantine Emperor Constantine VII; The Musician of the Prince of Mantua (A mantuai herceg muzsikusa) (1957), about Monteverdi; The Gods are Shivering in a Golden Haze (Aranyködben fáznak az Istenek) (1964) about Raphael; and Medusa-Head (Medúzafej) (1979) about Caravaggio. Quite a few of his works were translated and published in several languages. He also translated and published Greek, German, Italian, Portuguese and Spanish fine literature and cultural history. Between 1937 and 1983, he had 36 books published. In 1948 he was expelled from the Literary Association; therefore he could only publish articles and translations until 1956 under a pseudonym. He was the General Secretary of the Hungarian Pen Club until 1960. A High School in Budapest and Street in Balatonfüred were named after him. – B: 0877, 1150, 1138, 1153, 1257, T: 7659, 7456.

Pásztó Abbey – The town of Pásztó is on the banks of the River Zagyva, which runs between the Cserhát and the Mátra Mountains. The area has been inhabited since the Ice Age, a fact demonstrated by the flint-flake tools that can be collected in the surrounding arable lands and by the so-called “serfs' mammoth cemetery”. Pásztó has long been a Catholic ecclesiastical center. The earliest written record of the local Benedictine Abbey dates from 1138. The Cistercians took over the buildings from the Benedictines in 1190, and expanded both the church and the monastery. The Turks killed every member of the Abbey in 1544. King József II (Joseph, 1780-1790), dissolved the Order, but King Ferenc (Francis) I, re-established it on 25 June 1802. Under Communist rule, the Order was again disbanded in 1950; however, in 1989, it had been re-established. The excavated and conserved remnants of the medieval settlement center can be seen around the current Parish church. There has been a chapel, a monastery, a smithy, and even a glassworks in the surrounding area.. – B: 1078, 1340, T: 7103.

Pásztor, Árpád (Ungvár, now Uzhhorod, Carpathian-Ukraine, 12 April 1877 - Budapest, 26 October 1940) – Writer, journalist. He read Law at the University of Budapest; then he embarked on a journalistic career. He became a correspondent for the paper Pester Journal (Pesti Napló) (1898-1899), then in 1900, for the Hungary (Magyarország), from 1902 to 1904 for the Budapest Journal (Budapesti Napló), and from 1910 to 1921 for The Evening (Az Est). Early in his career he expressed socialist aspirations. He wrote the first poem on Lenin but, during the four months of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, he published a novel attacking the Communist rule of terror. He published several volumes of poetry, novels and travelogues dealing with his overseas travels. He wrote and translated a number of stage works and operetta scripts. His works include From Budapest to Around the World (Budapesttől a föld körül) (1911); My Meeting with Edgar A. Poe (Találkozásom Poe A. Edgarral) (1916); Tragedy of Tolstoy (Tolsztoj tragédiája) (1925), and Fatal Circle (Végzetes kör) novel (1931). Pásztor was one of the creators of Hungarian report literature. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Pásztor, János (John) (Gyoma, 29 January 1881 - Budapest, 7 January 1945) – Sculptor. He was a student of Lajos Mátrai at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest. He was on a scholarship in France in 1903, and studied at the Julian Academy in Paris. He returned to Hungary and settled down in Hódmezővásárhely in 1905, where he created the Farewell (Búcsúzkodás) statue. He moved to Budapest in 1910. Here he created a major work: two additional figures to the Vásárhelyi Memorial. He sculptured female nudes, such as The Expelled (Elűzött) and Primavera, and portraits such as Beethoven and Munkácsy. Between 1930 and 1940, he produced several memorial works including Gvadányi, Csokonai, Károly Bartha. An outstanding work of this period is the gently modeled female figure of the Kazinczy Memorial (at the Bécsi Kapu tér, Budapest). Instead of a baroque approach of academic memorials, classicism characterizes the equestrian statue of Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II (Kossuth Plaza, Budapest). János Pásztor was killed in a bombing raid during the siege of Budapest in World War II. He was an excellent representative of academism. He was awarded the Small Gold Medal of the State (1920), the Gold Medal (1922) and the Gold Medal of the World Exhibition in Barcelona (1929). – B: 1124, 0883, T: 7103. → Tornyai, János.

Pásztor, János Dezső (John Desider) (Budapest, 28 May 1925 - Budapest, 22 April 2007) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian and missionary. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest, (1943-1947), Philosophy at the University of Budapest (1945-1947), Theology at the University of Edinburgh (1947-1948), at the University of Manchester (1948-1949), and at the Princeton Theological Seminary (1964-1965). He was Assistant Minister in the Calvin Square Church, Budapest (1950-1952); Parish Minister in Szentendre (1952-1970). He was a tutor at St Paul's United Theological College, Limuru, Kenya (1970-1976); Professor at the Reformed Theological Academy, Debrecen (1976-1987); Guest Professor at the Columbia Theological Seminary, Georgia, USA in 1987; Professor at the Reformed Theological Academy, Debrecen in 1988, and guest professor at the University of Vienna, Austria (1990-1991). János Pásztor was a professor at the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest (1988-1998) and, from 1993 at the Theological Faculty of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University. Besides several articles and essays, he authored books, such as The Book of Joel, Jonah and Habakuk (1975); New Testament Biblical Theology (Újtestamentomi bibliai teológia) (1981); Liturgics (Liturgika) (1985); Homiletics (1986); Congregation and Gifts of Grace According to the Reformed Teaching (A gyülekezet és a kegyelmi ajándékok a református tanítás szerint) (1992), and Mission in the 21st Century (Misszió a XXI században) (2001). He was a recipient of the János Apáczai Csere Award. – B: 0873, T: 7103.

Pásztor, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest, 3 February 1913 - Rome, Italy, 8 October 1997) – Historian, archivist. He obtained his B.Sc. Degree in Education from the University of Budapest, in May 1939, receiving his Ph.D. in Modern Hungarian Language, World History and in Archival Studies. From 1941 to 1946 he worked as an archivist; then moved to Rome, where he worked as Secretary of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences until April 1949, when he became a scriptor at the Vatican Secret Archives. From January 1956 to March 1983 he was engaged in archival work. From 1968 to 1983 he also gave lectures on the History of Curia Romana and on Archival Studies at the Faculty of Ecclesiastical History of the Papal Gregoriana University. He taught the same subjects in the Scuola Vaticana di Paleografia e Diplomatica from 1969 to 1976. In 1974 Lajos Pásztor became Papal Cabinet-Councilor. He is member of several scientific societies and a correspondent for international Catholic scientific journals. In Hungarian, he mainly published in the Catholic Review (Katolikus Szemle). In 1955 he founded the Hungarian Publisher Anonymus, which he ran until 1980. His works include La Curia Romana, Problemi e ricerche per la storia nell'eta moderna e contemporanea (1971) and La Segreteria di Stato e il suo Archivio 1814-1833, vols. i,ii (1984-1985). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Pásztor, Péter (Leslie Peter Pastor) (Magyarmajdány, now Majdan in Serbia, 8 May 1925 - ) – Historian. After the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, he escaped to the West and settled in the USA. His higher studies were at Columbia University. He taught at Seton Hall University in South Orange, N.J., and became Professor of History at Montclair State University, N.J. Outstanding among his works are: Hungary Between Wilson and Lenin, The Hungarian Revolution of 1918-1919 and the Big Three (Boulder Co., 1976). He was awarded the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 2004. – B: 1672, T: 7103.

Pataki Anonymous (16th century) – Writer of verses. Unknown author of the Hungarian romance entitled The Nice Story of Euryalus and Lucrecia (Euryalusnak és Lucretiának szép históriája). The story is a complicated love-story in the time of King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437). In the opinion of some, he was none other than Bálint Balassi. The content of the Hungarian romance, which is about the tragic fidelity of two lovers, faithfully follows the work of Aeneas Sylvius, the 15th century Italian humanist, who later became pope. The poem is the first significant attempt in Hungarian literature to portray sensual love. The unknown author's romance was written in 1577 "by the waters of Bodrog, in the township of Patak, in the leafy garden of the Lord", but its printed version is only known from 1592. – B: 1150, 1031, T: 7659.→Zsigmond, King; Balassi, Bálint.

Pataki, Dániel (Sárospataki) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 10 March 1804 - Kolozsvár, 11 January 1871) – Physician. At first he studied Law at the Reformed College of Kolozsvár; then worked as a provincial official. He started studying Medicine in Vienna in 1825, and obtained his Medical Degree in 1830. From 1831 he worked as an epidemiologist in Transylvania; from 1832, as a municipal physician in Kolozsvár. In 1861 he became Chief Physician of Transylvania, the Provincial Medical Councilor. He established a foundation for the medical treatment of the sick poor, and for their provision with medicines. His works include Cholera in Kolozsvár (A cholera Kolozsvárt) (1831), and Hospitals of Transylvania in the year 1867 (Erdélyország kórházai az 1867. évben) (1868). – B: 1730, 0907, T: 7456.

Pataki, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 18 September 1917 - Budapest, 25 April 1988) – Gymnast. He worked as a gymnast at the Budapest VII. District Levente Club until 1944; at the Workers' Sports Club (MTE) from 1950 to 1956; in 1948 he was Olympic Champion at the London Summer Olympic Games, where his team received 3rd place, and he also finished in 3rd place in horse jumping. At the 1952 Helsinki Summer Olympic Games, he was a member of the Hungarian team, which received 6th place. In 1954 he was a member of the Hungarian Team that took 7th place in the World Championship. From 1938 to 1956 he was 36-times Hungarian Champion. From 1943 to 1951 he was team champion 5-times. From 1937 to 1955 he was 35-times in the Hungarian National Team. Pataki worked as a teacher of the State Gymnast Training Institute. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Pataki, Gáspár (Gasper) (ca 1530) – Goldsmith. He originated presumably from Patak (now Sárospatak), County Zemplén. In 1569, Ferenc Homonnai Drugeth invited him to his castle at Terebes and, after that, Pataki worked for him. The Ciborium of Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine) is considered his artwork. – B: 0942, T: 7664.

Pataki, George E. (György) (Peekskill, NY, USA, 24 June 1945 - ) – Lawyer, politician.

Former Governor of the State of New York. His grandfather, János (John) Pataki, from County Szabolcs, emigrated to America in 1902; later, his grandmother also arrived and they were farmers. Although George Pataki is a third generation descendant; he spoke Hungarian in his childhood. He grew up on the still existing family farm and attended High School in Peekskill; he obtained his university education at Yale University and earned a Law Degree at Columbia University. First he worked at Dewey Ballantine Co., New York, then at the Plunkett and Jaffe Law Office on Wall Street. Besides this, he managed his family farm as well. Soon he became the co-owner of the Law Firm, until 1989. He also managed the office of politician Hamilton Fish. In the 1982 election he became the youngest mayor in the history of Peekskill. He was mayor for six years and, in the meantime, he was elected to the Legislature of New York State, where he introduced several laws to protect the environment and nature. In 1992 he was elected to the Senate of the State of New York State, and became Head of the Ethical Committee of the Senate. On 8 November 1994, he was elected Governor of New York State, and was authorized to make basic changes in the life of the State, which suffered from the consequences of incorrect political activities of previous governors. To reduce the crime rate, he re-introduced the death penalty, which was eliminated 18 years earlier by his predecessors. He introduced stricter sentences and, in cases of serious crimes, eliminated the pre-trial release of charged individuals. In his first budget, he reduced the State's expenditures, the first time since 1943, and also reduced taxes by 25%. For the first time in the State's history, people receiving unemployment benefits would lose their benefits if they refused an employment opportunity. In cooperation with large corporations he created employment opportunities. He was re-elected three consecutive times and was Governor till the end of 2006. Many wanted him to be Republican Presidential Candidate in the 2000, and the 2008 election as well. After his governorship, he joined the Chadbourne & Parke Law Firm. Since 2007, he has been a member of the United Nations Organization. Even though Governor Pataki no longer speaks Hungarian, he is proud of his Hungarian descent and speaks up for Hungarian minority rights in the successor states. He was awarded the Middle Cross of Merit with Stars of the Republic of Hungary (2008). – B: 1037, T: 7644.

Pataky, Kálmán (Coloman) (Alsólendva, now Lendava, Slovenia, 14 November 1896 - Los Angeles, 3 March 1964) – Singer (tenor). He was a student at the Military Academy, and later studied singing. He first appeared on stage of the Opera House of Budapest in 1922, in the role of the Duke of Mantua in Verdi's Rigoletto. From 1922 to 1926 he was soloist of the Opera House, Budapest; from 1926, a member of the Staatsoper of Vienna with annual appearances in Budapest. From 1933 he was an honorary member of the Opera House; from 1938 to 1946 again its soloist. He appeared as a guest artist on numerous opera stages in Europe, including Paris, Milan, London and Stockholm. On several occasions, he sang at the Glyndebourne Festival in England under Fritz Busch as conductor. In 1936, at the Salzburg Festival he sang the role of Florestan in Beethoven's Fidelio, under the baton of Toscanini, and achieved notable success. Due to the establishment of the Communist regime in Hungary after World War II, Pataky moved to South America in 1946 and became a member of the Teatro Colon of Buenos Aires. Later, he lived in Santiago (Chile) and finally in California (USA). With his thorough familiarity of style, musicality and culture, he was predestined to play Mozart's heroes. He was also an ideal Puccini hero, and he was in the forefront in Oratorio and Lieder singing as well. Richard Strauss dedicated several of his songs to him. His roles included Don Ottavio in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Belmonte in Mozart's Il Seraglio (Szöktetés a szerájból); Gérald in L. Delibes' Lakmé; Rodolphe in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Cavaradossi in Puccini's Tosca; Alvaro in Verdi's La Forza del Destino (A végzet hatalma); Turiddu in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana; (Parasztbecsület), and Radames in Verdi's Aida. He was a renowned singer, on the same level of the best Italian tenors. He was one of the greatest Mozart tenors of the 20th century. – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456.

Pataky (Sárospatak) Gradual – A Protestant liturgical songbook, the work of many hands, prepared around the turn of the 17th century. The original work was lost in 1945, but its word-perfect copy, prepared earlier, is in the Library of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 1197, T: 7659.

Patens of February (Patent Letter of February) – Name of the declaration of 26 February 1861, by Austrian Emperor Ferenc József I (Franz Joseph) 1830-1916), transforming the Council of the Austrian Empire into a bicameral legislative body with a limited sphere of authority. In essence it was a revised version of the October Diploma of 20 October 1860, in better detail, in the form of an Imperial Order. It was intended to be the Charter of the Constitution of the All-Austrian Empire. Its creators were Prince Rainer, and state-minister Schmerling. Their sole purpose was to solidify the German element in the Monarchy and to guarantee the majority of the conservative factor. According to the Patent Letter, the members of the Council were to be elected by the provinces; out of the 343 members, Hungary (reduced to a province) would elect 85; Erdély (separate Transylvania) 26; Croatia 9 members. The Patent Letter also maintained that the Government was responsible only to the Emperor. Enforcement of this dictum was vehemently opposed in Hungary, Transylvania and in Croatia as well. The strongest protests came from Hungarians, whose independence was not recognized. In protest, the Hungarians would not elect any representative to the Council, bringing about the failure of the Patent Letter. – B: 1078, 1153, T: 7103. → Ferenc József; October Diploma.

Paternal Lineage – Paternal lineage means a social order, where the family name, social status and fortune are inherited along the father's line. The paternal society is a result of the sun-worship cult, which became the foundation of fire-worship, accepted by many modern religions. Paternal lineage was also the accepted custom in Hungary. Centuries ago, the custom was that the offspring of a noble father, but not of a noble mother, became automatically member of the nobility. The offspring of a not noble father, even if the mother was member of the nobility, was not recognized as such. Among the common people, relatives on the father's side were more important than relatives on the mother's side. Up to the middle of the 19th century, the Landed (real) Estate was inherited only by the male offspring. – B: 1134, T: 3233.

Path of the Armies (Hadak Útja) – Name of the Milky Way among the Szeklers of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), a name tied to the "Prince Csaba Legend". According to folklore, the "Path of the Armies" was created in the sky when neighboring peoples, bent on their destruction, attacked the Szeklers. Then suddenly the spirits of their brave Hun ancestors came to their aid from the sky and fought alongside them. The many little stars that form the stretch of white band in the sky are the hoof prints left by the horses of the heavenly spirits. In Hungary, however, it is called the Milky Way. Today, quite a few patriotic groups took up this name. – B: 0942, T: 7617. → Csaba, Legend of Prince; Szeklers.

Páthy, László (Ladislav, née Polnauer) (Budapest, 3 May 1897 - USA, 21 July 1984) – Politician. He completed his secondary education in Alexandria, Egypt, in 1915. During World War I, he spent several years with his family in a British internment camp in the desert. In 1920, he began business ventures in Egypt and carried out pioneering work in sea, river and land transportation. He founded new companies and expanded insurance companies. The Hungarian Government appointed him Honorary Consul, later, Consul, then Chargé d'Affaires in Egypt, which post he held until World War II. In the Egyptian commercial navigation industry, he established the Alexandria Nav. Co. Ltd. and the MISR Nav. Co. Ltd.; later, he established the Alexandria Insurance Co. In 1932, he established the Hungarian Egyptian Trade Institute Co. under the Directorship of Miklós Horthy Jr. This company was active in the commercial exchange of Hungarian and Egyptian products. He was an initiator and a founding member of the Danube to Sea Shipping Industry.

In connection with the Nuremberg trials, he worked in London in 1945-1946, then at the Nuremberg Trials as International Legal Assistant to Judge Jackson and General Donovan. He participated in the establishment of the judicial procedures of the War Crimes Tribunal. He had a role in the interrogation of Regent Miklós Horthy. In 1951 he moved to Greenwich, England; later he settled in Connecticut State in the USA. He took part in the establishment of the Hungarian House in New York. In the USA he founded the Federal Bulk Carriers Inc.; later, he took an active part in the development of the Federal Commerce and Navigation, which is still active today under the name of FEDNAV. He was Director-General of this company between 1966 and 1970. In 1970 he established the Equal Justice Institute to systematically develop justice administration. Together with his wife, he established The Suzanne Pathy Charitable Organization. – B: 1020, T: 7644.

Pátkai, Ervin (Erwin) (Békéscsaba, 11 April 1936 - Paris, 18 June 1985) – Sculptor, town-planner. As a first-year tertiary student he settled in Paris after the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight against Soviet rule. He studied at the École Nationale Supérieure des Beaux-Arts. In 1961 he received the Grand Prix at the Parisian Biennial, while in 1966 he was awarded the Grand Prix of modern sculpture. For his work in fine arts, he received a great French distinction in 1973. Some of the statues he created may be found in numerous French towns. From 1974 until his death, he was Counselor on Urban Studies and Art for Marne la Vallée near Paris. He participated in founding the journal, Hungarian Workshop (Magyar Műhely), becoming also its Fine Arts Editor. For a while, he was a member of the Presidium of the European Protestant Hungarian Free University. He took part in the preparation of the album, Man and Town (Ember és város), dealing with the present problems of urbanization. Ervin Pátkai died in an accident in Paris. – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Patkós, Irma (Cegléd, 8 March 1900 - Cegléd, 24 October 1996) – Actress. She completed her studies at the School of the Actors' Association in 1920. First she acted in Nyíregyháza, then in Békéscsaba and Szeged, Makó and Szentés, and again in Békéscsaba, Nyíregyháza, Pécs, Szeged and Debrecen. In 1931 she made her debut in the Comedy Theatre (Vígszínház), Budapest, where she remained till 1941. In 1942 and 1943 she was a member of Géza Földessy's Company. After 1945 she played minor roles in the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház,) and the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. Finally, she worked at the Theater of the People's Army (Néphadsereg Színháza,) and the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. She performed almost all of the lead roles of the great operettas of her time; she sang grand opera roles as well. Her more famous interpretations were: the French Princess in P. Kacsóh's John the Brave (János vitéz); Médi in Schubert-Berte's Das Dreimäderlhaus (Három a kislány), adapted into English language versions as Blossom Time and Lilac Time; Fedora in Kálmán's The Circus Princess (Cirkuszhercegnő); Szuzuki in Puccini's Madama Butterfly (Pillangó kisasszony); Solvejg in Ibsen's Peer Gynt; Örzse in Kodály's Háry János, and Student Gábor in J. Huszka's Baba Gül (Gül Baba). Later on, she also acted in character roles and in films. There are more than 35 feature and TV films to her credit, including Miska the Grandee (Mágnás Miska) (1948); Outbreak (Kitörés) (1971); Spider Web (Pókháló) (1974); Walking Time (Ballagó idő) (1976), and Deliver Us from Evil (Szabadíts meg a gonosztól) (1979). Amongst her TV films are The Prima Donna (A Primadonna) (1972); My Friend Bonca (Barátom Bonca) (1975); Strange Matrimony (Különös házasság) (1-4, 1984); Gods and Heroes (Istenek és hősök) (1988), and Devictus Vincit (1994). She was recipient of a number of distinctions including the Merited Artist title (1984), an Honorary Citizenship of Cegléd (1989), the Star of the Order of Merit Decorated with Golden Wreath of the Republic of Hungary (1990), and the Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1995). An Art School bears her name in Cegléd. – B: 0871, 1445, 1031, T: 7103.

Patriotic People's Front (Hazafias Népfront – HNF) – Social organization during the Communist regime of Hungary between 1954 and 1990, bringing together and “uniting” all the mass organizations, social and cultural. Its aim was to unite all the classes of the society to support the Communist political aspirations. Its task was to prepare and organize parliamentary elections, to compile lists, and also to take part in the legislation process, preparing Bills and other legal provisions and organizing “social independent action”. It had its own independent daily paper, the Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet) between 1954 and 1989. Prime Minister Imre (Emeric) Nagy, at one stage, played a substantial role in the formation of this social organization. He wanted to enable all the citizens to have access to political roles, even those, who were not Communist Party members; however, they did not receive actual roles until after the defeat of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. In the Kádár restoration times, the Patriotic People's Front was “the expression of the socialist national unity”. It was during that period that it received a major role in the preparations for parliamentary and council elections. Until 1985, only those citizens, who accepted the program of the Patriotic People's Front were able to stand for election. Its importance grew during the late 1980s, during the time of Secretary General Imre (Emeric) Pozsgay. Its exclusive tasks ceased to exist with the change of the political system, though, during the first free elections in October 1989, there was an attempt by the Front to launch itself independently from the political parties; on 15 October, in the congress of the Front, the Minister of Justice, Kálmán (Coloman) Kulcsár, was elected its president and nominee for the presidency of the Republic. Under the title of Patriotic Election Coalition, it entered into co-operation with 12 other social organizations. In the 1990 parliamentary elections it succeeded in presenting a nationwide list, but could not secure a mandate. In June 1990, it ceased to exist as a social organization. As its legal successor, the Democratic Coalition (Demokrata Koalíció) was formed on 4 August 1990. – B: 1031; T: 7456. → Nagy, Imre; Kádár, János; Pozsgay, Imre; Kulcsár, Kálmán.

Patriotic Songs – Songs born out of patriotic sentiment of individuals or of a nation. Hungarian patriotic songs reach back to the early centuries of Hungarian history. The songs of Sebestyén (Sebastian) Tinódi Lantos (1510-1556) were based mainly on patriotic sentiments. However, these sprang up most frequently during the Protestant polemics, and during the Rákóczi-led insurrection. The Kuruc (soldiers fighting on the side of Rákóczi) patriotic songs represent a collection that is unknown among other nations. These songs sprung up by the hundreds during and after the 1848-1849 War of Independence. The patriotic songs had a growing Renaissance during the time before and after the change of regime in 1990. Patriotic songs represent the most valuable collection of Hungarian vocal literature. Patriotic songs of other nations differ greatly from those of the Hungarians, except for the Marseillaise of the French. Among the great Oriental nations or the peoples of the Americas, patriotic songs are, for the most part, unknown. – B: 0942, T: 7617.→Tinódi Lantos, Sebestyén; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Patrona Hungariae – The Patroness of Hungary (Magyarok Nagyasszonya). King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038) unexpectedly lost his only son, the heir to the throne, Crown Prince Imre (St. Emeric) in 1031. This created an uncertainty about the succession. According to a historical tradition: shortly before he died, King István, in his devout piety, praying in his royal chapel, turned to the Blessed Virgin Mary and offered his realm to her protection. The Mary (Maria) Cult, which evolved from this event, existed not only among members of the Hungarian royalty of the time, but also flourished for centuries afterward. The Virgin Mary became the embodiment of Patrona Hungariae, the patroness of Hungary. This veneration manifests itself on flags showing her picture, on coins and on stamps. In 1896, Pope Leo XIII decreed a separate holiday, to be held on 8th October, in honor of the Patroness of Hungary, on the occasion of commemorating the thousand-year anniversary of the establishment of the State and the Historic Kingdom of Hungary in the Carpathian Basin. – B: 1068, 7301, T: 7456.→István I, King (St. Stephen); Imre, St. Prince; Madonna, the Great.

Patrubány, Antal (Anthony) (Erzsébetváros, 1834 - Pest, 24 May 1871) – Physician, journalist. In 1859 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Pest. After working as a practicing doctor, he became the Chief Physician of the Dermatology Section in the St. Rókus Hospital, Budapest. He was mainly concerned with skin and sexual diseases. Apart from his medical publications, he was also engaged in journalism. His works include Of the Ancient History of Syphilis (A Syphilis őstörténetéből) (1860), and The White-Man Trade 100 Years Ago (A fehér embervásár 100 év előtt) (1862). – B: 1730, 0907, T: 7456.

Patrubány, Miklós István Ádám (Michael Stephen) (Medgyes, now Mediaș, Transylvania, Romania, 23 December 1952 - ) – Electric engineer, entrepreneur and politician. His higher studies were at the Technical University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1972-1976). In 1973 he founded the Echo (Visszhang) University Radio Station, and was its Editor till 1976. From 1976 to 1978, he worked as an engineer at a semi-conductor producing firm in Bucharest. From 1978 to 1992 he was first class Scientific Chief-Researcher at the Communication Engineering Research Institute in Kolozsvár. Between 1979 and 1984, he was a guest professor at the Technical University of Kolozsvár. In 1983, he participated in the creation of the first Romanian personal computer named PRAE. Since 1992, he has been owner and manager of the Praemium Firm in Kolozsvár. Between 1990 and 1992, he was a Presidium Member of the Democratic Alliance of Hungarians in Romania (DAHR) (Romániai Magyarok Demokratikus Szövetsége – RMDSZ). In 1992 he was elected to the Presidium of the Hungarian World Federation – HWF (Magyarok Világszövetsége – MVSZ), and in 1996 became its Deputy President and concurrently was the President of the Transylvanian Society (Erdélyi Társaság) of the World Federation of Hungarians. In 1989 he wrote a book on the technology of microprocessors and, from 1996, he edited a national-political review, the Hungarian Minority (Magyar Kisebbség). Since 2005 he has been Editor-in-Chief for the pictorial monthly Home-Passport (Honlevél). In 1999 he launched the Extended Family Movement (Nagycsaládok Mozgalom). In 2000 he was elected President of the World Federation of Hungarians, defeating the Government's favorite candidate of the Government; the Parliament's financial support for World Federation immediately ceased and has never been restored. He was the initiator for the plebiscite on dual Hungarian citizenship in 2004, which intended to give Hungarian citizenship to the 2.5 million ethnic Hungarians in the neighboring countries; for this, he was named "Man of the Year" by the Toronto-based weekly Hungarians of Canada/America (Kanadai/Amerikai Magyarorság). In 2004, 2008 and 2012 he was re-elected President of the World Federation of Hungarians. – B: 0875, 1826, T: 7103.

Pattantyús-Ábrahám, Géza (Selmechánya, now Banska Stiavnica, Slovakia, 11 December 1885 - Budapest, 29 September 1956) – Mechanical engineer. He was born into a physician's family. At the age of 10 he was sent to Budapest, where he matriculated at a Catholic secondary school. He obtained a Degree in Engineering in 1907 from the Budapest Polytechnic. He became assistant to Professor Zipernowsky, the Chair of Electric Technology. In 1910 he received a scholarship to study for 200 days in Germany, England, the United States, Canada and Belgium. In 1912 he earned a Ph.D. and worked as lecturer at the Second Department of Mechanical Construction. In the meantime, in 1909, he opened an engineering office in Budapest under the name Pattantyús and Associates. With short interruptions, he continued this private office until 1930, while teaching at the Polytechnic. From 1930 until his death, he taught in the Department of Mechanical Engineering of the Polytechnic of Budapest. As a professor, scholar and humanist thinker, he trained a generation of engineers, creating the Pattantyús School. He wrote five volumes of notes, eight volumes of textbooks, and 150 publications in the field of hydraulic and lifting engines. His books include Machine Management (Gépek üzemtana), textbook, appeared in 14 printings; and the Pocketbook of Mechanics (Gépészeti zsebkönyv), which was a great success. His method for the measurement of the air-boiler of the reciprocating piston pump became known all over the world as the "Pattantyús Method". His scientific work was characterized by a close relationship between scientific work and practice. His school trained twelve university professors and many outstanding technical experts. He played an important role in the expansion of technological culture in Hungary. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1953). He received a number of awards, including the Kossuth Prize in 1952. A High School and a Cultural Center bear his name in Győr. – B: 1123, 1153, 1408, T: 7390, 7103. → Zipernowsky, Károly.

Pátzay, Pál (Paul) (Kapunár, 17 September 1896 - Budapest, 14 September 1979) – Sculptor, pedagogue. He studied sculpting under the direction of Béla Radnai at the Academy of Applied Art, Budapest, from 1912 to 1914; he was dismissed however, and continued to study on his own. He went on a study trip to France and Rome (1927-1930). His works were exhibited with works of Ede Hohacsek (1917) and Vilmos Aba Novák (1931). In 1914 he was in Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania), and in 1915 he joined the Kassák group. As a result of his activities during the Council (Soviet) Republic, he was imprisoned for a year and six months. After World War II, Pátzay was a leading personality in the art life. He was also professor at the Academy of Applied Art (1945-1975). He published a number of studies on art. His statuettes are Male Nude (Fiúakt) bronze; Youth (Ifjúság), bronze (1915); Girl Combing Hair (Fésülködő leány), bronze (1919-1922); Sisters (Nővérek) (1933), and Bread Slicer (Kenyérszegő) (1940s). His major works include Mary and St. Joseph, carved statues, Basilica, Budapest (1947-1950); Snake-killer (Kígyóölő), Debrecen; Wallenberg, (1953); Statue of Bálint Balassai (Balassi Bálint szobor) (1959), and Memorial of the Debrecen Armored Troops in World War II, (A második világháború debreceni páncélos csapatának emlékműve) Debrecen (1970). He was twice the recipient of the Kossuth Prize, and was awarded numerous medals. – B: 0872, 0934, T: 7103.→Radnai, Béla; Rudnay, Gyula; Aba Novák, Vilmos; Kassák, Lajos; Melocccó, Miklós; Debrecen, Tank Battle of.

Paulay, Ede (Edward) (Tokaj, 15 March 1836 - Budapest, 12 March 1894) – Actor. Director of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, the first stage producer of European quality. His parents wanted him to become a church minister; however, he became an actor. He acted in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), Szeged, Debrecen, Győr and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1863 the National Theater gave him a contract. Initially he worked as an actor and also as a producer of dramatic works. He was an instructor and the Secretary for the Actors Training School; from 1874 the Vice Principal and, from 1893 until his death, first Director of the Academy of Dramatic Arts (Színművészeti Akadémia), which developed out of the Actors' Training School. The fruit of his educational work is his book: The Theory of Acting (1871). In 1878 Paulay became Drama Director of the National Theater, and from 1884, its Chief Director. He broadened his knowledge with trips abroad: in 1872 Germany, France and Italy, in 1876 Paris and London. Breaking away from operas in 1884, he established the National Theater as a drama theater. During his directorship, the theater experienced its first golden period. He was one of the founders of the Sándor Petőfi Society in 1876. In 1882 he was elected a member of the Kisfaludy Society. In 1888 he became President of the Society of Writers and Artists. In his artistic work, he was a promoter of world literature: Shakespeare, Moliere, Schiller, Goethe and Racine, together with works of ancient literature: Plautus, Sophocles. He brought to the stage Hungarian plays as well, for example, that of the young Ferenc Herczeg. Among others, Paulay produced Csongor and Tünde in his own rewriting in 1879. He translated many plays, including Racine's Bajazet, Beumarchais' The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró Házassága), and Sardou's Odette, Fedora. Among his other works are Our Drama Literature from the Time of the Opening of the National Theater (Drámairodalmunk a Nemzeti Színház megnyitása óta) (1883), and The National Theater (1887). In his essays he dealt with the theoretical and practical questions of dramaturgy. He was awarded the Knight-Cross of Emperor and King József Ferenc in 1881. A Street in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0871, 0883, 1445, T: 7684.→Theatrical Art in Hungary.

Pauler, Ákos (Budapest, 9 April 1876 - Budapest, 29 June 1933) – Philosopher. He was member of a well-known family of scholars, and son of the historian Gyula (Julius) Pauler. After receiving his Doctorate in Arts, he spent two years at the Universities of Paris and Leipzig. In 1902 he was already a private lecturer at the University of Budapest; then, from 1906 he lectured at the Law School of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1912 he became Professor of Philosophy first at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and from 1915 at the University of Budapest. In 1920 he became President of the Hungarian Philosophical Society. Besides Károly (Charles) Böhm, Pauler was the greatest Hungarian philosopher of system-creating. During his early works he strove to harmonize positivism and criticism and, during the interwar years, he was the most outstanding idealist thinker who, in his efforts to create a philosophical system, actually became the representative of the “Pre-Logic” of Bolzano-Lotze in Hungary. He developed reduction as his method and, by means of this he succeeded in attaining the Conception of Absolute Truth, free from all relativity and psychologism. Later on, he turned to the Neo-Kantian Concept of Value. His works include On the Psychological Foundations of Epistemology (Az ismeretelmélet lélektani alapjai) (1898); The Problem of ‘in Se’ in Modern Philosophy (A magánvaló problémája az újabb filozófiában) (1901); The Concept of System (A rendszer fogalma) (1923), and Logic (Logika) (1924, in German 1927). Pauler’s major works are: Introduction to Philosophy (Bevezetés a filozófiába) (1921, 3rd ed. 1931, 6th ed. 2001); Grundlagen der Philosophie (1925); Proof of God by Anaxagoras (Anaxagoras istenbizonyítéka) (1926), and Metaphysics (Metafizika) (posthumously published in 1938). He became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1910, and an ordinary member in 1924. He was awarded the Grand Prix of the Academy in 1928, and the Corvin Wreath in 1933. – B: 0879, 0883, 1257, 1068, T: 7456.→Böhm, Károly; Pauler, Gyula.

Pauler, Gyula (Julius) (Zágráb, now Zagreb in Croatia, 11 May 1841 - Badacsonytomaj, 6 July 1903) – Historian, archivist. He was the father of Ákos Pauler. After completing his Legal Studies, from 1863 to 1874, he worked as a lawyer in Budapest, spending more and more time on historical research, in which Mihály Horváth helped him. It was Horváth, who recommended him to the Chief Archivist of the newly formed National Archives, the organization and scope of which he developed after some experience abroad. (1874-1902). He gathered and sorted the archival material of the Hungarian and Transylvanian Chancery, the Council of the Hungarian Governor, the Transylvanian Government, the Hungarian Treasury, the Supreme Court, and the Transylvanian National Archives of Kolozsmonostor (now Monestur, Romania), and Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania). Pauler became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1870, an ordinary member in 1877, and its President in 1899. He was one of the founding members of the Hungarian Historical Society in 1867. Earlier on he was also engaged in problems of historical theory; he also studied Positivism: On the Influence of Positivism on Historical Work (A pozitivizmus hatásáról a történetírásra) (in Századok, 1871). In his later, larger-scale works he showed remarkable richness in data. He edited, with Sándor Szilágyi, the work entitled: The Sources of the Hungarian Conquest (A magyar honfoglalás kútforrásai) (1901). His other works include The Conspiracy of the Palatine, Ferenc Wesselényi, and his Collaborators 1664 - 1671, vols. i,ii (Wesselényi Ferenc nádor és társainak összeesküvése 1664 - 1671, I,II) (1876); The History of the Hungarian Nation in the Age of the Kings of the Árpád Dynasty, vols. i,ii (A magyar nemzet története az Árpád-házi királyok korában I – II) (1893; was awarded the Grand Prix of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1894), and The History of Hungary up to King St. Stephen (A magyar nemzet története Szent Istvánig) (1900). – B: 0879, 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Pauler, Ákos; Horváth, Mihály.

Pauline Friars of Paraguay – Some Hungarians of the Pauline Order (Pálosok), the only monastic order of Hungarian origin, founded by Blessed Özséb (ca. 1200 - 1270), appeared in South America soon after Columbus’ discovery (1492, 1498). The church historian, Egyed Hermann, mentions that, at the Port of Riachuelo (Buenos Aires today), 16 white-cloaked Hungarian Paulines landed on the shore from Mendoza’s ship, Pedro; but a colony could not be established there, because the Guarani Indians, who had a settled agricultural civilization in the region, destroyed all available food before the strange seamen approached from the unknown East. To escape the famine, all of them, including the Paulines, hurriedly left in the direction of the Rivers La Plata and Parana. There, they founded the settlements of North Corpus and Asuncion. The Paulines worked there, administering the country, but the Spanish colonists strove to deport the Paulines to remote islands so that they would not be in the way of Spanish interests. To communicate among themselves secretly in their predicament, these religious men used the ancient Hungarian runic script (rovásírás) that they had acquired in their home base in the Pilis Hills of Hungary.

In his Bull of 1501, Pope Alexander VI assigned the spiritual care of all the natives of the region to the Paulines. There are references in the Vatican archives to the work of the Paulines who, among other tasks, were also active in the mapping of the New World. In the Library of the University of Asuncion the reference to Paulistas can be found on the microfilms of early maps. References to the Hungarian Paulines of Paraguay can also be found in the letters of Bishop Bartholome de Las Casas of Santo Domingo. This Dominican Bishop bravely opposed the plans of Emperor Charles V for world domination and the ruthless extermination of the American natives. The Bishop's advisors and informants were always the Paulines. In one of his letters, he complains that the Emperor of Austria neglects the will of God and the Kaiser would even be capable of committing murder as it was demonstrated by the murder of György Frater (i.e. Frater György) of Hungary. Actually, the Pauline Order carefully followed the activities of György (George) Martinuzzi (Frater) (1482-1551) in Transylvania, (Erdély, now in Romania), who was also a member of the Order, because he was an active promoter of an independent Transylvanian Principality; so, in order to silence him, the Habsburgs had him killed.

By about 1560 all traces of the Hungarian Paulines of South America had disappeared. They were replaced by Spanish Jesuits and also, later, by Jesuits from Central Europe. Among them, some 20 to 30 Hungarian Jesuits arrived by decree of Charles V. These Hungarian Jesuits also communicated among themselves secretly by using the runic script. A large portion of the Pauline notes and collection of maps was later on apparently transported back to Hungary. Among others, their Mappa Antiqua (Old Maps) was copied at the University of Nagyszombat (now Trnava in Slovakia). At the end World War II, after the ransacking of the Palace of the Primate of Hungary in Esztergom, the Director of the Local Museum, Géza Szepessy, found one of those maps in a waste bin. This map, with runic notes on it, is now catalogued under No. 56, and is known as the Vinland map in archeology. A Hungarian Jesuit, János Bér, a lecturer in mathematics at the University of Lima San Marcos, after the earthquake of 1746, was given the task of planning the city's reconstruction. At the University, he found some traces of the Hungarian Paulines, along with some notes in runic script. A cave in the mountains of Paraguay, containing some drawings, was discovered by the British explorer, Colonel Percy Fawcett in 1910. One of the mountain ranges bears the name of Cerro Polilla (Pauline), a reminder of the Paulines. In a document, called Archivo de las Indias from the Spanish town of Cadiz, there were nearly 300 Hungarian Paulines mentioned, even in more recent times. (Note: the Hungarian Paulines are not to be confused with the Paulicians – a heretic sect – and the Paulist Fathers of the USA). – B: 1068, 1174, T: 7456.→Özséb, Blessed; Pauline Order, Martinuzzi (Frater), György; Jesuits, Hungarian, in Latin America; Cerro Pelado Cave; Hungarian Runic Script.

Pauline Order (Pálosok, Pálos Rend) – The only religious order founded in Hungary. It was established by Blessed Özséb (ca. 1200 - 1270), when he rounded up the hermits living in caves around Patacs, on Mount Jakab, north of Pécs in County Baranya, and in the Pilis Range near Pilisszentkereszt (northwest of Buda), organizing them into a coherent community, thus forming the beginnings of the Pauline Order in 1250. This is considered to be entirely to the credit of Özséb, who named the order after St Paul the Hermit, officially Ordo sancti Pauli primi eremitae (Order of the First Hermit Saint Paul). Lodomér, Archbishop of Esztergom and Paul, Bishop of Veszprém laid down the rules for the Order. The Provost Lőrinc (Lawrence), the General of the Order, strengthened the independence of the Order against the bishops in 1308 and reorganized the Order along the lines of St. Augustine's rules. The Order gained papal recognition in 1256. At first the Pauline monks wore a gray habit; but later changed to white, to distinguish themselves from the vagrant hermits clad in gray. The first monastery in honor of the Holy Cross was erected on Klastrompuszta (1250), in the outskirts of the village of Keszölc, east of Dorog in the Pilis Range; and another one on Mount Jakab, north of Pécs, at about 1341. Thereafter, the Order spread and grew rapidly; it became very popular in Poland and Germany and spread as far west as Portugal. Its golden age was from 1300 to 1500, during the Anjou and Hunyadi dynasties. By 1500, there were 207 Pauline monasteries in Europe, almost 130 in Hungary alone. In 1352 King Louis the Great (1242-1382), founded the monastery at Márianosztra, which still exists but in a new building. In 1498, at Szentjobb (now Sâniob, Romania), near Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), King Ulászló II (Wladislas, 1490-1516), founded the first Royal Hungarian Pauline Monastery (its ruins were uncovered in 2004). In 1501, by a decree of Pope Alexander VI, Pauline monks were sent to South America to map the border areas of Paraguay. In about 1520, Father Gergely (Gregory) Gyöngyösi (1472-1545) published in Latin the history of the Order, with several subsequent Hungarian editions. The Ottoman Turkish occupation of a large part of Hungary for 150 years (1526-1686) was a dark period also for the Pauline Order: the Turks massacred the monks all over the country in the Carpathian Basin; their center at Budaszentlőrinc was burnt down, the codices taken away, and the Hungarian-language Bible disappeared. In the early part of the Turkish occupation, György (George) Frater (Martinuzzi) (1482-1551), Cardinal Archbishop, the Prince of the Paulines, played an important political role, and tried to unite the fragmented realm. At one point he was the Regent of Hungary. The suspicious Habsburgs had him assassinated at Alvinc. After the end of the Turkish occupation, the Order could not regain its former greatness. Pope Urban VIII tried to increase the prestige of the Order with visitations. Pál (Paul) Széchenyi (1645-1710), later the Archbishop of Kalocsa, joined the Order, so did György (George) Csepellény (1626-1674), who died as a martyr; Imre (Emeric) Esterházy (1663-1745), who was to become the Primate of Hungary, also joined the Order. In 1686, Father László (Ladislav) Majthényi, leading his Pauline troops, fought at Buda in its recapture from the Turks. Around 1700, some new monasteries were built. The monastery in Pest was built in 1725, and it became the Center for the Order. In 1786 King József II (Joseph, 1780-1790) disbanded the Order (with its library of ten thousand volumes), together with all the other religious orders. There were some attempts to revive the Order: Cardinal János (John) Scitovszky, brought in some monks from Poland. Another century and a half of silence followed in the history of the Order. In 1923 Bishop Gyula (Julius) Zichy and the Primate, Jusztinian Serédi, revived the activities of the Paulines to a certain extent: they succeeded in re-establishing Pauline monasteries in Budapest and Pécs. Serédi allocated the care of the Gellért Mountain Cave Chapel of Budapest to them. In 1937, a Pauline church was built in Pécs, and the Order received a new monastery in Pálosszentkút (Petőfiszállás). After World War II, the Communist regime disbanded the Order; all the members (except a few seminarians) were interned; three were executed, among them Ferenc (Francis) Vezér (1914-1951), whose trial became a “show trial” and, as a result, he became a modern-day martyr. In 1951, the secret police broke into the Gellért Mountain Cave Chapel, rounded up all the Paulines, removed or destroyed all the religious articles and had the entrance blocked with a concrete wall. Pope Pius XII sanctioned the continued underground activities of the Order. In the 1950s, some members of the Order emigrated to North America, joining their brethren of the Polish branch, already well-established in the USA. At present, the Paulines are the custodians of the shrine in Doylestown, Pa., USA, a place of pilgrimage for many Hungarians living in North America. After the collapse of the Communist system (1989), the Pauline Order was re-established in Hungary. In 2008 and 2009 the World Federation of Hungarians published a three-volume work, entitled: Hungarian Paulines (Magyar Pálosok). – B: 1231, 1031, 1068, T: 7456.→Özséb; Martinuzzi (Frater) György; Pauline Friars in Paraguay; Religious Orders, Roman Catholic; Michael de Ungria; Pálosszentkút, affair of; Catholic Church in Hungary.

Paulus Hungarus, Saint (Paul) (Pál Magyar) (Hungary, ca. 1219 - around Jászvásár, now Iasi, Romania, 1241) – Monk and missionary. He studied in Bologna, and in 1218 joined the Dominican Order. In 1121 he became a teacher of Canon Law at the University of Bologna. He was posted to Hungary in order to establish the Dominican Order. He set off with four fellow friars, and on their way, three educated youngsters joined them. They succeeded in establishing monasteries in Győr, Veszprém and other places. Soon they went to convert the Cumanians (Kunok), in the eastern region of the Carpathian Mountains (now Moldova, Romania). They were ousted twice but, the third time they succeeded in converting them and founded a bishopric. While on the mission in Cumania, Paulus Hungaricus was martyred by the Tartars in 1242. Paulus Hungarus is the author of two popular Latin works: Summa de paenitentia, a book for confessors, and Notabilia Primae et Secundae Compilationis, the explanations of the III. Compilatio. To this, he attached notes containing data on Hungary. He was called the “Apostle of the Cumanians”. – B: 0807, 0883, 1257, T: 7103.→Dominican Order; Cumanians.

Pável, Ágoston (Austin) (Vashidegkút, 28 August 1886 - Szombathely, 2 January 1946) – Poet, linguist, ethnographer. In 1911 he received his Degree in Education in Hungarian and Latin languages; in 1913 he obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Budapest. From 1911 on, he taught in Torda (now Turda, Romania); from 1913 in Dombóvár and, from 1920, in Szombathely. Between 1924 and 1942 he was Head of the Library of the Cultural Association of County Vas and the Town of Szombathely; from 1928 he was also Head of its Ethnographic Collection. In 1933 he took over the editing of the local journal: Transdanubian Review, formerly Vas Review (Dunántúli Szemle, formerly Vasi Szemle). In 1941 he received a qualification for the position of honorary lecturer in the field of South Slavic Language and Literature from the University of Szeged. Central for his linguistic work was the study of the Slovene Dialect in the Mura River area, and the interrelationship between Hungarian and the Slavic languages. Starting with south Slavic folk poetry, he studied the formation of the Slovene Literary Language and translated its products, such as the works of Ivan Cankar, into Hungarian on a world literary level. His works include The Phonology of the Slovene Dialect of Vashidegkút (A vashidegkúti szlovén nyelvjárás hangtana) (1909); The Language of the Most Recent Wend Literature (A legújabb vend irodalom nyelve, (in Linguistics/Nyelvtudomány) (1916), and Burnt Down Forest (Felgyújtott erdő), poems (1936). – B: 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7456.

Pax Romana, Hungarian (MPR) – Founded in 1921 and renewed in 1947, and it is a member of the International Catholic Movement for Intellectual and Cultural Affairs – ICMICA. During the Communist regime, until 1996, Hungary was represented by Hungarians living outside of Hungary. It is a registered NonGovernmental Organization – NGO. Divisions: Sub-Carpathia (Ukraine), Transylvania (Romania), Northern Hungary (Felvidék now Slovakia), Voivodina (now in Serbia), and Amati (Kazakhstan). Its objective has been since 1991 to encourage peaceful cooperation between nationalities and different mindsets by organizing yearly congresses with different topics, such as The Gospel - Our Common Service Today (Az Evangélium – közös szolgálatunk ma); The Church of Dialogue (A párbeszéd egyháza), and Hungarian Ecumenical Meeting (Magyar ökumenikus találkozó). The proceedings are published. – B: 1007, T: 7103.

Payer, Gyula (Julius Johannes Ludovicus von Payer) (Schönau, 2 September 1841 – Veldes, 29 August 1915) – Austrian-Hungarian military officer, polar explorer, mountain climber, cartographer and landscape painter. He did his studies in a cadet school and became cadet at the Theresianum Military Academy of Wiener Neustadt, Austria, from 1857 to 1859. As sub-lieutenant he took part in the battle of Solferino in northern Italy, where Napoleon III defeated the Austrians in 1859. He was appointed a history teacher in the military school of Kismarton in 1863, receiving the rank of second lieutenant. On 24 June 1866 he fought in the battle of Custoza; for his heroism he received a military honor. In 1862 he was mountaineer in the Austrian Alps, and became one of the research fellows of the Austrian Cartographical Bureau in Vienna. In 1868 he participated in the German north-polar expedition, while during 1872 to 1874, he was one of the leaders in the Austrian-Hungarian north-polar expedition, in the course of which the Francis Joseph Land was discovered. This led to his writing on the expedition, entitled Die Österreich-Ungarische Nordpol Expedition in den Jahren 1869-1874. (The Austrian-Hungarian North-pole Expedition in the Years of 1869-1874). After this he left the army and established a family. Between 1877 and 1879 he studied painting in Frankfurt; and between 1880 and 1882 in Munich. He created a series of paintings on these expeditions. During the years 1882-1890 he worked as a painter in Paris, where he got acquainted with the eminent Hungarian artist Mihály (Michael) Munkácsy, from whom he learnt the use of the black and white color and the application of the various contrasts. In 1884 he lost the sight of one of his eyes. His paintings were exhibited in Paris, Munich, Berlin and Chicago, receiving a gold medal for his works in Chicago in 1894. He returned to Vienna in 1890 and established a school of painting for ladies. Already in ailing condition, he created one of his best-known paintings: We Shall Never Retreat (Sohasem hátrálunk meg). In South-Tirol a plateau was named after him at Payerhütte; and in Vienna the army barracks Vega-Payer-Weypracht keeps his memory. – B: hadtörténet.blog.hu, T: 7456. → Zichy Land; Munkácsy, Mihály.

Payerle, George (Vancouver, BC, Canada, 21 August 1945 - ) – Poet, writer and translator of literary works. His parents were Hungarian immigrants to Canada, and he spoke only Hungarian until he entered the school system, thus considering himself a “native DP”. He received a BA and an MA from the University of British Columbia. He published poems and short stories, and translations from Hungarian into English, as well as novels The After People (1970) and Wolfbane Fane (1977), the Unknown Soldier (1987), the Two from Babylon (1990), The Weather and That, poems (1993), The Last Trip to Oregon, poems (2002) and the Alterations, poems (2004). – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Payr, Sándor (Alexander) (Pápa, 25 February 1861 - Sopron, 30 January 1938) – Lutheran minister, church historian and theological writer. He pursued his theological studies in Sopron and Basel between 1881 and 1884. First, he was Assistant Pastor in Sárvár, then in Győr from 1886. From 1888 to 1896 he was Parish Pastor in Ondód, then briefly a lecturer at the Lutheran Theological Academy of Sopron. From 1896 he was Bishop’s Secretary in Pápa; from 1899 a lecturer at the Lutheran Theological Academy of Sopron and, from 1923 until his retirement in 1930, Professor of Church History. His studies in the history of the Lutheran Church of Hungary are significant. He also studied the history of Sopron. His works include Hungarian Pietists in the 18th Century (Magyar pietisták a 18. században) (1898); The History of the Transdanubian Evangelical Diocese (A dunántúli evangélikus egyházkerület története) (1924); Hungarian Protestant Galley Slaves (Magyar protestáns gályarabok) (1928), and Luther and the Hungarians (Luther és a magyarok) (1930). – B: 0932, 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7103.→Galley Slave Hungarian Preachers.

Pázmáneum (Collegium Pazmanianum, CP) – Catholic ecclesiastical cultural institute founded by Cardinal Archbishop Péter Pázmány in Vienna in 1623. Its original task was that of a seminary, to train Hungarian candidates for the priesthood. It ran into difficulties after World War II for political reasons during the Communist rule; therefore, instead, it endeavored to add more richness to the spiritual and cultural life of Hungarians living in Vienna, offering a home and scope for functioning for church and cultural institutions. From 1971 to 1975 Cardinal Mindszenty lived and worked in this house. The last Jesuit rectors of the Pazmaneum were: Antal (Anthony) Leopold (1946-1971), Egon Giannone (1971-1987), György (George) Liptay (1987-1990), Árpád Veres (1990 - 2002), and Eörs Csókás (2002 - ?). – B: 0883, 0945, 1672, 1031, T: 7456.→Pázmány, Péter.

Pázmány, Péter (Nagy-Várad, now Oradea, Romania, 4 October 1570 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 19 March 1637) – Cardinal, Archbishop of Esztergom, Primate of Hungary and author. He was born into a family of the Reformed faith and educated in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). Here he was converted to Roman Catholicism in 1583 and, in 1587, he joined the Jesuit Order. His further studies were at Krakow, Vienna, Rome, and finally in Graz. In 1601 he was posted to Sellye, where, with his eloquence, he won many to Catholicism, even members of the nobility, such as Prince Miklós (Nicholas) Esterházy and Pál (Paul) Rákóczi. In 1607 he became an assistant to the Archbishop of Esztergom. In the meantime, Pope Paul V released him from the vow of monks and gave him the title of Dean of Túróc (a County of Northern Hungary, now Turiec, Slovakia) on 25 April 1616, On 28 September he became Archbishop of Esztergom and Primate of Hungary and was made a Cardinal in 1629. Pázmány established a Seminary at Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) in 1619; in 1623 a similar Institute was founded in Vienna, the still existing Pazmaneum. In 1635 he established a University at Nagyszombat with a chair of Philosophy and Theology. After the Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty in 1920, this University was relocated to Budapest as

The Péter Pázmány University. After World War II, the Communist regime renamed it

Eötvös Lóránd University of Sciences. Pázmány also built a Jesuit College and schools in Pozsony, and Franciscan monasteries in Érsekújvár and Kőrmöcbánya (now Nové Zámky and Kremnica, Slovakia respectively).

He was a skillful politician. While seemingly a Habsburg supporter, he saw the danger of their rule; he really wanted to serve Hungary's interests. At the same time, he wanted to save the country from the Turks. Hence it is understandable why he kept a friendly relationship with the Protestant Princes of Transylvania, as he regarded them as the only bulwark against the Turks as well as the Habsburgs' German oppression. He became a prominent leader of the Counter Reformation movement in Hungary. In his age, the majority of Hungarian nobility was Protestant as a protest against the Habsburg oppressive policy. Pázmány, with his writings and eloquent oratories, convinced many of them that Catholicism was not synonymous with the Habsburg-German rule and he succeeded in reconverting many of them. He had a decisive influence on the re-Catholicization of the country. His works include The Four Books of Thomas Kempis' Imitation of Christ (Hungarian in 1603, with many editions); Diatribae theologicae de visibile Christi in terris ecclesia (1615); Vindiciae ecclesiasticae (Vienna, 1620); Sermons for every Sunday in the Year (Hungarian, 1636), and The Triumph of Truth (Hungarian, 1614). His legacy was a successful Counter-Reformation, and a contribution to the Hungarian literary language. He was regarded as "the Hungarian Cicero in the Purple". A Street in Vienna and a newly founded Catholic University in Piliscsaba were named after him. – B: 0883, 1288, 1031, 1257, T: 7103. → Pazmaneum; Pozsony; Catholic Church in Hungary, History of; Reformed Church in Hungary, History of.

Pazyryk Scythian Graves, Russia – In the East Altai Mountains, near the village of Pazyryk in the valley of the Ust Ulagan River, Russian archeologists uncovered a cemetery consisting of 5 large and 9 small graves. In the graves dating from the 5th century BC, the tribal leaders were buried. The excavating archeologists identified the people buried at the site as probably Scythians. The deceased leader's wooden coffin was placed on a bier in the burial vault built with wooden beams; he was dressed in contemporary Hun clothing. Beside the deceased were placed his finely decorated hunting implements, gold-inlaid bridle with reins and bit, and a saddle richly decorated with gold. The buckles were made of bone, the bits mostly of bronze and copper, or wrought iron. Beside the deceased were placed pots and pans, a large kettle, bow and arrow, a knife with bone handle, finely tied tapestry, and the floor was covered with felt-cloth carpet; on the wall of the burial vault finely tied tapestry was hung on copper nails. The hearse was also placed into the burial vault; it could be dismantled so that it could be carried by horses on rough roads. The hearse was 3 m wide and 2.7 m high, the wheels were spoked and nearly 2 m in diameter. Around the burial vault were buried the Scythian leader's horses, their bones indicating that they were long-legged, short-backed animals, bred for riding. In grave No.5 there was an especially fine tapestry. The Scythians were already masters of fine weaving, which was indicated by the textiles found. This tapestry depicted a Scythian leader, as he might have appeared in life. His face was shaved and had a mustache; he was sitting on a horse, had a cap on his head, wore a jacket cut open at the sides, had a dotted scarf on his shoulder, like leopard skin, and he had soled shoes. The cavalry leader appears in front of a deity sitting on a chair and holding a tree of life with some branches ending in tulip-motifs. In grave No.3, a short jacket was found. The lady's shirt found in grave No.2 had three tulip-motifs. The archeologists displayed the pattern of the Scythian leader's underwear, as the underwear indicates grooming. In the grooming and dressing culture, the West achieved this only much later. These archeological finds are on display at the Hermitage Museum in St Petersburg, Russia. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7644.→Scythians; Pre-Scythians.

Peace Priests – Following World War II, the Eastern European countries fell under Soviet military occupation, and Communist regimes were established there within 3-4 years. One of the aims of the Communists was to undercut the social roots of the Christian churches, and particularly that of the Roman Catholic Church. In order to break the resistance of church leaders, they organized the Priestly Peace Movements from the members of the lower clergy – the so-called peace priests – against the higher clergy.

In Hungary, there was a campaign to collect signatures in support of the Stockholm Peace Conference's call for world peace, in the spring of 1950. The Roman Catholic Bench of Bishops refused to join in. But quite a few of the lower clergy supported it. The statutory meeting of the Priestly Peace Movement took place in Budapest on 1 August 1950, with 300 clergymen and monks present. Leaders of the movements were: Richard Horváth, Miklós Beresztóczy and István Balogh. The members expressed their intention to remain faithful both to the Church and to the State and they supported the policy of the Patriotic People's Front. Soon, they were backed by the State Office of Church Affairs, set up on 3 July 1951.

The movement almost disappeared during and after the Revolution of October 1956. Cardinal József Mindszenty, in asylum at the American Embassy, Budapest, wanted to disperse the clergy members of the movement by posting them to the countryside. Now the bishops proposed setting up a new ecclesiastical peace movement called the 'Opus Pacis' (Peace-work). Its formation was announced on 24 May 1957. It was organized together with the National Peace Council. The Peace Committee of the Roman Catholic Priests joined in. The Opus Pacis was dissolved in October 1989, when the Communist system and Soviet military occupation came to an end. – B: 1020, 7103, T: 7103.→Opus Pacis; State Office of Church Affairs; Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956.

Pearly Bouquet (Gyöngyösbokréta) – A cultural movement in the 1930s, to revive, keep alive and show the folk customs in theaters all over the country. Béla Paulini (1881-1945) was its chief organizer and he also oversaw the work of all the regional folk art groups. For practical reasons, these groups were united in 1935 in the Bouquet Alliance. These groups staged the local folk dances and folk songs, always in authentic costumes. Each year, the performances were presented during the week of the feast of St István (St Stephen) in August. The very first performance was in 1931, in Budapest's Town Theater. This movement had a major role in preserving Hungarian folk customs and make them available to the present and future generations. The Bouquet Alliance was officially dissolved in 1947. – B: 1078, 1138, 0619, T: 3240.→Dance House Movement.

Peasant Cloak, Embroidered, from the Great Plains (Nagyalföld) – The longest form of the szűr coats. Its sleeves were not used and they were often sewed in or tied up. A large ribbon covers its hem to make it wear-resistant. A colorful fringe, made of felt, covers the line of this extension. These extensions are called one, two or three lines, depending on how many were on the cloak. The embroidery motifs over the fringe are exclusively of flowers (tulips, roses) and the Cumanian szűr makers called this embroidery “flowering”. A buckle and a leather strip clasp the front of the cloak. The two sides of the buckle are often ornamented with fringes. It also has a leather strip or a cord throwback. – B: 1134, T: 3240.→Szűr Mantle.

Pechenegs (Petchenegs, Patzinaks, Besenyők) – A Turkic people, whose language belongs to the western group of the Common Turkic language family. Byzantine sources called them Ephtalites, that is White Huns (Fehér hunok). They appeared for the first time between 750 and 850 A.D. among the peoples of the Western Turkic Empire. Around 870 they inhabited the territory between the Lower Volga and the Ural River regions. Fleeing from the Oguz people, they attacked the Magyars (Hungarians) in 889 AD, and took over their territory. The Magyar tribal federation decided to settle in the Carpathian Basin. The Petchenegs settled along the Prut River. They were always at war with the Khazars. After the Magyars left, their eight tribes occupied a large region from the Don and Dnepr Rivers to the Lower Danube; but, toward the end of the 10th century, the eight Petcheneg tribes started to disintegrate. In 1036 the Petchenegs were defeated at Kiev. Consequently, they had to move again and this time they moved south of the Danube into what is now Bulgaria. They were crushed by the Byzantine Empire in 1091. After this, they practically disappeared. The Bolgars (the Turkic-speaking ancestors of the present Slavic-speaking Bulgarians) absorbed their larger groups. During the 10th and 11th centuries their remnants arrived and settled in Hungary in several waves – with the permission of Hungarian kings. Some burst into Southern Hungary as the border guards of Byzantium in 1071, and were allowed to settle in the Szerémség area. In 1074, King Géza I (1074-1077) and the princes took in a larger group of Petchenegs with their Chief Zoltafi to keep an eye on king Salamon (1063-1074), who was holding the forts of Moson and Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In the 11th century they had altogether about 150 settlements on Hungarian territory. Their tribal names survived in the names of their villages (e.g. Besenyőtelek, Rinyabesenyő). A large percentage of the Petcheneg remnants moved across into Byzantine territory in the second half of the 11th century; other groups moved back into what is now Russia. In the 11th century, they still had their own bailiffs and judges in Hungary; their chief justice was the Palatine himself. Their privileges were recorded in a special Charter written in 1222 for the Petchenegs of Árpás, although these privileges became slowly eroded and were absorbed by the Hungarian population. They disappeared as an ethnic group around the middle of the 12th century. – B: 0942, 1153, 1068, 1031, T: 3240, 7456.→ Avars; Kushans; White Huns; Yuezhi; Scythians, Petchenegs; Sabirs; Jazigs.

Péchy, Blanka (Blanche) (earlier Greiner, née Pécsi) (Pécs, 21 September 1894 - Budapest, 6 July 1988) – Actress, elocutionist and writer. She completed her studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art in Budapest in 1914. She accepted a position with the Vaudeville Theater; then, in 1916, she joined the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) and, in 1927, the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház). Early on she became known for her reciting ability and she was among the first of the popularizers of Ady's poetry.

Between 1928 and 1934 she worked in Vienna as a member of Max Reinhardt's Company. On returning to Hungary in 1935, she played in almost every dramatic theater of the capital. After 1945 she became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház). From 1948 she was the Cultural Attaché in Vienna, as well as the Director of the Collegium Hungaricum in Vienna. From 1952 she was a member of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház). She retired in 1964, though she still accepted stage appearances and was often on the air, also initiating a language-cultivating series, entitled: Difficult to Speak (Beszélni nehéz), which she conducted on more than 300 occasions until her death. From 1962 she lectured on theatrical diction at the Academy of Music. In 1960 she established the Kazinczy Prize to reward professional performers for well-spoken Hungarian in 1986, in memory of her one-time husband Lajos Magyar. After her retirement from the stage, she was mainly engaged in writing, though her first short story appeared in the paper Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet) as far back as 1942. Her well-known theatrical roles include Sister Redempta (Redempta nővér) in Ferenc Molnár's Heavenly and Earthly Love (Égi és földi szerelem); Vronskaya (Vronszkájja) in Tolstoy-Horvai's Anna Karenina; Mrs. Davidson (Davidsonné) in Somerset Maugham's Rain (Eső), and Mrs. Lükeházi (Lükeháziné) in Molière's George Dandin (Dandin György). Her literary works include Mari Jászai (Jászai Mari) (1958); Novel (Regény), autobiography (1963), and Evening by the Danube (Este a Dunánál), reminiscences (1977). She received the Merited Artist title in 1959. There is a Blanka Péchy Prize since 1994, and there is a Square at Pécs named after her. – B: 0883, 1257, 1445, T: 7456.

Péchy, Erzsí (Bessy) (Mrs. Leo Gaibaldi) (Székelyhíd, now Săcueni, Romania, north of Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 26 April 1888 - Budapest, 20 July 1933) – Actress. She completed her acting studies at the School of Dramatic Art of Kálmán Rózsahegyi; later, she also learnt singing. She appeared on stage in the Theater of Újpest (suburb of Budapest) in 1912. Then she played in the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) (1912-1914); in the Modern Theater (Modern Színház) in 1914; in Urania in 1915, and the Comedy-Theaters (Vígszínház) in 1916 and 1917. From 1920 she played in numerous theaters, including the Blaha Lujza Theater (Blaha Lujza Színház) and the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház). In 1923 she appeared in the Opera House as well; she was a guest artist in Vienna (1923), London (1926) and Berlin (1932). Erzsí Péchy was one of the celebrated prima donnas of her age, who impressed audiences with her refined, engaging personality. She rendered her acting complete with her spirited way of singing, stylistic playing and clear enunciation of her words. Her roles included J. Huszka's Baroness Lili (Lili Bárány); Offenbach's La belle Hélène (Beautiful Helena, Szép Heléna); Blanka in F. Lehár's Blue Mazur (Kék mazur); Julle in I. Kálmán's Young Wife of Holland (Hollandi menyecske) and Mary in P. Ábrahám's Hulla-baloo (Zenebona). There are 2 feature films to her credit: Ordeal by Fire (Tűzpróba) (1918), and Laughing Budapest (Nevető Budapest) (1930). She died young, probably as a result of an auto accident in 1931. – B: 1445, 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Rózsahegyi, Kálmán.

Péchy, Mihály (Michael) (Álmosd, 1755 - Fejérszék, 19 February 1819) – Builder, military officer of the Corps of Engineers. After completion of his studies at the Vienna Engineering Academy, he worked in various fields with engineering assignments. In his military career he was prisoner of war in Constantinople for two years. In 1809 he participated in the defense of Győr as a general. His architectural work began with late Baroque and developed into classicism. His main works are The Reformed Great Church of Debrecen (1805-1821), as well as The Reformed College of Debrecen (1804-1818), which is an outstanding achievement of classicism. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Péchy, Simon (1565 or 1575 ? - ca. 1642) – Transylvanian propagator of Sabbatarianism, politician. He studied at the Unitarian College of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). While he was Principal at the Reformed School at Székelyszenterzsébet (now Eliseni, Romania), he became acquainted with the Transylvanian Szekler nobleman András (Andrew) Eössi, the founder of Sabbatarianism. Péchy embraced his Sabbatarian articles of faith and played a decisive role in the formation of the dogmatics of Sabbatarianism. Eössi adopted him and, to broaden his education, he sent him abroad. He learned to speak a number of languages, including excellent Hebrew. Because of his scholarship, the Ruling Princes of Transylvania employed him in the Prince's Court. During the reign of Prince István (Stephen) Bocskai (1605-1606), he was already a diplomat. Under Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen (1613-1629), and became the Chancellor of Transylvania. In 1621, for unknown reason, he fell out of favor, and was even imprisoned. When freed in 1624, he went back to his property in Székelyszenterzsébet and actively propagated Sabbatarianism. As a result of his persuasion, 20,000 Szeklers (Transylvanian Hungarians) were won over to Sabbatarianism. For this reason, in 1638, Prince György Rákóczi I, (1630-1648), had him arrested and he was only freed in May 1639, when he was converted to the Reformed (Calvinistic) faith. He translated the Psalms from Hebrew and, on basis of the Jewish prayer book, he created a Sabbatarian prayer book. During the rule of Prince György (George) Rákóczi I (1630-1648), the 1635 Transylvanian diet inflicted loss of property and capital punishment on the Judaizers. The Sabbatarians could only escape punishment by having themselves baptized again and by converting to one of the Christian denominations (in their case, the Reformed Church). Péchy also fell into captivity under the reign of Prince Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen. As a result of the persecutions, Péchy completely broke down. According to an alleged story, he fled to Turkey, converted to Islam under the assumed name of Ibrahim Múteferrika, and set up the first Turkish printery. He became a leading figure of Turkish culture. One of the centers of Hungarian Sabbatarianism was Bözödújfalu (now Bezidul-Nou, Romania) in Transylvania, with a congregation of ca. 170 that fell victim to Ceausescu's village-destruction policy. He wrote a number of Sabbatarian psalms and religious works, though they remained unpublished during his lifetime. His works include Psalterium of Simon Péchi (Péchi Simon Psalteriuma) (1913), which was published by Áron Szilády in 1913; and the Simon Péchi's Sabbatarian Prayerbook (Péchi Simon Szombatos imádságos könyve), which was published from manuscript by Mihály Guttman and Sándor Harnos in 1914. – B: 0877, 0883, 1068, 1134, 1506, T: 7456, 7657. → Bocskai, Prince István; Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Rákóczi I, Prince György; Szilády, Áron.

Pécs (Latin: Sopianae; German: Fünfkirchen; Turkish: Peçuy) – Town in southern Transdanubia, Hungary. It is situated at the southern foot of the Mecsek Mountain. Pécs is a town with a long history, a royal free borough, now an industrial center of a black coal-mining area. The area has been inhabited since ancient times, with the oldest archaeological findings being 6,000 years old. Before the Roman era, the place was inhabited by Celts. When Western Hungary was a province of the Roman Empire (named Pannonia), the Romans founded several wine-producing colonies under the collective name of Sopianae, where Pécs now stands, in the early 2nd century AD. It became the Capital of the Roman province of Lower Pannonia during the reign of Emperor Hadrian

(117-138 AD). It was first known as Sopiannae and later, as Quinque Ecclesiae (hence the German name Fünfkirchen). Its history continued with the brief settlements of Huns, Ostrogoths, Gepids, Longobards, and finally the Avar Khanate from 568 to 803. The Slav Prince Privina took possession of the area in 847, until the appearance of the Magyars (896-900). The Magyars soon settled in the Pécs area of southern Transdanubia. The privileges of the town were confirmed by kings St. László (Ladislav, 1077-1095), Béla III (1172-1196), and András (Andrew) II (1205-1235). King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437) and King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), held Diets there. Pécs was under Ottoman Turkish rule from 1543 to 1686. The Jesuits settled here as early as 1694. In 1704, Kuruc soldiers occupied the town. At the end of World War I, the town suffered a great deal under the temporary Serbian occupation from 14 November 1918 to 22 August 1921. The population of Pécs was 43,982 in 1901, 47,560 in 1920, 61,663 in 1930, 150,000 in 1970, 173,000 in 1983, and 158,942 in 2001. It produces coke, metals, agricultural machinery, tobacco, and leather goods. 11 km northwest of the town is the famous Abaliget Cave. The town was made an Episcopal see by King St István I, (St Stephen) of Hungary in 1009. King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) established here the first University of Hungary in 1367; it was active until 1526. In 1923, The Royal Erzsébet (Elisabeth) University was transferred here from Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), after the 1920 Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon. Since 2000, it has been known as the University of Pécs. The Turkish Mosque, built during the Turkish era, is now the Parish church of the inner town. The most notable building of the town center is the 11th century Cathedral, rebuilt in the late 19th century in the Romanesque style with four towers. The original cathedral burned down, and was rebuilt in the 12th century. The crypt suggests the foundations of an early Christian Basilica. Nearby, a rich early Christian cemetery was excavated, with some unpainted and some painted underground burial vaults. There are numerous other outstanding, historic buildings in the town center, such as the Episcopal Palace, the Teachers' College, a Turkish minaret, the Cistercian High School, the Hospital and Church of the Sisters of Charity, the Seminary, the Parish church of the Castle, the University Library, the Nunnery, the Franciscan monastery, and the Hospital chapel. There are several statues in the town center, e.g. those of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth and Vilmos (William) Zsolnay (both the works of Horvai), and a Holy Trinity monument, the work of György (George) Kiss. Outside the town center are the suburbs of Pécs: those of Sziget, Megyer, the Industry Park (Gyárváros), and the Garden Suburb, established in the 1930s, for worker families. Culturally important are the Theater, Library, two Museums and the University of Pécs. The Episcopal Library, founded in 1774, now the University Library, is Hungary's first Public Library. There is a School of Music and several hospitals with clinics. Well known is the Zsolnay majolica pottery factory. The main commercial products of the town are black-coal, stone, timber and wine. In 2010, Pécs has been named the Cultural Capital of Europe. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1816, 1789, 7456, T: 7456.→Pécs, Early Christian Mausoleum; Pécs, Heraldic Shield with Runic Writing; Hungarian Runic Script. Pécs, Early Christian Mausoleum – Hungarian archeologists found by chance the greatest early Christian building at Pécs in 1975-1976. The building is in the center of the St István Square, and it is a mausoleum, constructed as a two-story building. The upper level faces east and is a chapel with one aisle. The outer measurements of the building are 18 x 9.5 m; only the base walls have remained. Under the floor of the upper level there is a burial place with three chambers in quite good condition. One chamber, which is in the west, is smaller, and probably was the foreground with a staircase. The middle chamber was a burial place without any decoration. The largest chamber toward the east, which is 4.25 x 4.30 m in size, is richly decorated. They found three sarcophagi in the burial chamber, two of them decorated. They were all broken and there were scattered bones among the ruins. The archeologists reconstructed 14 skeletons from these bones. The walls and the vault of the eastern chamber are in good state, and some biblical stories can be recognized from the wall paintings. The stories suggest Adam and Eve, and Daniel in the lions' den, which are quite unique in Pannonia. According to the archeologists, the mausoleum and the wall paintings were made between 350 and 360 A.D. The building was constructed for a noble person, who was buried in a white marble sarcophagus. The other two sarcophagi were placed there later. The building was still standing in the 5th and 6th centuries, during the Hun and Avar rules. During the 9th and 10th centuries, people moved into the building and broke the sarcophagi to gain more room for themselves. They might have been the Avars. The opened mausoleum is conserved to save the frescos from the changing humidity. It is open to the public for view in a suitable environment. – B: 1020, T: 7663. → Pécs; Pécs, Heraldic Shield with Runic Writing.

Pécs, Heraldic Shield with Runic Writing – In 1985 in Pécs, during the construction of a street gas line, ruins of a medieval Benedictine Order's church were found, noted in the papal list of 1232. Among the ruins, a fragmented escutcheon appeared, carved in stone, the size of a brick. It is an escutcheon with runic inscription, which is supposedly the monastic order's name. Provided this supposition is correct, then a unique Hungarian runic script record was discovered. On the basis of its origin, method and technique of carving, the inscription has been dated to the 14th century. It consists of 9 self-standing signs and 4 ligatures (abbreviations), signifying altogether 35 sounds. This very high sign-saving proportion was, in that age, characteristic only of Hungarian runic script. This runic relic proves that the ancient Hungarian runic script was in use not only in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) but it was the ancestral cultural treasure of the entire Hungarian nation. – B: 1020, T: 7669. → Pécs; Pécs, Early Christian Mausoleum; Hungarian Runic Script.

Pécsi, Ildikó (Polgár, 21 May 1940 - ) – Actress, stage manager. Pécsi, Sebestyén (Sebastian) (Budapest, 29 October 1910 - Budapest, 8 May 1991) – Organist. His higher studies were completed at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, graduating in 1938. He was a student of Zoltán Kodály, and obtained a Degree in organ performance, composition and conducting. From 1940 he was a professor of the Academy of Music, Budapest. Among his students were: György Ligeti, Gábor Lehotka, Endre Virág, Melinda Kistétényi, Frigyes Hidas, György Kurtág and László Lukin. He was organist at the St. Stephen Basilica (St. István Bazilika), Budapest. Pécsi was a performing artist not only in concert halls and churches, but also on radio and TV in many places of the world. His repertoire included works from J.S. Bach, Ferenc (Franz) Liszt, P. Hindemith, C. Franck and Z. Kodály. He was not only an outstanding organist but an eminent teacher as well. He was a recording artist; there are 14 recordings to his credit. His books, teaching and artistic works all did contributed to the wealth of Hungarian culture. He was twice awarded the Golden Ring of the Academy of Music, the title of Merited Artist in 1974, and the Liszt Prizes in 1957. A school and a foundation bear his name in Budapest. – B: 1804, T: 7103.→Hidas, Frigyes; Kurtág, György; Ligeti, György; Lehotka, Gábor; Liszt, Ferenc, Kodály, Zoltán.

Pecz, Samu (Samuel) (Pest, 1 March 1854 - Budapest, 1 September 1922) – Architect, lecturer. He studied at the Budapest and Stuttgart Polytechnics, then at the Vienna School of Arts. From 1878 to 1882 he worked for Frigyes (Frederick) Schulek, later for Alajos (Aloysius) Hauszmann. In 1887 he became an honorary lecturer (privat dozent) and, later, an associate professor at the Budapest Polytechnic; from 1888 until his death, he was full Professor of the Chair of Public Building Works. Earlier on, he designed in a classic approach, later in Neo-Romanesque and Neo-Gothic styles. With his functional, puritan brick-veneer buildings, he created the typical elements of the Budapest townscape. With his plans, he won a number of prizes in competitions in Hungary and abroad. His published writings and completed works include The Unitarian Church and Block of Flats of the Unitarian Parish of Budapest (A budapesti unitárius egyházközség temploma és bérháza) (1886-1887); The Central Supermarket of Budapest (A budapesti központi Vásárcsarnok) (1894-1896); The Naval Academy of Fiume (A fiumei tengerészeti akadémia) (1901-1902), and On the Building of Protestant Churches (A protestáns templomok építéséről) (1888). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Schulek, Frigyes; Hauszmann, Alajos.

Péczeli, József (Joseph) (Pézteli) (Putnok 1750 - Komárom, 4 December 1792) – Poet, writer. He was a descendant of a family of a minister of the Reformed Church. From the Reformed College of Debrecen, where he completed his high school studies, he was sent abroad for further studies (Leipzig, Jena, Bern etc.). On his return, he became Parish Minister in Komárom. Besides his church engagements, he founded the Scholar's Society of Komárom, to strengthen the Hungarian language and literature. József Péczeli was a French-educated writer of the age of Enlightenment, and Editor for the first popular scientific journal General Collection (Mindenek Gyűjtemény), which lasted from 1789 till 1792. He was one of the supporters of the national movement of the nobility around 1790. He became famous mainly for his literary translations, e.g. Voltaire's Zayr (1784) and Henrias (1786). – B: 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7456.

Pédery-Hunt, de Dóra (Budapest, 16 November 1913 - Toronto, Canada, 29 September 2008) – Sculptress, medal designer. She completed her schooling in Budapest, studied sculpting and pattern-design at the Academies of Fine and Applied Arts, and obtained a Masters Degree from the University of Budapest in 1943. She left Hungary in 1945 and she emigrated to Canada and settled in Toronto in 1948, where she taught creative arts and soon established her reputation with superb technical skills. In 1961 she created a cast bronze medal, and in 1976 she designed the Canadian Olympic gold coin. She designed the Queen's portrait for the 1-dollar Canadian coin, nicknamed the "Loonie". This is the first Canadian coin that was designed by a Canadian artist and not by a British one. Her medals/medallions included Canada Council (1961); Canada Centennial Medal (1967); Olympic Cold Coin (1976); Persons Case Medal (1979); National Arts Center Medal; Pearson Medal for United Nations Day (1979); International Year of Peace for Presentation to the United Nations Secretary General (1986); Reach for the Top Trophy; Premier's Award (Ontario); Bata Shoe Museum; Bethune Medal for Presentation to Mao Zedong; John Drainie Award (1968); Géza de Kresz Medal; George Faludy Medal; and the Rudolph Nureyev Medal. Her graphics appeared on Canadian postage stamps. She participated in a number of exhibitions, including the International Exhibitions of Contemporary Medals in the capitals of Europe between 1963 and 1977, among them, Budapest, Helsinki, Krakow, Madrid, Paris, Athens, Rome and The Hague. She also exhibited her work at the Canadian Sculpture Center, Toronto (solo exhibition) in 1999. Dóra Pédery-Hunt was the Canadian delegate to the Fédération Internationale de la Médaille. She introduced the ancient art of medal sculpture to Canada. Her sculptures and medallions are in numerous public collections, including the National Gallery of Canada, the Royal Cabinet of Medals, The Hague, the British Museum and the Smithsonian Institution. She was made Officer of the Order of Canada, and Officer of the Order of Ontario. – B: 1786, T: 7103.

Pedrazzini, Jean Pierre (France, 1927 - Neuilly, France, 11 November 1956) – Reporter. In response to the news of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he arrived in Hungary as a reporter for the Paris Match illustrated magazine. His shocking report of the burial of the victims of the Mosonmagyaróvár atrocities was his first and last report from Hungary. In Budapest, at the siege of the party headquarters on Republic (Köztársaság) Square, he was taking pictures among the freedom fighters, when machinegun fire struck him. He was given first aid at the Péterfy Sándor Street Hospital, where they found 14 bullets in his body. A Red Cross airplane transported him to Paris on 2 November to the Neuilly Clinic, where he passed away. On the day of his burial, the President of the French Republic decorated him with great honor. His passing was remembered by the French newspapers in this manner: "On the altar of freedom one nation's heroism was too little this time...but this unparalleled heroism was immortalized for us by the photographs of Jean Pierre Pedrazzini sent us from Budapest. With his camera he stood in the front lines like the soldiers. We think of him with respect and we pledge that he'll remain a model of our profession." – B: 1020, T: 7644. → Freedom Fight of 1956.

Peer Codex – A prayer book of Premonstrian origin, prepared for Simon Csepeli in 1526, the handiwork of six unknown individuals. Its contents are similar to that of the other prayer booklets: it contains prayers, meditations, legends and hymns. Its notable parts are: András Vásárhelyi's Mária Song, Ferenc Apáti's Song of Reproach, and the "protecting" prayers (against pestilence, arrow shots, etc). His litany written in rhythmic prose is also noteworthy. Jakab Peer of the Piarist Order was its proprietor, hence the name. – B: 1136, T: 7659. → Codex Literature.

Peéry, Rezső (Ralph) (Limbacher) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 27 March 1910 - Stuttgart Germany, 11 November 1977) – Writer, journalist. His university studies were at Pozsony, Prague and Paris. In 1832 he obtained a BA Degree in Education in Hungarian and French Literature and in Philosophy. He was one of the founders and contributor of Sickle (Sarló) periodical. At first, his writings appeared in leftist journals. However, from the mid-1930s he popularized bourgeois ideas. For a while he taught at a Hungarian High School in Pozsony; in the meantime, he became one of the determining figures of Hungarian journalism in Slovakia. After the First Vienna Award of 1938, he remained in Pozsony, where he became a spiritual leader on the Hungarians remaining in Slovakia – who refuted Fascism. In 1945, at the time when Hungarians in Slovakia suffered the deprivation of their civil rights, he wrote memoranda of their behalf. As its consequence, he moved to Hungary in 1946. For a while, he was a clerk at the office of the Social Democratic Party; then he taught at high schools in Mosonmagyaróvár, and later in Sopron. After the fall of the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, he emigrated first to Austria, then to Germany, where he became a librarian at the Pedagogical College of Reutlingen. He published his writings in Hungarian émigré journals; he also worked for Radio Free Europe. He was a well-respected writer among the émigré Hungarians in the West. His works include Fringe-Hungarians in the Current of Time (Peremmagyarok az idő sodrában) (1941); Réforme et révolution en Pannonie (Reform and Revolution in Pannonia) (Brussels, 1862), and Requiem for a Country (Requiem egy országrészért) (Munich, 1975). – B: 1890, T: 7103. → Radio Free Europe.

Pege, Aladár (Budapest, 8 October 1939 - Budapest, 23 September 2006) – Double bass virtuoso and composer. He learned the instrument from his father. He studied at the Béla Bartók Conservatory of Music (1958-1961), and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1964-1969), and earned a Diploma of Classical Bass. He attended the master's course of Rainer Zepperitz in West Berlin (1975-1978). From 1978 he was a professor at the Ferenc Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. His musical career commenced in 1963 with his own jazz trio at the Festival of Bled, followed by performances with his various groups, in festivals at Warsaw, Prague, Berlin, Montreux and Vienna. In 1982 he was a guest soloist in the Herbie Hancock Ensemble in Carnegie Hall, New York, with outstanding success. He played with Charly Antolini, Albert Mangelsdorff (1983), Attila Zoller (1984), Karl Ratzer (1985) and Aki Takase (1986), as well as in different duos. He was the best European soloist at the Montreux Jazz Festival in 1970. He issued four records in Hungary and one abroad. He was held as the "Paganini of Double-Bass". He was a recipient of the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1977), the title of Merited Artist (1986), and the Kossuth Prize (2000). – B: 0874, 1787, T: 7103.

Pekár, Dezső (Desider) (Arad, 17 November 1873 - Budapest, 4 July 1953) – Geophysicist. He completed his higher studies at the University of Budapest. From 1895 he was demonstrator for the famous physicist Loránd Eötvös. From 1901 he was on the Semsey scholarship of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1908 he participated in the experiment by Eötvös to demonstrate with great accuracy the ratio of heavy and inert mass. In 1915 he was appointed senior geophysicist. From 1919 he was the first director of the Loránd Eötvös Geophysical Institute (Eötvös Loránd Geofizikai Intézet). In the 1920s he led geophysical expeditions into India and France. He constructed a small pendulum suitable for fieldwork, which is named after him: the Pekár Pendulum. From 1922 he was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; but in 1949 he was retro-rated as “consultative member” which was virtually tantamount to having been locked out of the Academy. His work co-authored with Loránd Eötvös and Jenő Fekete entitled Beiträge zum Gesetz der Proportionalität von Trägheit und Gravität (Contributions to the Law of Proportionality between Inertia and Gravity) in: Annalen der Physik, Leipzig (1922)- He earned the Benecke Prize of the University of Göttingen. – B: 2129, T: 7456. →Eötvös, Baron Loránd; Fekete, Jenő.

Pekár, Gyula (Julius) (Debrecen, 8 November 1867 - Budapest, 19 August 1937) – Writer and politician. He studied Law in Budapest, Vienna and Paris. Thereafter, he became a judge but he soon abandoned Law in favor of literature. He became its model representative of official culture-politics. He was elected as member of the Kisfaludy Literary Society in 1901. He was Member of Parliament for the Liberal (Christian National Unification) Party of the United Front (1901-1918) and later, from 1918 to 1935, for the program of NEP (National Unity Party). During the times of the 1919 Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, he was President of the so-called White House Organization. Gyula Pekár played a role in the coup d 'etat of István (Stephen) Friedrich on 6 August 1919; then, for several terms, he was Undersecretary of State in the Ministry of Public Education and Culture. From 27 August 1919 until 24 November 1919, he was a Minister without Portfolio; a member of the Petőfi Society from 1901; then from 1920, its President; he was also a member of the Turán Society, and played a leading role in the Hungarian Society of Foreign Affairs. In his youth, he was an outstanding athlete and rower. His main works include Lieutenant Dodo (Dodó hadnagy) comedy; staged in the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház) (1899); The Woman with Lily (A liliomos asszony), novel (1903); Danton, drama (1921), and The Talisman (A talizmán) novel (1937). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Pekár, Imre (rozsnyói) (Emeric) (Rozsnyó now Rožňava, Slovakia, 8 December 1838 - Budapest, 12 July 1923) – Mechanical engineer. Between 1854 and 1857 he studied at the Vienna Polytechnic. He earned his degree in Mechanical Engineering in Karlsruhe, Germany. In 1859 he went to England. After having mastered the English language, he was employed as an engineer. His firm also sent him to Paris. In 1863 he returned to Hungary and opened a private office, then became the technical supervisor of the István Mill (István Gőzmalom) in Debrecen. Under the leadership of Imre Pekár, the flourmill’s production multiplied, and was appointed Technical Director. During his years in Debrecen he taught at the School of Economics. In 1874 he returned to private practice. In possession of his patent for flour quality control, he worked all over Europe. His procedure became known as Pekarising. In 1881 he was commissioned by the Hungarian Government to tour the United States, after being on the jury of the World Fair of Paris in 1878. Between 1881 and 1909, he was Director of the Hungarian Discount and Exchange Bank. – B: 1123, 1031, T: 7390.

Pekáry, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 1 February 1905 - Budapest, 25 August 1981) – Painter. He studied at the School of Arts in Budapest under Gyula (Julius) Rudnay. His career already began with several appreciated works. In 1932 he received the Marcell Nemes scholarship and, in 1934, he won a silver medal at the Milano Triennale. At the Paris World Fair of 1937, he earned the Diplome d'Honneur; in the 1940, at the Milano Triennale, he won the Grand Prix. From 1935 to 1937 he worked as a teacher at the New York School of the Arts. From 1940 to 1943 he pursued further studies in Italy on a scholarship from Budapest. In Rome, he prepared scenery for numerous operas and ballets, and costume designs for works by Zoltán Kodály and Igor Stravinsky, in cooperation with the ballet dancer Aurél Milloss and composer Sándor (Alexander) Veres. During 1941-1942, he designed for the ballets of the Teatro delle Arti and the Teatro del Opera of Rome; he also designed the stage scene for the opera Woyzeck by Alban Berg - Büchner. His important large-scale works include Alba Regia, a tapestry, for the Town Hall of Székesfehérvár (1937); Saint Stephen, tapestry, in the Ferenc Móra Museum of Szeged (1938). In 1945, Pekáry prepared a scenary for the comedy Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi) by Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz for the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. He also prepared scenery for a number of theaters abroad, e.g. Kunliga Teatern, Stockholm, (1948), Maggio Musicale, Florence (1959), and Staatsoper, Vienna (1962). Apart from the painting of frescoes, textile art and scenery designs, he prepared panel paintings as well. His art is characterized by a uniform style, medieval Italian art traditions, craft, and Mediterranean scenes, showing the true with the false, in a quasi fairy-tale, vital representation. The most frequent theme of his paintings is the Bible, and the events of Hungarian folklore and history, e.g. Eden (1975); Sunday (1973), and the Irregular Troops of 1848 ('48-as szabadsapat) (1974). The venues of his exhibitions include Tokyo (1937); the Ernst Museum of Budapest (1961, 1975); Turin, Italy (1965, 1967); Zürich (1966, 1971), and Florence, Italy (1968). His works are held in the National Gallery, Budapest, the Móra Ferenc Museum of Szeged, the Janus Pannonius Museum of Pécs; many are in private and public collections as well in Hungary and abroad. He also deals with the students of the Operetta Academy, the Art School of the Operetta Theater. He is a recording artist as well; his latest CD Album appeared in 2009, entitled This is Operetta (Ez Operett). He acted in the series of TV2 entitled In Good Times and Bad (Jóban, rosszban). Peller is a popular star in the Hungarian operetta world. He is a recipient of the Nivo Prize (2002), and the Marshal's Baton Prize (2009). – 1031, 2118, T: 7103.

Pen (karám) – A rectangular enclosure, either fenced in with pickets or wooden planks, or hedged off. It is usually closed on one side, and often on three sides, with a roofed structure. It used to be winter quarters; but now it is an all year-round pen for cattle, horses, sheep and pigs. The back of its long wall usually faces north or northeast and is reinforced with wooden planks, mud-cakes or manure. Its two shorter sides are also closed in. Only one side of the footed barn is open, facing the courtyard. Originally the pen was the most advanced structure used in areas of extensive animal husbandry. It was widely known and used in those localities, especially in the Great Plains. Even at present the Hungarian gray herd still winters in such a pen in the Hortobágy. – B: 1134, T: 3240

Penavin, Olga (Mrs. Emil Penavin, née Olga Borsy) (Debrecen, 15 July 1916 - Újvidék, now Novi Sad, Serbia, 25 October 2001) – Linguist, folklorist. Her higher studies were at the University of Debrecen, where she studied Hungarian, Latin and Italian literature, for a B.A. Degree in 1939. She taught at the Dóczy Reformed Girls' High School in 1940; from 1941 she taught Latin language and Hungarian literature in Szabadka (recovered by Hungary in April 1941 and lost again in October 1944; now Subotica, Serbia). She taught at the Teachers' Training College of Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia) from 1947; from 1957 at the University of Újvidék and, from 1974 after retiring, she continued to teach linguistics. She obtained a Ph.D. Degree from the University of Göttingen in 1956. Her main field of research was linguistics and folklore. She was a corresponding member of the Finn-Hungarian Scientific Institute, and that of the Hungarian Linguistic Institution, as well as Hungarian Folklore Institute. Her lifework is extensive and important. It includes Hungarian Folk-tales in Yugoslavia (Jugoszláviai Magyar népmesék) (1971); Szekler List of Words (Székely szójegyzék) (1980); Collection of Geographical Names of Szenttamás (Szenttamás földrajzi neveinek adattára) (1981); Hungarian Dialects in Yugoslavia (Jugoszláviai Magyar nyelvjárások) (1982), and Folk Calendar (Népi Kalendárium) (1988). She received a number of awards, including the Bálint Csúry Memorial Medal (1979), the Order of the Star of Merit of the Hungarian Peoples' Republic (1988), the Kornél Szenteleky Prize (1989), and the Üzenet Prize (1995). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7103.

Pentecostal Evangelical Community – At the turn of the 19th to the 20th century, this community was organized in the Anglo-Saxon countries from members of various churches and prayer groups. In Hungary, it has been active since 1923. It is a charismatic Protestant community. According to its confession, the pouring out of the Holy Spirit and its gift is true for our age. Its forms of manifestation are the same as at the first Pentecost and the age of the Apostles. It can be experienced as the Baptism of the Holy Spirit, which makes possible for men to possess special abilities (charismas), for example speaking in tongues. They believe in the imminent return of Jesus. In their services, they rule out order and set liturgy. A believer becomes a member by the baptism of immersion and only such people can take communion. An important part of their faith is the power to perform miracles, healing and prophecy. They are engaged mostly in charitable activities. They have about 5500 members in Hungary and have 3 diaconal institutes. – B: 1042, T: 7390.

People's Commissar – (1) Was the name of Ministries' Directors in the Soviet Union between 1917 and 1946. Their position was identical with that of a minister. (2) Members of the Revolutionary Governing Council during the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919. After its demise, the ten captured People's Commissars were prosecuted for the mass murders committed during the dictatorship of the proletariat. Four were sentenced to death and six to life imprisonment; but the death sentences were suspended. According to the terms of the prisoner exchange agreement made with the USSR in 1921, all of them were allowed to go to the Soviet Union. – B: 1134, 1231, T: 7665.→ Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

People's Courts, Hungarian (Tribunals) – They were created in 1945, in order to prosecute and punish all those responsible for war crimes, crimes against the people, and political crimes. Already on 22 December 1944, the Provisional Government in Debrecen promised to punish war crimes. The No. 81/1945 M. E. Order-in-Council was announced on 5 February 1945. Originally, the 25 people's courts were considered as temporary ones until ordinary courts could function again. Actually they functioned until 1 April 1950. The 25 People's Courts in major towns across the county consisted of 7, and later, 24 members. The President of the whole organization was Ákos Major, and Ferenc (Francis) Szabó was the public prosecutor. The judge and lawyers were appointed by the Minister of Justice, while the people's jury members were delegated by the five political parties, united in the Independence Front and by the National Council of Trade Unions. Appeals, in theory, could be made to the National Council of the People's Courts. The first sentences of the People's Court were carried out on 4 February 1945 at the Oktogon Square in Budapest, where Péter Rotyis and Sándor (Alexander) Szivós were hanged in public. The courts soon became an instrument for political purposes in the hands of the Communists, backed by the Soviet military. During their existence, the People's Courts handled 59,424 persons; among them 26,997 received either the death penalty – 447, (actually executed 168) – or a prison sentence of 1-10 years duration; 14,527 were acquitted. The rest were extradited to other countries or died during the investigation. – B: 1031, 1020, T: 7665, 7103.

People's Republic – A Communist-controlled Government system established in the Soviet occupied areas of Europe after World War I and World War II. Hungary twice had this form of government: (1) Between 21 March 1919 and 1 August 1919. After the loss of World War I, with the so-called “Aster Revolution” (Őszirózsás Forradalom), power ended up in the hands of leftist extremists. This group, without any elections, appointed by its own decision, a “National Council” which, on 16 November 1918, formulated a “People's Resolution”, which was to serve as the legal basis for governing the country as a Republic. The President of the Republic was Count Mihály (Michael) Károlyi. However, due to the ultimatum of the Entente Powers on 1 March, 1919 Károlyi handed over the governing of Hungary to the leftist radicals, to Béla Kun and associates, who announced the formation of the Council (Soviet) Republic in Hungary on 21 March, 1919. It was a People's Republic with Communist dictatorship. It collapsed on 1 August 1919. (2) Following World War II, Hungary was under Soviet occupation, and the Communist Party, in a fraudulent election, grasped the power; they were eager to transform Hungary into a People's Democracy. On the basis of Bill XX. 1949, the law passed by Parliament formulated Hungary's new constitution and determined Hungary's form of government as a “People's Republic”. This was followed by the organization of the (Soviet) council system from the village administration up to the President of the Republic. This alien form of government could only be maintained by the presence of the Soviet occupational forces and, in the crumbling days of the Communist system, Hungary became a Republic in the classical sense, on 23 October 1989. – B: 1078, 1230, 1230, T: 7665. → Károlyi, Count Mihály; Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Kun, Béla; Szamuely, Tibor; Blue Slip Election; Rákosi, Mátyás, Nagy, Imre, Freedom Fight of 1956; Kádár, János; Kádár, Period of.

Perambulation (Beating the Bounds) – A pre-Christian ritual of traversing the fields after spring sowing, to protect them from evil, frost and hail; it is a custom adopted by Christianity. In Hungary, as late as the beginning of the 20th century, it was the custom, to “carry the Cross” in the company of altar boys, and the village folk carrying crucifixes and church banners. The priest in vestments led the procession to the freshly sowed fields. – B: 1134, T: 7617.

Perczel, Miklós (Nicholas) (Bonyhád, 15 December 1812 - Baja, 14 March 1904) – Honvéd colonel and politician, younger brother of Mór Perczel, older brother of László Perczel. He was strongly influenced by his tutor, the great poet, Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty. After finishing his studies, he worked as a deputy clerk for County Baranya and later, as an administrator. He took an active part in the political struggles of the Reform Era. Legal action was taken against him because of political agitation; but in 1840 the proceedings were abandoned. In the Diet of 1848, he was the representative of County Tolna. In the autumn of 1848, with his brother Mór, he began organizing the Zrinyi troop as major of the National Guard. In the following months, he served in his brother's army and took part in the Battle of Mór, followed by the Battles of Szolnok and Cegléd, and later, in April 1849, in the fighting against the Serbians of the Banat area of Southern Hungary (Délvidék). Here he clashed with General János Damjanich, who had him arrested for disobedience. After the downfall of the War of Independence against Habsburg rule, he escaped to Turkish territory. In 1851 he emigrated to the US, where he worked as a farmer and a language tutor. In the meantime, he was sentenced to death in absentia in Hungary. In 1861 he joined the northern forces in the American Civil War, as a Colonel, fighting against the Southerners. After the 1867 Compromise between Austria and Hungary, he returned to Hungary. Between 1868 and 1887, he was Lord Lieutenant of County Baranya; from 1887 to 1891 Member of Parliament, representing the town of Pécs. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Perczel, Mór; Vörösmarty, Mihály; Damjanich, János; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Perczel, Mór (Maurice) (Bonyhád, 11 November 1811 - Bonyhád, 23 May 1899) – Honvéd general, brother of Miklós and László Perczel. He started his military career as a cadet in the Austrian Imperial Army. In 1830, in support of an attempt to desert to the Poles, he started a movement among the Imperial soldiers; for this he was imprisoned, and only the intervention of the City of Pest and County Tolna succeeded in freeing him. In the county's political life and from 1843 in the feudal Diets, he advocated radical ideas. He was elected to be the representative of the City of Buda. From 30 April to 20 July 1848, Perczel worked for the Ministry of the Interior as Undersecretary of State, then as Departmental Head. On 1 September, he formed the Zrinyi Freedom Troop, which played a decisive role in achieving the victory at Ozora on 7 October 1848 where, together with General Artúr Görgey, he captured the rear-guard of Jelačić's forces. On 16 September, he became Honvéd Major; on 1 November, General. From October to December he was Commander of the Hungarian forces of the Mura Interfluve. On 30 December, he lost the battle at Mór. In 1849, during the final phase of the War of Independence against the Habsburg rule, as commander of the forces along the River Tisza, with his troop movements, he hindered the Austrian military operations. From 10 March to 8 June, he was Commander of the IV Army Corps. In April he fought victoriously against the rebellious Serbian troops; on 8-9 July 1849, he was Commander of the X. Army Corps. Because of the repeated conflict about the position of Supreme Command, he was called back on 30 July 1849. After the surrender at Világos, Perczel emigrated to Turkey, then he lived in England for a while, and later on the Island of Jersey. In his absence, he was sentenced to death and hanged in effigie on 21 September 1851. Already during the War of Independence, he felt he was treated unfairly by General Görgey, and even more so by Kossuth; thus, toward Kossuth his relationship became increasingly acrimonious. His antipathy to Kossuth caused him, on his return to Hungary, to join the side of Ferenc (Francis) Deák, the architect of the Compromise of 1867. He attempted to lead the Honvéd Army Units, imbued with the 1848 independence spirit, over to the camp of the compromise, using his personal authority. Later, he worked for a while as a Member of Parliament, finally leaving politics. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Perczel, Miklós; Görgey, Artúr; Kossuth, Lajos; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Deák Ferenc.

Perényi, Eszter (Esther) (Budapest, 5 December 1943 - ) - Musician, violinist. As a teenager, she decided to become a musician, following her younger brother, Miklós (Nicholas) Perényi. She studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, as a student of Dénes (Dennis) Kovács. She appeared in international

There are some 20 feature films to his credit, including The Queen's Hussar (A királyné huszára) (1935); The Wild Rose (A vadrózsa) (1939); The Gyurkovics Boys (A Gyurkovics fiúk) (1942); The Fatal Kiss (A halálos csók) (1942); Hungarian Eagles (Magyar sasok) (1943), and The Relatives (Rokonok) (1954). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Perényi, Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 5 January 1948 - ) – Cello virtuoso. As a talented child, he was already a pupil at the age of seven in the preparatory section of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he was first a student of Miklós (Nicholas) Zsámboki and, later of Ede (Edward) Banda; he also studied performing art and composition analysis. He gave his first concert (aged 9) at the Music Academy in 1957. Afterwards, he took part in Enrico Mainardi's Master classes at Salzburg, Luzern, and at the Santa Cecilia Academy of Rome, where he obtained an Artist's Diploma in 1962. In 1963 he won Second Prize in the Pablo Casals Cello Competition held in Budapest. Then he was invited to participate in the Pablo Casals Master classes in 1965 and 1966, and later between 1969 and 1972. During his career, Perényi has played at concerts world wide, appeared at the Lucerne and Marlborough Festivals, also in Rome, Munich, Prague, Salzburg, Vienna, Warsaw, Berlin, in Japan and China, North and South America. As a chamber-music partner of pianist András Schiff, he appeared in the Schubertiad at Hohenems, Austria, and also at Wigmore Hall of London, the Edinburgh Festival, and the Ruhr Festival. He often gives concerts with the Keller String Quartet. Since 1974, Perényi has taught at the Academy of Music, Budapest. In addition to giving concerts, he is also engaged in composition. His repertoire ranges from Baroque to the music of the 20th century. He is a world-renowned cello virtuoso, who has made a number of records. The albums prepared in conjunction with András Schiff, featuring all the cello works of Beethoven, earned him the Cannes Classical Award in 2005. Perényi has received several distinctions: the Liszt Prize in 1970, the Merited Artist title in 1980, the Outstanding Artist title in 1984, the Bartók-Pásztory Prize in 1987, the Kossuth Prize in 2007; while in France, he won the title of Chevalier de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres. Perényi, Péter (ca. 1502 - January 1548) – Guardian of the Crown, Voivode of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1519 he was the Bailiff of County Temes, and Chief Captain of Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania). He was present at the Battle of Mohács (1526). First, he was a follower of King János I (John) Szapolyai (János Szapolya, 1526-1540). In 1527 he became Voivode of Transylvania and Bailiff of County Abaúj. At the end of 1527, he sided with Emperor and King Ferdinánd I (1626-1564), and handed over the Hungarian Crown to him. His reward was the town of Sárospatak, and the revenue of the Catholic Bishopric of Eger. In 1529, he supported again King János I, and he escorted Queen Isabella to Hungary. In 1540 he changed side again in favor of Ferdinánd I, who appointed him Royal Chancellor. In 1542 he was suspected of getting the Crown for himself with the help of the Turks. So Ferdinand captured him and kept him in captivity until his death. Perényi was an ardent supporter of the Reformation on his estates. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Mohács Battles; Isabella, Queen.

Perliczy, János Dániel (John Daniel) (Késmárk, now Kežmarok, Slovakia, 29 October 1705 - Apátfalva (east of Makó), 6 April 1778) – Physician. He obtained a Degree in Philosophy from the University of Wittenberg in 1727, and a Medical Degree from the University of Utrecht in 1728. At first, he was Town Physician in Selmecebánya (now Banská Stiavnica, Slovakia), later, County Physician of County Nógrád. He was a member of several German Scientific Societies. He developed the plan of Hungarian medical training. A number of his medical studies appeared in the Annals of the Berlin Scientific Society. His works include Disputatio inauguralis medica de naturarum diversorum...(Utrecht, 1728) and Medicina pauperum...(Buda, 1740). – B: 1730, 0907, T: 7456.

Perlrott-Csaba, Vilmos (Békéscsaba 2 February 1880 - Budapest, 23 January 1955) - Painter. He studied at the School of Industrial Design, then at József (Joseph) Koszta, and later at the Nagybánya Artist Colony (now Baia Mare, Transylvania, in Romania). He attended the Julian Academy of Paris for some time, where his masters were J.P. Laurens and H. Matisse. After his journey to Spain in 1911, he returned to Hungary. Later he was one of the founders of the Art Colony of Kecskemét. His early works, e.g. Gypsies in the Barn (Cigányok a csűrben) (1904) reflect the style of the Nagybánya School, while his later works show the influence of El Greco, Fauvism and Cubism. Some of his drawings are revolutionary experiments, such as The Interior of the Church in Lőcse (Lőcsei templom belseje). The influence of Cézanne and those of the Braque are present in his landscapes and still-life works, respectively. Later he returned to post-impressionism. The picture with nudes from the 1930s shows Gauguin's influence. His other works include Self-portrait with Sculpture (Önarckép szoborral) (ca. 1910); Adoration of the Magi (A három királyok imádása) (1914); Descent from the Cross (Levétel a keresztről) (mid-1920s); Hillside with Autumnal Tree (Domboldal őszi fával) (ca. 1935); Lamentation (Siratás), lithography (1921), and Christ - Resurrection (Krisztus - Feltámadás), lithography, (1922). – B: 0934, 1031, T: 7103.→Kosztá, József; Nagybánya Artist Colony.

Pertik, Ottó (Pest, 11 December 1852 - Budapest, 27 February 1913) – Physician, pathologist. He earned his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1876 where, from 1876 to 1880, he was a demonstrator in the Department of Anatomy. From 1880-1884 he pursued further studies at the University of Strasburg. In 1885 he was a physician at the Red Cross Hospital, then Pathological Anatomist in the St. István (Stephen) Hospital in Budapest. In 1887 he became a titular honorary lecturer. In 1890 he was Titular Professor in the Department of Pathological Histology; in 1895 Professor of Pathological Anatomy, and Director of the No. 2 Institute of Pathological Anatomy, Budapest. Pertik became a member of the National Council of Public Health; Editor for the journals Magyar Orvosi Archivum and Ungarisches Archiv für Medizin (Hungarian Medical Archive), and also edited the Yearbook of the Royal Medical Society, Budapest. He carried out research work in Bacteriology and, in 1891, founded the Metropolitan Bacteriological Institute. He rendered great service in the successful fight against the 1887 typhoid fever epidemic, and the 1892 great cholera epidemic. He was the first to describe the clinical picture of diverticulum, later, named after him. Ottó Pertik was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1899). His works include Report on the Results of the Bacteriological Studies Conducted during the Cholera Epidemic (Jelentés a cholera-járvány alatt tett bakteriológiai vizsgálatok eredményeiről) (1893) and Epithelioma adamantinum malignum (1897). – B: 1730, 0907, T: 7456.

Peskó, Zoltán Jr. (Budapest, 1937 - ) – Musician and conductor. He comes from a family of Lutheran church musicians. After completing his musical studies at the Academy of Music of Budapest in 1962, he began his career as a conductor and composer of film and stage music at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), and at the Hungarian Television. He emigrated to the West in 1964, and attended master classes in Italy and Switzerland with Petrassi (composing), and with Celibidache, Franco Ferrara and Pierre Boulez (conducting). Between 1966 and 1973 he worked for the Deutsche Staatsoper, Berlin, under Lorin Maazel, and also taught at Berlin's Hochschule für Musik und darstellende Kunst. He made his debut at Milan's La Scala in 1970, which marked the beginning of an international career, conducting e.g. the Berlin Philharmonic, the BBC Symphony Orchestra, and the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam. As a guest conductor, Peskó appeared not only in Europe, but also in the USA, South America, and the former Soviet Union. He was principal conductor of the Teatro Comunale in Bologna in 1973 (with Pierre Boulez), and the Teatro La Fenice in Venice three years later. Between 1978 and 1983 he led the Orchestra of the Italian Radio (RAI) in Milan. Thereafter, he became a freelance conductor. From 1996 to 1999 he was General Music Director of the Deutsche Oper am Rhein at Düsseldorf-Duisburg. His work as concert and opera conductor comprises the entire spectrum of the repertoire, from Renaissance to Avant-garde. Between 2001 and 2005 he was Music Director of the Lisbon Opera House, and chief conductor of the Portuguese Symphony Orchestra. In recent years he conducted at music festivals in Baden Baden, Berlin, Budapest, Pozsony (Bratislava), Cologne, Lisbon, Milan (La Scala), Rome, Venice and Vienna. He made numerous recordings (CBS, Sony, Supraphon, Hungaroton, Wergo) and appeared on radio. He was awarded the German Record Prize (Deutsche Schallplattenpreis) in August 1993 and January 2000. He is one of the most successful Hungarian musicians and conductors in recent times. – B: 0878, T: 7456. → Peskó, Zoltán Sr.

Peskó, Zoltán Sr. (Peschko) (Zsolna, now Zilina, Slovakia, 24 August 1903 - Budapest. 17 April 1967) – Organist, composer. He conducted his higher studies at the Ferenc Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he was student of Dezső (Desider) Antalffy-Zsiross, Albert Siklós and József Thoma. He taught at the Teachers' Training College, Sopron (1927-1929), then became organist of the Fásor Street Evangelical-Lutheran Church and its High School in Budapest. In 1938 and 1939 he was on study trip in Germany. With Jenő Ádám, he founded the Protestant Choir. From 1958 to his retirement in 1963, he taught organ at the Béla Bartók Music School. He was a promoter of German Baroque-Music (Pachelbel, Bach) and that of new Hungarian organ music (E. Major, Z. Gárdonyi). His studies include The Principles of Correct Organ-building (A helyes orgonaépítés elvei) (1939); The Past and Present of Hungarian Protestant Church Music (A magyar protestáns egyházi zene múltja és jelene) (1941), and Evangelical Churches (Evangélikus Templomok) (1944). – B: 0883, T: 7103. → Antalffy-Zsiross, Dezső; Ádám, Jenő; Peskó, Zoltán Jr.; Siklós, Albert.

Pesthi, Gábor (Pesti, Pesti Mizsér) (16th century; last date: 1548) – Writer, Bible-translator. He was the first to consciously propagate Hungarian literature. He studied at the University of Vienna. It was there that he became a follower of the teachings of Erasmus of Rotterdam. He aimed at producing an unadulterated version of the Bible in Hungarian. He translated it into literary Hungarian language and, in 1536, published the four Gospels under the title: The New Testament in the Hungarian Language (Új Testamentum magyar nyelven). He translated Aesop's Fables into Hungarian and – also in 1536 – published it under the title Fables of Aesop (Esopus fabulái). This work was the first significant opus of Hungarian literary translations and, at the same time, one of the first Hungarian productions of world prose literature. He was an artistic stylist, striving for simplicity. His Dictionary of Six Languages (Latin, Italian, French, Czech, German and Hungarian) was published in 1538. – B: 1138, 1157, T: 7659.

Pesti, József, S.J. (Joseph) (Győr, 3 March 1919 - Buenos Aires, 30 December, 1997) – Missionary, historian and specialist in prehistory. After his final high school examinations he joined the Jesuit Order in 1938, completed his Theological Studies at Budapest, Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), Pécs and American Universities. He was ordained in 1948. He obtained a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest in 1952. After World War II, his superiors sent him to Rome for the completion of his theological and teaching qualifications. He was in Switzerland in 1956 and, in 1957, he was sent to Argentina to bolster pastoral works among the émigrés. He founded the St István (St. Stephen) Society and the St László (Ladislás) College in Buenos Aires, and managed the Catholic Hungarian Mission. He taught Philosophy at the Salvador University of Buenos Aires. In 1964 he moved to the USA and taught Philosophy at Charlotte Hall Military Academy. In 1990 he returned to Hungary and worked in Kalocsa and Budapest. In December 1997 he visited his old flock in Argentina, to be with them for Christmas, but he fell ill and died. One the aspects of his work was the research into the origins of the history of the Hungarians, as well as expounding on Hungarian culture-politics together with affirming Hungarian self-assurance. He left Argentina on the invitation of the University of Salvador to teach the history of the Ural-Altaic peoples. In it, he saw more opportunity to study and to teach Hungarian history. He went on a lecture tour in 1980, to reach dispersed Hungarians all over the world. On the above subjects, several of his discourses were published. His works include On the Edge of the Volcano (A vulkán peremén) (1952, 1956); Political Poesy from Hungary 1952-1956 (Politikai költemények Magyarországból, 1952-1956) (1952-1956), and “What do you want with Ancient History...?” „Mit akartok az őstörténettel...?” (Buenos Aires, 1982). – B: 0945, T: 7675, 7103.

Pesovár, Ferenc (Francis) (Herend, 23 April 1930 - Veszprém, 27 February 1983) – Folklorist in dance and music, ethnographer, museologist. From 1950 to 1955 he studied at the Department of Museology and Ethnography of the University of Budapest. From 1954 he was a research student at the Ethnographic Museum. From 1955 he was an associate of the Kiskun Museum at Kiskunfélegyháza. From 1957 until his death, he worked as a scientific associate of the István Király Museum of Székesfehérvár. Apart from his scientific research, interpreting the dance tradition of Transdanubia, his collections extended to the entire Hungarian ethnic area of the Carpathian Basin and Central Europe. Outstanding are his collections of dances and dance music of Transylvania, which encompassed our knowledge about the whole area under discussion. His works include Dancing Masters in the Villages of County Szatmár (Táncmesterek a Szatmári Falvakban) (1959-1960); Folk Dances in County Fejér (Fejér megyei népi táncok)(1960); Dancing in the Life of the Magyar People (A magyar nép táncélete) (1978), and Shepherd Looking for his Sheep (A juhait kereső pásztor) (1983). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Folk Art; Dance House Movement.

Petelei, István (Stephen) (Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mureș, Romania, 13 September 1852 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 5 January 1910) – Writer. In 1872 he enrolled in the course in Philosophy at the University of Budapest. From 1880 he worked as a journalist in Kolozsvár, first for the paper East (Kelet), later for Kolozsvár Bulletin (Kolozsvári Közlöny). In the same year he became a member of the Petőfi Society. From 1886 to 1891 he was Editor for the paper Kolozsvár. Petelei was the dedicated organizer of Transylvanian literary life. In his short stories and sketches, he featured the life of the Transylvanian small provincial towns with great artistry, usually in strange, dark colors, describing the people choking in the depressing atmosphere of the small towns, longing to escape. The critics for a long time surmised Russian influences in his artistry, though, in reality, they were peculiar Transylvanian characteristics. Because of his serious illness, from 1891 on he was living in seclusion at Marosvásárhely, and finally he had to move to the mental hospital of Kolozsvár, where he died. He was a member of the Petőfi Society, the Zsigmond Kemény Society, and the Transylvanian Literary Society (Erdélyi irodalmi Társaság), Kolozsvár. His works include Crosses (Keresztek) (1882); My Street (Az én utcám) (1886); Clouds (Felhők) (1897); Country People (Vidéki emberek) (1898); Life (Az élet) (1905), and the posthumously published novel, The Nightingale (A fülemüle) (1886). In Marosvásárhely a Street bears his name. – B: 0883, 1257, 1068, T: 7456.

Petényi, Géza (Budapest, 28 October 1889 - Budapest, 4 September 1965) – Physician. In 1914 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest. During World War I (1914-1918) he was Medical Officer; from 1918 to 1924, physician in the White Cross Children's Hospital in Budapest. In 1922 he became an honorary lecturer; in 1922 and 1923 acting Director of one of its Clinics; from 1924 to 1926 Chief Physician there; and from 1937 to 1945, its Head Physician and Director. In 1945 and 1946 he was Chief Physician of the National Children's Hospital. Between 1946 and 1965 he was Professor of Pediatrics in the Medical School of the University of Budapest; from 1949 Professor and Head of the School and, from 1946, Director of No. 2 Pediatric Clinic. He was engaged in the study of rickets, childhood infectious diseases and the treatment of tuberculosis with antibiotics. His works include On Poliomyelitis (A poliomyelitisről) (1934) and Pediatrics (Gyermekgyógyászat) (1955, 3rd enlarged edition. 1961). He was one of the leading pediatricians of his age. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1949, ordinary 1960). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1950. – B: 1730, 1777, 1160, T: 7456.

Péter, Gábor (Gabriel) (Benjamin Eisenberger) (Újfehértó, 14 May 1906 - Budapest, 23 January 1993) – Politician, political Chief of Police. Originally, he worked as a tailor, and joined the workers' movement in the 1920s. He became a Communist Party member in 1931, and participated in the work of the Red Aid (Vörös Segély), and that of the Trade Union's opposition. In 1943 he became a member of the leadership of the Peace Party (Békepart). From January 1945 he was the leader of the Political Department of the Capital City Police; later, that of the State Defense Detachment (Államvédelmi Osztály – ÁVO), and subsequently, leader of the State Security Police (State Defense Authority – Államvédelmi Hatóság – AVH). He had a decisive role in the preparation of Communist mock-trials after the Communist political take-over in 1948, e.g in the Rajk-trial. In 1952 he was dismissed from his high position and was expelled from the Communist Party (Magyar Dolgozók Pártja – MDP). On 3 January 1953 he was arrested in the villa of Rákosi, and sentenced for life by the Military Tribune; in 1957 the sentence was commuted to 14 years in prison. In January 1959 he was freed by amnesty, and he worked as a librarian until his retirement. He was one of the most powerful politicians during the harshest period of Communist dictatorship in Hungary. – B: 1105, 1031, T: 7103. → State Security Police; Rajk, László, Rákosi, Mátyás.

Péter, János (John) (Alsónyék, 28 October 1910 - Budapest, 26 February 1999) – Bishop of the Reformed Church, politician and Foreign Minister. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academies of Budapest, Paris, Glasgow and Berlin. He was an assistant minister in the Soli Deo Gloria Student Association, then at the Calvin Square Church, Budapest. Between 1936 and 1946 he was Minister at the Institute of the Filadelfia Deaconesses, Budapest. In the fall of 1945, he worked at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. From 1946, he filled a key position at the office of Zoltán Tildy, the President of Hungary. In this capacity, he conveyed messages from the Communist Party leader, Mátyás Rákosi, to the leaders of the Reformed Church. He was a reporter of the Press and Foreign Department of the Reformed General Convent (1948); Bishop of the Transtibiscan Church District (Tiszántúli Református Egyházkerület) (1949-1956), and concurrently Bishop of the Cistibiscan Church District (Tiszáninneri Református Egyházkerület) (1953-1956). He condemned the Revolution of 1956, and resigned from the bishoprics. He became the appointed leader of the Cultural Contacts Institute (Kultúrkapcsolatok Intézete), then Deputy Foreign Minister between 1958 and 1961 and Foreign Minister from 1961 to 1973. He was a 'T' (secret) member of the Communist Party from 1949. He was President of the Parliament from 1973. He was the author of a number of articles and studies, which included theological and political themes. He wrote a commentary on the Book of Job. He was the recipient of several prestigious medals. – B: 0910, T: 7103.→Kádár, Period of.

Péter, King (also known as Peter Orseolo (1011 - 1058) – Son of the Doge, who was banished by Venice, and that of the unknown daughter of Reigning Prince Géza–István (991-997). He died in exile in 1026. Upon the death of his father, he entered the Court of King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038), where, in 1030, he was appointed leader of the Royal Armies and later on was appointed the King's Successor. He swore allegiance to the widowed Queen Gizella and her estates upon the King's death. Instead, he imprisoned her and confiscated her properties. As King, between 1038 and 1041, he implemented István's policies. In 1041 he was driven from the throne by followers of Sámuel Aba (1041-1044). He fled to Regensburg, Bavaria, and returned with armed assistance from Emperor Henry III. In the Battle of Ménfő, Sámuel Aba was defeated and beheaded. On 26 May 1046 at Fehérvár, King Peter offered Hungary as a vassal to King Henry in payment for his help, and he was appointed chief feudal lord. The presentation of the spear symbolized the allegiance. Then he started to confiscate properties of the nobles. In 1046, the disgruntled Estates invited the sons of Vászoly, who overthrew, blinded and imprisoned the King. He became a prisoner of King András I (1046-1060) at Székesfehérvár, where he soon died. He was buried in the Cathedral of Pécs. – B: 1230, 0883, T: 7658→Aba, Sámuel; András I., King.

Péter, Rózsa (Rose) (Politzer) (Budapest, 17 February 1905 - Budapest, 16 February 1977) – Mathematician. She pursued her higher studies at the University of Budapest, and also at the Budapest Polytechnic in the School of Political Economy of the Faculty of Commercial Education. From the 1930s up to 1948 she was a high school teacher; she received her Ph.D. in 1935. During World War II, she was forbidden to teach because of her Jewish origin. Between 1947 and 1955 she was Professor and Head of a School at the Teachers' College, and, from 1955 until her retirement in 1976 she was Professor of Mathematics at the University of Budapest. Rózsa Péter was internationally recognized as a pursuer of mathematical logic. She was a member of the Editorial boards of the Journal of Symbolic Logic and Zeitschrift für mathematische Logik und Grundlagen der Mathematik. She made her mark in the theory of recursive functions and their application for computers. Her works in popularizing mathematics are also important. She carried out wide-ranging activity in the modernization of the teaching of mathematics in schools and in the raising of standards for the education of mathematics teachers. She was interested in poetry, theater and the cinematic art (wrote critiques of films). She was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding, 1973). Her works include Recursive Functions (1967; translated by István Földes; appeared also in German, Russian and Chinese), and Playing with Infinity: Mathematics for Everyman (Játék a végtelennel) (1943, 1962), translated into 14 languages. She was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1951 and the State Prize in 1970. – B: 0872, 0883, 1031, T: 7103, 7456.

Péterfi, Tibor (Dés, now Dej, Romania, 22 June 1883 - Budapest, 13 January 1953) – Physician. In 1905 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) where, from 1905 to 1908, he worked at the Department of Zoology under István Apáthy. From 1908 to 1914 he was a demonstrator in the No. 1 Clinic of Anatomy at the University of Budapest. In 1916 he became an honorary lecturer there. In 1918 he was Professor of Anatomy at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). During the time of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (21 March 1919 - 1 August 1919) he played a role, so afterward, he had to emigrate. He worked in Prague, Jena, Berlin, and Constantinople. From 1935 to 1946 he was Professor at the University of Istanbul. In 1946 he was able to return to Hungary (during the Communist regime, when Hungary was occupied by Soviet Russian forces), and he became a professor at the University of Budapest. He was an outstanding histologist. He was mainly interested in the pathological anatomy of the visceral organs. He developed the methodology of microsurgery. His works include Histology (Szövettan) (1909) and Die mikrochirurgische Methode (Jena, 1923). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456. → Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Micromanipulator.

Péterfy, Jenő (Eugene) (Buda, 8 July 1850 - Károlyváros, now Karlovac, Croatia 5 November 1899) – Literary historian, essayist, critic. He obtained a B.A. Degree in Education from the University of Budapest. From 1872 he worked as a high school teacher right until his death. He wrote music critiques for the daily, Pester Lloyd (1874 - 1876); from 1878 he was the critic of Concord (Egyetértés). From 1881 his literary, esthetic and historical essays and critiques appeared in the Budapest Review (Budapesti Szemle), e.g. on Arany, Bajza, Eötvös, Jókai, Kemény, Dante and Ibsen. He joined Pál Gyulai's circle and, from 1887, he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society. In 1888 he became an honorary lecturer at the University, but he lectured for only half a year. From 1896 he also taught at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest. In his last years, Péterfy was occupied with the history of Greek Literature. A large section of it was completed, when he shot himself on the Budapest-Fiume (Rijeka) express train near Károlyváros. He was one of the greatest artists of Hungarian essay writing. His essays show a highly cultured writer, thinking in a refined, wide-ranging way, his critiques being visionary, mixed with irony and humor. He was also an outstanding translator of works of C.F. Meyer, Plato, B. Saint-Hilaire and Taine. A collection of his music critiques appeared in 1931. His Bánk bán of József Katona was published in 1883. His collected works were published in 3 volumes in 1901-1903. – B: 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7456. → Gyulai, Pál; Arany, János; Bajza, József; Eötvös, József; Jókai, Mór Kemény, Zsigmond.

Pethe, Ferenc (Francis) (Kisszántói) (Szentmihály, now Mihai Viteazu, Romania, 30 March 1763 - Szilágysomlyó, now Simuleu Silvaniei, Romania, 22 February 1832) – Agriculturalist, writer, journalist, polymath. After completing his studies at the Reformed College of Debrecen in 1788, he set out for further studies in Utrecht, where he spent eight years. He also traveled in Europe and learned the printing trade. In 1796 in Vienna he founded and edited the first Hungarian agriculturist paper, the Investigating Hungarian Farmer (Vizsgálódó Magyar Gazda), but it soon became bankrupt. From 1898 to 1801 he was one of the organizers, leader and teacher of the Georgikon in Keszthely. From 1801 to 1814 he was in the service of Prince Eszterházy, worked on a rented estate, and was active in writing. He launched a newspaper, the National Farmer (Nemzeti Gazda), in Vienna, and later in Pest. He lived from the income of his rented estate and commercial activities. In Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), in 1827 he launched the first Hungarian political newspaper of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), entitled Home News (Hazai Híradó); later, he changed its name to Transylvanian News (Erdélyi Híradó). He wanted to further scientific life and urged for social and economical reforms. He pioneered the construction of windmills and the development of agricultural and industrial plants. He also proved the untenability of agricultural production based on the feudal system. He created some 200 new words. With his initiatives, he was ahead of his time. His works include European Measure Collection, vols. i-ii (Európai mértéktár, I-II), translation (1829-1830); The Chemical Root of Agriculture (A földművelési kémia gyökere), after H. Davy (1815), and Natural History... (Természethistória...) (1815). He was awarded the Marczibányi Prize. – B: 0883, 1257, 1122, T: 7103.

From 1922 he was involved in kinesitherapy at the Institute at Semmering. From 1922 to 1938 he served as Physician, and later as Senior Physician at the Private Sanatorium in Semmering. In 1938 Pető returned to Hungary and began to organize the institutional foundations of conductive kinesitherapy. Between 1945 and 1963 he was a professor at the Institute of Handicapped Children; from 1950, Director of the Institute of Kinesitherapy. From this Institute, he developed the Institute of the Pedagogy for the Motor Disordered in 1963, where he established the Conductive Education: a System for Overcoming Motor Disorder. His work became recognized abroad as well. They include Introduction to the Conductive Kinesitherapy (Bevezető a konduktív mozgáspedagógiába) (1962). He is the founder of conductive education. His method became a “Hungaricum”. The Conductive Teacher and Education Training Institute (Mozgássérültek Pető András Nevelőképző és Nevelőintézete) was named after him. – B: 1730, 1778, T: 7456.

Petőcz, András (Andrew) (Budapest. 27 August 1959 - ) – Writer and poet. He completed his higher studies at the Hungarian Literature and History Departments of the University of Budapest in 1985. Between 1981 and 1983 he was leading Editor for the periodical, Presence (Jelenlét). In 1983 he founded the Studio Art, and in 1985-1986 he worked at the Gorkij Library, Budapest. From 1985 he was a member of the Hungarian Workshop (Magyar Műhely) in Paris, and its Editor between 1989 and 1992. In 1989 and 1990 he was Editor for the periodical New Writing (Új Írás). From 1989 on, he produced video-films, and exhibits of his visual-poems. He is the leading person of the New Avant-garde Movement. Petőfi, Sándor (Alexander) (Kiskőrös, 1 January 1823 - Fehéregyháza, 31 July 1849) – Leading Hungarian lyric poet. He attended school at Kecskemét, Sárszentlőrinc, Pest, and later at Aszód, where he began writing poetry. His attraction toward the theater was awakened here. He also studied in Selmecebánya (now Banská Stiavnica, Slovakia), from where he went to Pest on foot, and, for a while, was an extra at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház). In 1839 he was enlisted in the army at Sopron; but became ill and was discharged. He joined a touring theatrical company, where he first appeared before the national public. He continued his studies at the Reformed College of Pápa, Soon he became an actor and performed in Székesfehérvár and Kecskemét. Here, his new-sounding poems were published, creating a great stir with increasing frequency. Through the influence of Mihály Vörösmarty, the Nemzeti Kör (National Literary Circle) published his poems under the title Petőfi's Poems 1842-1844 (Petőfi versei 1842-1844) in 1844. He became Assistant Editor for the Pest Fashion Magazine (Pesti Divatlap). By this time, he was the organizer and indisputable leader of radical-minded young intellectuals' and the writers' circle, who frequented the Pilvax Coffee House of Budapest. The publication of The Hammer of the Community (Helység kalapácsa), a comic heroic poem, was quickly followed by John the Hero (János vitéz), in 1845. A period of crises in his life was brought about by disappointment in love, unjust attacks on his poetry, the grave financial situation of his parents, and the deadlocked political life; but he quickly recovered from this critical stage. After this, his poetry and his role in organizing literary activities were determined by the ideas of liberating the Hungarian people from the oppression of the Habsburg rule of Austria, and a world revolution. In 1846, he organized the Society of the Tens (Tizek Társasága) of young writers, which he intended to become Hungary's intellectual leading force; but this Society could never evolve. During this time, he met the poet János (John) Arany, with whom he shared a uniquely beautiful bond of friendship. In 1846 he fell in love with Júlia Szendrey, the daughter of an estate bailiff in Erdőd. His love and marriage gave birth to famous love poems: The Trembling Bush (Reszket a bokor); At the End of September (Szeptember végén), and What Shall I Call You? (Minek nevezzelek?).

On 15 March 1848, he headed the youth of Pest as poet and politician. His now famous poem, the National Song (Nemzeti Dal), which he recited on the steps of the National Museum, became the anthem of the Revolution and War of Independence. He was voted onto many important committees and delegations, organized mass meetings, and became a Captain of the National Guard. His contribution even influenced the work of the National Assembly (Diet) in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). On 15 October 1848, he enlisted in the Hungarian Territorial Army as Captain. First, he was a training officer; then, in January 1849, he set off to the Transylvanian (Erdély) Front in the War of Independence from Habsburg Rule, where General József Bem appointed him as his aide-de-camp, and accepted and protected him as his own son. During his Transylvanian military service, he wrote war correspondence and motivational, panegyric poetry and also carried out services for Bem as a dispatch rider. On the first such occasion, he fell out with the Minister of Defense, Lázár Mészáros, resigned his commission, and returned to Bem as a trooper. He participated in Bem's campaigns, regained his rank; indeed, Bem promoted him to a Major. When he was in Debrecen again, Deputy Minister of Defense, György Klapka, attacked and insulted him, so he left the army and proceeded to Pest, where he lived in poverty, ignoring the glorious spring campaigns of the Freedom Fight.

It was after the Hungarian Government had fled from Pest that he left for Transylvania on 18 July 1849, and re-joined General Bem. On 31 July 1849, during the retreat that followed the lost battle at Fehéregyháza, he disappeared around 6 o'clock in the afternoon. It is surmised that he was stabbed to death by the pursuing Russian lancers and buried in a mass grave. For a long time, the nation's general public did not want to accept the fact of his death, and the legend of Petőfi was born. The rumor spread that he did not die at the battlefield but that he was in hiding, or that he was in captivity in Siberia.

Petőfi was a giant of Hungarian lyric poetry, even on a world scale. He is the best known and most popular Hungarian poet abroad. Translations of his poems began already during his lifetime, in 1845; by the time of his death, over a hundred of his poems had been translated, mainly into German. Between 1846 and 1860, from some of his 850 poems, 700 were translated into approximately 50 languages and published. His most often translated poem is The Trembling Bush... (Reszket a bokor...). Setting of his lyrics to music already began in 1843. According to a bibliography of 1930, 510 musical compositions by some 180 composers were inspired by 202 poems of Petőfi. Since then, however, this number has increased even more significantly. In Hungary, Sándor Petőfi's poems are the most frequently published in the large-size editions. Between 1945 and 1960 alone, more than a million copies of his works were published, in spite of the fact that his poetic activity spanned no more than six years. A number of societies and institutions have been named after him; many sculptures have been erected to his memory in Hungary and in Transylvania, and even in several places outside Hungary, for example in the cities of Buffalo (USA) in 1929, and Cleveland (USA) in 1930. – B: 0883, 1288, 1257, T: 7659.

Petőfi, Sándor János (Alexander John) (Miskolc, 23 April 1932 - ) – Linguist. He completed his B.Sc. course majoring in Mathematics, Physics and Descriptive Geometry at the University of Debrecen. He started working as a teacher at the Music High School of Debrecen. From 1958 to 1962 he also completed the course there in German language and literature there as well. From 1961 he taught Mathematics and Physics at the Music High School and Ballet Institute of Budapest. Between 1964 and 1969 he was a scientific research associate in the Computer Technology Center of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1969 he did not return to Hungary from a professional conference at Stockholm. He emigrated to and lived in Sweden for two years. In 1971 he earned a Ph.D. in General Linguistics from the University of Göteborg and became a lecturer. In 1971 and 1972 he was a research associate at the University of Konstanz; from 1972 to 1989 he was Professor of Semantics at the Faculty of Linguistics and Literature at Bielefeld University. In addition, from 1974-1976, he was Dean of the Faculty. Since 1989 he has been Professor and Head of the Department of Language Philosophy at the Macerata University of central Italy. His main fields of research are semantics, text theory, language philosophy and poetics. He is Editor for the journal, Research in Text Theory and Co-Editor for the serial Papire zur Textlinguistic. His papers in Hungarian were published in the Hungarian Workshop (Magyar Műhely), Literary News (Irodalmi Újság), and New Horizon (Új Látóhatár). His works include Transformationsgrammatiken und eine kotextuelle Texttheorie (Transformational Grammar and Contextual Text-theory) (1971) and Semantics-Pragmatics Textology (1974). – B: 1257, 1672, T: 7456.

Petneházy, Dávid (1645? - 1686/1687) – Kuruc military leader. He was a nobleman from County Szabolcs. He first appeared towards the final years of 1670 among the Kuruc men. He participated in the Upper Hungarian (Upland, Felvidék, now in Slovakia) campaigns of Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly and also in association with the Ottoman Turks and in the 1683 siege of Vienna. After the Turkish defeat at Vienna, the Austrian Habsburg forces began to drive out the Turks from Hungary and also wound up Thököly's Upper Hungarian Principality, endeavoring to entice as many Hungarians as possible from Thököly's side to the Habsburg side. The amnesty issued by Emperor Lipót I (Leopold) (1654-1705) on 19 June 1685, also mentioned Petneházy, among others, promising him pardon in case he gets "converted". On 15 October 1685, the Turkish Pasha of Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania) had Thököly captured as a traitor, but released him after three months' captivity. On hearing about Thököly's capture by the Turks, Captain Petneházy, together with his regiment went over to the imperial side of Lipót I. He successfully fought against the Turkish forces in 1685 and 1686, for which Lipót I rewarded him with a gold chain. With the rank of Colonel he fought as a "lion" in the retaking of Buda fortress in 1686. At the end of 1686 or early 1687, he unexpectedly died, possibly poisoned by those who envied him. – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Kuruc; Thököly, Count, Imre; Budavár, recapture of.

Petrányi, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 24 June 1912 - Budapest, 5 March 2000) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1936, after which, he was a Medical Intern in the No. 1 Medical Clinic, where he worked until 1950. From 1940 he was a demonstrator; in 1944 he was a medical officer at the Military Hospital in Kassa (now Kosiče, Slovakia), and became a prisoner of war in the Soviet Union. In 1945 he returned home and became an assistant professor at the Internal Medical Clinic, Budapest. In 1948-1949 he was with a state scholarship in Great Britain. From 1950 to 1973 he was a professor and Head of the Department of Medicine at the University of Debrecen and, in 1953 and 1954, its Dean. From 1974 to 1983, until his retirement, he served as Director of No. 2 Medical Clinic and professor at the University of Budapest. He specialized in autoimmune illnesses and their pathogenesis, clinical treatment and therapy; also clinical pharmacology. His research included the immunity of transplantation. His ballet is entitled Salome (1979). He composed pieces for orchestra, including Concerto per flauto et orchestra, and Concertino, and two symphonies and four concertos for various musical instruments. He wrote chamber music, including Wind Quintet; Cassazione; Passacaglia in Blues; String Quartets and nine cantatas, and choir pieces. His book is entitled Ravel (1959), and his two-volume memoirs, entitled Self-portrait Without Mask (Önarckép álarc nélkül) (1930-1966, 1967-2007), published towards the end of his life. In 1978 he was honored the Grand Prix du Disque. He is a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1966, 2006), and the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1960, 1963); he was also honored as Artist of Merit (1975) and Outstanding Artist (1982), as well as the My Homeland Prize and the Bartók-Pásztory Prize; in 2005 he received the Middle Cross with Stars of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary. – B: 1031, 1445, T: 7456. → Farkas, Ferenc; Viski, János.

Petrus Hungarus (Pierre Hongre, 15th century) – A printer who emigrated from Hungary to France and worked on his own in Lyon in 1482, and also in partnership with Mathias Huss from 1483. He moved to Toulouse in 1491, where he became a typesetter, besides which, he also ran a bookshop. In 1492 he worked in Lyon again and in the following year he returned to Hungary. It is probable that he did not find the troubled times after the death of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490) suitable for printing books, because, from 1496, his printing shop was in operation again in Lyon. Having developed his trade into high art, he printed the so-called “diamond-type” books. Outstanding, even among the editions of his craftsmanship, are the splendidly presented missal of the diocese of Lyon and its breviary. However, he lost money on the extremely expensive finish of these works and suffered financial difficulties. His printing shop was still operating in 1510. – B: 0942, 1091, T: 7659.

Petry, Béla Albert (Erzsébetfalva, Transylvania, now in Romania, 31 March 1902 - Maitland, USA, 29 November 1996) – Graphic artist and architect. His childhood was in Transylvania (Erdély, then part of Hungary). His primary and secondary education was partly in Erdély, partly in Budapest. His higher studies were at the Academy of Fine Arts, Budapest, the Architectural Academy, Vienna, the Academy of Fine Arts, Rome, and at the Munich Kunstakademie. Between 1930 and 1936 he lectured at the University of Debrecen; from 1936 to 1940 he worked as an illustrator at the Royal Hungarian University Press. He served as an officer in the Engineering Corps in World War II. He was a portrait painter in Munich in 1945 and 1946. He moved with his family to New York in 1946. He was an architect and designer in Worcester and Boston in 1946-1947. He became Professor of the Boston Architecture Center (1960-1967). He designed 96 buildings in the USA, including chapels, schools, libraries and commercial buildings. He illustrated a number of books and bookplates; his miniatures are rooted in Hungarian folk art. He exhibited in Hungary and elsewhere, including the American Hungarian Museum. He published Monumental Architecture Comparison between the Incas and the Mayans (1958) and Hungarian Saints of the House of Árpád (1988). His smaller drawings and Ex Libris plates are world-renowned. Several famous architectural works bear his name. – B: 1791, T: 7677, 7103.

Petschauer, Attila (Budapest, 14 December 1904 - Davidovka, now Carpathian-Ukraine, 30 January 1943) – Swordsman and journalist. He was a member of the Olympic champion saber team in Amsterdam in 1928 and in Los Angeles in 1932. In 1928 he received a second place and, in 1932 a fifth place in the individual saber-fencing tournament. He participated in the victory of the saber-team championship in Liège in 1930 and in Vienna in 1931. In individual tournaments he won a second place in Budapest (1926) and in Liège (1930), and also won a second place in Ostende (1925) and Naples (1929), while in Vienna he won a third place in 1931. After his retirement, he became a correspondent for the paper The Evening (Az Est). He was a well-known and genial member of the artistic world. In 1942 he was enlisted in forced labor service on the Russian front, where he perished. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.

Petz, Aladár (Győr, 10 December 1888 - Győr, 27 February 1956) – Physician and inventor. He obtained his Medical Degree from the Medical School of Budapest in 1914. He was a military physician (1914-1918). He was Assistant Professor at the Surgical Clinic in Budapest, and Director of a hospital in Győr between 1922 and 1950. He earned recognition abroad by his study: Abdominal Catastrophes. His invention, the stomach and bowel sewing machine was presented at the 1921 annual meeting of the Hungarian Surgery Association. He invented a number of medical tools. He was first in Hungary to prepare an indicator system for various diagnoses. His papers were published in journals in Hungary and abroad. – B: 0883, 1226, 1730, T: 7390.

Petzval, József Miksa (Joseph Maximilian) (Szepesbéla, now Spišská Belá, Slovakia, 6 January 1807 - Vienna, 17 September 1891) – Engineer, mathematician. He received his Engineering Degree from the Engineering Institute of Pest University in 1828. Then, until 1835, he was the town engineer of Pest and concurrently obtained his Ph.D. in Mathematics. From 1832 on, he gave lectures in Mathematics and Mechanics at the University of Pest, where he was appointed professor in 1835. From 1837 to 1877, the year of his retirement, he was Professor of Mathematics at the University of Vienna. Besides mathematics, he also pursued research studies in mechanics, ballistics, optics and acoustics. He became widely known for the photographic objectives he constructed and, from 1841, using achromatic double lenses that required only a fraction of a second exposure time. The lenses were adopted by the firm Voigtländer in their famous cameras. Around 1860 he carried out photogrammetric measurements with his self-constructed equipment. He also treated the field of differential equations. In the University of Pest, his younger brother, Otto Petzval (1809-1883) became his successor. Joseph Petzval's works include Bericht über die Ergebnisse einiger dioptrischen Untersuchungen (1843); Integration der linearen Differentialgleichungen I, II, (1853-1859), and Bericht über optische und dioptrische Untersuchungen (Sitzungsberichte) (1857). Since 1828 the Austrian Petzval medal has been awarded to researchers who have achieved outstanding results in scientific photography. There is a Petzval Commemorative Medal in Hungary, established in 1962. A Street in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.→
Petzval, Ottó.

Petzval, Ottó (Szepesbéla, now Spišská Belá, Slovakia, 6 January 1809 - Budapest, 28 August 1883) – Engineer, mathematician. He obtained his Degree from the University of Budapest. From 1837 to 1850 he taught at the Institutum Geometricum (1851-1857), teaching Mechanics and Machine Design at the József Technical College. In 1858, he was Professor of Advanced Mathematics at the University of Pest until his retirement in 1883. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Science (1858). His works include Advanced Mathematics, vols. i-iv (Felsőbb mennyiségtan I-IV) (1850); Dynamics and Mechanics (Erő- és géptan), with Grand Prix of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in part (1861), and Elements of Astronomy (Csillagászat elemei) (1875). – B:0883, T: 7456.→Petzval, József Miksa.

Pfeiffer, Zoltán (Budapest, 15 August 1900 - New York, 16 August 1981) – Lawyer and politician. He studied at the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Ph.D. in Political Science in 1923. Later, he qualified as lawyer and judge. He practiced law in Budapest. In 1931 he became a member of the Independent Peasant Party. From 1936 he was its attorney. During the war, his anti-German attitude induced him to join the Independence and Popular Front movements. After the German occupation of Hungary on 19 March 1944, he went underground. He was one of the founders of the Hungarian Front; he took part in the preparation of the 2nd September Memorandum to be presented to Regent Miklós Horthy. After 15 October 1944, following the Arrow Cross coup d'état, he joined the military Resistance; he participated in the work of the Hungarian National Liberation Committee, headed by Endre Bajcsy-Zsilinszky. On 22 November 1944, he miraculously evaded arrest. In the spring of 1945, he immediately entered the political life. From 4 November he was a Member of Parliament, and he played a role in the first draft of the Republican Bill. On 4 August 1947, he established the Hungarian Independence Party and became its President. Early in November 1947, he left Hungary with his family, and consequently became stripped of his Hungarian citizenship. He continued his political life in the USA. He was Editor for a number of Hungarian Papers, but by the 1970s, became quite isolated, and lived withdrawn from public life. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.→Sulyok, Dezső.

Philharmonia Hungarica (1956-2001) – A Symphony Orchestra, based in Germany. It was established near Vienna by Hungarian musicians, who had fled Hungary after the Soviet Military crushed the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. This ensemble had some of Hungary's finest musicians and was directed by its founder, Zoltán Rozsnyai former conductor of the Hungarian National Philharmonic Orchestra. Its honorary president and subsequent leader was Antal Doráti. The Philharmonia Hungarica became one of Europe's distinguished orchestras. During the 1970s, the orchestra, under contract with Decca Record, made a recording of the complete cycle of Joseph Haydn's symphonies. Doráti's recording has been considered as a world-first. In 1976 they recorded Jon Lord's Sarabande album. From the beginning, the West German government generously funded the orchestra throughout the Cold War, even after the Iron Curtain fell in 1990. However, the full withdrawal of state subsidies at the start of 2001, and the decline in concert attendances threatened the orchestra's survival. The ensemble finally disbanded after giving a farewell concert in Düsseldorf on 22 April 2001. Plans to rescue the orchestra failed, because there was no political interest any longer to keep it alive. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Doráti, Antal; Rozsnyai, Zoltán.

Phoenix – A miraculous bird in ancient Egyptian and Greek mythology. It was an eagle-like, scarlet and gold-feathered mythical bird of the ancient Egyptians. The legend says that it lived in Heliopolis, the city of the Sun, and nested on the altar of the Sun. Its nest was made of different spices and, every 500 years, it burned itself to rise again instantaneously from its ashes. The phoenix was also the emblem of the Byzantine Empire. As the symbol of immortality, renewal and perseverance, it has also been the symbol of resurrection since the advent of Christianity. This mystical bird represents the cyclical movement of the Sun, and as such, it became the symbol of immortality and renewal. It was the bird of the Empress of China and the five colors of its feathers represent the five virtues (goodness, fidelity, restraint, wisdom and faith). The same bird, with a wreath of laurel around its neck, is on the coat of arms of the Hungarian Reformed Church and symbolizes the tribulations of the Church and its ability for renewal. – B: 1078, 1153, 1020, T: 7617.

Photographic Typesetting – Following the unsuccessful attempts of English inventors, the Hungarians Jenő (Eugene) Porzso, Ödön (Edmund) Uher and Elemér (Elmer) Czákó produced the first photographic typesetting machine around 1918. It was called the “luminotype”. After some improvements, the machine was marketed under the name of “Uher type” in 1927. Uher’s invention was revolutionary, because it was not related to any of the former typesetting methods. The subsequently developed photographic typesetting machines were all based on the principles developed by Uher. – B: 1078, 1226, T: 7662.→Uher, Ödön Jr.

Phylloxera (Phylloxera vastatrix, Dactylosphaera vitifolii) – Vine louse, vine pest; an aphid-like insect from the family Chermesidae of the suborder Homoptera. Since Hungary has always been a leading grape grower and wine exporter in Europe, the disease-carrying minute aphids (or plant lice), barely 1 mm long, proved a disaster in her wine industry. The Phylloxera bug has a complex alternation of generations; one generation lays its eggs under the bark and the damage is caused by the generation that lives as a parasite on the vine roots, siphoning off the fluids from the hair-roots and developing bulbous tubercles, which lead to the rotting of the roots and, along with it, the killing of the vine plant. The bug was introduced from North America first into France from 1858 to 1862. In the Carpathian Basin, its presence was discovered in the extreme south at Pancsova (now Panceva, Serbia) in 1875, from where it spread extremely fast and caused tremendous losses in this branch of agriculture so important to the national economy. The damage it caused reached its height near the end of the 1880s, by which time it had virtually destroyed the wine plantations of Hungary. The vineyards had to be entirely newly planted. Because of the damages, fundamental changes in viticulture have taken place: the growers have started to introduce disease-resistant varieties in the new plantings, the phylloxera bug is now destroyed by spraying with chemicals like carbon disulphide or petroleum; furthermore, viticulture has come into general practice also on the flat, sandy areas in addition to the traditional volcanic mountain slopes and most vines in Europe are now grafted onto root stock of the American vine, not so susceptible to the disease. – B: 1068, 1794, T: 7675, 7456.→Mathiász, János; Kocsis, Pál; Szegedi, Sándor.

Piarist Order in Hungary – (Latin: Regulares paupers Matris Dei scholarum piarum; in short: Ordo Scholarum Piarum – Order of the Pious Schools, commonly known as the Piarist Fathers) – A Roman Catholic monastic order. Its founder was St Joseph Calasanz (from Calasanz, Spain), born in a little village in Spain called Peralta de la Sal in 1556, ordained a Roman Catholic priest in 1583. Nine years later, he was moved to Rome. St Joseph was very moved by the misery of the poor children of Rome. Therefore, he opened a free school for them in 1597. This school, which was open to every child regardless of religion, is believed to be the first modern public elementary school in the world. On 25 March 1617, with the permission of Pope Paul V, St Joseph Calasanz and fourteen other men became the first members of a new religious congregation. On 18 November 1621, Pope Gregory XV raised the congregation to the rank of a new religious congregation (Congregatio Paulina) under solemn vows, calling it The Order of the Pious Schools (Sch.P. = Scholarum Piarum). The Piarists, like other religious orders, profess vows of poverty, chastity, obedience and, according to the wishes of St Joseph, a fourth vow: the education of youth. Pope Clement XIII declared him a saint in 1767, and Pope Pius XII named him the Heavenly Patron of all Christian Schools in 1948. While he was still living, the Piarists began to grow in large numbers and founded many schools. They have nine provinces: Italy, Austria, Bohemia, Moravia, Hungary, Poland, Spain, Chile and Central America. There are more than 1650 Piarists, teaching 115,000 students in 32 countries around the world.
